that we may be helped to be joyful in Him. Was there ever such a prince as our Emmanuel, if we think of His person, His pedigree, His descent, His nature? This King of ours is not only the flower and crown of manhood, but He is also very God of very God. He is God over all, blessed forever; the Son of the Highest. Think of Him in that light and then link His humanity in your minds with His Godhead, without confusion of idea. In Jesus we do not see humanized Godhead, nor deified manhood; but he is distinctly God and distinctly man, yet both of these are in one person, and must neither be confounded nor severed. Was there ever such a King! My words fail to express my inward joy in that divine Lord who is not ashamed to call us brethren. I sit down at His pierced feet, now sandaled with eternal light, and I feel a sweet content, yea, an overflowing joy. I see a world of wonders meeting in my Lord—heaven come down to earth, and earth raised to heaven; and I am joyful in my King.

We further follow our Lord joyfully as we think of His deeds of love to us. Well may we be joyful in our King, since to us has exceeded all bounds. The true splendor of kings lies not in what their people do for them, but in what they do for their people; and herein our Lord excelleth all the princes that ever lived. How royal was His love when the cross was its throne! What a crown was that which was made of thorns! What a sceptre was that which was held in the pierced hand! I call this real kingship. All else is mere stage-play. O sovereign love! Incarnate in Jesus, thou art imperial! Behold your King! Not only does He bleed beneath the lash of man, but He also bows beneath the bruises of His Father's justice, and cries, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" I beseech you, O loyal hearts, by the bitterness of your King's agony, be joyful in Him! If He loved you so, can you refuse to rejoice in Him?

His Loving Kindness.

When he had given the supreme proof of love he was not satisfied yet. Having slept in the grave a while, he awoke, and left his sepulchre; but he did not leave his love: he arose to meet his followers, and nerve them for future service. After a while, when he had manifested himself to them in most familiar ways, he rose to heaven, a cloud receiving him out of their sight; then he changed his place, but he did not change his love. Ah, no! he went into heaven bearing the pledges of his affection in his hands and feet and side. He entered glory to carry on his intercession within the veil. His royal life is now spent in pleading for transgressors.

Let us think a moment further of the glorious achievements of our King, that we may the more fully be joyful in him. This King of ours has fought for us, and won great victories on our account. Our King met the battalions of our sins in conflict. He encountered Satan, that tremendous foe. He fought hand to hand with death itself. The shock of battle was terrible. The sun was darkened and even the dead rose from their sepulchres to behold the war. Our hero stood alone; "of the people there was none with Him;" yet He trampled down all our enemies as the treader of grapes crushes the clusters in the wine press. Thus He made an end of sin, broke the head of the old dragon, and put death itself to death, and led our captivity captive. Behold He cometh from Edom with dyed garments from Bozrah, traveling in the greatness of His strength, mighty to save! Shall we not salute Him with Hosannas? Will we not be joyful in Him?

The Earth Shook,

It should stir you to enthusiasm to think of

The Principles of His Government;

For they are fountains of peace and purity. Jesus founded his empire upon love, and his own self-sacrifice is the corner-stone of that Imperial fabric. His action is always love and His teaching is always love. As He loved us and gave Himself for us, so his golden rule is that we do to others as we would that they should do to us. This is sadly forgotten even by some who call themselves Christians: but if this principle once took possession of men's minds, we should have no schemes of the poor to rob the rich, and no greed on the part of the rich by which they grind down the poor. If our King were obeyed, man would no longer be man's worst enemy, but the bands of brotherhood would unite mankind in a league of mutual sympathy. If we heard our Lord say, "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another," and if we practised the commandment, what a kingdom of heaven should we see upon the face of the earth!

III. I shall not detain you long while I touch upon a third point—let us mark which entitle Him to our highest regard this day. For, first, remember that the nation over which He reigns He has created. Most kings inherit what other swords have won, but Jesus himself with His own blood hath purchased a kingdom to Himself. That there is a church in the world at all is due to Jesus. We had gone back to chaos and old night if it had not been that His light is never dim. He whose sovereign word said, "Let there be light," still bids the light abide in the Church to lighten those who come into the world. The Church as a corporate body would cease to be were He not its continual life and strength. Let the streams rejoice in the fountain, let the walls of the temple be joyful in the foundation.

The Benefits of His Reign,

We ought to rejoice to-day in our King, because it is He that has saved us and given us peace. In the days of Solomon, Israel had such peace that every man sat under his own vine and fig-tree. But oh, the peace our greater Solomon has given us! I was as restless once as those ever-flying birds which hover over the waters of the Golden Horn at Constantinople. They are never seen to rest, and hence men call them "lost souls." Such was I! I found no place for the sole of my foot till I knew the Lord Jesus. My soul was a dread battle-field of conflicting thoughts, a very Esdrelon, trodden by innumerable hosts of doubts and fears; but when my King came, then the enemy fled, and I found rest and joy. He is our peace. Jesus has given us the true Sabbath.

Crown Him,

then, as Prince of Peace, ye once weary spirits who now joyfully abide in Him.

But, beloved, time fails me to speak of all the benefits our King has brought us. Is there anything that is needful which He has not given? Is there anything that is good that He has withheld? Have we any virtue? have we any praise? Then not unto us, not unto us, but unto His name be the glory. Nor is it alone in the past and in the present that we are debtors; we look forward to a future of obligations. He will keep us from all the power of the enemy. He will secure His Zion from invaders, and fill her with the finest of the wheat. For ever and ever will He preserve us, and be our guide even unto death. Again we say Hallelujah, as we think how He loves unto the end.

IV. Very briefly, in the next place, let us be joyful in

The Continuance of His Reign.

Fifty years is a long time for Her Majesty to have reigned. May her days yet be many! Fifty years, as we measure life, is a long space; but fifty years in the measurement of human history is far less; and fifty years as compared with eternity is nothing. King Jesus has a kingdom of which there shall be no end. He communicates that immortality to all His people, and thus He is the undying King of an undying kingdom. True we shall pass through that river which is named Death; but it is a misnomer; like the Jordan when Israel passed into Canaan, the Lord hath rebuked it, and it is dried up. We shall pass through the valley of the shadow of death, and that is all; and thus we shall reach a higher stage of being, in which we shall be "for ever with the Lord." Shall not those whom the King has made to live be joyful that their King lives and reigns world without end?

As to His kingdom, there is no fear of its failing. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it. His kingdom is one and indivisible, and His throne shall never be shaken. There is no dynasty to follow His dynasty; no successor to take up the crown of our Melchisedec. My immortal spirit rejoices in the hope of rendering endless homage to the eternal King. He liveth and reigneth, and we shall find it the bliss of our endless life to serve Him day and night in His temple. In prospect of such bliss, let us bestir ourselves to rejoice in our King with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

V. Once more, being joyful in our King, with delight. What a joy it would be to me if this midsummer morning some of you who have never owned this King, should begin to do so! This is a high day and a day of glad tidings; the trumpets of jubilee load the air with music. Our King will forgive your former rebellions if now you turn to Him. He proclaims to-day a general amnesty to all rebels. This day he grants a jail delivery to all prisoners of hope. You who have revolted may come back again; He will receive you graciously, and love you freely. He sits upon His holy hill in Zion, and He cries to you, "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land."

Let us Obey Him

Some of you have known Jesus many years, and have been professors for a long time. Perhaps you are getting into rather a dull state of mind. Work without joy is not good for us. What the old proverb saith concerning "all work and no play," is true of all service and no joy. I want the children of God to at this time. Why should not we have our jubilee as well as others! You have heard machinery at times complaining wretchedly; it has gone on with horrible gratings and creakings It has set your teeth on edge! Fetch the oil-can! We must cure this jarring. Every now and then we need a few drops of the oil of gladness to make the wheels of our work move pleasantly. Men of the world teach us the value of joyous song. How readily the anchor rises when the sailors unite in cheery cries! Soldiers, when weary on the march, find their spirits revived when the band strikes up a stirring tune. Let it be so to-day. Let the children of Zion be joyful in their King.

Hold High Festival

"Ah, dear minister!" you say, "you do not know what state of mind we are in: you do not know all our troubles, worries, frets, and weaknesses. Do I not know? I have been in that same oven. I know the secrets of your prison-house. Dear brothers and sisters, let us not rob our King of His revenue because all things are not quite to our mind. Are we going to blame our Lord for the chastisement which our sins require? We are never right with God unless we feel at peace with Him—nay, happy with him. The rightest state of mind for a child is to be happy in his father's love. It was well with Israel when "whatsoever the King did pleased all the people." It is well with us when we love Jesus, so that He may even do whatever He pleases with us, and we will still exult in Him. May you come in this delightful state!

It is time to finish, and therefore I would invite all that love my Lord to proclaim and King. Keep it after the best fashion. Endeavor to enlighten the world. Put candles in your windows. Illuminate all your streets. Let no sinner die in the dark. Publish the love of God to men. Light up your houses, all of you, with a holy cheerfulness and a clear confession of Christ. Hang out your flags of joy! You have them lying by, and the moths are eating them. Bring them out. Give the streamers of your mirth to the breeze! Tell all around you what God has done for you. Do not be ashamed to own your indebtedness to the love of God in Christ Jesus. You very retiring people, may I invite you to come out of your shells? You that have been slothful and cold of late, I pray you shake yourselves from the dust. At this time, when the pulse of the world beats fast, let yours be quickened. Begin this day something new for Jesus. I wish the church of God would think that Christ's Jubilee was indeed come, and so would kindle beacons upon every hill, till all the nations beheld the great light. Let the flame be seen across the sea! Let the whole earth be filled with his glory. "Arise, shine; for thy light is come." May the divine Spirit come upon all His people at this hour, and move them to show their joy in their King by special deeds of love!

A Jubilee For Their Lord

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

SPIRITUAL WEATHER PROBABILITIES.*

January. Now is the time to make good the fading leaves of the old year, by turning over new ones. Ps. 116:18, 19. If you want continual sunshine, live in Isa. 60:20. Prevent quinsy throat and evil tongue by obeying Ps. 34:13; Phil. 2:11. Renew your youth by enjoying the good things spoken of in Ps. 103:5. Only the evergreen religion of Ps. 1:1–4 will survive the storms of winter.

February. Look out for cold waves this month. Matt. 24:12. Holy Ghost fires rekindled at the week of prayer need prayerful attention. Acts 2:46, 47. You need not emigrate if you will bask in the sunshine of God's love. Ps. 84:11. For heavenly power consult and follow Acts 1:14; 2:1–4. Spiritual warmth is enjoyed at all seasons by the upright in heart. Ps. 140:13; Ps. 16:8.

March. To avoid sudden changes, squalls and storms, abide under the shadow of the Almighty. Ps. 91:1. Souls in Canaan are not affected by equinoctials. Deut. 33:26, 27. Those not well grounded in the faith should give heed to danger signals. Heb. 2.1. Those who have not built their hopes on Christ must apprehend ruin in the season of storms. Matt. 7:26, 27.

April. Look out for early frosts that kill tender plants. Song of Solomon 2:15. Be prepared for the following changes as the busy season approaches—no time for family worship—too tired to go to prayer-meeting—disposition to find fault—lack of spiritual interest. Song of Solomon 4:16; Ps. 78:47; Rom. 12:11. The heart should be filled with the good seed of the kingdom. Jer. 4:3; Ps. 119:11.

May. The growing season is upon us. "Showers of grace" are in constant demand. These, with the sunshine of His love, and the needful pruning, plowing and culture of grace in the soul, will make it bloom like Eden. Ezek. 34:26, 27; John 15:2. For spiritual growth, take Paul's advice. 2. Cor. 9–11; I. Pet. 2:2. A happy life is the fruit of holy living.

June. Buds of promise, flowers of affection, and singing birds should abound this month. Ps. 138:5. Keep in the reckoning of Rom. 6:11 if you would avoid storms of passion and cyclones of anger. If prone to wander, strive to keep in the better way of Isa. 35:8–10, looking unto Jesus. Heavenly manna is always to be found in Canaan latitudes. Ps. 111:5; Hos. 11:4.

July. Prayer and faith will bring spiritual showers when there is need of moisture. 1. Kings 18:1–45. Fog-horns should be heard as cautionary signals in the region of icebergs and sleepy pew-holders these hot days. Isa. 58:1. Keep close to Jesus, and you need not flee to the mountain or seaside to keep cool. Isa. 25:4; 32:2; Song of Solomon 2:3.

August. Avoid low spirits during "dog days" by looking unto Jesus. Heb. 12:1, 2. If you lack appetite, give more time to knee-drill, and look often in the mirror mentioned in James 1:25. Hereditary and chronic diseases are only cured

---

* From "Curiosities of the Bible pertaining to Scripture Persons, Places and Things, including Blackboard Outlines." By a New York Sunday-school Superintendent. Illustrated with Designs by Frank Beard. Sixtieth Thousand. An invaluable work for Sunday school Teachers and Christian workers. Pp. 606. Price $2. Published by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York.

Bernado De Soto, President of Costa Rica.

An Audience in Mexico.

at the fountain of life. Zech. 13:1. Sun-stroke from prosperity may be avoided by sitting under Christ's shadow. Isa. 32:2.

September. Look out for a cold snap after the fall equinox which will drive the prodigals in Egypt home, where they have spent the summer and mingled with the heathen, contracting malaria and tongue paralysis. Luke 15:13–18. Keep the Salvation Hospital in good order for their benefit. Luke 15:22–24. Encourage them with such promises as Ezek. 36:11.

October. Killing frosts this month; coldness and indifference follow unchristian amusements and Sabbath desecrations; also heart-burns and general good-for-nothingness for God. Frost-bitten leaves wither and fall; so do hopes chilled to death by back-sliding. For all heart-aches consult Matt. 11:28, and for the renewal of vows adopt the words of Ps. 116:12–19.

November. This month will be like last month if you don't get nearer to God. Luke 22:54. Blue Mondays and Down-in-the-Valley days will prevail, if the advice of the Great Physician is not closely followed. John 8:12. Avoid bad spells of inherited depravity and carnal nature by giving heed to Mark 9:42–47. Have a Thanksgiving of your own. Ps. 116, 1, 2; 103:1–4.

December. Variable weather this month, though bright and pleasant to those walking in the light of 1 Jno. 1:7. Chilly and disagreeable atmosphere may be expected in the region of fairs, sociables and holiday festivities. 1 Pet. 2:13; Jude 12; Rev. 3:15, 16. Keep close to God for spiritual warmth. Ecc. 4:11. Discharge duties prayerfully and await the end in faith and hope. Dan. 12:13.

BERNADO DE SOTO,
President of Costa Rica.

RECENTLY there was held in the city of Guatemala a meeting of representatives of all the Central American republics, to discuss the subject of their unification. Costa Rica, which had previously opposed the project, gave its assent to it, and President Bernado de Soto is now one of its most earnest champions. When, more than two years ago, President Barrios, of Guatemala, declared himself to be military ruler of Central America, Costa Rica made war against him. At that time Fernandez was President of Costa Rica, and De Soto Vice-President. Fernandez died on the day war was declared against Barrios, March 12, 1885, and De Soto became President. The death of Barrios at the head of his army put an end to the scheme of unification, in the form his ambition had given it. Its revival as a thing believed to be practicable by peaceful and equitable adjustment, is regarded as an expression of progress in the Central American republics. As a Federation, it is reasonable to suppose these little powers would be more prosperous than they possibly can be divided. Costa Rica has only about twenty-three thousand square miles of territory, and a population numbering considerably under two hundred thousand. The people are almost entirely of pure Spanish blood, and their territory is wonderfully rich in metals, including gold and silver, fertile, productive of coffee and other valuable vegetable products, and possesses a salubrious climate.

President de Soto is thirty-three years old. He is the scion of an old and honorable family, renowned in war. He is a soldier by profession, and at the head of an army of five hundred regulars and thirty-five hundred militia. His adminstration is able and energetic. Under it the finances of the republic have been put in good order, and the work of making railroads and other internal improvements carried on with commendable spirit and enterprise.

MEXICAN LADIES.
(See Illustration.)

MANY of the readers of this journal have, as we are glad to learn, manifested practical sympathy with the effort which Bishop Riley is making to develop and extend the work of evangelization in Mexico. He desires us to gratefully acknowledge on his behalf the contributions sent to him for his work. A responsibility lies upon the Christian public of America for the mission in Mexico. It is close upon our borders, the people are ignorant to a large extent of the great truths of the Gospel, and they are ready and willing to learn. Shall we not send them the life-giving message?

Very interesting is the effort that is being made. Preachers there do not have to speak to savages or cannibals as in some lands to which missionaries go. The preacher looking over his audience sees faces like the group in the illustration on this page, beautiful, intelligent, attentive, and to such the gospel never appeals in vain. Among such there is grand fruit waiting to be gathered. Workers are ready to go and if only the Church would do its duty and furnish the means, large numbers of precious souls might be won for Christ.

IDOLS OVERTHROWN.

A RECENT tour taken by Mr. Stanley Smith in China has filled him with joy and praise. He writes from Hung-t'ung: "Since I last wrote I have been up to see about the ladies' opium refuge. I trust next year there will be a glorious work there. I went to visit one village where there was a young Christian and six or seven young fellows interested. But was only there at Hoh-chau some three or four days. Later I started for Chao-ch'eng to go round eleven villages in which there are believers; it was indeed an interesting time. I saw enough indeed to make one's heart rejoice. In two villages we had a family strip the house of idols. It was grand having worship and praise after abolishing the wretched objects of worship. But the message I felt led to give in every village, as well as the Gospel, was the Lord's Coming, telling them it was good for them to turn from idols and better to serve the living and true God, but don't forget to wait for His Son from heaven—that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ."

A HEROIC CHRISTIAN MINER.
(See Illustration, Page 445.)

ONE of the noblest instances of moral heroism in connection with the mining industry on record, is related by an English journal. It states that a number of miners have been rescued from imminent death through the self-sacrificing devotion of one of the men.

It appears that there were about a hundred men employed at each shift in one section of the pit, and among them was a man named Roger Martin, who was the butt for the coarse jests of the others. He was regarded as a poor, weak, silly fellow, with no manliness in him. This was chiefly due to a certain meekness there was about him, and a dislike to the uproarious and often indecent merriment of the gang. Another reason was that the man would not drink. He had several children, and used to say he could not drink without depriving them of necessities, and he would not do that. He was often urged to "be a man and take his pot with the others, for good fellowship" and was told he would have more grit in him if he drank beer; but Roger, however weak he might be in other matters, was firm as a rock there, and so he was written down an outsider, an unsociable man, and nobody liked him. It was worse when he "got religion" for that set the men against him more than ever. He was a Methodist, a Psalm-singer, a hypocrite, and bore a dozen other opprobrious nicknames in the pit. Still the man was kind and gentle and never retaliated. That showed his want of spirit, the men said, and though many of them were indebted to Roger for kindness, he was despised.

One day, Roger being the one who always had to do anything of a disagreeable nature that had to be done, was sent away from his work in the pit to procure some tools which were unexpectedly needed. He did the business uncomplainingly as usual and returned. He and a boy were lowered in the bucket together down the shaft. As he was stepping out of it his attention was attracted by a sound, which his experienced ear told him was water trickling into the pit. Only a miner knows all the horror that such a sound implies. The men in the farther workings, ignorant of their danger, would be oppressed by unwonted lack of air, would find the floor wet, and would, on going to see what was the matter, find the lower workings flooded and their escape cut off. There they would have to remain until the water rose high enough to drown them, or until their provisions were exhausted, or they were suffocated by the poisonous gas. If they were warned immediately they might get into the higher galleries and prolong life until they were rescued. But who was to warn them? Roger knew that if he did so he would probably be involved in their fate, whereas now he had only to jerk the rope and he would be hoisted out of danger. It was a trying ordeal for any man.

The Prayer Meeting of Entombed Miners.

Roger's decision was quickly taken. "Jump in, boy," he said to his companion. "Go and tell the boss that the water is coming in. I'm going to warn the men. Tell the boss to lose no time in digging for us. He'll find us in No. 5 gallery." Roger jerked the rope, and the bucket went up with the boy in it, leaving him face to face with death in its most terrible shape.

Without a moment's hesitation he ran as fast as he could to the working where the men were. "Water! Water!" he shouted. "Run for your lives, the water is upon us. Come on—No. 5 gallery." The men threw down their tools and ran. Once there in temporary safety Roger was questioned. He told what he knew, and the men looked at each other with shame as they listened.

"Well," said one, "if ever we get out of this, we've got to thank Roger. There ain't one among us but him as would have stopped or thought of anything but saving his own carcass. Whatever comes of it, Roger's a brick. Why, men, he's gi'n us his life."

"Hear! Hear!" came from all sides, "Three cheers for Roger."

"Let us have a word or two of prayer," said Roger, "and then we'll go to work to meet the men. They'll sink a shaft here, and we can pick on this side and shorten the time. Our grub (food) won't hold out long."

Every one was solemnized as Roger, raising his hands, pleaded with God for the lives of the company, and that this terrible danger might be the means of leading them to Him, so that whether they lived or died they might receive eternal life. After that they set to work on the roof of their retreat.

All that day and night they labored, and all the next night, until one after another dropped down exhausted. It seemed as if the rescuers never would come. The food was exhausted, the air became more foul every hour, and they were giving up hope, when the long-listened-for noise of the drill was heard above. A few more hours and light came through the hole in the roof where the entombed men had been working. More dead than alive the men were drawn up, saved by the heroism of their companion "who had no manliness in him."

THE FRIENDS AT ASPENDALE.

A SERIAL STORY.

By Rev. J. Jackson Wray.

(Continued from page 430.)

Exeunt.

FOR a while after the return of Ethel Spofforth and her brother to Aspen Towers there was a season of quiet gladness. Ethel seemed to be borne up by the pleasant experiences of homecoming, and the joy of reunion was not broken in upon by any special signs of enfeebled health, and she was so bright and cheerful and lighthearted that Clara Atheling began to think she had needlessly alarmed herself, and that after a few weeks in the fresh, pure, and stimulating air of Aspendale, Ethel would be strong again.

Ethel, however, had no such hopes. She knew that her time on earth would be short, and she looked around for any work that she might do before she was called away. Not work for herself, but work for her Master, and for those about her. One project lay close to her hand, and was doubtless suggested to her by the success of her efforts to promote a union between her brother Harold and Clara Atheling. A very little observation convinced her that if she could do a like work for Inez and Alfred Atheling the happiness of both would be ensured.

The first step in this matter seemed to Ethel, on a review of all the circumstances, to be to delicately introduce the subject to Señor Bonanza, and discover how he was affected.

It was not many days after when she found the opportunity that she desired. She had been to the lower end of the village, on a visit to the daughter of Peter Prout, who lay sick. She had taken her some little dainty to tempt her appetite, and had spoken the best words by her sick-bed. Señor Bonanza had been strolling round the village, conversing, as his wont was, with all and sundry, and winning the regard of the villagers by his kindly and courteous ways. He met Ethel on his return from the mill, and turned to accompany her home.

"I am sorry, Miss Ethel more sorry than I can tell you, that I must tear myself away from this lovely spot, and from the friends who have become very dear to me. I have received a communication from the Continent, which demands my immediate presence on a matter pertaining to my business. Believe me, I am loth to go."

"Indeed, Señor, we shall be very sorry to part with you. I trust you do not need to take Inez away. That would be a double deprivation."

"Why, to tell you the truth," said Señor Bonanza, "I have been thinking about that. I should be very glad for her to stay with you, if you think best. I dare say I shall be absent a fortnight, or it may be a month."

"I should dearly like to keep her, Señor, for she is very dear to me; but it is not quite fair on my part to do so without telling you of a matter that has come to my knowledge, or, rather, my perception. In lending your new-found daughter to me I think that there is a possibility of your losing her altogether."

"Do you mean to represent yourself as a fair brigand, Miss Ethel, like those from whom you delivered me?"

"Oh! no, much as I love Inez, I would not steal her from you, Señor. But there are brigands around whose bonds are so firm that a father might find it impossible to break them, especially if the fair captive were a willing prisoner. There is one such brigand who, if he have the opportunity that Inez's presence here for a month would give him, might make her his prisoner for life."

"You refer to Alfred Atheling, do you not, Miss Ethel? I have suspected something of the kind, but I am not sure that I ought to protect Inez in that case. What is your opinion of the young man? Would Inez be safe and happy in his keeping?"

"I feel sure so, now, Señor; at one time, when he and my brother Harold were companions in London, it would have been madness to intrust any one's happiness to the keeping of either of them. But I believe that with both the change is radical and permanent, and that in Alfred's case Inez would find in him a tender and affectionate husband."

"That is my opinion, and besides, as I owe him a debt of gratitude for his goodness to my daughter in her time of trouble, he has a special claim upon me. So I think we may leave the two young people in propinquity without fear of consequences, and if they are drawn to each other—why I suppose I must make up my mind to lose my daughter."

It was a comfort to Ethel to see that Señor Bonanza regarded her project so philosophically, and accordingly from that time forward she had no scruples about leaving the two young people in each other's society, which they on their side evidently preferred to any other. The result was what Ethel and Señor Bonanza had foreseen.

It is not needful, neither is it within my capacity, to deal at length with fervent courtships and the stories of gay weddings. It must suffice, therefore, to say that when the primroses were in bloom and the scent of the violets was borne upon the spring breezes, when the song of the blackbird was heard in the dale, two weddings were celebrated. As all the parties were so intimately associated, the ceremony was performed at one and the same time. As may be supposed, the tenants on Sir Godwin's estate, and, indeed, all Aspendale, made merry on the occasion, for Harold Spofforth and Alfred Atheling, in their characters of bridegrooms, had regained their popularity.

The close of the day, however, was saddened by one melancholy incident, which, though long impending, was a shock to the happy party. Sir Godwin was suddenly prostrated by another attack of paralysis, which for some hours deprived him of consciousness. Harold, Clara and Ethel watched beside him and saw the shadow of death creeping over his emaciated face. They thought he had passed away, when he opened his eyes and looked lovingly at them, recognizing each. He was rendered speechless by the attack, but he motioned to them to kiss him, and as each bent over him they saw that his eyes were full of peace and joy; then the baronet smiled a "God bless you!" and passed away; but the smile remained, and abode upon his face when he was laid in his last resting-place.

It was a joy, an abiding joy, to the returned and repentant son, that his father left him so. Harold, now Sir Harold, Spofforth and his lady lived for the good of Aspendale and the fulfilment of all the duties of their high position, and it may be truly said that their duty was their delight. On their path there was no shadow except one, and that was dark, dark indeed, the slowly but surely fading life of the gentle and beloved Ethel, who was dear to them as their own souls.

Simon Holmes was held by Sir Harold in high esteem. He made the shrewd and godly carpenter his counsellor and friend, and both he and Aspendale in general were greatly the gainers by that, for Simon's influence was modelled on that which the Carpenter of Galilee would have exerted had he been of Aspendale instead of Nazareth.

Alfred Atheling and his young wife, Inez, removed with Senor Bonanza to a pleasant rural retreat within a short distance of London. It had been bought and furnished by Señor Bonanza, and from hence Alfred could readily reach his publishers in the city. They would fain have had Captain Lanyon say good-bye to a mariner's life and reside with them; but the captain absolutely declared that he could not leave the sea. He would make "Ravensworth," as the villa was called, his home when on shore, but his "home was on the deep," and so he took command of the Ruth Hartgold, and Will Trounce and Joe Hewitt sailed with their old skipper, and soon became as fervent as Captain Crumpet in sounding the praises of the Quaker merchant.

When the autumn sun had fully ripened the corn, and the broad wheatfields of Aspen Garth were bright with waving gold, Robert Atheling brought home his bride, and never Boaz in this world was prouder of his Ruth than Robert was when "he and she went to look at the reapers."

Widow Atheling, happy woman, took the sweet maiden to her heart as she laughed and cried by turns.

At Simon Holmes' suggestion, and seeing that he felt himself to be getting past active work and had competent means to retire upon, Ned Saltmer became the village carpenter, and he and Madge were happy to be located in Yorkshire once again. Like all Yorkshire people they were never so happy as there, and saw beauties in that neighborhood and in the character of its people that no one else ever can see.

For some months there was peace, real peace and happiness, in quiet Aspendale, and Ethel was permitted to drink to the full of the enjoyment which she had been so largely instrumental in making possible. She was completely happy and contented. Then alas! the cloud which had been slowly but surely gathering all the while hung dark and heavy over Aspendale, and especially over Aspen Towers. But there was a silver lining to it, for though Ethel Spofforth, Ethel the unselfish, was to be "called hence," it was not so much a death as a translation. She had finished the work that was given her to do—the work for which she was raised awhile from the bed of death—and now again the Master called, called her kindly and tenderly, and she gladly obeyed the call.

Harold and Clara sent to London for Sir Jarvis Mainwaring, the famous physician, under whose care Ethel had recovered before, who responded with unusual speed and readiness to such a call; for he had never forgotten the song which this imprisoned bird had sung in his ears through the bars of her cage. But with all his skill and zeal on her behalf, or rather on behalf of those who would have kept her here, he was unable to clip her wings or chain her spirit any longer to this bare earth. As he stood by her bed and listened to her testimony concerning her Saviour and His love, the great physician stood amazed and softened. She had such evident communion with heaven that it seemed to him as though her death-chamber was peopled by angelic spirits, who in some subtle way made their presence known to him. He could simply stand and look, or appear to look—for, sooth to say, his eyes were dim with unaccustomed tears.

When the time drew near for her departure, not only Harold and Clara, but Robert Atheling and Ruth, Alfred and Inez, Señor Bonanza and Simon Holmes, were gathered round her bed. To all of them she spoke some loving and tender word, and all she said was redolent of peace and hope, and of a higher joy than can come to those who are less near heaven than she was. Then she turned to the old carpenter, who had been a daily visitor, and whose wise counsels, inspiring prayers and welcome words, that seemed to make her faith more strong, had been very precious all the time. He, too, had been summoned to see her "preen her wings for flight."

"Farewell for a little while, dear friend, faithful adviser and comforter in trouble. It is but for a little. You and I will resume our best-loved theme by-and-bye."

"Ay, ay, mah bairn!" said the old man, speaking in a voice broken with sobs, "you can leave t' door upo' t' latch, an' tell t' shinin' ones 'at ah sall be wi' 'em efter a bit."

Ethel smiled sweetly at the thought, and nodded her head as though she had got the message clearly, and meant to carry it. Then as she looked with loving gaze on first one and then another of those who, standing round, were sad and tearful, and loth to let her go, she said: "Dear, dear friends! why do you weep? I wish you wouldn't. I never felt less like shedding tears. I wish you would sing. I should like to float to heaven on a song. Sing

'Rock of Ages, cleft for me.'"

But there was no voice, neither any that answered, only sobs that came unbidden, and refused to be hushed to silence.

"Inez, dear," said she, with a smile that rested through long years on her memory, "you can sing. Do you remember the evening hymn you sang when you were tossing in that frail boat out at sea? Sing to me:

'Hold Thou Thy cross before my closing eyes.'"

The request was uttered with such eagerness that Inez seemed to feel it as a command, a sacred request that must be obeyed. So she set herself to the task, resolved to control herself until it was done. Bravely she began it, bravely and firmly she forced her sweet voice through the first and second lines. No sooner did she reach "Heaven's morning breaks," than Ethel's eyes were lifted towards a light they could not see, and her hands were raised as if in expectation. I think, had Inez continued, the saintly maiden would have soared before the song had ended. But it was not to be, could not be, for Inez failed to utter one word more, but knelt by the bed and sought to hush the sobs that would break from her by burying her face in the coverlet. This recalled Ethel, who had already poised her wings. She looked at Inez with tender pity, and moved her hand so as to touch the young wife's raven locks, and said:

"Nay, dear Inez, never mind! Thank you, I thought I was going to the music of that sweet psalm to my bright home with Jesus. All is well, dear ones."

She raised her hands, transparent as an angel's; a light sat upon her face, a light that deepened and brightened as she sang, in a soft, sweet voice, weak, but strangely clear—

"He by Himself hath sworn,
I on His oath depend,
I shall on angel wings upborne
To heaven ascend.
I shall behold His face,
I shall His power adore,
And sing the wonders of His grace
For evermore!"

The last syllable had not fully left her lips when her voice ceased, her hand fell, and the light upon her features flitted somewhat, leaving still a token on the face that it had been there. Once more the Master took her by the hand. Once more she heard the Wonder-worker's voice, "Talitha cumi!" Damsel, I say unto thee, Arise! So Ethel Spofforth went up, went home; ascending with a song upon her lips and the light of "Heaven's morning" on her face!

As Sir Jarvis Mainwaring and Simon Holmes descended the stairs in company, the physician was silent, but as they reached the lower floor he said, as if speaking to himself, just what he had said before when the now translated maiden was brought back to life by means of his own strange dream: "It's very singular—very singular indeed!"

"O, Sir Jarvis!" said Simon Holmes, as well as he could for the deep feeling which had broken up the fountains of his heart, "there's nowt singular aboot it. Its all ov a piece. He's just finished His wark as He began it. Ah've knoan her iver since she was that high," he continued, holding his hand up a short distance from the ground; "an' she's been yan o' the Lord's darlin's all t' tahme. When she fun' peeace an' joy throo beleeavin', she just got t' print o' heaven on her, an' it's been growin' clearer an' prattier iver since. When yo' com' te see her afoore, she was as mitch of a angel as it's gi'en te mottals to be on this side o' Jordan. The Lord sent fo' yo' te fetch her back just as she was crossin', 'at she might seeave her bruther. All t' tahme she was at it she was gettin' riper an' sweeter; an' noo' as it's deean, she's gotten her reward. Oh, but it's grand! it's grand! Ah've seen a dew-drop shinin' like a jewel i' t' heart of a rose: an' while ah've watched it, t' sun's cum', an' just kissed it off an' ta'en it oot o' seet. That's Miss Ethel tiv a T. God bless her! She was just a pure an' lovely dewdrop shinin' upo' t' heart of her Saviour doon here. Noo, t' glory leet's shon' doon on her an' her sweet soul's kissed up te heaven! It's my opinion," said the old carpenter emphatically, "that the Lord's just gone, an' deean the meeast nat'ral thing i' t' wo'ld. Sweets te the sweet, ye' knoa, Sir Jarvis, an' she's wheear she owt te be—

'Lap't i' sweet repose
On her sweet Saviour's breast.'

Excuse me, Sir Jarvis, but you an' me can't deea better than cling close te t' Saviour o' men when He puts such a finish to this mortal life as that we've just seen."

Said Sir Jarvis Mainwaring: "Simon Holmes, From my soul I think you're right."

"Praise the Lord!" said Simon. "But you may knoa it, Sir Jarvis. You may knoa it!"

Reader! So may you and I!

THE END.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for July 24. Matt. 3 : 13-17; John 1. Golden Text, Matt. 3 : 17.

John's Long Cherished Desire—The Promised Sign—The Present Saviour Recognized—The Joy of the Pilgrims—Sin to be Taken Away—The Fulfilment of Righteousness—Burial by Baptism—Newness of Life—An Implantation—On the Divine Life Within—The Same Life with Jesus—The True Spirit of Baptism.

IF "the people were in expectation, and all men mused in their hearts of John" (Luke 3: 15), how much more was he in expectation of the day and hour when the long-cherished desire of his heart should be accomplished, and he should see the Messiah, the Christ of God. Day by day, the work of awakening went on, the fame of John had reached Herod's court. Already a marked change was taking place in the hearts and lives of many, the disobedient were being turned "to the wisdom of the just." The fame of John had reached to Galilee, and from thence, as well as from Judea, awakened souls came to the baptism and the preaching of John. One day the reputed Son of Joseph, the carpenter of Nazareth, came to be baptized, but He had no sins to confess. John, at first, "knew him not": but a revelation from God had made known to the Baptist, "Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining upon Him, the same is He, which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost." John's first impulse was to forbid Him, and say "I have need to be baptized of Thee, and comest Thou to me?" John was longing for that baptism with the Holy Ghost, which was the declared

Work of the Messiah.

How could He which should baptize with the Holy Ghost need the baptism of water? Jesus could not need for Himself "the baptism of repentance unto remission of sins!" But He came, not only to die for us and bear our sins away, but also to make footsteps for us to tread in. He said, "Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."

As Jesus came up out of the Jordan, "lo, the heavens were opened unto Him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and lighting upon Him; and, lo, a voice from heaven, saying, in whom I am well pleased." It was the promised sign; this was the supreme moment for which John had prayed and preached and lived. John had never pictured to himself that perhaps it was this one, or perhaps that one, who should turn out to be the Messiah. He had waited for God to reveal Him, and now that a declaration from heaven made known to him that this Jesus was the Messiah, the whole current of his life and testimony underwent a change. Hitherto he had testified to a coming Messiah and a kingdom which was "at hand;" now, with an overflowing heart, he could introduce a present Saviour, and he cried in deepest adoration, "Behold, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world!" There are some religious teachers who lead their followers to an expectation of blessing in some indefinite future. These, like John the Baptist in his early ministry, have no acquaintance with a real, present God. Teachers who have power are such as live, moment by moment, in sight of a Saviour close at hand; yes, dwelling in their hearts by faith. A Saviour now saving is what the sinner wants. An Overcomer now delivering is what the tempted child of God wants. A Burden-bearer now caring for him is what the anxious one wants. "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation" (2 Cor. 6 : 2), is a message which fits the needs of all the needy ones.

This is My Beloved Son,

O what joy must have come upon those crowds of pilgrims by the Jordan when they heard that now, even before their eyes, standing in their very midst, was He who fulfilled the types of sacrifice under the law, "the Lamb of God, which

Taketh Away the Sins of the World."

Only once in the year, on the great day of atonement did they hear of the taking away of sin, when Aaron confessed over the head of the scapegoat "all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat," and then sending him away into the wilderness, "into a land not inhabited," there to bear away their sins. "And the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited" (Lev. 16 : 21, 22). But often the burden of sins was upon them many months, and there were many sins which no such atonement could touch. Again and again, the fatal condemnation of the law declared against a sinner, "He shall die in his iniquity" (Lev. 26 : 39; Num. 15 : 31; Eze. 3 : 18, 19). The sin might be confessed, as in the case of Achan (Josh 7 : 19–21), and yet not forgiven, not taken away. But now it was to be as though it had never been, "He will turn again, He will have compassion upon us; He will subdue our iniquities; and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea" (Mic. 7 : 19). No wonder John the Baptist speaks of himself as rejoicing greatly, because of the Bridegroom's voice (John 3 : 29), no wonder he testified, again and again, "Behold, the Lamb of God."

But what was the righteousness which Jesus fulfilled when He was baptized? He was circumcised as an Infant, that He might come under the law to God and live under its obligation. "This do, and thou shalt live." Fully and perfectly He kept the law, and He alone, and in doing so He became the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth (Rom. 10 : 4). God could not ignore sin. But Jesus came on earth to be "the last Adam" (1 Cor. 15 : 45). The head and spring of a new race. As all men are included in Adam, and "as in Adam all die" (1 Cor. 15 : 22), so Jesus came, that all men who believe should be included in Him, "so also in Christ shall all be made alive." He fulfilled the law, first, as our Representative, afterwards as our Power. His obedience was

No Substitute For Our Obedience,

but it is our power to obey. He said, "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God. By the which will we are sanctified" (Heb. 10 : 9, 10). Because He perfectly did the will of God, we who are in Him are sanctified, or set apart, to do His will too. And thus it is written, "And ye are complete in Him, which is the Head of all principality and power. In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ" (Col. 2 : 10, 11). But He has also shown that, for the believer, no individual circumcision can avail, he which is circumcised is a debtor to do the whole law (Gal 5 : 3). "None of you keepeth the law." He has made a way in which His circumcision avails for us, but, though circumcised in His circumcision, we are not buried in His baptism; we must individually be "buried with Him by baptism." We are "buried with Him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life" (Rom. 6 : 4). Circumcision binds a man to exert all his power of will, all his conscientiousness, all his energy, to do violence to himself in obeying God. If he succeeds, he can say how hard a struggle he had, and yet be little satisfied with his victory, because so much sin yet remains unconquered. Baptism is a sign of our life and powers being dead with Christ and buried with Christ, that the life we live shall not be in our power, but in His, in

Newness of Life,

not a draw upon the old, but a coming in of the new. Jesus Himself was true to His baptism. He declares, "I can of Mine own self do nothing." "The Son can do nothing of Himself." "The Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works" (John 5 : 19, 30; 14 : 10). Baptism says, "I am dead, I expect nothing from myself, I am nothing in myself, but I walk in newness of life, for I live by the faith of the Son of God (Gal. 2 : 20), and He that dwelleth in me, He doeth the works which are done in newness of life. He, not I, maketh all things new" (Rev. 21 : 5). Our beloved Lord introduced a life which was neither self-centred nor self-impelled nor self-empowered. It was a new thing for man—self-complacent, self-reliant, self-indulgent, self-loving man—to yield himself up to be the habitation of Another, the simple but willing instrument of Another; yet

This was the Life of Jesus,

this is the life of one who is really baptized of the Holy Ghost into God. Self is buried in a wondrous soil; Jesus commanded His disciples to baptize "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Buried in such a soil, what would be the resurrection? "If we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection, knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin" (Rom. 6 : 6). By the very "faith of the operation of God, who hath raised Him from the dead" (Col. 2 : 12), we are risen with Him, and made to sit with Him in heavenly places (Eph. 2 : 6), where he is "far above all principality and power" (Eph. 1 : 21), therefore, not in our own selves, which we hold by faith as dead, not to be reckoned on, not to be regarded, but by a life of constantly recognizing Him, we may live a blessed life where we do not "serve sin." He who dwelleth in us keeps us as we trust Him, He who dwelleth in us has conquered for us, and lives to conquer in us. If, however, we leave the position into which we are baptized, and fall back upon our own resolutions, powers, efforts, or struggles, if we trust to a past experience or anything else than an indwelling Christ, we must get into failure. The Lord never fails us. He is true and faithful always; but with us, "whatsoever is not of faith is sin" (Rom. 14 : 23). We stand by faith (Rom. 11 : 20), we live by the faith of the Son of God, we walk by faith, not by sight (2 Cor. 5 : 7). It is the moment by moment trust in Him which resembles His own life of faith; "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth Me, even he shall live by me."

John the Baptist, although he had no such teaching of baptism as we have, and although his baptism was of water unto the remission of sins, yet seemed to have when he said, "He must increase, but I must decrease" (John 3 : 30). He denied himself and longed to grow little, that he might leave room for Jesus, and, though when he had his desire, and was cast into prison by Herod, he was stumbled at the first, yet he understood his Master's explanation which he sent by John's disciples, and he came into the blessing of him who should not be offended in Christ. But how many are there of God's children who, although outwardly baptized, are by no means buried; self is most observable in them on all occasions, they are very touchy—a queer thing for a buried corpse! They are self-assertive—which is by no means newness of life, but is a strongly marked feature in the old man; they defend themselves, which certainly savors more of life than death; they sound their own praises, and a man does not often do this at his own funeral. Alas, the burial has been like that of many a man, in form only, the self has lived on, and is active still. With Jesus, all that in man's nature which reveals self was indeed buried; He received not honor from man, He ran away from those who would make him a king, "When He was reviled, (He) reviled not again; when He was charged with casting out devils by Beelzebub, He did not retaliate; when He was spit upon, buffetted and falsely accused, He answered not a word; when He was nailed to the cross, He prayed for His murderers—This was indeed "newness of life."

The True Spirit of Baptism

A WORKER'S PRAYER.

"For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you."—1 COR. ii., 23.

Lord, speak to me, that I may speak
In living echoes of Thy tone;
As Thou hast sought, so let me seek Thy erring children, lost and lone.

O lead me, Lord, that I may lead
The wandering and the wavering feet;
O feed me, Lord, that I may feed
Thy hungering ones with manna sweet.

O strengthen me, that while I stand Firm on the Rock, and strong in Thee,
I may stretch out a loving hand
To wrestlers in the troubled sea.

O teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious things Thou dost impart;
And wing my words, that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart.

O give Thine own sweet rest to me,
That I may speak with soothing power
A word in season, as from Thee,
To weary ones in needful hour.

O fill me with Thy fulness, Lord,
Until my very heart o'erflow
In kindling thought and glowing word,
Thy love to tell, Thy praise to show.

O use me, Lord, use even me,
Just as Thou wilt, and when, and where;
Until Thy blessed face I see Thy rest, Thy joy, Thy glory share.

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form for general distribution at twenty-five cents per hundred.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of
J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES—(avoid Agents and Dealers whose profits and expenses double the cost on every Piano they sell) and send this First-Class UPRIGHT Cabinet GEM 7⅓ Octave Rosewood Piano, Warranted 6 years, for $193! We send it—with Beautiful Cover and Stool—for Trial in your own Home before you buy. Send for circulars to Marchal & Smith, 235 East 21st St., N. Y.

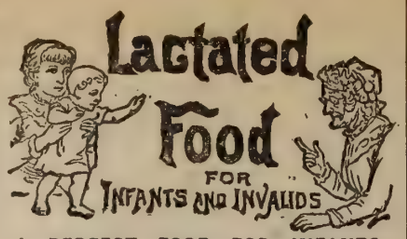
"FLORIDA; Its Advantages and Drawbacks." For the above book or free information, address O. M. CROSBY, the author, 76 Park Place, N. Y.



A PERFECT FOOD FOR INFANTS.
THE MOTHER'S FAVORITE.
It has been successful in hundreds of cases where other prepared foods failed.

FOR INVALIDS AND DYSPEPTICS.
The Most Nourishing, Most Palatable, Most Economical,
OF ALL PREPARED FOODS.
EASILY AND QUICKLY PREPARED.

Send for circulars and pamphlets giving testimony of Physicians and Mothers, which will amply prove every statement we make.
For sale by Druggists 25c., 50c., $1.00.
Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.
Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THREE CHOICE BOOKLETS.

"THY WILL."
A beautiful poem of submission.
BY JEAN S. PIGOTT.
"Teach me to do thy will, for Thou art my God."

"Beneath the splendor of Thy choice,
Thy perfect choice for me, I rest."

18 pages. Silk-tied. In titled envelope.

"I SHALL BE SATISFIED."
A poem of contentment.
"Far out of sight, while yet the flesh enfolds us, Lies the fair country where our hearts abide."

18 pages. Silk-tied. In titled envelope,

"ONE LESS AT HOME."
A poem of sweet comfort for those who have lost dear friends.
"One less at home!
The charmed circle broken — a dear face
Missed day by day from its accustomed place,
But cleansed, and saved, and perfected by grace;
One more in Heaven!"

18 pages. Silk-tied. In titled envelope.

Each of the above are printed with handsome type on extra heavy bristol board, 18 pages, with a delicate spray in tint on each page, silk-tied, and enclosed in titled envelope. Sent post-paid for 20 cents each, or the three together for 55 cts.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

MANHATTAN SAVINGS INSTITUTION.
NEW YORK, June 22, 1887.

72d SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDEND.

THE TRUSTEES OF THIS INSTITUTION have declared interest on all sums remaining on deposit during the three or six months ending June 30, inst., at the rate of THREE AND A HALF PER CENT. per annum on $1,000 and under, and THREE PER CENT. per annum on the excess of $1,000, not exceeding $3,000, payable on and after the third MONDAY in July next. Interest not withdrawn will receive interest the same as a deposit.
EDWARD SCHELL, President.
C. F. ALVORD, Secretary.

Palmer's Book of Gems.
FOR THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

111 Songs, with music, many of them new. The old favorites are gems of a high order, selected by H. R. PALMER, Mus. Doc., and 200 S. S. Superintendents.
Price $10 per 100 Copies. Single Copies by Mail, 12c.

BIGLOW & MAIN, New York & Chicago.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE

A new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents, by J. S. OGILVIE & CO., 31 Rose Street, New York.

Day's Neuralgia Cure.

A Positive Cure for all forms. No more need of suffering. Send for descriptive circulars.
WALTER L. DAY, 23 West 12th St., N. Y.

It's Better Than The Others.

What's the use of getting a new song book unless it's better than the others? No use. Better sing from "Songs of Triumph." This struck us when we got it in our head to make Glad Hallelujahs. It hung to us, to Sweney, and to Kirkpatrick. We could'nt get rid of it. What's the result? We've excelled ourselves. Try it.

By mail, 35 cents. By express (not prepaid), $3.60 per dozen; $30 per 100. One sample copy 25 cents.
Further inducements to Schools, Churches and Evangelists. Write us.
T. T. TASKER, SR., PUBLISHER,
921 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.
This Magazine portrays American thought and life from ocean to ocean, is filled with pure high-class literature, and can be safely welcomed in any family circle.

PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MAIL.

Sample Copy of current number mailed upon receipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 cts.

Premium List with either.

Address:
R. T. BUSH & SON, Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N. Y.

GET UP CLUBS

MOTH-WAX.

Kills the Moth and the old Moth Miller.
It is a perfect protection of Furs and Woollen Fabrics, and is more economical to use than camphor.
In one-pound boxes containing a dozen cakes.
Agents wanted in every city, town and county.
For sale by all druggists.
WM. H. H. CHILDS, 73 MAIDEN LANE, N. Y.

Notes and Suggestions
FOR BIBLE READINGS.

S. R. Briggs and J. H. Elliott.

Acknowledged to be the very best help for Bible Readings in print. Introductory chapters by
L. W. Whittle,
Rev. Lyman Abbott,
Rev. J. H. Brookes, D.D.,
Rev. Stewart Robinson, D.D.,
Rev. J. Erdman,
Rev. A. Somerville,
Rev. J. H. Vincent, D.D.
And OVER SIX HUNDRED BIBLE READINGS AND BIBLE STUDIES by some of the most eminent Bible students of the day.
This volume is without doubt the most complete and satisfactory as well as the largest and cheapest book of Bible Readings published.
One very valuable feature of this work and wherein it differs from other books of a somewhat similar character, is in the line of thought being given with very nearly every scripture reference quoted, without which a book of Bible Readings is of little more help than an ordinary concordance in preparing for this useful branch of Christian instruction.
262 pages, large 12mo, with complete Index. Bound in cloth. Library Edition, $1 00; cheap paper cover edition, 50 cents.
Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

"Demonology or Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern"—"An effective weapon."—"A sword of fire."—"Only unanswerable work on the subject."—"startling disclosures.—History facts and data. Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

JAMES McCREERY &

INVITE PARTICULAR ATTENTION T GOODS SUITABLE FOR SUMMER V WEAR. THE POPULAR KNITTED SUIT FOR LADIES, MISSES AND C HAS NO EQUAL; IT IS LIGHT IN FASHIONED FOR COMFORT, AND FOR THE SEA-SHORE, YACHTING AN TENNIS. IT CONSISTS OF A SKIRT, CAP AND SASH, COMPLETE AND R PUT ON WHEN DELIVERED TO TH MER.

FOR MEN AND BOYS THERE IS LARGE ASSORTMENT OF THE FAMO KENZIE FLANNEL NEGLIGE SHI WELL AS MANY OTHER KINDS OF AND COLORED FLANNEL SHIR WAISTS.

BROADWAY, AND ELEVENT
New York.

Infant Wardrobe

Ladies who are unable to e our stock of these goods pers would find it to their advant correspond with us. The mos plete information furnished, an ful attention given to special c

Lord & Tay
Broadway & 20th Street, N

Manufacturers, 341 BROADWAY, NEW

DR. WEIDEMAN'S CELEBRATED GOLDEN HERB SA
for CORNS, Bunions and Frost Bites. Sent post-paid, in 25 and 50-cent boxes.
U. M. WEIDEMAN, 137 Willis
Paterson.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

Pleasant to Prompt in Always R

It soon brings into healthy play
The Torpid Liver day by day,
And Regulates the System through,
From crown of head to sole of shoe.
It cures the Piles, it opens pores,
Lost appetite it soon restores,
Wise families throughout the land
Keep TARRANT'S SELTZER near

ON 30 DAYS' TRI
THIS NE
ELASTIC TR

Has a Pad different others, is cup shape, adjusting Ball in cent itself to all position body while the ball presses back the tines just as a does with the finger. With light pressure nia is held securely day and night, and a radi certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by culars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chica AGENTS WANTED (Samples F DR. SCOTT'S beautiful Corsets, Brushes, Belts, Etc. No risk, qu Territory given. Satisfaction guaranteed.

DR. SCOTT, 843 Broadway, New

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 29. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF JUAN BAPTISTA CABRERA, and Picture of the Cathedral of Toledo.

WATERING THE SHEEP. Dr. Talmage's Vacation Sermon.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

TOM COLLEY'S NEW COLORS. (With Illustration.)

THE SECOND ADVENT PRE-MILLENNIAL AND PERSONAL, by Dr. Scudder, of Chicago.

CURRENT EVENTS: Sunday Observance in the Army—The Sentence on Jacob Sharp—The Volcano at Bavispe—The Cotton Corner—A Letter from the Governor of Kansas, etc.

PORTRAIT OF QUEEN KAPIOLANI AND PICTURES OF HAWAII.

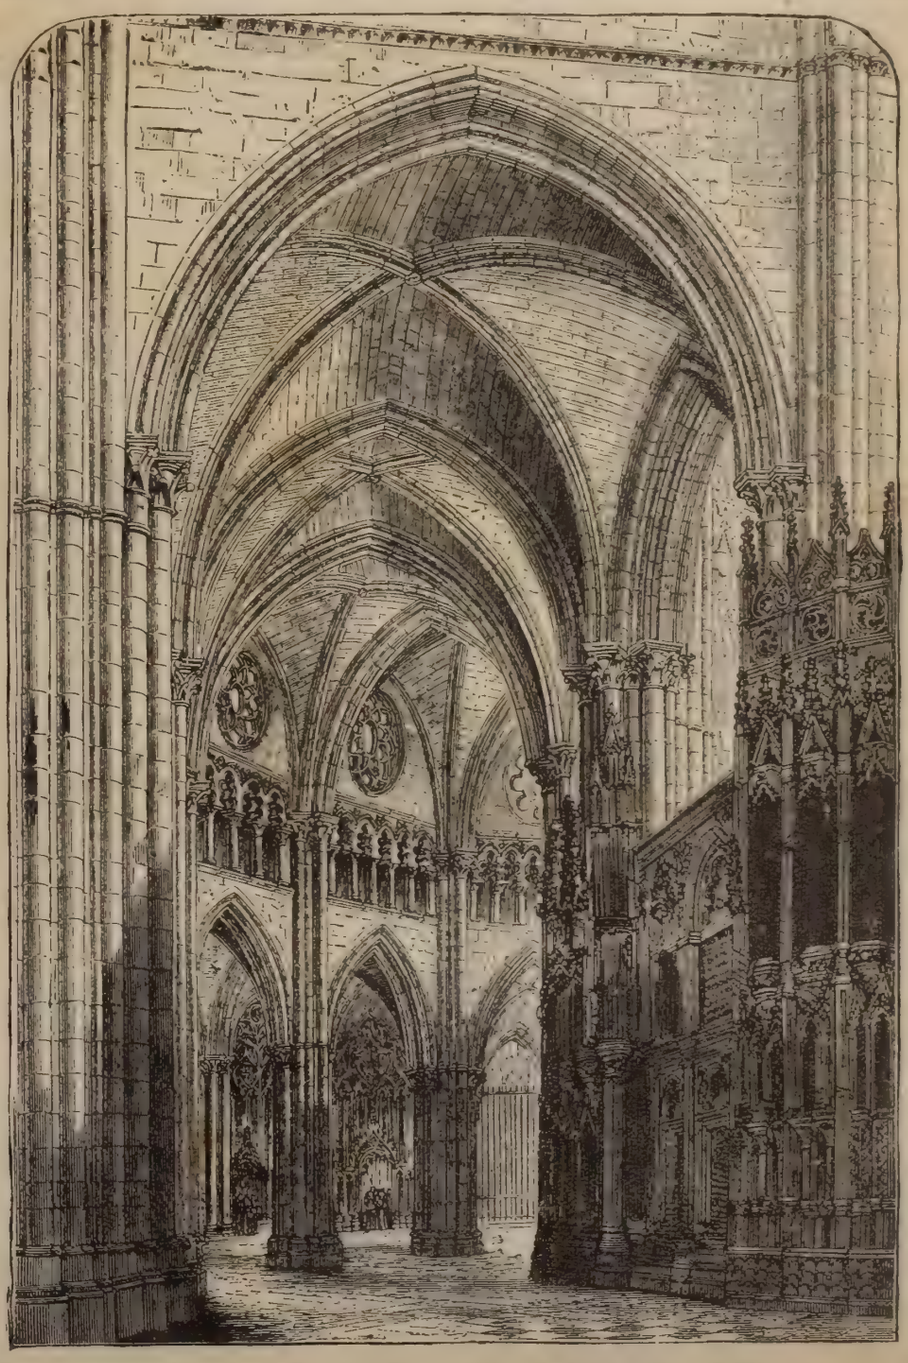
PLEADING PRAYER. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.—Gems from New Books.

A Missionary on the Brink of a Precipice—A Crisis at Sea—A Letter from Rev. W. F. Re Qua—A Death Blow from a Loaf—An Heroic Engineer, etc.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN: Mr. George Muller's Autobiography.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Bishop Juan B. Cabrera.



Bishop Cabrera of the Spanish Church—An Old Gateway in Toledo—The Cathedral of Toledo.

BISHOP CABRERA.

And the Evangelistic Movement in Spain and Spanish America.

The Open Door in Mexico—The Responsibilities Entailed—Bishop Riley's New Book—Cabrera's Character—His Flight to Gibraltar—The Revolution Under General Prim—Cabrera's Episcopal Labors—The Convention of the Synod at Seville—Cabrera Chosen Bishop—The Cathedral of Toledo—The Ancient Gateway—Bishop Riley's Narrative.

AT this time, when the new Postal Treaty with Mexico is drawing the people of the United States into closer relations with our neighbors across the border, the responsibilities of American Christians are increased. An earnest and prayerful effort to give the people of Mexico the pure Gospel ought to be made, if we would fulfil

The Obligations Laid Upon Us.

Living near to them, trading with them, and having improved facilities of communication with them, it will be a grievous and culpable neglect of duty to fail to use all those facilities for their spiritual good. Souls may be won for Christ in that land, and the thought of that opportunity should arouse every Christian to energetic labor to win them; those who can go to preach, going without loss of time; and those who cannot go, contributing to the funds needed to send the preachers. And then besides this there is the awful thought involved in the consideration of the consequences of neglect. "Where there is no vision the people perish," and people are perishing every day in Mexico. Thousands there are in that land who have never seen a Bible, though living on the borders of a Christian country. If through natural calamity, of fire or earthquake or inundation, they were without the means of life we should send them food, how much more in their spiritual destitution ought we to send them the Bread of Life.

These facts are beginning to be realized by the Church, and a desire is manifested to know something of

The Spiritual State of Mexico.

To meet this want Bishop H. C. Riley, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on April 7, this year, has commenced the publication of an exhaustive work on Spain and Spanish America, beautifully illustrated. It is issued in parts, and the first part, price fifty cents, is now on sale, and may be procured from J. P. Heath, 43 Bible House, New York. It sets forth the character and condition of the people, their way of life, their habits and customs, with pictures of their cities and homes, an account of what has already been done, and what still remains to be done to evangelize them, and a sketch of the methods of Christian work which have been found most successful in dealing with them. In fact, it is precisely what is needed at a time when a door of hope is flung wide open and the opportunity is afforded for zealous and effective service for Christ in a neglected field. It is to its pages that we are indebted for the facts from which this sketch is compiled.

Juan Baptista Cabrera, whose portrait appears on the first page, is an earnest evangelical preacher, who has been elected a Bishop of the evangelical Spanish Church. He is a man of eminent piety and vigorous temperament, who speaks out the truth that is in him without fear. Such a man could not live in Spain five and twenty years ago. The bigotry and intolerance of the Romish Church, and the subservience of the Spanish Government to the arrogant pretensions of the Pope, would have combined to give him the crown of martyrdom before his work had been well commenced. Cabrera pined to tell his countrymen of Jesus, and he could not preach Jesus to them without inviting them to come to Him, and assuring them of a welcome without the intervention of priest or Pope. His case was clearly that of the disciples to whom Jesus said, "When they persecute you in one city flee to another." Cabrera fled, but not out of his country. The little point of rock which England holds in the south of Spain offered him a refuge from ecclesiastical malignity, and Cabrera fled to Gibraltar. There he prepared himself by study and meditation for his great work, laboring as he did so to use every opportunity that his position on Spanish soil afforded to make known the gospel by tongue and pen.

In the year 1868 came

The Great Revolution.

General Prim raised the cry of liberty in Spain and led the liberal movement to a glorious triumph; a triumph that gave to Spain liberty of worship. Then Cabrera emerged from his seclusion at Gibraltar and entered, heart and soul, into the work of preaching Christ to the people. To his surprise and delight he found in many villages and towns a little circle of true Christians who had been in the habit of meeting in privacy and secrecy to study the Bible. From these he received a cordial welcome, and now that they were able to worship openly and declare the truth, their numbers rapidly increased. Congregations of considerable size were organized in the larger cities of Spain, notably in Malaga, Seville, and Madrid; and in the smaller places the little bands of Christians drew closer together, and organized for aggressive work. After a time these isolated churches, to all of which Cabrera, following the example of the great Apostle of the Gentiles, had ministered, visiting them, writing to them, instructing them, and helping them in their study of divine truth, became desirous of uniting in some definite and homogeneous shape. Eventually it was decided to hold a convention or synod. Delegates were chosen from each assembly or church, and the synod duly assembled in Seville to arrange plans for harmonious and united work. During the sessions of this synod it was decided who should have the general oversight of the whole Church. There was no difficulty about the selection. The work of a bishop had been carried on for some time voluntarily, and the very synod itself, with the churches it represented, was an evidence of the efficiency and single-mindedness and devotion with which the work had been done. With earnest prayers for the divine blessing, the choice was made, and Juan Baptista Cabrera was solemnly set apart for the work. No change was necessary in his way of life. He had simply to go forward with the same kind of labor already initiated; the only difference was, that now he held the formal endorsement of his fellow-laborers, and by their authority was invested with jurisdiction in the Church. Since that time the movement has increased in volume and deepened in fervor, and much good has resulted.

To Choose a Bishop

Nevertheless, it has reached but a small portion of the people. The vast majority are still sunk in papal darkness and superstition. The women go to mass and confession, while the men are, for the greater part, utterly indifferent to religion, or attend the Roman Catholic churches, because it is the fashion to do so. Religion exercises no influence over their daily life, and they go, even on the Sunday, from the church to debasing amusements, with the greater zest for having fulfilled the duties and satisfied the claims which, according to their idea of religion, the Church requires.

The Cathedral of Toledo,

a picture of the interior of which accompanies the Bishop's portrait on the first page, is only one of the many magnificent structures in Spain which attest the spirituality of the Spanish people. A nation which has reared edifices so glorious for the worship of God cannot be wholly beyond the reach of Christian effort. True, it is long since they were built, and the people have retrograded, but no nation has more thoroughly retained and passed forward from generation to generation the distinctive national characteristics than Spain, and there is, consequently, a foundation of spirituality and reverence for God, perverted and misguided though it may be, which encourages the earnest Christian in his hope that his efforts to turn it to a right purpose will not be futile.

The Cathedral of Toledo was long the seat of the Spanish Primate, and is reverenced for its age and legendary associations. Here is a stone on which, as the people believe, the Virgin alighted when she came down to visit the building during its erection, and which is worn thin with frequent kisses. There are also many other articles carefully preserved there with which some childish story is identified. The cathedral dates from the thirteenth century, but every century since has witnessed some additions, or some piece of elaborate ornamentation. It is exceedingly rich in jewels and precious stones, the gifts of royalty and wealthy devotees. Golden gratings and steps of jasper are around the altar, and the precious metal gleams from all points of the building. A curious and suggestive effect is produced by an ingenious architectural device, by which the solemn twilight that pervades the interior is broken at the back of the altar by a stream of white light which enters from a window in the arched ceiling, and contrasts with startling effect with the tints from the stained glass windows.

The Gateway

in Toledo, a picture of which also appears on the first page, is of very ancient construction. It is a relic of the old Moorish domination, and is a peculiar combination of strength and gracefulness. Arches and pillars of granite and brick once rose from it, and the whole speaks, like everything else about Toledo, of departed grandeur and magnificence. Behind the gateway is an open paved court, which at one time belonged to a palace. A beautiful carved gallery surrounds it, from which, in by gone days, fair ladies looked down on the revels below; now it forms part of a brewery.

There is so much of interest about these decayed cities, and the people have so many excellent traits in their character, that it is peculiarly gratifying to learn that the present effort to introduce a pure Christianity there is meeting with success, and it is still more a matter for thankfulness that almost simultaneously with this movement there was a corresponding revival in Spanish America. That is, to a greater extent, a matter of practical interest to ourselves. On this subject there is no better authority than the Right Rev. H. C. Riley, D. D., Bishop of Mexico, who has kindly furnished us for publication the following remarks, which, coming from a man who has devoted his own large private fortune to the work, and has given his life and labors to it, must commend itself to our readers:

Spain and Mexico.

In the year 1857 a new constitution was promulgated in Mexico, which with some so called "Laws of Reform" subsequently passed in that country, have given, so far as civil enactments can do it, complete liberty of worship to the people of that Republic.

In the year 1868 the liberal movement in Spain which was led by the brave General Prim inagurated a new era also in that country.

The Spanish government now allows liberty of worship, though with some restrictions throughout Spain and the Island of Cuba. Copies of the Holy Scriptures published in the Spanish language and circulated in Spain, Cuba and Mexico have, by God's blessing, led some earnest souls in those lands, to a clear knowledge of the Gospel, and to discard Roman errors and idolatry. From their numbers some congregations of earnest Christians have been gathered, that firmly maintain the Christian faith in its purity and integrity. Be it said, to their credit, that most of those who have joined those congregations and publicly welcomed and defended the pure gospel in Spain and Mexico, have been gathered from among the poor—poor in earthly goods, but rich in the Christian faith.

The congregations where the Gospel in its purity is preached in Spain, Mexico and Cuba are distinguished for their earnest Christian faith and their zealous efforts to extend the knowledge of the Gospel among their countrymen.

It is very important that our fellow Christians should clearly understand that there is now liberty of worship in Spain, Cuba and Mexico, that there are in those countries native Christian workers who are competent to preach the gospel in its purity with faithful congregations gathered from among the poor, who are longing to do what they can to extend the knowledge of the Gospel among the people of those lands, millions and millions of whom are living and dying, without ever having had a copy of the Bible in their homes, while vast multitudes among those millions have never even so much as heard that there is a Bible.

To assist Spanish, Mexican and Cuban young men to study for the ministry — to help to maintain schools, in which to give, not only a good secular education but also careful Christian teaching to the many children in those lands, who gladly welcome any Christian effort made in their behalf — to aid their missionaries and preachers and assist them to devote themselves to the work of the ministry — to defray the cost of preparing and circulating Christian publications in Spanish — to help to secure proper church edifices and school houses — to meet the necessary expenses of building up Christian churches and to press forward the circulation of the Holy Scriptures in lands so long perverted by Roman errors and idolatry as Spain, Cuba and Mexico have been—the gifts of the faithful in other countries are most pressingly needed.

To all who are kindly responding to the appeals made in behalf of the Christian work of the faithful Church of Jesus in Mexico, I return my most earnest and heartfelt thanks for their timely and most pressingly needed assistance.

The Church of Jesus in Mexico has already been instrumental in encouraging Christian work in Spain, and has done good work in behalf of Cuba.

As the congregations that maintain the Christian faith in its purity in Spain and Mexico, have been gathered almost entirely from among the poor to do Christian work in their midst, and also to extend our Christian educational work among the neglected multitudes of poverty-stricken children that crowd the Spanish and Mexican cities, and to aid to build up effective centres of Christian influence among the fifty millions who speak the beautiful language of old Spain, contributions from the faithful are most pressingly needed.

Fellow Christians! Will you, constrained by the love of Christ, forward contributions for this object, and thus generously help the Church of Jesus in Mexico to continue its noble Christian work. The need is most pressing. Give as you are able. Remember, every little helps. If you can only give little, do so. "Many mickles make a muckle." Where many, each give a little, the result is large. Do what you can!

In forwarding contributions for this object, please to inclose the words "For Mexico." They can be mailed to the following address:

Bishop H. C. RILEY, care of L. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman, (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York, price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles among others are contained in the number for July:

Passover Week, ending April 11, 1901, the Last Week of Age. By the Rev. M. Baxter.

Was the Crucifixion on the 14th or 15th Day of Nisan?

Christ's Second Coming: Pre-Millennial and Personal. By Rev. Dr. Scudder.

The Present Crisis. By Mr. E. Cornwell.

The Separate Standing of the Church. By Henry Meymott.

Spiritism: Its Modern Development.

The Pouring Out of the Seventh Vial.

Two Christian Rabbis: Rabbi Rabinowitz.

A Rabbi Confessing Christ.

The Temple in History and Prophecy. By Mr. Thomas Newberry.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes containing the monthly numbers for 1884 or 1883 may be had, price, $1.]

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

"What a Falling Off was There!"—Mr. Oatts relates: "This week there came to see me a poor, wretched-looking man, who said, 'About twenty years ago, Mr. Oatts, you and I were in the same fellowship class!' And as I looked more attentively at him, I partially recognized him: but what a wreck he was now! His clothes hanging in tatters, and his shoes in the same state. He had come to plead for help in the strength of our old acquaintanceship. In the course of conversation I asked him how he accounted for the difference in our condition. 'Oh,' he mournfully replied, 'you let Christ keep you, while I tried to keep myself.' So it is with all of us; if we try to keep ourselves, and fight that old enemy, the devil, in our own strength, we are bound to get the worst of it; but if we put our trust in Jesus, He will carry us safely through every temptation, and over every difficulty."

In Peril of a Waterspout.—Mr. McFarlane remarked: "As a traveler was toiling over the mountains he found the atmosphere becoming heavy and dense, and at the same time it became very dark. He knew that a storm of some kind was about to burst forth, but what kind he knew not; his only hope was that it might not be a waterspout, they being very frequent in that locality. Fearful lest he should be overtaken by one of them, he looked round for some place of refuge, and noticed a cleft in the solid rock. To that he hastened, and had scarcely got himself snugly esconced therein, when a waterspout broke almost directly over him, but he, being in the cleft of the rock, escaped unhurt. So the sinner is out in the darkness of sin and surrounded by dangers which may burst upon him at any moment and sweep him away to everlasting destruction; but there is a refuge close at hand, and if he will flee to it—the cleft in the Rock—he will be safe."

Waiting for the Ice to be Broken.—A Minister remarks: "At one of our meetings in the North recently, a lady having pressed upon her the necessity of all Christians letting their lights shine at home, determined that that very night she would begin to do so. So after supper she took her eldest daughter aside, and asked her, 'Do you trust Jesus?' 'Yes, mother; I have been doing so for these last six months,' the daughter replied; 'but,' she continued, 'I often wondered why you never spoke to me of Him. For a long time I was anxious about my soul, but I was backward in speaking to you, and if you had but broken the ice, I should have been trusting in Him before.' That same night the mother spoke to her second daughter, only to make the discovery that she also was a Christian, and that she, like her sister, had for a considerable time been anxious, but at last had found rest at a Gospel meeting. No doubt it was joyful to that mother to find both her daughters rejoicing in Christ; but would not her joy have been tenfold greater if, finding them anxious, she had been the means of leading them to the Light?"

Two Armies on the March.—A Worker said: "One of our great poets some time ago published a poem, which described, in most beautiful language, a valley, rich and fertile, through which flowed a broad, deep river. The valley was the world, the river flowing through it, death—and into it men were constantly falling. On each side of the river was an army, large and well-appointed, and as they marched on the onlooker could see no difference at first between that on the right bank and that on the left. But as they got nearer, and the banners could be discerned, one could see inscribed on those borne by the army on the right the words, 'Appointed to save,' while on the banners of those on the left bank was blazoned forth 'Appointed to destroy.' The whole of that great army was equipped and led forth for the one purpose of destroying mankind; and between these two hosts there was incessant war. That is exactly the state of things in the world, and every one has to choose in which army he will serve, for in one or the other he must fight, whether in the army of the right under the Lord Jesus, the Captain of our Salvation, or in the army of the left, under Satan, the captain of the hosts of darkness, laboring to drag men to perdition."

The Hand on the Knob.—The Rev. Mr. Lee says: "I heard once of an eminent minister, who was in his study, when his little boy came tapping at the door; and wanting to teach his son a lesson, he said from within, 'Open, and come in.' 'I can't, papa,' said the child, without attempting. 'Open, and come in,' repeated his father. At last the boy put his hand to the knob, and the minister, hearing the movement, and recognizing the spirit of obedience, and the physical inability of his child, laid his own hand on the knob from within, and opened the door. The child came joyfully into the room, pleased with his success. And so, the Lord, whenever he sees our willingness to obey His commands, and our human inability to fulfil them, comes to our aid, and while we are trying, He puts forth His omnipotent hand and opens the door to all our difficulties. 'While they are yet speaking I will answer.'"

How Annie Found the Light.—A Christian worker relates: "A short time ago I stood by the death-bed of a little girl. When I spoke to her of the love of Christ she tossed wearily on her bed, and did not seem to understand what I was saying, for she was neither very bright nor very intelligent, but, poor child, she knew she needed something reliable and comforting to lean upon in the last moments, and vainly she struggled to understand what I was saying. I tried various passages of Scripture, and then bending over her I said, 'Annie, repeat this after me—"Jesus, the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."' Suddenly a bright light spread over the face of the dying girl. The Holy Spirit enabled her to grasp the truth, and before Annie left this world to enter upon another, she accepted Jesus Christ as her Saviour, and was filled with that delicious peace which only saved sinners can know—'the peace of God which passeth all understanding.'"

A Mother's Anguish.—Mr. Ross Observes: "A lady, a good Christian woman, whose chief fault was that she could not testify for her Divine Master in her own house, had an only son, a bright lad, whom she often longed to tell about Christ, but she was unable to speak. Her boy fell ill, and as the mother, tending by the bedside, saw the fever mount higher and higher, she knew that her son would not much longer be in this world. She sent for her minister and an elder, but though we made all possible haste, before we arrived the lad's spirit had fled, without our leaving any testimony to show that he had gone to be with the Lord. Oh, never shall I forget the look of anguish which rested upon that mother's face as she wrung her hands and exclaimed, 'Had I but spoken to him myself! Oh, why did I not speak to my darling boy about his soul!' Are there not many mothers who are similarly culpable? Are they looking after the lambs which the Lord has given them?"

A Victim of Her Own Delusion.—Mr. Reid says: "What will the end be of those who obey not the Gospel? A striking incident occurred lately of a woman in Birmingham, who, I fear, has not thought much about this text. She was a most respectable woman, and attended the ministry of a godly servant of the Lord, who had often urged her earnestly to become a Christian. Her reply always invariably was, 'Five minutes before I die is all the time I need to repent!' Years passed. Her time to die had come. The minister was one day walking in the street, when a half-grown girl came running after him and said, 'Please, sir, will you come and see my mother; she is dying?' He followed the girl home, and when he entered, to his surprise and dismay he recognized the very woman. When she saw him she threw her arms wildly up, and cried with a piercing voice, 'I am dying, and lost, lost forever.' With these words she expired.

WATERING THE SHEEP.

Dr. Talmage's Second Vacation Sermon.

"We cannot, until all the flocks be gathered together, and they roll the stone from the well's mouth; then we water the sheep." Gen. 29: 8.

Jacob Looking for a Wife—A Memorable Meeting—Kisses and Tears—The Water for the Thirsty Flocks—The World's Great Want—The Gospel Well—A General Invitation—The Universal Flock—Impediments to be Removed—Pride—An Obdurate Heart—The Satisfying Water—Those Who May Drink it—The Soul's Undefined Longing—A French Author's Suicide—A King's weight in Gold—A Dying Clergyman's Joy—Water for The Troubled—Dr. De Witt at his Wife's Grave—Property Well Lost—The Great Cry for Comfort—The Celestial Well.

A SCENE in Mesopotamia, beautifully pastoral. A well of water of great value in that region. The fields around about it white with three flocks of sheep lying down waiting for the watering. I hear their bleating coming on the bright air, and the laughter of young men and maidens indulging in rustic repartee. I look off, and I see other flocks of sheep coming. Meanwhile Jacob, a stranger, on the interesting errand of looking for a wife, comes to the well. A beautiful shepherdess comes to the same well. I see her approaching, followed by her father's flock of sheep. It was A Memorable Meeting.

Jacob married that shepherdess. The Bible account of it is: "Jacob kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice and wept." It has always been a mystery to me what he found to cry about! But before that scene occurred, Jacob accosts the sheperds and asks them why they postpone the slaking of the thirst of these sheep, and why they did not immediately proceed to water them. The shepherds reply to the effect: "We are all good neighbors, and as a matter of courtesy we wait until all the sheep of the neighborhood come up. Besides that, this stone on the well's mouth is somewhat heavy, and several of us take hold of it and push it aside, and then the buckets and the troughs are filled, and the sheep are satisfied. We cannot, until all the flocks are gathered together, and till they roll the stone from the well's mouth; then we water the sheep."

Oh, this is a thirsty world! Hot for the head, and blistering for the feet, and parching for the tongue.

The World's Great Want

is a cool, refreshing, satisfying draught. We wander around, and we find the cistern empty. Long and tedious drought has dried up the world's fountain, but nearly nineteen centuries ago, a shepherd, with crook in the shape of a cross, and feet cut to the bleeding, explored the desert passages of this world, and one day came across a well a thousand feet deep, bubbling and bright, and opalescent, and looked to the north, and the south, and the east, and the west, and cried out with a voice strong and musical, that rang through the ages: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters!"

Now a great flock of sheep to-day gather around

This Gospel Well.

There are a great many thirsty souls. I wonder why the flocks of all nations do not gather—why so many stay thirsty; and while I am wondering about it, my text breaks forth in the explanation, saying: "We cannot, until all the flocks be gathered together, and till they roll the stone from the well's mouth; then we water the sheep."

If a herd of swine come to a well they angrily jostle each other for the precedence; if a drove of cattle come to a well, they hook each other back from the water, but when a flock of sheep come, though a hundred of them shall be disappointed, they only express it by sad bleating; they come together peaceably. We want a great multitude to come around the Gospel well. I know there are those who do not like a crowd—they think a crowd is vulgar. If they are oppressed for room in church it makes them positively impatient and belligerent. We have had people permanently leave our church because so many other people come to it. Not so did these Oriental shepherds. They waited until all the flocks were gathered, and the more flocks that came the better they liked it. And so we ought to be anxious that

All the People Should Come.

Go out into the highways and the hedges and compel them to come in. Go to the rich and tell them they are indigent without the Gospel of Jesus. Go to the poor and tell them the affluence there is in Christ. Go to the blind and tell them of the touch that gives eternal illumination. Go to the lame and tell them of the joy that will make the lame man leap like a hart. Gather all the sheep off of all the mountains. None so torn of the dogs, none so sick, none so worried, none so dying, as to be omitted. Why not gather a great flock? All Brooklyn in a flock; all New York in a flock; all London in a flock; all the world in a flock.

This well of the Gospel is deep enough to put out the burning thirst of the fourteen hundred million of the race. Do not let the Church, by a spirit of exclusiveness, keep the world out. Let down all the bars, swing scatter all the invitations: "Whosoever will, let him come." Come, white and black. Come, red men of the forest. Come, Laplander, out of the snow. Come, Patagonian, out of the heat. Come in furs. Come panting under palm leaves. Come one. Come all. Come now. As at this well of Mesopotamia, Jacob and Rachel were betrothed, so this morning, at this well of salvation, Christ our Shepherd, will meet you coming up with your long flocks of cares and anxieties, and He will stretch out His hand in pledge of His affection, while all heaven will cry out: "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet Him."

Open All the Gates,

You notice that this well of Mesopotamia had a stone on it, which must be removed before the sheep could be watered; and I find on the well of salvation to-day which must be removed, in order that you may obtain the refreshment and life of this Gospel. In your case the impediment is pride of heart. You cannot bear to come to so democratic a fountain; you do not want to come with so many others. It is as though you were thirsty and you were invited to slake your thirst at the town-pump, instead of sitting in a parlor sipping out of a chased chalice which has just been lifted from a silver salver. Not so many publicans and sinners. You want to get to heaven, but you must be in a special car, with your feet on a Turkish ottoman, and a band of music on board the train. You do not want to be in company with rustic Jacob and Rachel, and to be drinking out of the fountain where ten thousand sheep have been drinking before you. You will have to remove or never find your way to the well. You will have to come as we came, willing to take the water of eternal life in any way, and at any hand, and in any kind of pitcher, crying out: "Oh, Lord Jesus, I am dying of thirst. Give me the water of eternal life, whether in trough or goblet; give me the water of life; I care not in what it comes to me." Away with all your hindrances of pride from the well's mouth.

Impediments and Obstacles

The Obstacle of Pride,

Here is another man who is kept back from this water of life, by the stone of which lies over the mouth of the well. You have no more feeling upon this subject than if God had yet to do you the first kindness, or you had to do God the first wrong. Seated on His lap all these years, His everlasting arms sheltering you, where is your gratitude? Where is your morning and evening prayer? Where are your consecrated lives? I say to you, as Daniel said to Belshazzar: "The God in whose hand thy breath is, and all thy way, thou hast not glorified." If you treated anybody as badly as you have treated God, you would have made five hundred apologies—yea, your whole life would have been an apology. Three times a day you have been seated at God's table, Spring, summer, autumn and winter he has appropriately apparelled you. Your health from Him, your companion from Him, your children from Him, your home from Him, all the bright surroundings of your life from Him. O man, what dost thou with that hard heart?

An Obdurate Heart,

Canst Thou Not Feel

one throb of gratitude toward the God that made you, and the Christ who came to redeem you, and the Holy Ghost who has, all these years, been importuning you? If you could sit down five minutes under the tree of a Saviour's martyrdom, and feel His life blood trickling on your forehead and cheek and hands, methinks you would get some appreciation of what you owe to a crucified Jesus.

"Heart of stone, relent, relent,
Touched by Jesus' cross, subdued;
See His body, mangled, rent,
Covered with a gore of blood.
Sinful soul, what hast thou done?
Crucified the eternal Son!"

Jacob, with a good deal of tug and push, took the stone from the well's mouth, so that the flocks might be watered. And I would that this morning my word, blessed of God, might remove the hindrances to your getting up to the Gospel well. Yea, I take it for granted that the work is done, and now, like Oriental shepherds, I proceed to water the sheep. Come, all ye thirsty! You have in your soul. You tried money-making; that did not satisfy you. You tried office under Government; that did not satisfy you. You tried pictures and sculptures; but works of art did not satisfy you. You are as much discontented with this life as the celebrated French author, who felt that he could not any longer endure the misfortunes of the world, and who said: "At four o'clock this afternoon I shall put an end to my own existence. Meanwhile, I must toil on up to that time for the sustenance of my family." And he wrote on his book until the clock struck four, when he folded up his manuscript and, by his own hand, concluded his earthly life.

An Undefined Longing

There are men in this house who are perfectly discontented. Unhappy in the past, unhappy to-day, to be unhappy forever, unless you come to this Gospel well. This satisfies the soul with a high, deep, all-absorbing, and eternal satisfaction. It comes, and it offers the most unfortunate man so much of this world as is best for him, and throws all Heaven Into The Bargain.

The wealth of Crœsus, and of all the Stewarts, and of all the Barings, and all the Rothschilds is only a poor, miserable shilling compared with the eternal fortunes that Christ offers you to-day. In the far East, there was a king who used once a year to get on a scales, while on the other side the scales were placed gold and silver and gems; indeed, enough were placed there to balance the king; then, at the close of the weighing, all those treasures were thrown among the populace. But Christ to-day steps on one side the scales, and on the other side are all the treasures of the universe, and He says "All are yours—all height, all depth, all length all breadth, all eternity; all are yours." W don't appreciate the promises of the Gospel.

When an aged clergyman was dying—a man very eminent in the Church—a young theological student stood by his side, and the aged man looked up and said to him: "Can't you give me some comfort in my dying hour?" "No," said the young man; "I can't talk to you on this subject; you know all about it, and have known it so long." "Well," said the dying man, "just recite to me some promises." The young man thought a moment, and he came to this promise: "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin," and the old man clapped his hands, and in his dying moment said: "That's just the promise

I have been waiting for. 'The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin.'" Oh, the warmth, the grandeur, the magnificence of the promises!

Come, also, to this Gospel well, all ye troubled. I do not suppose you have escaped. Compare your view of this life at fifteen years of age with what your view is of it at forty or sixty or seventy. What

A Great Contrast of Opinion!

Were you right then, or are you right now? Two cups placed in your hands, the one a sweet cup, the other a sour cup. A cup of joy and a cup of grief. Which has been the nearest to being full, and out of which have you the more frequently partaken? What a different place Greenwood is from what it used to be? Once it was to you a grand City improvement, and you went out on the pleasure excursion, and you ran laughingly up the mound, and you criticised in a light way the epitaph. But since the day when you heard the bell toll at the gate when you went in with the procession, it is a sad place, and there is a flood of rushing memories that suffuse the eye and overmaster the heart. Oh, you have had trouble, trouble, trouble. God only knows how much you have had. It is a wonder you have been able to live through it. It is a wonder your nervous system has not been shattered, and your brain has not reeled. Trouble, trouble.

If I could gather all the griefs, of all sorts, from this great audience, and could put them in one scroll, neither man nor angel could endure the recitation. Well, what do you want? Would you like to have your property back again? "No," you say, as a Christian man, "I was becoming arrogant, and I think that is why the Lord took it away. I dont want to have my property back." Well, would you have your departed friends back again? "No," you say, "I couldn't take the responsibility of bringing them from a tearless realm to a realm of tears. I couldn't do it." Well, then, what do you want? A thousand voices in the audience cry out: "Comfort.

Give Us Comfort!"

For that reason I have rolled away the stone from the well's mouth. Come, all ye wounded of the flock, pursued of the wolves, come to the fountain where the Lord's sick and bereft ones have come. "Ah," says some one, "you are not old enough to understand my sorrows. You have not been in the world as long as I have, and you can't talk to me about my misfortunes in the time of old age." Well, I may not have lived as long as you, but I have been a great deal among old people, and I know how they feel about their failing health, and about their departed friends, and about the loneliness that sometimes strikes through their souls. After two persons have lived together for forty or fifty years, and one of them is taken away, what desolation! I shall not forget the cry of the late Rev. Dr. De Witt, of New York, when he stood by the open grave of his beloved wife, and, after the obsequies had ended, he looked down into the open place and said: "Farewell, my honored, faithful and beloved wife. The bond that bound us is severed. Thou art in glory, and I am here on earth. We shall meet again. Farewell! Farewell!"

To lean on a prop for fifty years, and then have it break under you! There were only two years' difference between the death of my father and mother. After my mother's decease, my father used to go around as though looking for something; he would often get up from one room, without any seeming reason, and go to another room; and then he would take his cane and start out, and some one would say, "Father, where are you going?" and he would answer, "I don't know exactly where I am going." Always looking for something! Though he was a tender-hearted man, I never saw him cry but once, and that was at the burial of my mother. After sixty years' living together, it was hard to part. And there are aged people to-day who are feeling just such a pang as that. I want to tell them there is perfect enchantment in the promises of this Gospel, and I come to them and offer them my arm, or I take their arm and I bring them to this Gospel well. Sit down, father or mother, sit down. See if there is Anything at the Well for You.

Come, David, the Psalmist, have you anything encouraging to offer them? "Yes," says the Psalmist, "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing, to show that the Lord is upright. He is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in me." Come, Isaiah, have you anything to say out of your prophecies for these aged people? "Yes," says Isaiah, "Down to old age I am with thee, and to hoary hairs will I carry thee." Well, if the Lord is going to carry you, you ought not to worry much about your failing eyesight and failing limbs.

You get a little worried for fear some time you will come to want, do you? Your children and grandchildren sometimes speak a little sharp at you because of your ailments. The Lord will not speak sharp. Do you think you will come to want? Who do you think the Lord is? Are His granaries empty? Will He feed the raven and the rabbit and the lion in the desert, and forget you? Why, naturalists tell us that the porpoise will not forsake its wounded and sick mate. And do you suppose the Lord of heaven and earth has not as much sympathy as the fish of the sea? But you say, "I am so near worn out, and I am of no use to God any more." I think the Lord knows whether you are of any more use or not; if you were of no more use He would have taken you before this. Do you think God has forgotten you because He has taken care of you seventy or eighty years? He thinks more of you to-day than He ever did, because you think more of Him. May the God of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and Paul the aged, be your God forever.

But I gather all the promises to-day in a group, and I ask the shepherds to drive their flocks of lambs and sheep up to

The Sparkling Supply.

"Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth." "Though He cause grief, yet will He have compassion." "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." I am determined, this morning, that no one shall go out of this house uncomforted. Yonder is a timid and shrinking soul, who seems to hide away from the consolations I am uttering, as a child with a sore hand hides away from the physician, lest he touch the wound too roughly, and the mother has to go and compel the little patient to come out and see the physician. So I come to your timid and shrinking soul to-day, and compel you to come out in the presence of the Divine Physician. He will not hurt you. He has been healing wounds for many years, and He will give you gentle and omnipotent medicament.

But people, when they have trouble, go anywhere rather than to God. De Quincey took opium to get rid of his troubles. Charles Lamb took to punch. Theodore Hook took to something stronger. Edwin Forrest took to theatrical dissipation. And men have run all around the earth, hoping in the quick transit to get away from their misfortunes. It has been a dead failure. There is only one well that can slake the thirst of an afflicted spirit, and that is the deep and inexhaustible well of the Gospel.

But some one says, in the audience: "Notwithstanding all you have said this morning, I find no alleviation for my troubles." Well, I am not through yet. I have left for the last. I am going to soothe you with the thought of heaven. However talkative we may be, there will come a time when the stoutest and most emphatic interrogation will evoke from us no answer. As soon as we have closed our lips for the final silence, no power on earth can break that taciturnity. But where, O Christian, will be your spirit? In a scene of infinite gladness. The spring morning of heaven waving its blossoms in the bright air. Victors fresh from battle showing their scars. The rain of earthly sorrow struck through with the rainbow of eternal joy. In one group God and angels and the redeemed—Paul and Silas, Latimer and Ridley, Isaiah and Jeremiah, Payson and John Milton, Gabriel and Michael, the archangel. Long line of choristers reaching across the hills. Seas of joy dashing to the white beach. Conquerors marching from gate to gate. You among them.

The Most Potent Consideration

Oh, what a great flock God will gather around

The Celestial Well.

No stone on the well's mouth, while the Shepherd waters the sheep. There Jacob will recognize Rachel, the shepherdess. And standing on one side of the well of eternal rapture your children; and standing on the other side of eternal rapture, your Christian ancestry, you will be bounded on all sides by a joy so keen and grand that no other world has ever been permitted to experience it. Out of that one deep well of heaven, the Shepherd will dip reunion for the bereaved, wealth for the poor, health for the sick, rest for the weary. And then all the flock of the Lord's sheep will lie down in the green pastures, and world without end we will praise the Lord that on this summer Sabbath morning we were permitted to study the story of Jacob and Rachel at the well.

ON THE BRINK OF A PRECIPICE.

THE Rev. Baring Gould, narrating some experiences of personal travel, says: "I was some years ago traveling among the Pyrenees. Our carriage had to go over a mountain, by a road which ran for a great part of the way along the edge of a frightful precipice. The rocks descended to a vast depth, and the river roared below out of sight. There was no hedge or wall on the side of the road. At the post-house at the bottom of the pass we were given horses and a post-man to drive them, and we started. Night fell before we reached our destination, black with heavy clouds, obscuring the stars. The horses were wild unbroken-in colts, and they plunged from side to side. Whether the driver had been drinking or had lost his head in the excitement I cannot say, but he was perfectly unable to control the horses. They dashed from side to side of the road, and the carriage rocked, and the wheels grazed the edge. Every moment we expected one of the horses or the carriage to roll over the edge.

I was then a little boy, and I sat on my mother's lap. My father, not knowing the danger, had walked on from the post-house by a short cut over the mountains to an inn at the top of the pass, where we were to spend the night. My mother prepared for death. The horses were plunging and racing about, so that it was impossible to descend from the carriage. She kissed me and bade me say my prayers, and her lips moved in prayer also; I felt a shudder run through her at each sway of the carriage towards the edge. All at once above us shone out a bright light. The postman shouted, the horses became less restive. A strong hand was laid on their reins, the carriage was stopped, and my father's voice was heard. He had arrived at the top of the pass long before us, and, uneasy at the delay, had walked down to meet us. The light we saw was in a window of the post-house, set as a guide to travelers. I cannot describe to you the relief, the joy, that rose in our hearts when we saw that guiding light, and when we heard the voice. We knew then that we were safe; following the ray of light we should reach our place of rest; guided by the firm hands on the bits of the untamed horses we should be safe from being flung down the abyss. Our course through life is very much like that mountain journey. Like those wild unbroken horses our passions are carrying us along, and while we see the light of revealed truth before us, we should fall by the way, did not our Heavenly Father come to our rescue.

AN OCTOGENARIAN HEALED.

AMONG the cases of divine healing recorded in the current number of Mrs. M. Baxter's magazine, Thy Healer are two related by Mrs. Brodie, of British Honduras, who has many friends in this country. Speaking at Bethshan recently, she said:

"I have two testimonies to give to the glory of God. One is in connection with quite an old lady. Last year, in September, when I left British Honduras, she was suffering from gangrene of the toe on one foot. She was then eighty years of age. The doctors consulted about it, and said it must be amputated, and it was amputated. Then another toe got bad, and then the foot became affected. Then the daughter wrote to me in England, asking for prayer for her mother; and we prayed on this platform for her, and the Lord answered us. For, from letters I have received since, and by comparing the dates, I find that while we were praying here, the Lord answered out there, and that old lady is now perfectly healed.

"The other case is in connection with a young Scotchman, who came out to British Honduras, and, as many young men in the Colonies do, sank into the habit of drinking. He became a terrible slave to it, so much so that paralysis set in, and he lost situation after situation. One day God put it into my heart to go and see him. I went to his house and pleaded with him to stop drinking, but he said he could not. Shortly after my visit, the way was opened for him to return to England. I implored him before he left to come to Christ. He said he could not, and would rather die of delirium tremens than do it. However, he was not forgotten; and, about two weeks ago I got a letter from him. He is in the North of England. He has been enabled to give up the drink, and he says he is now so happy in Jesus.

"So these two cases in the last two weeks show the reality of prayer. It has encouraged me much, and I hope will encourage you. Just keep on trusting in Jesus, and believe He has all in His hand, and He will surely answer you for His own glory and your good."

A LETTER FROM REV. W. F. RE QUA.

As many of the readers of this journal have aided Mr. and Mrs. Re Qua in their self-sacrificing work among the Indians, the following letter, dated McAlister, Ind. Ter., June 29, will be read with interest:

Permit me to use the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to reply to the inquiries of our many friends among your readers. They will be glad to learn that we are still at work, and the Lord is with us to bless his word. The Indian people are desirous enough to hear the Gospel from pale-face to come to fetch me with their lumber wagons or ponies and take me home again. I have secured a few lithograph pictures of Bible themes, and use them with considerable effect, reaching the heart through the eyes and ears. I need more of these illustrations to last me a week or two weeks in a place. There seems to be quite an interest awakened far and near in our coming as missionaries; for this we have been praying, that we might have ready access to their hearts for the Gospel's sake and their own salvation. I go next Sunday, the 3d of July, out about twenty miles to Sulphur Springs, or, in Choctaw (Skullelukno), meaning yellow springs.

By the kindness of dear friends in our former pastorate in Aurora, Ill., and some others, means were sent expressly for the purpose of paying my wife's passage North, so that she and our little daughter might spend the summer there, as the first summer here is said to be hard on all unacclimated persons. By going North they will escape the malaria common here. They reached there safely last Saturday. Already Mrs. Re Qua is being invited to speak upon mission work among our American heathen, and should any church desire her to describe our work and its plans, defraying traveling expenses, address her, in care of Mr. J. F. Smith, Lincoln Avenue, Aurora, Ill. I shall remain here at the work, through Divine strength given me, during the summer, unless some churches should desire me to visit them concerning our work, and then I should not want to be absent more than two or three weeks.

I am still firm in the belief that the Lord will provide us with a conveyance and other needed equipments for the work. Finally, dear readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, "pray for us, that the word of the Lord may run and be glorified, even as also it is with you," and that many souls may be won to Christ. The Lord bless and reward all who so kindly remember us.

Yours for Indian Mission work, looking for Jesus,

W. F. RE QUA.

AN HEROIC ENGINEER.

AN interesting reminiscence of an engineer in North Carolina is related in a Southern journal. It states that in one of his journeys a well-known locomotive engineer, known as "Sis" Bryan, was approaching Charlotte, N. C., under a full head of steam when he saw an object on the track some distance ahead, which he supposed to be a dog. The engineer blew "on brakes," and at the sound of the whistle the object moved, and Bryan saw it was a child. The little thing began to crawl off the track, but on reaching the rail deliberately stopped and seated itself astride of it. Swinging himself out of the window of the cab, Bryan started to crawl along the engine to its front, with the intention of picking up the child before it was struck. He might have succeeded in this perilous undertaking, but a lunge of the engine caused him to lose his balance and he was thrown down an embankment. Badly bruised and shaken he scrambled to his feet, and as he did so heard a piercing scream and knew that the child had been run down. On arriving at the scene he saw lying on the road the poor little mangled remains, and the brave strong man covered his eyes and cried like a child. He had risked his life unavailingly; neither the warning whistle nor his own heroism had saved her, and he wept. She was too young to understand; but men who can understand their spiritual peril, who hear the Gospel warning and know its import, and who know that Christ died to save them, are perishing unnecessarily through their blind perversity. The engineer's tears remind us of those that Christ shed over such wilfulness in His day (Luke 19: 41).

A CRISIS AT SEA.

A REMARKABLE instance of answered prayer is related by Mr. J. Hudson Taylor, the founder of the China Inland Mission. It proves that the winds and waves are as much under the control of God as they were when they obeyed the command of Christ (Luke 8: 24), and that in answer to prayer He will control them. In one of his voyages Mr. Taylor being on a sailing-vessel was delayed by calms. He says: "One Sunday we were in a dangerous position in the north of New Guinea, some thirty miles off the land. The captain was troubled and frequently went to the side of the ship. I learnt from him the cause—a four-knot current was carrying us rapidly towards some sunken reefs. After dinner the long-boat was put out, and all hands endeavored, without success, to turn the ship's head round from the shore. As we drifted nearer, we could plainly see the natives rushing about the sands, lighting fires here and there. The captain's book informed him that these people were cannibals, so our position was not a little alarming. After standing together for some time in silence on the deck, the captain said to me, 'Well, we have done everything that can be done; we can only wait the result.' The thought occurred to me, and I replied, 'No, there is one thing we have not done yet.' 'What is it?' he said, I replied, 'Four of us on board are Christians' (the carpenter and our colored steward were Christians, as well as the captain and myself); 'let us each retire to his own cabin, and in agreed prayer ask the Lord to send a breeze.' The captain agreed to the proposal. I went and spoke to the other two men, had some united prayer with the carpenter, and we all four retired to wait on God. I felt so satisfied that the prayer was heard that I could not continue asking; so very soon I went on deck again. In a very few minutes we were ploughing our way at six or seven knots an hour through the water, and the multitude of naked savages whom we had seen on the beach had no wreckage that night. We did not altogether loose that wind until we passed the Pelew Islands."

A DEATH-BLOW FROM A LOAF.

AN evangelist states, in a letter to a contemporary, that some time ago he commenced some open-air meetings on Sunday evenings. On the way to the vacant lots where they were held, he says, "We had to pass the rooms occupied by a Socialist club, and as often as we did we were treated to sneers, hooting, etc.

"One of the most active members of the club, and one who boasted that he was an atheist and a follower of Bradlaugh (the English Ingersoll), was Mr. A. He never lost any opportunity to show his aversion to the people of God, and to everything pertaining to the religion of Christ. He had a wife and six children, and his home, while not elaborately furnished, was nevertheless clean and comfortable. He fell out of employment early in the autumn, and for some weeks lived upon the little money he had been able to save when in work. His efforts to obtain a situation were fruitless, and at last articles of clothing had to be pledged to buy food and pay rent. Winter came, and still he was without employment, and one by one articles of furniture had been sold to provide for the needs of the family. He was of an independent spirit, and this led him to keep the knowledge of his poverty for a long time to himself and wife. His former associates at the Socialistic club would ask him to drink with them, but did not help him to get food or fuel for his family.

"Hearing that the children were crying for bread, I went to the nearest grocery and purchased a loaf, then to the grocer's and purchased some goods, and, after ordering some coal and firewood to be sent, went to the house of Mr. A., having a loaf of bread under one arm and a parcel of groceries under the other. The wife opened the door, and the look of her face told that many tears had been shed that morning. The husband was in the passage leading from the outer door to the kitchen, when his wife opened the door, and on seeing me, without saying a word he walked away. After handing the bread and groceries to the wife, and informing her that she might expect some coal and firewood shortly, I assured her of my sympathy and interest in their welfare, and promised to call again the next day.

"After several further visits I was enabled to have a conversation with the man, and he accepted an invitation to attend our services. The following Saturday evening he attended our meeting, in company with his wife, and both signed the temperance pledge. A few weeks after signing the pledge, both he and his wife gave their hearts to God. He began to work for God in earnest, and the reality of the change conversion had wrought was apparent to all who knew him. His old companions tried to win him back, first by persuasion, then by threats and persecution, but without success. Speaking at an experience meeting for the first time, he told how he had been led out of darknes of unbelief and sin into the light and liberty of the Gospel. Said he, 'When Mr. G. called at our house that cold winter's morning, when we had no food in the house and not a penny to get any with, and all my children were crying for bread, the sight of a minister with a loaf of bread under his arm for me, gave the death-blow to my infidelity. I had borne my hunger and distress with comparative indifference, but when I saw such unexpected kindness shown me by those I previously hated, it so touched me that I had to go into the room and weep. That loaf of bread led to the conversion of me and my wife.'

"Mr. A., with his wife, continued consistent and earnest members and workers in our society up to the time of their removal to Canada, where he is now doing well in both temporal and spiritual things; and, probably, for years to come, the loaf of bread and what it did will be gratefully remembered."

WHY THE SECOND ADVENT WILL BE PERSONAL AND PRE-MILLENNIAL.

By Dr. Scudder, late of Chicago.*

A Summary of Apocalyptic Visions—Inconsistent with Post Millennial Interpretation—Inconsistent with Figurative Meaning—Because the Day Clearly Defined—Because of its Suddenness—Because of its Effects—When will Christ Come—Two Urgent Duties.

"EVEN so, come, Lord Jesus" (Rev. 22 : 20). More than eighteen centuries have passed since Jesus came into our world. The Scriptures declare that He will come again. This prediction fills the sky of the New Testament with a pervasive light and gladness, as sunshine fills the natural firmament. In respect to this foretold fact the question which first confronts us is this: Will the Second Coming be before the Millennium or after it? I think that the Scriptures teach, in the most explicit manner, that Christ will come in order to inaugurate it, and in order to introduce wondrously majestic events which shall, throughout that Millennium and thereafter for ever, signalize the history of a redeemed and renovated earth.

Before the Millennium,

The last four chapters in the Book of Revelation proclaim Christ's Second Coming, and sketch for us, in bold, impressive outlines, the effects wrought by that coming. Begin with the nineteenth chapter and eleventh verse. To John's prophetic sight is disclosed a magnificent vision of the Advent. He sees heaven opened. He beholds a white horse, which symbolizes triumph. He that sits upon it is called Faithful and True. His eyes are as a flame of fire. On His head are many crowns.

He Descends Into Our Atmosphere.

The armies of heaven, clothed in fine linen, white and clean, follow Him upon white horses. Out of His mouth goes a sharp sword, which is none other than the Word of truth and power; the creative, destructive, constructive, and all-vanquishing Word. On His vesture appears a title, which no being can misunderstand, "King of kings and Lord of lords." This Divine Man finds at His coming a host of enemies gathered together to make war against Him and His Church. The sword of His Word utterly destroys them. Then a mighty angel, commissioned for this especial service, comes down from heaven, and seizing upon Satan, binds him, casts him into the abyss, shuts him up, and sets a seal upon the prison door, that he may deceive the nations no more until a thousand years shall be fulfilled. After this takes place. The bodies of all the saints who had departed this life from the beginning until that hour are raised by Him, who is the Resurrection and the Life, and the saints then living are transfigured. To these raised and transfigured saints authority is given to judge and to rule, and they live and reign with Christ upon the earth for a thousand years. This is the Millennium. Those among the nations who survived the great battle that prefaced the Millennium become obedient to the supreme dominion of Christ and to the subordinate co-existent dominion of the saints. At the close of the thousand years of unimpaired peace and happiness, Satan is, for a little while, loosed out of his prison, and goes forth to deceive the outlying populations in the four quarters of the globe, who thus far have been submissive to the saints, and have participated in numerous blessings. He succeeds, and gathers them together—Gog and Magog—to battle against the saints, but fire falling from God out of heaven, devours these armies; and the devil who deceived them is cast into the lake of fire. This is the last assault of evil upon good, in the history of time. Then comes the second resurrection, when all those who had no part either in the first resurrection, or in the concurrent translation, are raised from the dead.

The First Resurrection

The Final Judgment

follows, and from that time forward evil shall be no more permitted to go abroad to defile and destroy in any portion of the universe. One more scene John is permitted to behold. The old earth, with its heaven, passes away; and a new earth, with its new heaven, appears and is furnished with all possible beauties and glories, as the eternal residence of Christ and His sanctified people. Read these four closing chapters and see if I have not given you the facts exactly as they are related and in their precise order. Thus do the Scriptures teach the premillennial Advent of Christ and exhibit its consequences.

There is another question to be considered: Will the Second Coming be a personal or a figurative one? There are those who claim that it will not be a coming in person; that it must be accepted as figurative, and that the Second Advent of Christ is nothing else than a widely diffused and extensively established Christianity. I am unable to adopt this view, because:

First: This explanation of Christ's Second Coming does not consist with certain characteristics (Luke 17: 30); which are attributed in the New Testament to the day of that coming. For instance, that day is compared to the day of Noah and to the day of Lot. We read that, as it was in the days of Noah and in the days of Lot, "even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed." That day will be as precisely defined as the day when Noah entered into the ark, and as the day when Lot left Sodom. Again our Lord has said: "Behold, I come as a thief" (Rev. 16: 15). If, as I believe He will, Christ comes in person, His Advent will be a joy of the saints. They will be waiting, praying, longing; and they will go forth to meet Him with an ineffable gladness, for His arrival will be the fulfillment of their hopes and aspirations. But to all others His coming will be unexpected and full of terror. It will be at midnight. This is intelligible. But if the Advent of Christ be simply a widely diffused Christianity, in what possible sense can it be affirmed that it will come as a midnight thief does? Moreover, our Lord predicted that the day of His Advent would come "as a snare on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth," those only being excepted who were watching for Him (Luke 21 : 35, 36). How a diffused Christianity can come like a snare upon the earth it is not easy to conceive. But if Christ comes in person, and finds, as the New Testament foretells with much particularity, that the love of many has waxed cold; that there has been a falling away from faith and holy living; that degeneracies prevail; that iniquities abound; that of secular and ecclesiastical hostilities, described in the Book of Revelation, are rampant; that scoffers, walking after their own lusts, go about, saying, "Where is the promise of His coming?" and that the Man of Sin stands revealed; then the suddenness of the Advent may be most fitly described as coming upon these careless, reckless, inimical, mocking crowds, like a net that is cast upon them.

Like the Breaking in of a Thief

The Two Wild Beasts

Second: The exposition of Christ's Second Coming as a widely diffused Christianity does not consist with the agitations which will be aroused by the Advent in the ungodly. As the occurrences of that day passed, in prophetic vision, before the eyes of the inspired Seer, he wrote thus: "And the Kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb" (Rev. 6 : 15, 16). All this is clear, if Christ comes in person; but if His Advent be merely a widely diffused Christianity, why and how should that cause men to flee into dens, and hide themselves in the clefts of the mountains, and invoke the rocks to fall upon them?

Third: The explication of Christ's Second Coming as a widely diffused Christianity, and not a personal coming, does not consist with the express statements which meet us so frequently in the New Testament.

He Shall Come as He Went.

In the presence of His diciples Jesus was taken up from the earth, and while they were looking steadfastly into the sky, two angels stood by them in shining apparel, and said; "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven; This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven" (Acts. 1: 9, 11). That is, He who has just bid you farewell, and ascended into the sky in bodily form, will come back again in human form from the heaven to which He has gone. "Shall so come in like manner." You shall then see Him and hear Him, and be with Him. Could any statement be more unequivocal? How different is this personal coming from a wide diffusion of Christianity!

When will Christ thus Come?

The Lord Himself hath pointed us to some of the signs that shall indicate the nearness of that day; and among them the chief is thus designated: "And this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24: 14). The condition of Christ's Coming is not the conversion of the whole world, but the preaching of the Gospel in all the world, for a witness. This, to a great extent, has been done. Hence the Coming of our Lord cannot be very distant, and it is incumbent on us to do two things.

1. Prosecute with diligence missionary work.

Send Missionaries Everywhere

to proclaim the Gospel. Search out every country and island where it has not yet been made known. When it has been promulgated among all the nations as a witness, then Christ will come. Herein is a mighty incentive. Let us carry forward with the utmost fervor, vigor and perseverance the work of missions.

2. Watch! Hear Christ's words. "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." "Watch ye, therefore, lest, coming suddenly, He find you sleeping." "Watch and pray." "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments"—the garments of truth and righteousness (Luke 21 : 34; Mark 13 : 35, 36, Mark 13 : 33; Rev. 16 : 15; 1 Cor. 3 : 21-23).

The Coming of the Lord draweth near. O what a joyful day that will be to those who love and adore Him. The goal of our hope is not heaven. Heaven is a good place. No trial, temptation or conflict there; no sorrow or crying there. God shall wipe away the tears from every eye there. I shall be glad to reach it. Yet heaven is not our goal. Our goal is only Jesus Himself. Possessing Him, we are already partakers of eternal Life, and we shall soon possess, in our perfected union with Him, not only this sin-cleansed earth, but also the whole of the holy and beautiful universe in which that eternal Life shall forever, in its transcendent excellence and splendor, reveal itself. For, as Paul has said, All things are ours, whether the kosmos, or thing present, or things to come: all are ours; and we are Christ's, and Christ is God's. The day of His Coming is not a great way off. Perhaps some of you may live to see it. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

* This is an extract from one of the last sermons preached by Rev. Dr. Scudder, of Chicago, prior to his recent resignation of his pastorate to go out as a Missionary to Japan.

Five Cents, Postage Free.

END OF THIS AGE ABOUT THE END OF THIS CENTURY,

and its Last Week Passover Week, Ending on Thursday, April 11, 1901,

As shown by Daniel's 2300 and 1335 and 1290 Years—this being the termination also of the 6000 Years from the Creation of Man, and the 2520 Years from Nebuchadnezzar, and the 360 Years from Luther's Reformation, according to the Bible periods—a pamphlet of 29 pages—by Rev. M. Baxter, Episcopal Clergyman and one of the Editors of the "Christian Herald." Author of "Forty Coming Wonders," "Coming Wars," etc. Address Manager "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Sabbath Observance in the Army Has Not been promoted by the recent protest of the deputation of Presbyterian clergymen who endeavored to obtain for the soldier some concessions in the matter of drill on that day. The Washington correspondent of the New York Times states that the Sunday "dress parades" which the ministers asked the Government to discontinue are to be kept up. The board on the revision of army regulations have handed in the result of their work without providing for any change from the present method of observing Sunday. At some of the army posts, where the commanders are Christian men, advantage was taken of the paragraph in the army regulations giving the post commanders their discretion as to the omission of dress parades, and the Sunday dress parades were abandoned. The facts being reported to General Sheridan he at once issued a decisive circular, in which he stated that the regulation in question only gave post commanders authority to dispense with dress parades when the weather was unpropitious, and could not be construed to give them authority to dispense with the parades on any particular day. This is matter for regret, but if other religious bodies take up the matter and public opinio n is aroused, General Sheridan may be brought to see the expediency of revising his decision.

The Corner In Cotton Appears From the Government Report, issued last week, to have been more successful than the corner in wheat, which ruined the speculators recently. During the month of June the speculators forced the price of cotton up to eleven cents, at which price it could not be profitably exported. The result was, that only 41,934 bales were exported that month, while in June of last year 246,945 bales were sent out. This was the third month in which the corner had been maintained, and during those three months the gross value of the cotton exported had sunk from forty million dollars in the same quarter of 1886 to fifteen millions this year. Purchases for home consumption had also declined one fourth. The re-result was that a large stock remained on hand in the ports and at towns in the interior. Whether there will come a break now like that in wheat, remains to be seen, but it is clear that in any case the speculators have succeeded in disturbing trade and impoverishing the country by their selfish operations.

Dr. McGlynn, the Roman Catholic Priest, whose espousal of the doctrines of Henry George has brought him into conflict with the Pope, has been served with a formal notice of excommunication, and Archbishop Corrigan is instructed to excommunicate him orally and publicly, and publish the decree in the journals of America. It should be understood that Dr. McGlynn is not excommunicated for preaching socialism, but for neglecting to obey the command of the Pope, to go to Rome to answer the charges brought against him. Of the effect of the sentence it is too early to speak. As it is the major excommunication which is hurled against him, it will only be in accordance with the custom of the Church, if what is known as the minor excommunication is pronounced on all who associate with him, and it is certain that, if his friends continue intercourse with him, they will disobey the Pope, as the sentence on Dr. McGlynn expressly says "that he is to be shunned until such time as he shall have fulfilled that which he has been ordered, in order that his soul may be saved in the day of judgment." If all the thousands of Roman Catholics who are standing by Dr. McGlynn continue to do so, we may hope that the penalties they will incur may lead them to an examination of the basis of the Pope's authority and to the conclusion that there is but one Mediator between God and man, to whom they may go without the intervention of Pope and priest and receive pardon and life eternal.

Sentence on Jacob Sharp Was Pronounced on Thursday last, by Judge Barrett. Strong efforts were made to induce the Judge to pass a light sentence on the ground of the prisoner's age and ill-health. Judge Barrett took these points into consideration, but reflecting on the audacity of the crime and the fact that no promise of restitution to the City had been made, and that the prisoner was making enormous sums by the crime, he did not feel justified in imposing a less sentence than four years hard labor and a fine of five thousand dollars. It is very natural that public sympathy should be evoked for so aged a man and one so prominent in the community, but it must not be forgotten that the crime of which Sharp was guilty, is one that is ruinous to public morality and cannot go unpunished without danger to our institutions. For a man to purchase the Board of Aldermen of New York for half a million dollars, and to keep his hold on the proceeds of the crime, even after its commission was clearly proved and to expect mercy on the ground of his age and infirmities, is an evidence that the wickedness of the crime is not realized. It is necessary for the sake of the public interest that an example should be made, and Judge Barrett deserves credit for his courage in resisting the influential appeals made to him and meting out strict justice to this brazen offender.

A Deplorable Boating Catastrophe Occurred near Carnarsie, Long Island, on July 10. The sloop yacht Mystery sailed from Jamacia Bay to Carnarsie, with forty persons on board, chiefly women and children. With culpable negligence the captain took no one to help him in working the vessel but his nine year old son. As the vessel approached Carnarsie the captain observed a rival boat gaining upon him, and in spite of the protests of the passengers shook a reef out of the mainsail, in the hope of getting in ahead of the other boat. Almost instantly the Mystery capsized and twenty-seven of the passengers were drowned. As the captain was amongst the dead there will be no one amenable to the law for this gross recklessness. Apart from the fact that the excursion took place on Sunday there was wrongdoing in overcrowding the vessel and not having an experienced sailor on board. The captain is also said to have been not quite sober. Possibly after a few more of these fatalities our legislators will realize that it is their duty to stop these Sunday boating excursions, which every year furnish a large quota of sudden deaths.

An Important Letter from Governor Martin, of Kansas, on the effect of Prohibition in that State, was published on July 13. It was in reply to the statements of a Chicago journal that Prohibition had impoverished the State, and that the city of Atchison in particular had become so poor that it had shut off its gas and electric lights, and reduced the Fire Department and police force. Governor Martin asserts that these reports are baseless, except as to the police force, which has certainly been reduced, not on account of the poverty of the city, but because since the saloons have been closed there has been much less work for the policemen to do, and a much smaller number are therefore required to keep order. The prosperity of Atchison has increased since the last saloon was closed, its trade is greater by a third, and "hundreds of thousands of dollars that were formerly wasted in the saloons are now expended in feeding and clothing and housing the people, and as a result thousands of wives and children in Atchison who were living in poverty a few years ago are now prosperous, happy, and contented."

The New Volcano Developed near Bavispe by the earthquakes last May has been explored by a commission sent out by the New York Herald. The expedition returned to El Paso, Texas, on July 12, and report that they went as near to it as the extreme heat would allow, examined the molten lava, and then ascended a neighboring mountain, from the top of which they could look into the crater. They say: "Below us, at a distance of about three-quarters of a mile, was the red-lipped mouth of a living volcano. The crater forms a rude oval, depressed at the northern side, and rising in a series of ragged peaks at the south. It is a lurid funnel, incessantly changing in hue from the inconceivable heat which must exist in its midst. At intervals the lambient surface quivered, and an upheaval of fiery matter, or what seemed to be such, gave the crater the appearance of a lake of liquid flame."

The Coercion Bill for Ireland Made Rapid progress, as was expected, in the House of Lords last week. It was read a second time on Thursday and passed through committee on Friday. The member of the Government who had charge of the Bill did not conceal the fact that it was aimed at the League. He said the bill was a measure intended to counteract the criminal, demoralizing system of intimidation now reigning in Ireland—a system that coerced loyal people and interfered with every relation of life. Neither sex nor age was spared from this odious, ferocious, cowardly tyranny. Earl Granville, who is a staunch Liberal, admitted that if the Government found itself unable to maintain law and order by the existing machinery, it had the right to apply to Parliament for further powers, but when restrictions were proposed suspending common personal rights, the clearest proof was required to justify an exceptional law. The state of Ireland was as peaceable now as it was in 1885, when the ordinary law was found to be sufficient. Several events occurred last week indicative of a change in public opinion favorable to Mr. Gladstone. Three vacancies in the House of Commons had to be filled, and in each case the verdict at the polls showed a decided growth in the Home Rule vote. A still more important event was that Sir George O. Trevelyan, who resigned from Mr. Gladstone's cabinet on the Irish question, became a candidate for election as an avowed Gladstonian.

The French Government has met the Danger of Gen. Boulanger's popularity by assigning him to the command at Clermont–Ferrand, two hundred and fifty miles from Paris. His departure was the signal for an ovation of tremendous enthusiasm. The crowd followed him to the railroad depot, cheering and singing the popular air composed in his honor, and it was only by the earnest entreaties of his friends and after long delay that they separated sufficiently to allow the train to start on its journey. On his arrival at Clermont he found the streets decorated and all the inhabitants assembled to welcome him. Prime Minister Rouvier, in defending the removal of the General, said that it was an absolute necessity if the civil power was to retain its ascendancy over the military power. If the civil power had hesitated "it would have been all over with it." Since General Boulanger's departure there has been an enormous sale of Boulanger scarf pins, and the makers are deluged with orders from all parts of the country.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, N. Y. Received with thanks from "City," $1; from "Second Adventist," $10.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South, with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment, to the amount of $19. They are from: Chicago, Ill., $1; Titusville, Pa., $1; Hyde Park, Mass., $1; Passaic, N. J., $1; Kansasville, Wis., $5; Cambridgeport, Mass., $10. We are now enabled to add nineteen names to the list, and we hope that more money will soon come in, allowing us to furnish the paper to other applicants.

An Earl's Advice to Young Men, Given in his recent address to the Young Men's Christian Association of San Francisco, deserves to be republished in every journal in the land. None can tell how many young men reading his manly earnest words may be saved from an evil which is menacing the moral ruin of our country. Speaking of the work of the White Cross Society, the Earl of Aberdeen said: "The chief attribute of manliness: that characteristic which implies a high standard of holiness; is, respect for woman. Never be the means of lowering any one, especially a woman, no matter how low she may be already. It would be an affectation to speak of manliness without speaking of the giant obstacle to religion—the great temptation, not only to men in early life, but, I believe, all through life. There is no reason why we should not speak of it, for in ninty-nine cases out of one hundred this is the giant trouble. Many young men have felt that if it were not for this temptation they could be Christians to-morrow, but this temptation is too much for them. I am afraid that it is the commonest thing in life, when young men come to the large cities, to meet persons who persuade them that young men should not be too strait-laced. They say he need not go very far astray. There is no reason why he should be a man of excesses, but they talk of a man's living an absolutely moral life as though it was an impossibility. I am sorry to say that some doctors even talk that way, but the best authorities say that it is essential for the physical well-being of young men that they should maintain their purity. There is no form of self-denial which more surely brings its own reward."

A Little Boy's Imaginary Solution of a Problem led to momentous results recently. A Chicago journal says that at the obsequies of a beloved child the family were standing around the remains, when a stone-mason entered and asked if he, though a stranger, might be allowed to look at the dead boy's face, "You wonder that I care so much," he said, as the tears rolled down his cheeks. "One time I was coming down by a long ladder from a high roof, and found your little boy standing close beside me when I reached the ground. He looked up into my face with childish wonder, and asked frankly: 'Weren't you afraid of falling when you were up so high?' and, before I had time to answer, he said: 'Oh, I know why you are not afraid; you said your prayers this morning before you began work!' I had not prayed, but I never forgot to pray from that day to this." Though the child was wrong in inferring from the mason's self-possession in a dangerous place that he was a praying man, he was right in his belief that fearlessness in the path of duty is a natural result of faith (Isa. 26: 3).

A Marriage on a Train at Midnight Took place in Idaho on July 3. When the train from Minneapolis drew up at Rathdrum for water that night, a man accompanied by a Justice of the Peace made his way through the cars. Most of the passengers had gone to rest, it being near midnight. One lady, however, was sitting up, and the man appeared to recognize her immediately. He gave her an affectionate embrace and conducted her to the rear door of the car, where the Justice stood. The couple stood at each side of the door, the Squire in front of them, and the two official witnesses, just inside the car. Near them stood a Scotch missionary en route to Alaska. The Justice, a good-natured little man, tilted his hat on the back of his head, and said. "Please join hands;" then to the man he said: "Do you take this woman to be your lawful wife?" "I do," he replied. Then to the lady: "Do you take this man to be your lawful husband?" "I do," said she. "Then" said the Justice, "under the authority conferred on me by the Territory of Idaho, I pronounce you husband and wife, and what God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." Then, fearing the train would start off with him, he stepped off the car to the station platform, and called out in the darkness to the bridegroom: "I'll sign these papers and send them down on to-morrow's train." The Scotch missionary was almost dumb with astonishment. Recovering his speech, he said to the conductor; "Mon, is this legal? Do they do things laak that in this koontry?" He was assured that the ceremony was strictly legal, and he went back to his seat wondering that a ceremony which united two persons for life could be so brief and informal. When he recovered from his amazement, he would doubtless perceive that the sanctity of the marriage depended not upon the ceremony but on the true marriage union of heart, and in that characteristic, marriage resembles the higher union of the soul with its Saviour, which the Apostle Paul compares to a marriage. That union, though it is not for life only but for all eternity, is achieved by faith, and the most solemn church ceremony avails nothing without that (Eph. 5: 31, 32).

A Handsome Diamond Pin was Presented to a boy of twelve years of age at Hotel Kaaterskill, N. Y., on July 8. There is a large and deep lake at the back of the hotel, and that morning a message was given to a lady, a guest at the hotel, who was sitting on the piazza, that her only son, a beautiful boy seven years old, had fallen into the lake. Her distress may be imagined, but it was of short duration. A few minutes later the little fellow, his clothes soaked with water, ran on the piazza and threw his arms around his mother's neck, exclaiming: "I have been drowned, mamma, but Fred pulled me out." The Fred in question was a boy of twelve, one of the little fellow's companions who, being with him by the lake when he fell in, steadied himself by grasping a twig that grew on the bank and leaning over, seized the child's jacket and hauled him out just as he was sinking. The mother's delight was unbounded, and the boy who could not understand that he had done anything extraordinary, was compelled to accept a valuable diamond pin as a token of her gratitude. There are many of God's children who will be surprised, when they shine resplendent in many crowns in the last great day, to learn that God has thought their service in the rescue of souls worthy of so great a reward (James 5: 20).

A Victim of Insomnia Died in New York last Thursday through taking an overdose of chloral. Some months ago the man, who was in prosperous circumstances and free from domestic troubles, began taking small doses as a remedy for sleeplessness. He was of a highly nervous temperament, and on retiring to rest would lie awake for hours thinking and worrying. The chloral relieved him and enabled him to get refreshing sleep. But increased doses became necessary, and he became alarmed at the quantity he was taking. Then he discontinued the use of the drug for a time, but resumed it on finding that he could not obtain sleep without it. On Thursday he retired early, and his family going up-stairs an hour or two later, heard him breathing stertorously, while a two-ounce vial of chloral almost empty stood by his side. They were unable to arouse him, and physicians were summoned. Every remedy known to them was tried, without success, and three hours after taking the drug the man died. Occurrences of this kind, which are becoming alarmingly frequent, ought to be made widely known as warnings to those who are commencing the use of insidious narcotics, that they may perceive that it is better to bear sleeplessness than rely upon drugs which are so dangerous. If the experience of some dead souls among us were published, that might be still more useful as a warning to those with whom the Holy Spirit strives, but who, rendered uncomfortable by conviction of sin, stifle their convictions in worldly pleasure and sink into a state of hardness from which they are not aroused (Eph. 4: 30).

A Church Built of Salmon Boxes was Occupied by an attentive congregation on June 26, and a distinguished clergyman preached therein. The clergyman was visiting a member of a large fishery firm at Clifton, Oregon, and learning that a religious service had never been held there, expressed his wish to hold one on the coming Sunday. "But there is no meeting-house," said his host. The clergyman opined that the difficulty was not insurmountable, and so it proved. On the Saturday a lot of empty salmon boxes were collected and piled up, to make four walls, openings being left for a door in the rear and windows at the side. In the front the boxes were piled so as to form a semi-circle, and directly in front of this the pulpit was erected, also of salmon boxes. Boxes likewise served as seats. The congregation listened with perfect attention to the earnest Christian preacher, and he appeared as much at home in his novel surroundings as in his own comfortable church in Portland, and he doubtless realized that the gospel which Christ has given him to preach was just as effectual when proclaimed in the roughly extemporized edifice as in the most magnificent cathedral in christendom (John 4: 21, 23).

BRIEF NOTES.

Maria Vernon Graham Havergal, well known as the writer of the "Memorials" of her beloved sister, Frances Ridley Havergal, has just died at the age of sixty-six.

The total received in London by the officers of the Hospital Saturday Fund amounts to nearly $25,000, and the total of the Hospital Sunday Fund has reached about $142,500.

Dr. McCosh has succeeded in establishing a woman's annex at Princeton as a separate institute, with a complete college faculty and a fair endowment. It will be named Evelyn College.

According to a despatch from Berlin, two unpublished letters from Luther to Brenz, and five from Melancthon to the Swabian reformer Lachmann, have been found in an old desk in a school at Heilbronn.

The Hon. John P. St. John, in the course of a recent address on prohibition in Kansas, said that one of the towns near the State line, with a population of 4,000, had not had an inhabitant in its jail for two and a half years.

Rev. D. L. Moody is, it is stated by a Canadian journal, being urgently pressed to plan an evangelistic tour in India, and the English friend who suggested the same has shown his sincerity by sending a check for $2,000 towards the expenses.

A large increase in the number of pilgrims to Jerusalem is reported by Pastor Schneller, who for more than twenty-five years has been at the head of the Syrian Orphans' Home in Jerusalem. He says that during the season just closed there have been nearly 30,000 tourists and pilgrims there—a larger number than in any single year in his life in the Holy City.

At Port Elizabeth, South Africa, a temperance demonstration was recently held, a procession 1,600 strong parading the town with badges and banners. An effort is to be made to induce Parliament to enlarge the areas in which the sale of liquor is prohibited. In Barbarton, where there is a population of 2,000, there is a grog-shop for every ten of the inhabitants.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union of Chicago, have asked the ministers, churches, and especially all Christian women, to unite with them in an endeavor to suppress the Washington Park races, on the ground that they have become the occasion of the worst forms of gambling, because of the garb of respectability which they wear, and are united with drunkenness and prostitution.

At New Rockford, a town of 300 inhabitants, on the Jamestown and Northern Railway, sixty miles north of Jamestown, Dakota, the Rev. B. S. Taylor, Methodist Episcopal minister, was holding a revival meeting in a large tent. On the night of June 29, the customers of the three saloons of the place sallied forth and cut the ropes and canvas of the tent, doing damage to the amount of $100.

An Excellent Opportunity for Boys and Girls now on their vacation to earn pocket money, now offers itself by canvassing for "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" and selling it weekly from house to house in their own neighborhood. A number of boys have commenced this since the holidays, in preference to doing anything else. Send postal card at once, for terms.

PLEADING PRAYER.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope."—Psalm 119 : 49.

The Singular Amalgam of the Psalm—Prayer, Testimony and Praise—I. Prayer—Inaccurate Prayers—May be Acceptable—Tainted with Unbelief—The Expectation Implied—The Bond in Black and White—God's Strong Memory—II. The Psalmist's Pleas—Remember the Word—A Royal Word—Irrevocable—The Plea of Service—Raising Comfort on Credit—The Voice of Past Blessings.

THE one hundred and nineteenth psalm is a very wonderful composition. Its expressions are many as the waves, but its testimony one as the sea. It deals all along with the same subject; and it consists, as you observe, of a vast number of verses, some of which are very similar to others; and yet throughout the one hundred and seventy-six stanzas the same thought is not repeated: there is always a shade of difference even when the color of the thought appears to be the same. Some have said that in it there is an absence of variety; but that is merely the observation of those who have not studied it. I have weighed each word, and I bear witness that this sacred song has no tautology in it, but is charmingly varied from beginning to end. Its variety is that of a kaleidoscope: from a few objects a boundless variation is produced. In the kaleidoscope you look once, and there is a strangely beautiful form. You shift the glass a very little, and another shape, equally delicate and beautiful, is before your eyes. So it is here. What you see is the same, and yet never the same: it is the same truth, but it is always placed in a new light, put in a new connection, or in some way or other invested with freshness. I admire in this psalm very greatly that we have of testimony, of prayer, and of praise. In one verse the Psalmist bears witness, in a second verse he praises, in a third verse he prays. It is an incense made up of many spices, but they are wonderfully compounded and worked together, so as to form one perfect sweetness. You would not like to have one-third of the psalm composed of prayer—marked up to the sixtieth verse, for instance; and then another part made up exclusively of praise; and yet a third portion of unmixed testimony. It is best to have all these ingredients intermixed, and wrought into a sacred unity, as you have them in this thrice-hallowed psalm. My text is a prayer, but there is testimony in it, and there is a measure of praise in it too. In this single text there is the same mixing up of sweet perfumes as there is in the whole psalm.

The Singular Amalgam

I. First, then,

The Prayer

David prays, "Remember the word unto thy servant." "Remember." That prayer is spoken after the manner of men, for God cannot forget. It would be a very low conception of His omniscience if we imagined that anything passed away from His knowledge. We see things as they come one after the other in a procession, but God is in a position from which He sees all at once. A man traveling through England sees a portion at a time; but he that looks at a map sees the whole country present before him there and then. God sees everything as now. Nothing is past, nothing is future to Him. He sees things that are not as though they were, and the things that shall be as though they had been. God does not forget, and therefore the text speaks only in a certain restricted sense, and must be understood after the manner of men.

Beloved, after what other manner could we speak? God has not taught us to speak after the manner of God. How could we? We are not divine. There is a language above, which Paul heard, of which he said that it was not lawful for a man to utter it. men must speak after the manner of men; and each sort of a man must speak after his own name. Do not therefore let us censure a young brother when he utters a prayer which is very natural from him, though it sounds strange to us. Let us not condemn him because his language is not strictly accurate; for though it may jar upon our ear, the Lord may be well pleased with it. You are intelligent and educated, and a full-grown Christian, and the childish language of a beginner may jar upon your ear; but you must bear the jarring, for the Lord bears much more from you and others of His children.

It is thus that Jesus spake; and the Lord, in our feeble tones, which in themselves might be open to censure, hears the language of the Son of man; and for His dear sake He does not condemn our speaking after the manner of men. He permits us so to speak, for He Himself knows how to read between the lines. He takes the meaning of our groans and tears, and when we fail to express ourselves suitably in words, He reads our hearts, and accepts our secret meanings. I think I am warranted in making these remarks upon this expression of the prayer, "Remember the word unto thy servant;" and I hope they will furnish comfort to those of you who have very slender gifts of utterance.

The Unbelief Saint.

I do not, however, conceal from myself the fact that it is language which has some trace of unbelief in it. Perhaps no unbelief was in the Psalmist's heart at the time; but it is language fit for the lip of one who has not always been at all times a firm and unstaggering believer. It does look as if the thought that the Lord might forget had crossed the pleader's soul. It does look as if, even though it had not been tolerated—for faith had cast it out—yet the suggestion had knocked at the door of the mind, saying—"My way is hid from the Lord, and my judgment is passed over from my God." We do not say to another person, "Remember," unless there is at least the apprehension of the possibility of forgetfulness. David could not quite mean, when he came to think it over, that he really thought that God would forget: but we usually speak in haste when we speak in unbelief, and then we do not measure what we say. Unbelief is

The Hurry of the Soul.

A regenerate soul sitting still, and correctly weighing the whole question between the eternal faithfulness of God and the passing troubles of life, cannot be long in coming to a confident conclusion. There is a hurry about our cares and anxieties, and in our hurry we are apt to rush to the foolish conclusion that the Lord may forget us. O poor worried child, if thou art so foolish as to allow so absurd a fear to enter thy bosom, thy Father would sooner that thou shouldst express thy apprehension to Him than hide it in thy heart! So we are helped to say, "Remember the word," though we blush to think that it ever should have occurred to us that God could forget.

Let us look at the prayer again: "Remember the word unto thy servant." The intention of him who prayed this prayer was to ask God to remember His word by fulfilling it. That is the real meaning of it, as when a servant sometimes says, "I hope you will remember me." Yes, we will remember him; but that is not quite what he means, Those who speak thus hope that we will give them some token of remembrance—some practical proof that we remember them. So does this prayer mean, "Lord, let me not only be in Thy thoughts, but let me be in Thy acts! Thou hast promised to supply my needs; remember me by supplying my needs. Thou hast promised to forgive my sin; remember me by giving me a sense of pardon. Thou hast promised to help Thy servant, and give me strength according to my day; remember the word by fulfilling Thy word, and granting strength to me according as I have need of it." Now, beloved, this is in fact, it is the very essence of prayer to put God in mind of what He has promised. You can never pray an inch beyond the tether of the promise with any assurance of being heard. For my own part, I always feel on sure ground with God when I can quote His own words. I feel then that I may ask boldly, and I need not put in, "If it be Thy will," and those other reservations; because, if His promise were not His will, He would not have spoken it. There is the promise in His word, and I know that He put it there as the index of what

Very Legitimate Praying;

He Intended to Give

and to do, and as an invitation to His child to plead with Him about those very things which He has so indicated, and say to Him, "Now, Lord, do as thou hast said."

It is a grand thing, when you are pleading with any man, to bring his own handwriting before him. You have then a hold upon him of the firmest kind. You have his promise in black and white, and he cannot run back from that. The intent of God in giving us the promise, as it were, in black and white, in His own handwriting, is that He may be enquired of by us to do those very things which He has engaged Himself to do. Ungodly men cannot make out what prayer is. "Do you suppose," say they, "that you can change the will of God?" We reply to them—We never supposed anything of the kind. but we suppose that our prayer is the shadow of a coming blessing. As "coming events cast their shadows before them," so, when God is about to bless us, He moves us to pray for that very blessing. If it were possible to shut out the man's shadow, we could not expect the man to enter; and if it were possible to shut out prayer from our souls, we should feel at the same time that we had shut out the blessing.

You see, then, the singular appropriateness of the expression, though at first it might seem to be a questionable one. "Remember the word unto Thy servant." Brethren, the great mercy to us is, that God has

A Very Strong Memory.

Towards His people He has a memory so strong that He has said. "Yet will I not forget thee." "Behold, I have graven thee," says He, "upon the palms of my hands." There is no forgetting a thing that is written on the palms of your hands. You cannot do any work but you see it there; and God cannot do any work without seeing His children's names. He can do no work of judgment without seeing their names; and therefore He spares His people. He can do no work of bounty but what their names are on His hands; and therefore He says, "Surely, blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee." His hands are branded with the names of His beloved, and it is not possible that He can forget them. Blessed be His dear name, we have very much to appeal to when we pray, "Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope."

II. The time flies too quickly, and therefore let me mention, in the second place, the pleas which the psalmist uses. The first is, "Remember the word." It is the word; for by the word upon which God had caused His servant to hope is meant God's word. He never makes His people to hope in anybody else's word. It is in the Lord's word that the hope of His people finds support. Let us consider the power, the dignity, the glory of that word. This is the greatest of all grounds of assurance. There is nothing on earth, there is nothing in heaven, half so steadfast as the simple, naked word of God. How mighty is this plea, when you present before the Lord His own sacred word! It is

A Blessed Plea—

A Royal Word.

We do not expect kings to play fast and loose with words. They say, "If honor were banished from all the rest of mankind, it ought still to find a refuge in the breast of kings." But what shall I say of "the King eternal, immortal, invisible"? Will He lie? Dost thou suspect the one "Blessed and only Potentate," the King of kings and Lord of lords? How thou dost insult His majesty if thou dreamest that He can falsify His solemn pledge, and break His word! "Where the word of a king is, there is power," because there is faithfulness at the back of it.

But it is more than a royal word, brethren. It is an irrevocable word. Man has to eat his words, sometimes, and unsay his say. He would perform his engagement, but he cannot. It is not that he is unfaithful, but that he is unable. Now this is never so with God. What He has promised shall be, and what He has revealed shall surely be accomplished; for be sure of this—God has never spoken in secret; in a dark place of the earth, so as to revoke a single word which He has spoken aforetime. He has never disannulled one of His ordinances, or cancelled one of His promises. Stands the everlasting decree, firm as the throne of Jehovah, and the promise is as unfailing as the decree.

It is an Almighty Word.

Are you hungry to-night? Has it even come to this? And have you God's promise that you shall be fed? Then you shall be fed; you shall be fed. The devil comes to you, and he says, "Yes, you may be fed, but you must do a wrong action in order to get the food." He speaks to the Son of God again, and he says, "Command that these stones be made bread." Hearken not to him but believe God. Now is your time to glorify God. Tell the devil, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." There is nutriment in God's word. There is everything in that word. The creature owes its power to bless and nourish to the will of God; and if the creature be absent, the will of God can still achieve its purpose by His word without the creature. I put this in a very strong light, but I am certain that I go no further than God's word will warrant. Oh for grace to plead the promise and to rest upon it!

The second plea lies in the words, "thy servant." "Remember the word unto thy servant." A man is bound to keep his word to anybody and everybody, but sometimes there may be special persons with whom a failure would be peculiarly dishonorable. Among the rest, a man must be true to his servant.

A Servant has a Claim upon his master. We dare say it, very reverently, that we have a claim upon God when we are His servants. Of course, that claim is only such as He allows, and it is founded alone on grace; but still it is a strong plea with our gracious Master. He was thought to be an evil man who left his servant to perish when he was sick. He could do no more work, and so his cruel owner left him by the way to die. No good master would do that. Lord, wilt thou do that with me? When I grow sick, wilt thou forsake me? When I grow old, wilt thou desert me? When I cannot speak in thy name any longer, wilt thou disown me? When I cannot stand any longer, by reason of feebleness, wilt thou throw me on one side? When I lie gasping upon my death-bed, wilt thou say, "I have had his best days, but I will leave him now?" The supposition would be blasphemous. It cannot be. O my brother, our God will not Leave Us!

There is this further plea. If a man set his servants such and such a work to do, is he not bound to find them the means of doing it? Only a cruel task-master compels men to make bricks, and gives them no straw to mingle with the clay. We are not dealing with Pharaoh, remember; we are dealing with Jehovah, who acts on quite another principle. Beloved, the Lord never sent any one of his soldiers to warfare at his own charges. How frequently, when my Master sends me to the front, I have to cry to Him, "Lord, grant me fresh supplies! Lord send on the ammunition! I must have powder: I must have funds and grace and guidance! Lord, send fresh men! Fill up the ranks as one after another falls on the field!" I find Him always ready with His reinforcements, and His succors, and His stores. There is no failure of commissariat with God. He takes good care of His fighting servants, and His suffering servants, and His ploughing servants, and His sowing servants; and so you would expect Him to do.

A good master will not set his servant a hard task beyond his strength, and then refuse to lift a hand to help him. That would be far from the God of infinite mercy. Now, dear sister, you that have begun to teach in the Sunday-school, and feel that you are hardly equal to it, the Lord will help you. Go on. Do not give it up. You that have been trying to preach in the villages, but who do not see any good coming of it, and are half inclined to run away, stand to your guns. Cry to the Lord for more strength, and He will help you. And let this be the plea, "Lord remember the word unto thy servant, for I am thy servant, Lord." You know what.

The Old Man-Servant

said, in the olden time, when his master angrily said, "We must part, John." "I hope not, sir. Where are you going?" He had no intention to go himself. "Ah!" said his master, "I do not intend to employ you any longer." The old servant is said to have answered, "Sir, if you have not a good servant, I know that I have a good master, and I do not mean to leave him. I cannot think of going away." It is a grand thing to feel that you are not going away from God—that you have such a good Master that you are going to cling to the post of his door; and if you cannot preach for your Lord, you will hear for him; and if you cannot be a leader of the Church, you will be a follower somewhere; but your Lord you will serve for ever. This, then, is one of the pleas: "Remember the word unto thy servant."

The last plea I shall offer but a few words upon. "Upon which thou hast caused me to hope." Lord, I have been hoping on thy word, and I have acted upon that hope: I believe the word to be true, and I have pledged the truth of it. That is good pleading. A man has given me a bill—not a transaction I ever have anything to do with; but suppose such a thing. Suppose I go and discount it, I say, "My friend, you must honor that bill, because I have received the cash for it. Do not fail to meet it." It is as if we said to our God, "Lord, thou hast caused me to hope upon this promise of thine. I have been upon the credit of it. I felt so sure that it would be fulfilled that I have taken it into the market, and I have been living upon its proceeds by hoping on it." See how David went and discounted the promissory note: he encouraged himself by it. Turn to the verses which follow my text, and you will see. "This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me." He had been comforting himself by the promise; and if the promise failed, that comfort would turn out to be a sheer delusion. Will the Lord delude those who trust him? Read the next verse; "The proud have had me greatly in derision: yet have I not declined from thy law." I stuck to thy doctrine, thy precept, thy promise: I declared thy word to be true: wilt thou not keep it, and so vindicate my confident assurance? "I remembered the judgments of old, O Lord; and have comforted myself." I have thus derived strength and establishment out of thy promises already. Wilt thou allow the enemy to tell me that I have deceived myself? Wilt thou revoke thy declarations? It cannot be.

Raising Present Comfort

This is wonderfully blessed pleading. "Thou hast caused me to hope; therefore, O Lord, remember Thy word!" When I read how God kept his promise to His people of old, I said, "He will keep it to me;" and when I remembered how He had kept other promises to me in past times, I said, "He will keep this also." His former dealings have induced us to trust in Him. "Lord, Thou hast caused me to hope; my hope is of Thy creating, nourishing and perfecting. I am justified in hoping in Thee on this occasion, from what Thou hast done for me in days gone by. Thou hast caused me to hope. It was Thy word, and I was Thy servant, and I believed Thy word, and Thy Spirit helped me to go from faith to hope; and now, when the windows of hope are opened, wilt Thou not be pleased to send in a messenger of grace and peace?" O needy child of God, go home, and plead in this fashion, and you shall not return empty! Have you come into a position from which there seems to be no escape? Do not ask to escape, but cry, "Remember the word unto Thy servant, upon which Thou hast caused me to hope." You, poor sinner over yonder, that have never found Christ, think of this gracious word, "Him that cometh to Me I will in nowise cast out." Lay hold on that loving declaration, and hope in it, and then say, "Lord, remember the word unto Thy servant, upon which Thou has caused me to hope." The Lord bless you all, and give you a joyful hope in His sure promise, for His name's sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

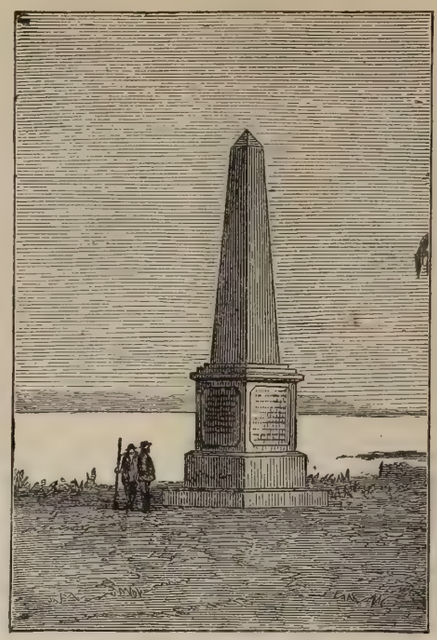
THREE INTREPID CHRISTIAN PRISONERS.*

IT would seem to have been for the purpose of proving his unimpeachable catholicity, as well as attesting his dialectic skill, that Henry of Valois about this time determined to try his hand at the conversion of heretics. Two young women, daughters of one Jacques Foucaud, lately a procureur in the parliament of Paris, had been thrown into prison on the simple charge of being obstinate and heady Huguenots. The younger was unmarried; the elder was the widow of one Jean Sureau, of Montargis, and the mother of three small children. One day, at the end of January, the king mustered up sufficient resolution to forego his ignoble pastimes and visit the chatelet where the two Huguenots were confined. When brought into his presence, the two women maintained their reputation for attachment to their creed, and for clear understanding of its articles. Though he talked long, Henry made no progress. To say the truth, his discourse amounted to little more than promises that if they would but return to mass, they should instantly be set at liberty. When they excused themselves on the ground of conscience, the king could endure it no longer and exclaimed: "I see very well how the case stands; you are obstinate women who will be converted only by means of fire." The two priests whom Henry had prudently brought with him, next plied the girls for a full hour with their arguments, but succeeded no better. The Huguenot prisoners knew the holy Scriptures well, and could instantly answer the theologians by the apt quotation of particular passages.

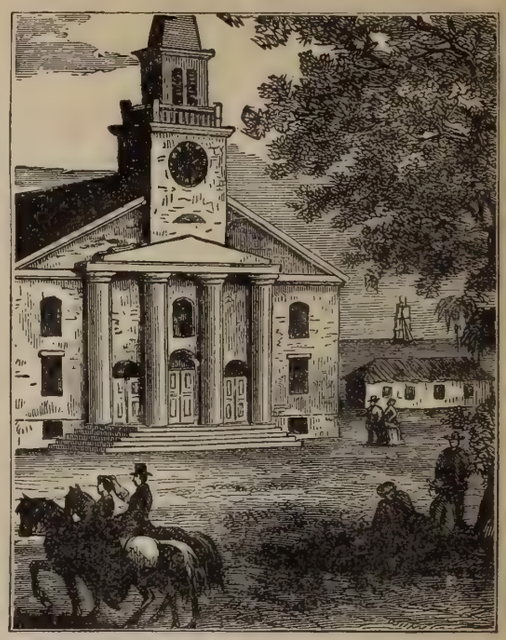
A more distinguished victim of religious intolerance was at the same time languishing behind the walls of the Bastile, and him, too, the king thought fit to honor with a visit. This was no other than Bernard Palissy, the potter, now a man about seventy-eight years of age, of humble and obscure parentage, he had, nearly fifty years before this time, begun in the city of Saintes, a series of remarkable experiments with the view of discovering a method of producing an enamel that would make of the rough pottery, with which alone he was acquainted, a proper material for the realization of his artistic thought. Undaunted by poverty and frequent disappointments, the patient worker at last succeeded in his search. After fifteen years, during which he was treated by the educated as a visionary, and looked upon with suspicion by the ignorant as a cheat, and possibly a dealer in magical arts, Palissy found the way to fame and competence open before him. Anne De Montmorency became his patron, and Catharine De Medici enchanted by the elegance of his designs, employed him in decorating the gardens of the new palace of the Tuileries. Meantime Palissy received the doctrines of the Reformation and used voice and pen in the dissemination of his new faith. Thrice had he consequently been in peril of his life. Imprisoned as a heretic during the first civil war, he obtained his release through the intercession of the constable with the

*From "The Huguenots and Henry of Navarre." By Professor Henry M. Baird, of the University of the City of New York. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

Queen Kapiolani, of Hawaii.



Captain Cook's Monument.



The Episcopal Church at Honolulu.

Queen mother. Ten years later Catherine herself interposed to save him from death in the massacre of Saint Bartholomew's day. Now for a third time he was menaced with death as a Protestant. Henry condescended to visit him, and endeavoured to persuade him to prolong a life, so useful to his royal master, by abjuring the religion of Calvin and Beza.

"My good fellow," said he, "for forty-five years you have been in the service of the Queen, my mother, and in mine; and we have endured your living in your religion through fires and massacres. But now I am so hard pressed by the Guises and my people that I have been compelled, despite my own wishes, to throw you and these two poor women into prison. They will be burned, and you also, if you do not suffer yourself to be converted."

To which the intrepid potter replied: "Sire, Count Maulevrier came yesterday and in your name promised the two sisters their lives on the most degrading condition. They answered that they would be martyrs for their own honor as well as for the honor of God. You have told me several times that you pitied me, but it is I that pity you, who have uttered these words: 'I am compelled.' That was not speaking as a king. These girls and I, who have a portion in the kingdom of heaven, will teach you this royal speech, that neither the Guises, nor all your people, nor you yourself can ever constrain us to bow the knee before images."

Unfortunately, though Henry did not carry out his threat to bring his Huguenot captives at once to the stake, he lacked the magnanimity to release them. Palissy was left to languish and die in the Bastile of old age and hard usage; while the two Huguenot women were brought out four or five months later, to suffer death on the Place de Greve.

HAWAII AND ITS QUEEN.

See Illustrations.

THE recent popular rising in Hawaii, combined with the visit of Queen Kapiolani to this country, has attracted public attention to that land. The group of thirteen islands, which constitute the Hawaiian kingdom, comprise 6,000 square miles, being a little smaller than the State of New Jersey, and have a population of about 90,000. They were discovered in 1778 by Captain Cook, who was murdered there in the following year; a monument has been erected to his memory on the spot where he fell. (See Picture.)

The conversion of the Islanders to Christianity, was achieved by the blessing of God on the labors of American missionaries, who arrived there in 1820. Before that the natives were sunk in a horrible superstitious darkness, worshipping a legendary goddess whom they called Pele, supposed to have her abode in the great volcano of the chief island. A scene as grand in its way as that which took place on Mount Carmel, occurred on that volcano when Queen Kapiolani, an ancestress of the present Queen, who was named after her, was converted to Christianity. In order to convince her people of their errors, and of the powerlessness for good or harm of the goddess they worshipped, she went with some Christian friends to the mouth of the crater. and there in the very place where the goddess was supposed to have her seat, she held a service, worshipping Jehovah, declaring that Pele was no deity, and exhorting the people to cast away their fear of a goddess who, as they saw, might be braved with impunity. That gave the death-blow to the idolatrous worship, and the work of the missionaries went forward rapidly. An imposing stone church (see picture) was built for the worship of God, the natives working willingly to erect the structure. The absence of building facilities rendered the effort a prodigious one; the stones and the sand having to be brought a long distance by simple manual labor. In some cases fifty natives dragged a heavy piece of timber for a beam, a distance of fourteen miles.

The present Queen (see portrait) is fifty-three years of age, and has been married to King Kalakaua about twenty-five years. She bears a striking resemblance to her sister queen of England, except, of course, in complexion, being short and very stout, yet contriving, by her erect carriage, like Queen Victoria, to infuse some degree of dignity into her manner. She returned to America last week from her trip to England, where she went to participate in the celebration of the Queen's jubilee. She will find matters in her capital in an unpleasant condition when she arrives there. During her absence King Kalakaua has managed to get himself into a difficulty with his subjects, and has only escaped deposition by sacrificing his Cabinet. Among other unpopular acts he accepted a gift of $71,000 from an enterprising firm, in return for which he granted them permission to sell opium in Hawaii. This act was a violation of his oath and appears to have precipitated a revolution. There was a general rising, and it became necessary to fortify the palace. Gatling guns and a supply of ammunition were brought in, and a quantity of arms were imported from Australia. The latter, however, were seized by the people and increased the peril of the King. A large meeting was held on June 30, when in a series of resolutions the Government was declared to have ceased to perform its functions, through corruption and incompetence, and the King to have been guilty of violation of the law and his oath of office. A demand was made that Kalakaua return the $71,000 he had received as a bribe, and that he dismiss his cabinet and call to office one of four persons nominated by the meeting, who should be entrusted with the duty of forming a new cabinet. A committee was nominated to present the resolutions to the King, and to inform him that the meeting had adjourned for forty-eight hours, and that if he failed to reply within that time his silence would be construed as a rejection of the popular demands.

King Kalakaua having taken the advice of the representatives of foreign powers, acceded to all the demands, dismissed the cabinet and summoned William L. Green, one of the persons nominated at the meeting to form a new cabinet. Whether this concession will fully satisfy the people is not certain, but when the steamer which brought the news, left Honolulu on July 5, it was believed that there would be no further demonstrations, and that King Kalakaua might by signing a new constitution be permitted to retain his throne.

TOM COLLEY'S NEW COLORS.

(See Illustration on page 461.)

AMONG the strangers present one night at a mission chapel, was a young sailor, of a bright, cheerful, but somewhat weak cast of features. He could not have been more than two or three and twenty years old, but he had the look of having lived fast, and not without dissipation. He was cordially welcomed at the mission, and after the service was through, one of the workers spoke to him.

"We are glad to see you," he said; "come and see us again to-morrow, if you are staying in port."

"Thank you," said the sailor, "I will. It seems quite like old times to me to hear the singing and prayers. When I was a little boy I had to go to church regularly, and I got pretty tired of it, but to-night I've thoroughly enjoyed it."

"Haven't been to church much lately, I suppose?"

"No; the fact is, I have not been in any place of the kind since I left home, ten years ago. When one is on shipboard one does not feel much like those things. Most of the men have gone to a dance-house to-night. They wanted me to go along, but somehow I thought I would not. I cannot account for it, but I have been thinking a good deal about my mother this last day or two. Cannot get the old lady out of my mind. I've never written nor heard from her since I ran away from home ten years ago, and I've very seldom thought of her; but I cannot help thinking now. I hope there is nothing wrong. I should be very sorry to hear she was dead. That's what the men say is happening when you think all the time of anybody."

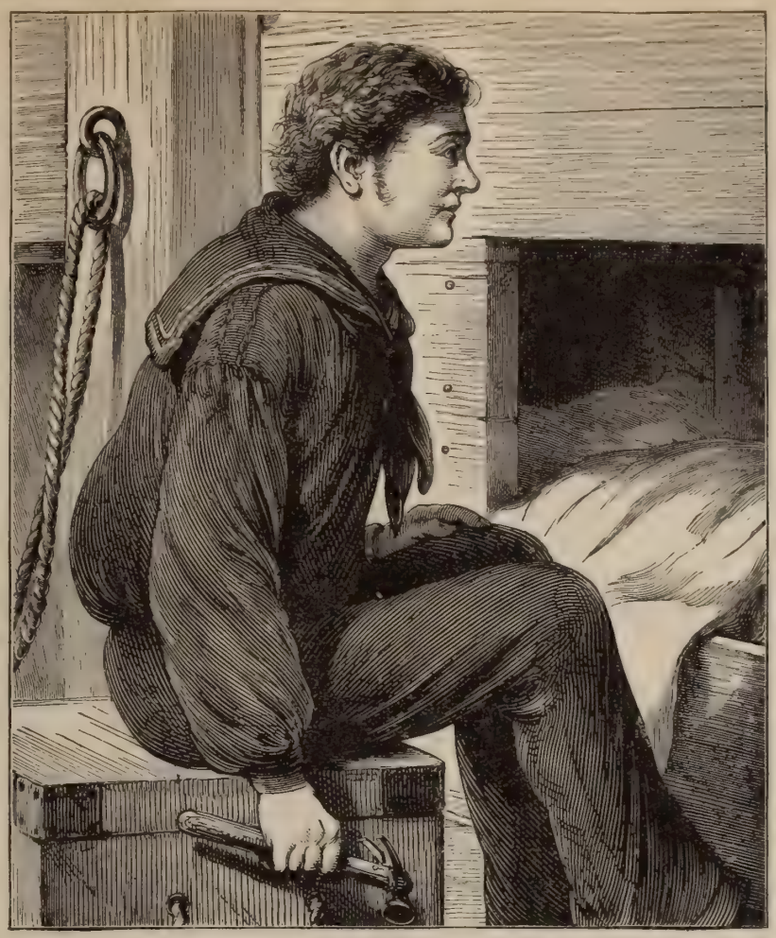
"Well, we will hope it is not so in this case. Why don't you write to your mother now? If she is living she would be very glad to hear from you. If you will step into this little office you will find paper, pens and ink, and you will be quiet. You could do it right away, and have it off your mind."

"You are very kind; I think I will. It's a very good notion." And the sailor was soon immersed in the labor of composition, which seemed to try him a great deal more than his seafaring duties.

"Come in whenever you like," said his new friend, when an hour later the sailor issued forth, "you will always be welcome. What is your name?"

"Tom Colley, sir, of the steamship Syria; yes, thank you, I will come; you seem nice people, and I like the place."



Tom Colley Nailing Up His New Flag.

The next night Tom Colley was at the mission chapel again, and listened attentively to the address, and joined, with a rich, strong voice, in the singing of a hymn which was evidently familiar to him. At the close of the service his eyes were moist, and he was evidently much moved. His friend took him aside and prayed with him. Tom was anxious about his soul, but he could not see the way of salvation. His friend gave him a New Testament with several marked passages in it, and, receiving his promise to come back the next night, he let him go. Tom came as he promised, and had some more conversation. That night he came into the light, and realizing the truth of the Gospel, committed his soul to Christ's keeping. He was to sail two days later, and, therefore, that would be his last visit to the mission for some time, as his presence would be required on board all the following days. That was an ordeal he dreaded, for he knew he must either keep his conversion a secret from his shipmates, which was not to be thought of, or bear their ridicule, which, to a man of his temperament, would be very trying. He remained behind after the service, for special prayer about this matter, and when he went away he felt nerved and strengthened for the struggle.

The friends at the mission did not forget the young convert. They knew that he would have need of help, and every night they prayed for him, that in whatever circumstances he might then be, Christ would be with him to support him. It was nearly a month afterwards that Tom Colley presented himself at the mission again and received a joyful welcome.

"How did you manage with the men?" he was asked.

"Well," said Tom, "I felt brave that night when I went away from here, but the next morning when I went aboard I felt scared. But I said to myself, it is only the first plunge that will be bad; the rest will be easy. So I made up my mind to 'run my colors up' at once. I had one of your cards, you know, "Jesus my King," so I just took that and nailed it up over my berth the very first thing I did. I sat and looked at it after it was up, and I thought, now there'll be no mistake about my having signed the new papers. And there was not. The men knew what it meant, and I had it pretty bad for a day or two, but, bless you, it was nothing. I seemed to have a regular greased hide; all their chaff rolled off me, and never hurt a bit. And what do you think! I've been to see my mother! You may guess how glad she was, to know about the change. I told her how it was thinking about her that brought me first to the mission, when I was going to the dance-house, and how I was afraid she was dead, because I could not help thinking about her. Well, she reckoned back to the time, and it seems that just about then she was with some more old ladies at a prayer-meeting, several days running, and every day they prayed for me. The old lady believed that was what did it, and perhaps it was."

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

[The adage that truth is stranger than fiction, was never more marvellously illustrated than in this wonderful record, in which George Muller tells the story of his life. It ought not to be so great a surprise as it is to Christians who believe that God is Almighty and has promised to answer prayer. Few, however, have the spirit of Ezra, who says (Ezra 8 : 22) he "was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king saying, The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him." Perhaps some who read this record may be encouraged by it to put their trust in God in their own difficulties, instead of seeking help from man.]

I WAS born in Kroppenstaedt, near Halberstadt, in Prussia, on September 27, 1805. In January, 1810, my parents removed to Heimersleben, about four miles from Kroppenstaedt, where my father was appointed Collector in the Excise. He educated his children (myself and one brother) on worldly principles. I fell into habits of deceit and sinfulness, and before I was ten years old, repeatedly pilfered some of the Government money entrusted to me. From the age of ten until fourteen I was at the cathedral classical school of Halberstadt.

At midsummer, 1821, my father obtained a Government appointment at Schoenebech near Magdeburg, and I was left to reside alone in his house at Heimersleben until Easter 1822, and part of the time was reading classics with a clergyman, Dr. Nagel. I was now living on the premises belonging to my father, under little real control, and entrusted with a considerable sum of money which I had to collect for my father from persons who owed it to him. My dissipated habits soon led me to spend a considerable part of this money, giving receipts for different sums, yet leaving my father to suppose I had not received them. From October, 1822, to Easter, 1825, I was at school at Nordhausen, where, although diligent in my studies and outwardly gaining the esteem of my fellow-creatures, I did not care in the least about God, but lived secretly in much sin, in consequence of which I was taken ill, and for thirteen weeks was confined to my room. I had at this time grown so wicked that I could habitually tell lies without blushing. In 1825 I became a member of the University of Halle, with very high testimonials. I thus obtained permission to preach in the Lutheran State Church, but I was as unhappy and as far from God as ever. Here I renewed my profligate life afresh, although now a student of divinity. About June, 1825, I was again taken ill, in consequence of my profligate and vicious life. My state of health, therefore, no longer allowed me to go on in the same course, but my desires were still unchanged. About the end of July I recovered.

Halle was a University town of about 20,000 inhabitants, including about 1,260 students, nearly 900 of whom studied divinity, and were all allowed to preach in the Lutheran Established Church, although there is reason to believe that not nine were truly converted.

The time was now come, when God would have mercy on me. I had no Bible, and had not read in it for years. I went to church but seldom: but from custom, I took the Lord's Supper twice a year. I had never heard the Gospel preached, up to the beginning of November 1825. I had never met with a person who told me that he meant, by the help of God, to live according to the Holy Scriptures. In short, I had not the least idea that there were any persons really different from myself, except in degree.

One Saturday afternoon, about the middle of November, 1825, I had taken a walk with my friend Beta. On our return he said to me that he was in the habit of going on Saturday evenings to the house of a Christian (a tradesman in Halle named Wagner), where there was a meeting. On further inquiry he told me that they read the Bible, sang, prayed, and read a printed sermon. No sooner had I heard this, than it was to me as if I had found something after which I had been seeking all my life long. I immediately wished to go with my friend, who was not at once willing to take me; for knowing me as a gay young man, he thought I should not like this meeting. At last, however, he said he would call for me.—I would here mention, that Beta seems to have had conviction of sin, and probably also a degree of acquaintance with the Lord, when about fifteen years old. Afterwards, being in a cold and worldly state, he joined me in the sinful journey to Switzerland. On his return, however, being extremely miserable, and convinced of his guilt, he made a full confession of his sin to his father; and whilst with him sought the acquaintance of a Christian brother, named Richter. This Dr. Richter, who himself had studied a few years before at Halle, gave him, on his return to the University, a letter of introduction to a believing tradesman, of the name of Wagner. It was this brother, concerning whom Beta spoke to me and in whose house the meeting was held.

We went together in the evening. As I did not know the manners of believers, and the joy they have in seeing poor sinners, even in any measure, caring about the things of God, I made an apology for coming. The kind answer of this dear brother I shall never forget. He said: "Come as often as you please; house and heart are open to you." We sat down and sang a hymn. Then brother Kayser, now a missionary in Africa, in connection with the London Missionary Society, who was then living at Halle, fell on his knees and asked a blessing on our meeting. This kneeling down made a deep impression upon me; for I had never either seen any one on his knees, nor had I ever myself prayed on my knees. He then read a chapter and a printed sermon; for no regular meetings for expounding the Scriptures were allowed in Prussia, except an ordained clergyman was present. At the close we sang another hymn, and then the master of the house prayed. Whilst he prayed, my feeling was something like this: "I could not pray as well, though I am much more learned than this illiterate man." The whole made a deep impression on me. I was happy; though, if I had been asked why I was happy, I could not have clearly explained it.

When we walked home, I said to Beta: "All we have seen during our journey to Switzerland, and all our former pleasures, are as nothing in comparison with this evening." Whether I fell on my knees when I returned home, I do not remember; but this I know, that I lay peaceful and happy in my bed. This shows that the Lord may begin His work in different ways. For I have not the least doubt that on that evening He began a work of grace in me, though I obtained joy without any deep sorrow of heart, and with scarcely any knowledge. That evening was the turning point in my life. The next day, and Monday, and once or twice besides, I went again to the house of this brother, where I read the Scriptures with him and another brother; for it was too long for me to wait till Saturday came again.

Now my life became very different, though not so that all sins were given up at once. My wicked companions were given up; the going to taverns was entirely discontinued; the habitual practice of telling falsehoods was no longer indulged in, but still a few times after this I spoke an untruth. At the time when this change took place I was engaged in translating a novel out of French into German, for the press, in order to obtain the means of gratifying my desire to see Paris, &c. This plan about the journey was now given up, though I had not light enough to give up the work in which I was engaged, but finished it. The Lord, however, most remarkably put various obstacles in the way and did not allow me to sell the manuscript. At last, seeing that the whole was wrong, I determined never to sell it, and was enabled to abide by this determination. The manuscript was burnt.

I now no longer lived habitually in sin, though I was still often overcome, and sometimes even by open sins, though far less frequently than before, and not without sorrow of heart. I read the Scriptures, prayed often, loved the brethren, went to church from right motives, and stood on the side of Christ, though laughed at by my fellow-students.

It had pleased God to teach me something of the meaning of that precious truth: "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 18.) I understood something of the reason why the Lord Jesus died on the Cross, and suffered such agonies in the Garden of Gethsemane; even that thus, bearing the punishment due to us, we might not have to bear it ourselves. And, therefore, apprehending in some measure the love of Jesus for my soul, I was constrained to love Him in return. What all the exhortations and precepts of my father and others could not effect, what all my own resolutions could not bring about, even to renounce a life of sin and profligacy, I was enabled to do, constrained by the love of Jesus. The individual who desires to have his sins forgiven must seek for it through the blood of Jesus. The individual who desires to get power over sin, must likewise seek for it through the blood of Jesus.

In January, 1826, I began to read missionary papers, and was greatly stirred up to become a missionary myself. I prayed frequently concerning this matter, and thus made more decided progress for a few weeks. But soon, alas! I was drawn aside. I used frequently to meet a young female, who also came to the meetings on Saturday evenings; but being the only pious female of my own age, whom I knew, I soon felt myself greatly attached to her. This led away my heart from missionary work, for I had reason to believe that her parents would not allow her to go with me. My prayers now became cold and formal, and at length were almost entirely given up. My joy in the Lord left me. In this state I continued for about six weeks.

At the end of that time, about Easter, 1826, I saw a devoted young brother, named Hermann Ball, a learned man, and of wealthy parents, who, constrained by the love of Christ, preferred laboring in Poland among the Jews as a missionary, to having a comfortable living near his relations. His example made a deep impression on me. I was led to apply his case to my own, and to compare myself with him; for I had given up the work of the Lord, and, I may say, the Lord Himself, for the sake of a girl. The result of this comparison was, that I was enabled to give up this attachment, which I had entered upon without prayer, and which thus had led me away from the Lord. When I was enabled to be decided, the Lord smiled on me, and I was, for the first time in my life, able fully and unreservedly to give up myself to Him.

It was at this time that I began truly to enjoy the peace of God which passeth all understanding. In this my joy, I wrote to my father and brother, entreating them to seek the Lord, and telling them how happy I was; thinking that if the way to happiness were but set before them, they would gladly embrace it. To my great surprise an angry answer was returned. About this period the Lord sent a believer, Dr. Tholuck, as professor of divinity to Halle, in consequence of which a few believing students came from other universities. Thus also, through becoming acquainted with other brethren, the Lord led me on.

With the revival of the work of grace in my heart, after the snare of attachment above related had been broken, my former desire, to give myself to missionary service returned, and I went at last to my father to obtain his permission, without which I could not be received into any of the German missionary institutions. My father was greatly displeased, and particularly repoached me, saying that he had expended so much money on my education, hoping that he might comfortably spend his last days with me in a parsonage, and that he now saw all these prospects come to nothing. He was angry, and told me he would no longer consider me as his son. But the Lord gave me grace to remain steadfast. He then entreated me, and wept before me: yet even this by far harder trial the Lord enabled me to bear.

Before I went away I took an opportunity of reminding my brother of my former wicked life, and told him, that now, having been thus blessed by God, I could not but live for Him. After I had left my father, though I wanted more money than at any previous period of my life, as I had to remain two years longer in the University, I determined never to take any more from him; for it seemed to me wrong, so far as I remember, to suffer myself to be supported by him, when he had no prospect that I should become what he would wish me to be, namely, a clergyman with a good living. This resolution I was enabled to keep.

I would here observe, that the Lord afterwards, in a most remarkable way, supplied my temporal wants. For shortly after this had occurred, several American gentlemen, three of whom were professors in American colleges, came to Halle for literary purposes, as they did not understand German, I was recommended by Dr. Tholuck to teach them. These gentlemen, some of whom were believers, paid so handsomely for the instruction which I gave them, and for the lectures of certain professors which I wrote out for them, that I had enough and to spare. Thus did the Lord richly make up to me the little which I relinquished for His sake. "O fear the Lord, ye His saints: for there is no want to them that fear Him." (Psalm 34: 9.)

On my return from my father to the University at Halle, I found that the more experienced brethren thought that I ought for the present to take no further steps respecting my desire to go out as a missionary. But still it was more or less in my mind. Whitsuntide and the two days following I spent in the house of a pious clergyman in the country; for all the ministers at Halle, a town of more than 20 000 inhabitants, were unenlightened men. God greatly refreshed me through this visit. Dear Beta was with me. On our return we related to two of our former friends, whose society we had not quite given up, though we did not any longer live with them in sin, how happy we had been on our visit. I then told them how I wished they were as happy as ourselves, They answered, "we do not feel that we are sinners." After this I fell on my knees, and asked God to show them that they were sinners. Having done so, I left them, and went into my bedroom, where I continued to pray for them. After a little while I returned to my sitting-room, and found them both in tears, and both told me that they now felt themselves to be sinners. From that time a work of grace commenced in their hearts.

Having heard that there was a schoolmaster living in a village about six miles from Halle who was in the habit of holding a prayer-meeting at four o'clock every morning with the miners before they went into the pit, giving them also an address, I thought he was a believer; and as I knew so very few brethren, I went to see him in order, if it might be, to strengthen his hands. About two years afterwards, he told me that when I came to him first he knew not the Lord, but that he had held these prayer-meetings merely out of kindness to a relative whose office it was, but who had gone on a journey; and that those addresses which he had read were not his own, but copied out of a book. He also told me that he was much impressed with my kindness, and what he considered condescension, on my part in coming to see him; and this together with my conversation, had been instrumental in leading him to care about the things of God, and I knew him ever afterwards as a true believer.

(To be continued.)

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for July 31. Matt. 4 : 1-11. Golden Text, Heb. 2 : 18.

The Many-Sided Temptation—Not a Conflict with the Will—A Necessary Ordeal—God Permits His Servants to be Tempted—Physical Weakness a Time of Trial—Temptations Adapted to Christ's Position—Conscious of Sonship—The Temptation to Test It—By Miraculous Sustenance—By Miraculous Preservation from Death—How Conquest Might be Easily Achieved—Temptation Vanquished by Faith.

JESUS was tempted, not a little, but "in all points like as we are" (Heb. 4 : 15). He "suffered being tempted" (Heb. 2 : 18). What this suffering was is not clearly told us in the Word of God. We may be quite sure it was no struggle of His own will against the will of His Father. He had a will of His own, for He said, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me" (John 6 : 38), but it was His "meat," "His delight," to do His Father's will (John 4 : 31 ; Ps. 40 : 8). Yet temptation did not find Jesus impervious to its suffering. To Him sin, in any and every form, was untold suffering. Knowing, as He did, the heart of His Father, His love, His wisdom, the perfectness and righteousness of His holy law—it was bitter grief to Him to see that law violated. We may "count it all joy when (we) fall into divers temptation" (James 1 : 2), because, while we trust Him, we are "kept by the power of God through faith" (1 Pet. 1 : 5), and therefore we can know and prove more of the power and love of God dwelling in us in overcoming temptation, than we could have done if we had not been tempted. With Jesus, however, there was no question as to the ultimate issue; He was more than a match for Satan. Yet man anointed with the Holy Ghost (Matt. 3 : 16; Luke 4 : 18), yet man in the place of every other man. He had to meet the tempter as man, not as God; on human, and not divine, ground; by faith in the Father dwelling in Him (John 14 : 10), and not by any intrinsic power in Himself. He had to see from man's side all the awfulness of sinning against God. He had to see all the ruin of God's fair image in man. He had to know, standing as man on earth, all the meanness and wickedness of the motives which influenced fallen man, in such a way as to feel with intense suffering how easy a thing it is for man to sin. A large number of Christians look upon the temptation of Jesus as though it could in no way be compared to their own temptations; as though it were far easier for Jesus to bear than for us. Without irreverently analyzing what is above our power to comprehend, let us allow the Holy Spirit to teach us all He will by these words, "Tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin:" He Suffered Being Tempted.

He Had Come as Man,

It was just after the baptism of Jesus, when the Holy Spirit had come upon Him in a visible form, and God's testimony to His Son had sounded in a voice from heaven, that Jesus was "led up (or driven, Mark 1 : 12) into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." Here we see that God has a particular aim in permitting some of our temptations. While with some the word of James applies, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth He any man. But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed" (James 1 : 13, 14); there are other instances in which God is an agent in temptation, as well as the devil. "God did tempt (or try) Abraham" (Gen. 22 : 1). So with David when God permitted Satan to tempt him (II Sam. 24 : 1) and Job (1 and 2). So with Paul when he was in danger of being "exalted above measure," and God permitted "a messenger of Satan" to buffet him, lest it should be so. He had to learn that all his revelations did not hinder him from the temptations and buffetings of Satan; that he was as much exposed to them as the weakest Christian. "My grace," said the Lord, "is sufficient for thee" (not your revelations are sufficient), and Paul learned to glory in his weakness rather than in his revelations, that the power of Christ might rest upon him. This shows us why some of the most useful and advanced Christians are permitted by God to be tempted and the temptation which they loathe is a very buffetting, until they learn their own powerlessness and rely as much on God for His grace alone to conquer, as they have done on His grace to save.

But the temptation of Jesus was because it was on behalf of others. He was made flesh for us, He grew up for us, He obeyed His parents for us, He worked as a carpenter for us, He was circumcised and baptized for us, He was anointed with the Holy Ghost for us, He was tempted for us. It was an awful time of temptation; He had no companion in the desert for forty days and forty nights, but Satan and the wild beasts. During all those days He fasted. Some of those who rely on their own doings for salvation and for holiness have tried to imitate Him in this, as though the going without food and weakening the physical powers to an unnatural extent would please God! Surely God is better pleased with a loving yielding of the whole being to do, not some strange thing, but His expressed will! Others have impiously attempted to imitate Jesus' fast as though to prove that He was not sustained by Divine power. Thank God, His word, which testifies of Him, shall stand when heaven and earth and all scorners shall have passed away.

Unlike any other Temptation,

"When He had fasted forty days and forty nights He was afterward an hungered." It is always in moments of weakness that Satan attacks us. Let a moment come when one is so weak in body that the least movement causes pain or faintness; then is the very moment which the enemy chooses, for pressing upon one most important duties, which cannot be neglected without injury to others; then he comes and says, "It is too hard, you can't be expected to keep up under such a pressure." The temptation adds to the burden, the man pities himself, feels irritable, and becomes angry with himself for being so. Is not this a common history in many a household? Tempted child of God, Jesus was tempted in this point like as you are. Nature was giving way, and Satan tempted Him to leave the position of dependence on His Father, and to exercise His divine power on His own behalf and for His own personal benefit.

The enemy prefaced this temptation by

A Doubt of Sonship.

"If Thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread." "If Thou be!" It was like the devil to make the suggestion. Half his temptations are composed of insinuations against what God has said or what He has done. He takes good care not to begin by questioning what we are and what we have done. He began in the Garden of Eden, by saying to Eve, "Hath God said?" as though little or no dependence was to be placed upon the Word of God. He succeeded in making Job view God as a cruel tyrant. He impiously attempted to make Jesus, when fainting with hunger, doubt that He was the Son of God. "What! you the Son of God, and the Father's Witness, for no man knoweth the Father from the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son shall reveal Him (Matt. 11 : 27), then what kind of Father is He who would send His Son into the world in man's nature, and then starve Him to death? Leave the position of dependence; trust Him no longer; resume your divine character, and turn the stones into bread." But Jesus was not to be drawn away from His dependence on His Father. He made use of His Father's words, not His own, and said, "It is written, man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Deut. 8 : 3). Surely this was an intrenched position, safe from all the fiery darts of the devil! If Jesus lived by the Word of God; then He would sooner dispense with material nourishment than with that word. He said Himself, "The words which I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life" (John 6 : 63). It was His Father's authority which was the citadel of the fortress in which He strengthened Himself; the responsibility of His position was thrown upon another. It is more than useless to attempt, by any power of our own, to conquer temptation; the only fight we can fight is "the good fight of faith," and faith is resting in what another does; it is recognizing that

The Battle is not Yours, but God's

(II Chron. 20 : 15); that we have but to fight in this battle, but to stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord with us. Thus Joshua overcame Jericho, and David Goliath. True, "we wrestle not against flesh and blood," not "against equal foes," but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against wicked spirits in heavenly places; but the only armor with which we can either defend ourselves or attack our foes is "the whole armor of God."

The devil having found Jesus impregnable on the ground of physical need, and that He utterly refused to deliver Himself by leaving His position of dependence, changed his tactics. He taketh Him up into the Holy City, and setteth Him on a pinnacle of the temple, and saith unto Him, "If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down; for it is written, He shall give His angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they shall bear Thee up, lest Thou dash Thy foot against a stone. This will be an easy way of proving your Godhead without any more trouble." But Satan can only go as far as God permits him. It seems to us a strange thing that God should have permitted Satan to have such power over His own Son, as to bring Him up from the wilderness to Jerusalem, and place Him on the pinnacle, and that Jesus should know it was Satan Who Brought Him There.

Yet had it not been so, a part of the ground on which Satan tempts us would have been left, unoccupied and unconquered by Jesus. How we learn from this temptation that high places, positions of prominence, are sometimes given us by the enemy, that he may possess a vantage ground with regard to us! Satan here quoted Scripture himself, but he wiped out the words, "To keep Thee in all Thy ways." The doctrine of the Lord's keeping power is not to be found in Satan's edition of the Word of God. Jesus met the enemy again, with the Word, "It is written again, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Often, when sorely tempted, we are brought into a position we never thought could be possible, and the enemy lashes us into a sense of responsibility for what he has brought about, and which has not been our own doing. Wherever Jesus might be brought by the power of the enemy, there He stood, covered with the shield of faith, and wielding the Word of God; and thus as Man He conquered.

The last and crowning temptation followed: Again the enemy had power to take Jesus "up into an exceeding high mountain," and he "sheweth Him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; and saith unto Him, All these things will I give Thee if Thou wilt fall down and worship me." It is difficult to conceive how the enemy could have gone so far as to make such a suggestion; he implied, "The world is at Thy feet; I will withdraw; sin, sickness, sorrow, death will be no more; Thou wilt be a universal benefactor, known as such by all; only once fall down and worship me." The prospect of taking the venom out of the world in one moment would have seemed a grand one, did not the very humility of Jesus make it possible that he should worship Satan to obtain such a prize? Thank God, he did not look at the seeming prize. "What saith the Lord?" "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." This was enough for Jesus; He had conquered. On every ground the enemy had been met and overcome; and now, through Him, we may be "more than conquerors." The conquered devil left Him, "and, behold, angels came and ministered unto Him."

"I AM SO GLAD."

NOTE.—Among the many heathen souls brought to a knowledge of the truth through the labors of the missionaries in Tokio, Japan, was the venerable Mother Horinouchi, who had lived over eighty years in the darkness of heathenism. Great was the joy of this aged mother when she found peace in believing on the revealed Saviour of Sinners. The sa nted Dr. Krecker, writing an account of a baptismal and communion service, conducted by himself, soon after the conversion of this woman, closed with the following reference to her: "Truly it was a blessed day. Mother Horinouchi's heart especially was full, and she kept repeating over and over again, during the day, 'I am so glad! I am so glad!'"

Wandering and lone,
Lost, heart-sick, unknown
Weary and helpless, decrepit and old,
Out in the wilderness, far from the fold,
Late in the evening, night falling fast,
Lo, the Good Shepherd has found me at last!
Oh, I am so glad?
I am so glad!

Rescued at last,
Dear Saviour, at last!
Wonder of wonders! Oh, how can it be,
Jesus, the Shepherd, should think upon me!
Seek me, and take me to dwell in His fold,
A sinner, unworthy, and useless and old!
Oh, I am so glad!
I am so glad!

Burdens are gone!
My fears are all flown!
Past is the gloom of my heathenish night!
Bright is the dawn of Christ's marvelous light!
Raptured, I gaze in His beautiful face!
Oh, this is wonderful, wonderful grace!
Oh, I am so glad!
I am so glad!

Now I am blest,
My heart is at rest,
Peaceful and calm in the Spirit's control;
Life everlasting I feel in my soul!
Sweet is the sense of this favor divine!
Jesus and Heaven and all things are mine!
Oh, I am so glad!
I am so glad!

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form for general distribution at twenty-five cents per hundred.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of
J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner S t, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE

A new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents, by J. S. OGILVIE & CO., 31 Rose Street, New York.

CRYING BABIES

are made
GOOD NATURED, HEALTHY, HEARTY,
by the use of

Lactated Food

Babies do not cry if they are satisfied, and they cannot be satisfied if they are not properly nourished by their food, or if it produces irritation of stomach or bowels.

Very many mothers cannot properly nourish their children, and the milk of many mothers produces bad effects in the child because of constitutional disease or weakness.

For all such cases there is a remedy in

LACTATED FOOD.

Hundreds of physicians testify to its great value. It will be retained when even lime water and milk is rejected by the stomach, hence it is of great value to all invalids, in either chronic or acute cases.

150 MEALS for an infant for $1.00.

Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.
A valuable pamphlet sent on application.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

SEDGWICK STEEL WIRE FENCE.

The best Farm, Garden, Poultry Yard, Lawn, School Lot, Park and Cemetery Fences and Gates. Perfect Automatic Gate. Cheapest and Neatest Iron Fences. Iron and wire Summer Houses, Lawn Furniture, and other wire work. Best Wire Stretcher and Plier. Ask dealers in hardware, or address, SEDGWICK BROS., RICHMOND, IND.

MOTH-WAX.

Kills the Moth and the old Moth Miller.
It is a perfect protection of Furs and Woollen Fabrics, and is more economical to use than camphor.
In one-pound boxes containing a dozen cakes.
Agents wanted in every city, town and county.
For sale by all druggists.
WM. H. H. CHILDS, 73 MAIDEN LANE, N.Y.

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free. FOR OIL.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

Songs That Sing Themselves.

Not a shadow of doubt about the merits of Glad Hallelujahs, —SWENEY and KIRKPATRICK'S 1887 book. They say it's their best. It sings itself. It dispels gloom. The more you sing it the better you'll like it. Be sure not to select a book until you've examined Glad Hallelujahs.

By mail, 35 cents. By express (not prepaid), $3.60 per dozen; $30 per 100. One sample copy 25 cents.
Further inducements to Schools, Churches, and Evangelists. Write us.

T. T. TASKER, SR., PUBLISHER,
921 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA

AMERICAN MAGAZINE

NOW READY.

PARTIAL CONTENTS FOR AUG.:

ALONG THE CARIBBEAN (Venezuela). Illustrated. Dr. W. F. Hutchinson.
OLIVIA DELAPLAINE. Illustrated. Edgar Fawcett.
A FEW ENGLISH WAYSIDE BIRDS Illustrated. Theo. H. Mead.
THE SUPREME COURT. Illustrated. Z. L. White.
THE GHOST OF AARON'S PRONG. Tobe Hodge.
A SOUTH CAROLINA VILLAGE. Lee C. Harby.
A REMARKABLE PAIR OF PANTALOONS. Caleb Forsythe.
VILLAGE TYPES. Julian Hawthorne.
OUR LEGEND (E Pluribus Unum) —Poem. Maurice Thompson.
A NEW ERA IN EDUCATION. Col. I. Edwards Clarke.
GREENMOUNT GRAVES. Cyrus Field Willard.
A SERENADE. (Poem.) Clinton Scollard.
SUGGESTIONS FOR AUGUST. By a Physician of experience.

R. T. BUSH & SON,
Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N.Y.

"FLORIDA; Its Advantages and Drawbacks." For the above book or free information, address O. M. CROSBY, the author, 76 Park Place, N. Y.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

REPUTABLE BECAUSE RELIABLE.

All people of Dyspeptic ways
Should learn to lengthen out their days.
When Indigestion makes a call,
Or Constipation, worse than all,
Makes life a burden, bear in mind,
In TARRANT'S SELTZER health you'll find.

Day's Neuralgia Cure.

A Positive Cure for all forms. No more need of suffering. Send for descriptive circulars.
WALTER L. DAY, 23 West 12th St., N. Y.

Ladies' Fancy Work

Ladies' Fancy Work. New Edition. Revised and Enlarged.

A NEW BOOK, giving designs and plain directions for Artistic Embroidery, Lace Work, Knitting, Tatting, Crochet Work, Net Work, Kensington Painting, Wax Flowers, Painting on Silk, and all kinds of fancy Needle-work. This VALUABLE BOOK is printed on fine tinted paper, has a handsome cover, and contains over

Edited by Jenny June.

700 Illustrations

Comprising designs for Monograms, Initials, Knit Edgings, Cross Stitch Patterns, Point Russe, Berlin and Shetland Wool designs, Applique designs, Kate Greenaway designs for Doyleys, etc., Handkerchief Borders, Macrame Lace work, Holbein work, Java Canvas work, Worsted Fringes, Turkish Rugs, Toilet Cushions, Footstools, Hat Racks, Pin Cushions, Ottomans, Work Baskets, Pen Wipers, Bed-Quilts, Lambrequins, Work Bags, Book Covers, Wood Boxes, Door Panels, Scrap Baskets, Sofa Coverlets, Toilet Bottle Cases, Table Top Patterns, Folding Screens, Church Font Decorations, Sofa Cushions, Music Portfollos, Slipper Patterns, Persian Rugs, Wall Pockets, Carriage Rugs, Chair back Covers, Towel Racks, Perfume Sachets, Tidy Designs, Flower Pot Covers, Lamp Shades, Needle Cases, Watch Cases, Fancy Work Bags, Catch-alls, Match Safes Eye-Glass Pockets, Collar Boxes, Chair Bolsters, Umbrella Cases, School Bags, Patch-work Designs, Coin Purses, Designs for Tricot and Burlaps, Wood Baskets, Commodes, Bibs, Glove Cases, Air Castles, Gypsy Tables, Hair Receivers, Paper Weights, Table Mats, Night-dress Cases, Shoe Bags, Needle Books, Jewel Boxes, Door Mats, Knitted Jackets, Bottle Cases, Paper Racks, Pillow Shams, Hair Pin Holders, Floss Winders, Mosaic Window Shades, Book Marks, and every design in fancy work a lady can desire, to the number of over 700.

Every lady will find this book a useful companion and invaluable to all who love fancy work. Plain directions with each design.

Jenny June, in her preface to this book, says: "The present volume does not pretend to furnish the theory or practice of the highest Needle-work art, but it does aim to supply within its compass a greater variety of excellent designs—every one of which is useful for dress or household decoration—than have ever before been gathered within the leaves of one manual."

Price, postpaid, 50 cents. Five books for $2.00. Get four friends to send with you and get your book free. Stamps taken. Address J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York,

JAMES McCREERY & CO.

INVITE PARTICULAR ATTENTION TO THEIR GOODS SUITABLE FOR SUMMER VACATION WEAR. THE POPULAR KNITTED TUXEDO SUIT FOR LADIES, MISSES AND CHILDREN HAS NO EQUAL; IT IS LIGHT IN WEIGHT, FASHIONED FOR COMFORT, AND ADAPTED FOR THE SEA-SHORE, YACHTING AND LAWN TENNIS. IT CONSISTS OF A SKIRT, BLOUSE, CAP AND SASH, COMPLETE AND READY TO PUT ON WHEN DELIVERED TO THE CUSTOMER.

FOR MEN AND BOYS THERE IS A VERY LARGE ASSORTMENT OF THE FAMOUS MACKENZIE FLANNEL NEGLIGE SHIRTS, AS WELL AS MANY OTHER KINDS OF WHITE AND COLORED FLANNEL SHIRTS AND WAISTS.

BROADWAY, AND ELEVENTH ST.
New York.

Bridal Trousseaux.

Ladies who are unable to examine our stock of these goods personally would find it to their advantage to correspond with us. The most complete information furnished, and careful attention given to special orders.

Lord & Taylor

Broadway & 20th Street, N. Y.

Palmer's Book of Gems.
FOR THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

111 Songs, with music, many of them new. The old favorites are gems of a high order, select d by H. R. PALMER, Mus. Doc., and 200 S. S. Superintendents.
Price $10 per 100 Copies. Single Copies by Mail, 12c

BIGLOW & MAIN, New York & Chicago.

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World. $35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut-5 Octaves-Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for $35 TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859.
MARCHAL & SMITH,
285 East 21st Street, New York.

Facts Stranger than Fiction

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

The Wonders of Prayer.

A BOOK OF WELL AUTHENTICATED AND WONDERFUL ANSWERS TO PRAYER, AS NARRATED BY

D. L. Moody,	W. W. Patton, D. D.,
C. H. Spurgeon,	Chas. Cullis, D.D.,
Newman Hall, D.D.,	S. I. Prime, D.D.,
Bishop T. Bowman,	Bishop Simpson,
Chas. G. Finney,	F. Krummacher,
George Muller,	Martin Luther,
Abraham Lincoln,	John Knox,

And hosts of others.

New Edition. Revised by Maj. D. W. Whittle.
12mo, Handsome cloth binding. Price, $1.00.

To a greater extent than any other book, and in an extraordinary recital of facts and interesting incidents, it fully answers that all-important question, "DOES GOD ANSWER PRAYER?"

It also shows that the promises of the Bible are absolutely true, and faithfully fulfilled in the daily lives of those who are constantly trusting in the Lord, and ask His help in their daily anxieties and experiences. It is a book of great comfort and encouragement to Christians, in their doubt, fear, sorrow, or trouble, to trust Him more fully in faith, and shows how He who delivered others in times of distress, peril, or solicitude, can hear and deliver them also.

To those who are not Christians, it is a record of undoubted facts from the experiences of individuals now living, proving the real existence and power of God, in controlling circumstances, directing human wills, and all things of earth, showing His nearness and power in daily events of life, and demonstrating that He is not a distant Creator, but ever near at hand.

This book should be in every Christian home, it is invaluable to all Sabbath-school teachers and scholars. It should be given to every child, for it contains pure and healthful instruction to encourage the faith of every one, and aims to lead all to come with more willing minds to learn of the Great Comforter.
Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, - - New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at 63 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 30. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, JULY 28, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF QUEEN VICTORIA in 1837 and 1887, with Picture of the Children's Jubilee Fete.

THE COMING SERMON. A Vacation Discourse by Dr. Talmage.

WHAT MAY HAPPEN TO THE HOLY LAND IN 1889. By Rev. M. Baxter.

An Encouraged Colporteur—Little Sufferers in China—Jews in Palestine, etc.

LOVING PERSUASION. Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's New Sermon.

PORTRAIT OF Dr. CELMAN, President of the Argentine Republic.

PICTURE OF A SERVICE IN BECHUANALAND.

DAVIE'S ESCAPE FROM SAVAGES. (With Illustration).

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN.

JESUS IN GALILEE. By Mrs. M Baxter.

Queen Victoria in 1837 and 1887—The London Children's Jubilee Fete.

ANECDOTES OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

The two portraits of Queen Victoria, on the first page, represent Her Majesty respectively at the age of eighteen, when she commenced her reign, and at sixty-eight, when she celebrated her jubilee. As we have already, in the issue of June 23, given a brief sketch of her life, it is unnecessary to repeat the narrative here. We may, however, relate a few anecdotes which the jubilee celebrations have brought into new publicity.

A Statesman Reproved.

In the first year of her reign a member of the Cabinet went on public business to Windsor, where the Queen was staying. He arrived late on Saturday night, and informed the Queen that he had brought down some documents of great importance for her inspection, but as they would require to be examined in detail, he would not encroach on Her Majesty's time that night, but would request her attention the next morning. "To-morrow is Sunday, my lord," said the Queen. "True, your Majesty, but business of the State will not admit of delay." The Queen said she should attend Divine service in the morning, after which she would receive the statesman. He also was present at the service, as courtesy required, and was somewhat surprised that the subject of the sermon was the duties and obligations of the Christian Sabbath. "How did your lordship like the sermon?" asked the Queen, on their return from church. "Very much, indeed, your Majesty," was the reply. "Well, then," said the Queen, "I will not conceal from you that last night I sent the clergyman the text from which he preached; I hope we shall all be improved by the sermon."

Sunday passed over without another word being said about the State papers, until at night, when the party was breaking up, the Queen said to the nobleman, "To-morrow morning, my lord, at any hour you please; as early as seven, if you like, we will look into the papers." His lordship said he would not think of intruding upon Her Majesty as early as that, and he thought nine o'clock would be early enough. "No, no, my lord," said the Queen, "as the papers are of importance I should like them to be attended to very early; however, if you wish it to be nine, be it so." Accordingly, at nine o'clock next morning the Queen was in readiness to confer with him about his papers.

The First Death Warrant.

It was at this time the monarch's personal duty to sign all death warrants. The Duke of Wellington once brought the Queen a court-martial death warrant to sign. Miss Greenwood tells us that "she shrank from the dreadful task," and, with tears in her eyes, asked, "Have you nothing to say on behalf of this man?" "Nothing; he has deserted three times," replied the Iron Duke. "Oh, your Grace, think again!" "Well, your Majesty, he certainly is a bad soldier, but there was somebody who spoke as to his good character. He may be a good fellow in private life." "Oh, thank you!" exclaimed the Queen, as she dashed off the word "Pardoned," on the awful parchment, and beneath wrote her signature.

The Queen at a Fire.

An incident occurred during the building of the house occupied by the Queen at Balmoral, in Scotland, which serves as an illustration of the kind consideration displayed by her and Prince Albert towards their employees. A fire broke out, and the workshops were all burnt. Whilst the fire was raging, the Prince took an active part in assisting to stay its progress, taking his place in the long line of workmen that stretched from the river to the burning shops, handing buckets of water from hand to hand. The Queen also was present, and with smiles and kind words cheered the workers. When all was over, it came out that a considerable sum of money saved from their earnings by the workmen had been in their chests at the time of the fire and had been destroyed. On learning this fact, the Queen had the entire sum restored to the losers, and in performing this kindness she took the opportunity to express the sympathizing interest which she felt in the welfare of themselves and their families.

A Deputy Governess.

The daughter of a deceased Scottish clergyman was engaged as governess to the royal children. During her first year at Windsor her mother was taken seriously ill, and feeling that her right place was by her mother's bedside, the young lady wished to resign her situation. But to this proposal the Queen would not listen for a moment. She tenderly bade the young lady go home, stay with her mother as long as might be necessary, and then return. "In the meantime," said Her Majesty, "the Prince and I will hear the children's lessons; so in any case let your mind be at rest."

For several weeks the governess watched and ministered by the bedside of her dying mother, and then had to lay her beneath the churchyard sod. She resumed her duties in the Palace. The Queen sympathized with the deep sorrow of the young woman, and with kind, womanly tenderness, strove to alleviate it. Every day the schoolroom was visited by Her Majesty, and the young pupils, following the example of their mother, were less willful than usual. A year passed away, and the first anniversary of her great loss came upon the governess, who, in the midst of that great household, could scarcely bear up against her feeling of lonely bereavement. The day's duties began that morning as usual by the reading of a portion of Scripture in the schoolroom. As she read, some words of divine tenderness touched the poor, grieving heart so keenly, that in a moment her strength gave way, and laying her head upon the desk before her, she burst into tears, saying, "Oh! mother, mother!"

The children quietly passed from the room to tell their mother what had occurred. It all at once flashed across the Queen's mind that this day was the anniversary of the poor girl's bereavement. Her Majesty at once went to the schoolroom to comfort the stricken heart. "My poor child," she said, "I am sorry the children disturbed you this morning; I meant to have given orders that you should have this day entirely to yourself. Take it as a sad and sacred holiday—I will hear the lessons of the children." And then she added, "To show you that I have not forgotten this mournful anniversary, I bring you this gift." With these words the Queen clasped upon the arm of the governess a beautiful mourning bracelet, with a locket for her mother's hair, marked with the date of her mother's death.

Intercession for Christians.

It was a kindly thought of Queen Victoria, when the draft treaty arranging for peace and commerce between England and Madagascar was sent out, to write on the margin, "Queen Victoria asks, as a personal favor to herself, that the Queen of Madagascar will allow no persecution of the Christians." The word spoken in season was not without its effect, for in the treaty sent back and signed a short time afterwards the words occur, "In accordance with the wish of Queen Victoria, the Queen of Madagascar engages that there shall be no persecution of the Christians in Madagascar."

The Queen and the Quaker.

That Her Majesty is keenly alive to public opinion and is deeply grateful for sympathy, an incident in which John Bright is concerned is an evidence. In 1868 John Bright, who is a member of the Society of Friends, consented to take office under Mr. Gladstone. There were many speculations as to how he would manage with his principles at the Court ceremonies of installation, when it is the custom for the office-holders to array themselves in a ridiculous livery of blue and silver embroidery and go through a humiliating ceremony, known as kissing hands. When the Queen learned that John Bright was appointed, she solved any difficulty he might have by intimating to him that in his case she would dispense with both livery and ceremony, and took occasion to say that she desired to meet him, that she might thank him for an act of kindness which he had done her.

When Mr. Bright presented himself, he was reminded of a speech which he had made and forgotten, but which the Queen remembered. It was at a public meeting, when one of the speakers remarked that the Queen had lost sympathy with her people, being selfishly absorbed in her protracted grief at the loss of her husband. John Bright, in reply, made the speech which won him the Queen's lifelong respect. He said: I am not accustomed to stand up in defense of those who are possessors of crowns. But I could not sit here and hear that observation without a sensation of wonder and of pain. I think there has been, by many persons, a great injustice done to the Queen in reference to her desolate and widowed position. And I venture to say this: that a woman, be she Queen of a great realm or be she the wife of one of your laboring men, who can keep alive in her heart a great sorrow for the lost object of her life and affection, is not at all likely to be wanting in a great and generous sympathy with you.

The Message to Mrs. Garfield

on the occasion of President's Garfield's death will never be forgotten in America. It was the message of the widow, rather than of the Queen, directing the newly made widow to a proved source of comfort. On hearing that the long suspense was over and the President dead, the Queen cabled to Mrs. Garfield: "Words cannot express the deep sympathy I feel with you in this terrible moment. May God comfort and support you as He alone can." She also wrote, not through a secretary, but in her own handwriting, a sympathizing letter to Mrs. Garfield, as she had done sixteen years before to Mrs. Lincoln.

THE CHILDREN'S JUBILEE FETE.

Among the various ways in which Queen Victoria's Jubilee was celebrated, none were more interesting and appropriate than the common school children's party, in Hyde Park, London on June 22, a picture of which appears on the first page. The project of this celebration originated with the proprietor of a London daily journal — Mr. Edwin Lawson, of the Daily Telegraph — who opened a subscription list for the purpose with a large contribution.

It would be hard to conceive any form of enjoyment more calculated to impress upon youthful minds the exceptional circumstances of the Jubilee than this memorable entertainment. Even if it had not been graced by the presence of Her Majesty and of the members of her family, the occasion would probably never have slipped from the memory of any child who shared in but as the little ones were not only entertained on a scale which must have surprised the most imaginative of them, but were honored by a visit from the sovereign herself, it is likely to remain for ever indelibly fixed on their minds.

The Day's Amusements,

The playground for the children was a large level area bounded by trees and the drive, and on this expanse of turf about 26,000 children disported themselves from noon till eve. All were in the highest spirits, and all behaved as well as their best friends could wish. The amusements provided were multifarious and varied, and supplemented by impromptu additions, which gave scope for physical exercise. The day was lovely and not oppressively hot. With such conditions, what wonder that the children enjoyed themselves?

The first business, after the arrival of the children, was to feed them, and they were accordingly marched to the part of the grounds where ten large tents were set up. A large number of ladies and gentlemen had volunteered their assistance in distributing the food. The ten marquees were presided over respectively by the Duchess of Manchester, the Duchess of Abercorn, the Countess of Rosebery, the Duchess of Westminster, Mrs. Rawson, Countess Spencer, Lady Rothschild, the Countess of Lathom, Lady Randolph Churchill and Lady Hayter, each helped by eleven other ladies and twelve gentlemen. On arriving at the Park, the children were conducted to these tents in bodies of two hundred and fifty; and each child was supplied with a cup of milk, lemonade or ginger-beer, and a bag containing a meat-pie, a square of cake, a bun and an orange, which they passed out of the tent to consume.

Provision had also been made for amusement by various games, and the presentation of skipping ropes, with "Jubilee handles," to the girls, and a variety of articles esteemed by boys to the male members of the party. Each child also received a silver-plated Jubilee medal, bearing the portrait of the Queen in 1837 on one side and a portrait of her in 1887 on the other. While the fun and merriment were at their height of Wales, with their three daughters, unexpectedly paid a visit to the grounds. Their arrival was not generally known, which was exactly what the royal party desired. They made a tour of the grounds, observing the enjoyment of the children, and then went to the tents, and the princesses assisted in distributing memorial cups to the children. Other royal personages soon arrived, and joined the Prince's party, the children cheering lustily as they drove past. The Crown Prince of Germany was recognized and duly acclaimed, and the Duke of Cambridge, as he rode by, was also the object of the children's plaudits. The King of Greece, the King of Denmark, the Duke of Sparta, Prince William of Prussia, the Grand Duke of Hesse, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and other princely personages were each in turn the object of the children's wonder. When the time approached for the children were gathered on the edge of her route in excited expectation. At last the appearance of a dozen mounted constables trotting up the roadway betokened the coming of the Queen. First came a party of Life Guards, with their flashing breastplates and plume-crested helmets, and then the escort of Indian princes, whose swarthy faces and stolid demeanor, and the strange beauty of their uniforms, made a deep impression on the youthful spectators. The royal carriages, which were immediately preceded by outriders in scarlet, were all open, and some were drawn by four horses. To complete the picture—for such it was—several of the royal princes appeared in uniform, Prince Albert Victor being in the dress of his regiment, the Duke of Edinburgh in that of a naval officer, and the Duke of Connaught wearing a major-general's uniform. Then came the Queen's carriage, and the Queen herself. In the same carriage with the Queen were the Duke of Edinburgh and the Crown Princess of Germany. In the carriages following were Princess Christian, the Duchess of Connaught, and other daughters and daughters-in-law of Her Majesty. The Queen's carriage was stopped, and Miss Lawson, on behalf of the children of the London Board and Voluntary schools, presented a bouquet of orchids, and the Prince of Wales then led up to the carriage named Florence Dunn, to whom Her Majesty gave one of the memorial cups. The Prince explained that the child had been chosen for presentation to the Queen because she had never missed a single attendance during the seven years which she had passed at school. The Queen said a few kindly words to her and gave her one of the mugs. The Royal procession remained stationary a few moments longer while a verse of the "Old Hundredth" was sung by the children, and then resumed its progress.

The Prince and Princess

Her Majesty's Visit

A Little Girl

The Prince and Princess of Wales and the Royal guests took their departure shortly afterwards, and the children then returned to the tents, where simple refreshments were again served out. Their red-letter day had come to an end, as even the best things must.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

An Amputation Necessary.—Mr. Murray, related at a Gospel meeting: "A friend of mine met with a serious accident, in which one of his limbs was injured, and though every remedy was tried, he could not be cured. The part became mortally diseased, and the doctors thought that it must be amputated; but the gentleman could not think of that, and would not allow the operation until it became evident that he must either part with his limb or lose his life. Then he reluctantly consented. So is it frequently with sinners, their sin is sweet and they are unwilling to part with it."

Christ as Managing Partner.—An Evangelist remarks: "The other night I had to make a business call, and after transacting our business my friend and I sat talking, when my companion suddenly turned round and said, 'Do you know that I am a converted Methodist? I was suprised at the suddenness of the statement, for it is so seldom one finds a man, when engaged in his worldly business, so ready to testify for his Master. 'Yes,' he continued, 'and both the partners; in fact the whole business is given over to the Lord, and we ask Him to guide and direct our temporal affairs as well as our spiritual, and He does it, as we all can bear witness.' How many, I wonder, take the Lord Jesus into their business? Do they not too often leave Him at the office door?"

A Long Search Ended.—"About Ten Years ago I met a man who was terribly anxious about his soul. He said he had been so for years, and was earnestly seeking salvation. 'Well,' I said to him, 'I think it is about time you stopped seeking for salvation, and took it. God has already done the seeking, and has found you, and stands at the door of your heart offering you salvation, and all you have to do is to accept it.' This seemed to shed new light upon the way, and he saw that all that was needed was a simple child-like trust. Both of us got down on our knees, and there he took Christ as his Saviour. Next night he got up in the meeting and testified that while for years he had been seeking Christ, in reality he had been wandering from him. But he had found out his mistake, and he had stood still, and let the Lord, who was seeking him, take him, and that now he reposed safe in the arms of the Good Shepherd."

The Dying Officer's Joy.—There Were in one of the regiments engaged in the Crimean war two officers, very great friends, one of whom had been married only eight days before being ordered on active service. He had to leave his young wife, and accompany his regiment to the seat of war. Both these officers served through the greater part of the war uninjured, and it seemed as if God was going to permit their return to their native country in safety; but at the storming of the Redan, one of them, the married one, fell. His brother officer, hastening to his fallen friend, examined the wound, and saw, with dismay, that it was fatal. He did what he could for his friend, comforting him, and receiving his messages to absent ones, but that was all he could do! His friend died, but what surprised him most was that this friend to whom life must have been most precious, and death which was to separate him from his beloved wife, peculiarly melancholy, was actually rejoicing at the thought of going to be with Christ. "It is far better," were the last words he spoke.

A Good Night's Work.—Mr. Richard Weaver says: "At the close of a meeting which I held some time ago, a gentleman, with his two little girls, waited to speak to me. He was a man of independent means, but a complete slave to drink, and spent his whole income in trying to satisfy that insatiable thirst, leaving his children to be supported by their mother, who, fortunately, was also possessed of private means. At that time he was just recovering from a prolonged drinking bout, and, seeing the misery he was causing, he longed, in some way or other, to be saved from his cruel taskmaster—drink. As I spoke to him, the tears rolled down his cheeks, and he asked if Christ could save him from the power of drink. 'Yes,' I said, if you go to Him. I directed him to the inquiry-room, where his wife then was. When the Scriptures had been opened to him, the Spirit of God gave him understanding, and he was enabled to cast all his troubles and cares upon Christ. Nor did he enter the kingdom alone; his wife and children also found peace in Jesus that night. Two weeks afterwards his wife testified as follows. 'Two Sabbaths ago I came into this hall and found my Saviour. Before I entered I was so dejected and heart-broken that I thought of taking my two children and drowning them and myself, but God, in His tender mercy, saved me from such a crime, and I, with my husband and children, are all resting in Him.'"

A Story of Two Farmers.—Mr. Weaver remarks: "I will tell you of two farmers, both of whom where professed Christians and servants of the living God. Both of them after their seed was sown went over their fields and prayed God to bless the seed, and make it to multiply; but the one contented himself with this, and did not trouble to fence his fields properly, nor to drain and manure the soil. The result was that the ground got poor and starved, not having enough nourishment to support even the scanty crop which appeared above its surface. But the other farmer not only prayed, but worked; he was in his field morning, noon, and night tending his crops. When the autumn came, his was no stunted harvest, for his fields were covered with golden-corn, and the rustle of well-filled ears, as the wind played among it, was as music to his ear, telling him of the just reward of his labors. We should work as well as pray, looking all our troubles bravely in the face, and in God's strength using the means within our reach."

The Secret of Mary's Endurance.—"A Young girl came to town as a servant. She obtained a situation in a house where the servants were treated, not cruelly, but in such a cross and fretful manner that the mistress was unable to keep them long, for they generally left very soon, not being able to bear their mistress' treatment. But, as one of the young ladies noticed, nothing seemed to ruffle this new servant's temper; she went about her work cheerfully and happily, and the young lady began to realize that this servant girl surely had something which she herself had not. About that time there were evangelistic meetings proceeding in the neighborhood, and to them the young lady went, seeking for the secret of Mary's endurance, and very speedily she found it in the Lord Jesus Christ, and that not only had He the power to save to the uttermost, but also to preserve and bless in all the little things and circumstances of daily life. Living to please Christ, fortified by the remembrance of His beautiful and patient example, is the secret of true happiness and peace in the conflicts of our experiences."

The Master-Key of the Estate.—"A Gentleman on a visit to a friend in the North of England, was being shown over his friend's house and extensive grounds. But what struck him most was, that the master of the house opened his garden gate with one key, and having seen through it, he opened the stable door with the same key. The vinery also was opened by means of the same key, and on returning to the house it was still the same key that was used. The visitor, surprised at seeing only the one key used, said to his host, 'Surely you are not doing a very safe or wise thing in having the same key for all these different places? Are you not afraid of finding your stableman in the garden, or your coachman in the house?' 'Oh, no,' he said, smiling, 'there is no fear of that; they have all different keys, but I have the master-key.' So it is among Christians. There are different denominations, apparently differing from each other, yet as they rely for salvation upon the finished work of Christ alone, they all belong to Him, and He has the master-key, which opens all their hearts that He may enter in and bless them with His presence."

THE COMING SERMON.

Dr. Talmage's Third Vacation Sermon.

"Or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation."—Rom. 12: 7, 8.

The Need of a Change—Antiquated Sermons Not Adapted to the Age—The Preacher Not Yet Revealed—Characteristics of the Sermon—I. Full of a Living Christ—A Dying Newsboy—The Smiling Face of a Dead Engineer—A German Sculptor's Child Critic—II. Will be Short—The Death of Eutychus a Warning to Preachers—III. A Popular Sermon—Easily Understood—Practical and Sympathetic—An Oriental Legend—Why People do not go to Church—Ecclesiastical Mummies—IV. An Awakening Sermon—V. An Everyday Sermon—VI. A Reported Sermon—A Dying Christian's Watch.

BEFORE the world is converted the style of religious discourse will have to be converted. You might as well go into the modern Sedan or Gettysburg with bows and arrows, instead of rifles and bombshells and parks of artillery, as to expect to conquer this world for God by the old styles of exhortation and sermonology. Jonathan Edwards preached the sermons most adapted to the age in which he lived, but if those sermons were preached now they would divide an audience into two classes—those sound asleep and those wanting to go home.

But there is a discourse of the future—

Who Will Preach It

I have no idea; in what part of the earth it will be born I have no idea; in which denominations of Christians it will be delivered I cannot guess. That discourse or exhortation may be born in the country meeting-house on the banks of the St. Lawrence, or the Oregon, or the Ohio, or the Tombigbee, or the Alabama. The person who shall deliver it may this moment be in a cradle under the shadow of the Sierra Nevadas, or in a New England farm-house, or amid the rice-fields of Southern savannas. Or this moment there may be some young man in some of our theological seminaries, in the junior, or middle, or senior class, shaping that weapon of power. Or there may be coming some new baptism of the Holy Ghost on the churches, so that some of us who now stand in the watch-towers of Zion, waking to a realization of our present inefficiency, may preach it ourselves. That coming discourse may not be fifty years off. And let us pray God that its arrival may be hastened, while I announce to you what I think will be of that discourse or exhortation when it does arrive, and I want to make the remarks of the morning appropriate and suggestive to all classes of Christian workers.

The Chief Characteristics

First of all, I remark that that future religious discourse will be full of a living Christ, in contradistinction to didactic technicalities. A discourse may be full of Christ though hardly mentioning His name, and a sermon may be empty of Christ while every sentence is repetitious of His titles. The world wants a living Christ, not a Christ standing at the head of a formal system of theology, but a Christ who means pardon, and sympathy, and condolence, and brotherhood, and life, and heaven. A poor man's Christ. A rich man's Christ. An overworked man's Christ. An invalid's Christ. A farmer's Christ. A merchant's Christ. An artisan's Christ. An every man's Christ.

A symmetrical and fine-worded system of theology is well enough for theological classes, but it has no more business in a pulpit than have the technical phrases of an anatomist or a psychologist or a physician in the sick-room of a patient. The world wants help, immediate and world-uplifting, and it will come through a discourse in which Christ shall walk right down into the immortal soul and take everlasting possession of it, filling it as full of light as is this noonday firmament.

That sermon or exhortation of the future will not deal with men in the threadbare illustrations of Jesus Christ. In that coming address there will be instances of vicarious suffering taken right out of every-day life, for there is not a day somebody is not dying for others. As the physician saving his diphtheritic patient by sacrificing his own life; as the ship captain going down with his vessel, while he is getting his passengers into the life-boat; as the fireman consuming in the burning building while he is taking a child out of a fourth-story window; as in summer the strong swimmer at East Hampton, or Long Branch, or Cape May, or Lake George, himself perished trying to rescue the drowning; as the newspaper boy one summer, supporting his mother for some years, his invalid mother, when offered by a gentleman fifty cents to get some especial paper, and he got it, and rushed up in his anxiety to deliver it, and was crushed under the wheels of the train, and lay on the grass with only strength enough to say: "Oh, what will become of my poor, sick mother now!"

Vicarious Suffering.

The world is full of it. An engineer said to me on a locomotive in Dakota: "We men seem to be coming to better appreciation than we used to. Did you see that account the other day of an engineer who, to save his passengers, stuck to his place, and when he was found dead in the locomotive, which was upside down, he was found still smiling, his hand on the air-brake?" And as the engineer said it to me, he put his hand on the air-brake to illustrate his meaning, and I looked at him and thought: "You would be just as much of a hero in the same crisis." Oh, in that religious discourse of the future there will be taken out from every-day life of vicarious suffering—illustrations that will bring to mind the ghastlier sacrifice of Him, who in the high places of the field, on the cross, fought our battles, and endured our struggle, and died our death.

Living Illustrations

A German sculptor made an image of Christ, and he asked his little child, two years old, who it was, and she said: "That must be some very great man." The sculptor was displeased with the criticism, so he got another block of marble, and chiseled away on it two or three years, and then he brought in his little child, four or five years of age, and he said to her: "Who do you think that is?" She said: "That must be the One who took little children in His arms and blessed them." Then the sculptor was satisfied. Oh, my friends, what the world wants is not a cold Christ, not an intellectual Christ, not a severely magisterial Christ, but a loving Christ, spreading out His arms of sympathy to press the whole world to His loving heart.

But, I remark again, that the religious discourse of the future

Will be Short.

Condensation is demanded by the age in which we live. No more need of long introductions and long applications, and so many divisions to a discourse that it may be said to be hydra-headed. In other days men got all their information from the pulpit. There were few books, and there were no newspapers, and there was little travel from place to place, and people would sit and listen two and a half hours to a religious discourse, and "seventeenthly" would find them fresh and chipper. In those days there was enough time for a man to take an hour to warm himself up to the subject and an hour to cool off. But what was a necessity then is a superfluity now. Congregations are full of knowledge from books, from newspapers, from rapid and continuous intercommunication, and long disquisitions of what they know already will not be abided. If a religious teacher cannot compress what he wishes to say to the people in the space of forty-five minutes, better adjourn it to some other day.

The trouble is we preach audiences into a Christian frame, and then we preach them out of it. We forget that every auditor has so much capacity of attention, and when that is exhausted he is restless. That accident on the Long Island Railroad, some years ago, came from the fact that the brakes were out of order, and when they wanted to stop the train they could not stop, and hence the casualty was terrific. In all religious discourse we want locomotive power and propulsion. We want at the same time stout brakes to let down at the right instant. It is a dismal thing, after a hearer has comprehended the whole subject, to hear a man say: "Now to recapitulate," and "a few words by way of application," and "once more," and "finally," and "now to conclude."

Paul preached until midnight, and Eutychus got sound asleep and fell out of a window and broke his neck. Some would say: "Good for him." I would rather be sympathetic, like Paul, and resuscitate him. That accident is often quoted now in religious circles as a warning against somnolence in church. It is just as much against prolixity. Eutychus was wrong in his somnolence, but Paul made a mistake when he kept on until midnight. He ought to have stopped at eleven o'clock, and there would have been no accident. If Paul might have gone on to too great length, let all those of us who are now preaching the Gospel remember that there is a limit to religious discourse, or ought to be, and that in our time we have no apostolic power of miracles.

A Warning to Ministers

Napoleon in an address of seven minutes thrilled his army and thrilled Europe. Christ's Sermon on the Mount, the model sermon, was less than eighteen minutes long at ordinary mode of delivery. It is not electricity scattered all over the sky that strikes, but electricity gathered into a thunderbolt and hurled, and it is not religious truth scattered over, spread out over a vast reach of time, but religious truth projected in compact form that flashes light upon the soul and rives its indifference.

When the religious discourse of the future arrives in this land and in the Christian church, the discourse which is to arouse the world and startle the nations, and usher in the kingdom, it will be a brief discourse. Hear it, all theological students, all ye just entering upon religious work, all ye men and women who in Sabbath-schools and other departments are toiling for Christ and the salvation of immortals Brevity! Brevity!

But I remark also, that the religious discourse of the future of which I speak will be

A Popular Discourse.

There are those in these times who speak of a popular sermon as though there must be something wrong about it. As these critics are dull themselves, the world gets the impression that a sermon is good in proportion as it is stupid. Christ was the most popular preacher the world ever saw, and, considering the small number of the world's population, had the largest audience ever gathered. He never preached anywhere without making a great sensation. People rushed out in the wilderness to hear Him, reckless of their physical necessities. So great was their anxiety to hear Christ, that, taking no food with them, they would have fainted and starved had not Christ performed a miracle and fed them.

Why did so many people take the truth at Christ's hands? Because they.

All Understood it.

He illustrated His subject by a hen and her chickens, by a bushel measure, by a handful of salt, by a bird's flight and by a lily's aroma. All the people knew what He meant and they flocked to Him. And when the religious discourse of the future appears, it will not be Princetonian, not Rochesterian, not Andoverian, not Middletonian, but Olivetic—plain, practical, unique, earnest, comprehensive of all the woes, wants, sins and sorrows of an auditory.

But when that exhortation or discourse does come there will be a thousand gleaming scimetars to charge on it. There are in so many theological seminaries professors telling young men how to preach, themselves not knowing how, and I am told that if a young man in some of our theological seminaries says anything quaint or thrilling or unique, faculty and students fly at him and set him right, and straighten him out, and smooth him down, and chop him off, until he says everything just as everybody else says it.

Oh, when the future religious discourse of the Christian church arrives, all the churches of Christ in our great cities will be thronged. The world wants spiritual help. All who have buried their dead want comfort. All know themselves to be mortal and to be immortal, and they want to hear about the great future. I tell you, my friends, if the people of our great cities who have had trouble only thought they could get help in the Christian church, there would not be a street in New York or Brooklyn or Chicago or Charleston or Philadelphia or Boston which would be passable on the Sabbath day if there were a church on it: for all the people would press to that asylum of mercy, that great house of comfort and consolation.

Practical and Sympathetic

A mother with a dead babe in her arms came to the God Veda, and asked to have her child restored to life. The God Veda said to her: "You go and get a handful of mustard seed from a house in which there has been no sorrow, and in which there has been no death, and I will restore your child to life." So the mother went out, and she went from house to house, and from home to home, looking for a place where there had been no sorrow, and where there had been no death, but she found none. She went back to the god Veda and said: "My mission is a failure; you see I haven't brought the mustard seed; I can't find a place where there has been no sorrow and no death." "Oh," says the god Veda, "understand, your sorrows are no worse than the sorrows of others; we all have our griefs, and all have our heart-breaks."

Laugh and the world laughs with you,
Weep, and you weep alone;
For the sad old earth must borrow its mirth.
But has trouble enough of its own.

We hear a great deal of discussion now all over the land about

Why People Do not go to Church.

Some say it is because Christianity is dying out, and because people do not believe in the truth of God's word, and all that. They are false reasons. The reason is because our sermons and exhortations are not interesting and practical and helpful. Some one might as well tell the whole truth on this subject, and so I will tell it. The religious discourse of the future, the Gospel sermon to come forth and shake the nations and lift people out of darkness, will be a popular sermon, just for the simple reason that it will meet the woes and the wants and the anxieties of the people.

There are in all our denominations sitting around to frown upon the fresh young pulpits of America, to try to awe them down, to cry out: "Tut! tut! tut! Sensational!" They stand to-day preaching in churches that hold a thousand people, and there are a hunderd persons present, and if they cannot have the world saved in their way it seems as if they do not want it saved at all.

Ecclesiastical Mummies

I do not know but the old way of making ministers of the Gospel is better—a collegiate education and an apprenticeship under the care and home attention of some earnest, aged Christian minister, the young man getting the patriarch's spirit and assisting him in his religious service. Young lawyers study with old lawyers, young physicians with old physicians, and I believe it would be a great help if every young man studying for the Gospel ministry could put himself in the home, and heart, and sympathy, and under the benediction and perpetual presence of a Christian minister.

But I remark again, the religious discourse of the future will be An Awakening Sermon.

From altar rail to the front door step, under that sermon an audience will get up and start for heaven. There will be in it many a staccato passage. It will not be a lullaby; it will be a battle charge. Men will drop their sins, for they will feel the hot breath of pursuing retribution on the back of their necks. It will be sympathetic with all the physical distresses, as well as the spiritual distresses of the world. Christ not only preached, but He healed paralysis, and He healed epilepsy, and He healed the dumb and the blind and the lepers.

That religious discourse of the future will be going right down into every man's life, and it will teach him how to vote, how to bargain, how to plough, how to do any work he is called to, how to wield trowel and pen and pencil and yardstick and plane. And it will teach women how to preside over their households, and how to educate their children, and how to imitate Miriam and Esther and Vashti and Eunice, the mother of Timothy, and Mary, the mother of Christ; and those women who on Northern and Southern battle-fields were mistaken by the wounded for angels of mercy, fresh from the throne of God.

An Every-day Sermon,

Yes, I have to tell you the religious discourse of the future will be

A Reported Sermon.

If you have any idea that printing was invented simply to print secular books, and stenography and phonography were contrived merely to set forth secular ideas, you are mistaken. The printing-press is to be the great agency of Gospel proclamation. It is high time that good men, instead of denouncing the press, employ it to scatter forth the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The vast majority of people in our cities do not come to church, and nothing but the printed sermon can reach them and call them to pardon, and life, and peace, and heaven.

So I cannot understand the nervousness of some of my brethren of the ministry. When they see a newspaper man coming in they say: "Alas, there is a reporter!" Every added reporter is ten thousand, fifty thousand, a hundred thousand immortal souls added to the auditory. The time will come when all the village, town and city newspapers will reproduce the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and sermons preached on the Sabbath will reverberate all around the world; and, some by type and some by voice, all nations will be evangelized.

The practical bearing of this is upon those who are engaged in Christian work, not only upon theological students and young ministers, but upon all who preach the Gospel, and all who exhort in meetings, and all of you if you are Doing Your Duty.

Do you exhort in prayer-meeting? Be short and be spirited. Do you teach in Bible-class? Though you have to study every night, be interesting. Do you accost people on the subject of religion in their homes or in public places? Study adroitness and use common sense. The most graceful and most beautiful thing on earth is the religion of Jesus Christ, and if you awkwardly present it, it is defamation. We must do our work rapidly, and we must do it effectively. Soon our time for work will be gone.

A dying Christian took out his watch and gave it to a friend, and said: "Take that watch, I have no more use for it; time is at an end for me, and eternity begins." Oh, my friends, when our watch has ticked away for us the last moment, and our clock has struck for us the last hour, may it be found we that we did it in the very best way, and whether we preached the Gospel in pulpits, or taught Sabbath-classes, or administered to the sick as physicians, or bargained as merchants, or pleaded the law as attorneys, or were busy as artisans, or husbandmen, or as mechanics, or were, like Martha, called to give a meal to a hungry Christ, or like Hannah, to make a coat for a prophet, or like Deborah, to rouse the courage of some timid Barak in the Lord's conflict, we did our work in such a way that it will stand the test of the judgment. And in the long procession of the redeemed, that march around the throne, may it be found that there are many there brought to God through our instrumentality, and in whose rescue we exult. But oh, you unsaved, for that religious discourse of the future! It may come after your obsequies. It may come after the stone-cutter has chiseled our name on the slab fifty years before. Do not wait for a great steamer of the Cunard or White Star line to take you off the wreck, but hail the first craft, with however low a mast, and however small a hulk, and however poor a rudder, and however weak a captain. Better a disabled schooner that comes up in time, than a full-rigged brig that comes up after you have sunken.

Did Our Work Well,

Wait Not

Instead of waiting for that religious discourse of the future—it may be forty, fifty years off—take this plain invitation of a man who, to have given you spiritual eyesight, would be glad to be called the spittle by the hand of Christ put on the eyes of a blind man, and who would consider the highest compliment of this service, if at the close five hundred men should start from these doors, saying, "Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not; this one thing I know, whereas I was blind, now I see."

Swifter than shadows over the plain, quicker than birds in their autumnal flight, hastier than eagles to their prey, hie you to a sympathetic Christ. The orchestras of heaven have strung their instruments to celebrate your rescue,

"And many were the voices around the throne:
Rejoice, for the Lord brings back His own."

A SERVICE IN BECHUANALAND.

(See Illustration on page 476.)

THE country of the Bechuanas lies between the Transvaal and the Kalahari Desert, to the north of Cape Colony, in South Africa. The people are a primitive race, devoted chiefly to pastoral pursuits. They are less warlike than the Zulus, and of an inferior moral and intellectual type. Though they are cruel and vindictive when they are aroused, they are not quarrelsome, like their more high-spirited neighbors. It is through the labors of the renowned missionary, Dr. Robert Moffat, the father-in-law of David Livingstone, that we know most of the Bechuanas. Moffat was deeply moved by their state, and went and lived among them, though he was assured that their "medicine men" or priests would assuredly stir up the people against him. In 1821 he settled down there with his wife and child, and Mr. Hamilton, a brother missionary. They built a hut with their own hands, cleared a few acres for planting and enclosed them. Working all day at such labors, picking up the language from natives who showed themselves friendly, Dr. Moffat worked indefatigably and at length gathered a few natives together to listen to the Gospel.

No sooner was the character of his mission disclosed than opposition was manifested. One day a herald bearing a huge spear presented himself at the missionary's door, and delivered a peremptory order that the missionaries quit the country. Dr. Moffat's intrepid bearing and his fearlessness of death awed the herald, who took back word that the men must be bewitched. Ultimately they were allowed to remain, and Moffat not only succeeded in planting the Gospel among them, but gave them the Bible in their own tongue. Churches were established and native teachers trained to carry on the work. Such sights as that depicted in the illustration are now to be seen in all parts of Bechuanaland.

Volume IX. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1886, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1883, 1884, and 1885 are also for sale. We have none prior to 1883.

Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a Monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to Mrs. M. Baxter, 10 Drayton Park, Highbury, London, England, or to the manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, N. Y.

THE JEWS IN PALESTINE.

ENCOURAGING reports are sent home by Mr. D. C. Joseph, who is now in the Holy Land. He writes: "Although it is only a little more than a fortnight since the Lord brought me to the Holy Land, I have seen sufficient to enable me to fill a volume. It causes the heart to leap with joy to see the readiness of the Jews to listen to the preaching of the Gospel. The bitter aversion against Christ has almost disappeared, and the open doors for the servant of God are an encouragement to expect greater things yet to come. Although it is not quite a year since I first visited Jerusalem, the great change which we found is something surprising. Property is rising in price, for about a mile and a half on the Jaffa road very fine buldings are erected, and the city spreads itself as far as the Damascus gate near 'Galgato.'

"Although there is now a great restriction in the emigration of the Jews, nevertheless the more the Turkish Government forbids the entrance of the Jews to Palestine, the more they flock to it. Alas! as it was with the children of Israel in the time of Moses, so it is now. The poor Jew is oppressed and persecuted by the people of the land. But the pain is even greater when converted Jews are slighted by the Christians. There is an anti-Semitic spirit, not only against the unconverted Jew, but also against the converted Israelite. We ask prayer, that that feeling may be uprooted from the hearts of men.

"The distress is great among the unbelieving Jews, but we are more concerned about the converted Jews who are starving in the city. There is very little provision made for the convert. We earnestly desire to be able to at least give them a night's lodging and a morsel of bread."

SPIDERS FOLLOWING THE LIGHT.

AT a meeting of the Academy of Natural Sciences Dr. Henry McCook, who has devoted a great deal of attention to the habits of spiders, delivered a long and interesting address on the subject. Among other characteristics he mentioned was that of their love of light. He has taken care of a brood of young spiders, whose webs form a decoration for his library window. He observed that the spiders occupied the lines of the webs on which the beams of his study lamp fell with most effect. He was curious to ascertain whether that fact was only a coincidence, and he therefore moved his lamp so that its light fell on another part of the web, leaving the part the spiders occupied in the shade. They all quickly moved from the dark to the light part, where they remained until the lamp was again moved, when they went back to the former position. It would be well if the same characteristic could be observed in men in relation to spiritual light, but it often happens that they avoid the light, which makes them uncomfortable, and resent any attempt to draw them out of their natural darkness. (John: 3 19).

AN ENCOURAGED COLPORTEUR.

AMONG the agencies organized by Mr. C. H. Spurgeon in connection with his church in London is an association for sending out book peddlers into country districts. They carry nothing but religious literature and their journeys are a blessing to the districts, as they are all able to hold religious services and avail themselves of opportunities for personal appeals. Last year these men sold books of the aggregate value of $48,000.

One of the men—Mr. Morgan, of Calne—has been very greatly cheered by several conversions. He reports: "Some time ago a woman died in my district, whom I had regularly visited for the last three years. When I first met her she was a stranger to the truth as it is in Jesus, but the death of her son about twelve months ago aroused her as to the need of a Saviour. But for a very long time, to all my enquiries she would only answer that she hoped she would be saved at last. But some time before her death she was able to rejoice in Jesus as her Saviour; and just before her death she sent for me to come and see her, and when I went she gave such a clear testimony, as to her readiness to meet God, as cheered my heart. Just before her death, in wishing her daughter good by, she said to her, 'Be sure to welcome Mr. Morgan whenever he calls, for I am sure you will find in him a good friend, as I have done.' When I called there a few days after the funeral I found the daughter anxious about her soul's salvation; I pointed her to Christ, and left with a prayer that the Lord would lead her to trust Him fully; and last month I heard with joy that she and her sister-in-law and niece (who lived in the next house, and whom I had constantly visited) had given their hearts to the Lord. May the Lord grant that many more may follow their example."

LITTLE SUFFERERS IN CHINA.

FROM Shanghai, China, Miss McKechnie thus writes to the Missionary Link: A little girl twelve years old who came to us has a sad story. Her mother bound her feet so tight and put on such little shoes that the child could not endure the pain, and she took them off. The mother was so angry that when she put the bandages and shoes on again she bound them on with cord. The result of this cruel treatment was the loss of one of her feet. We put her in bed, and after a few days the doctor amputated the leg just below the knee. She is a delicate child and it will be a long time before she is well, but she seems happy with us.

Another child of thirteen came who was afflicted with a parasitic disease of the head of ten years' standing. Her parents were very anxious to have her cured. It seems that she was engaged to be married, but the parents of the boy were not willing to pay over the engagement money until her head was cured. We took her in, and after weeks of treatment the head is nearly well. She is a wild little thing and roams all over the place. These two children have been made happy by the paper dolls and picture books sent in the boxes, and many of their weary, suffering hours have passed happily. We have the house full and three patients in the nurses' sitting-room.

BAPTISM OF A PERSECUTED WIDOW.

IN a letter from Calcutta, to the Missionary Link, Miss Hook thus describes the reception of a widow of twenty-one years of age and her little daughter, into the Christian Church: "When a little girl, she had been a pupil in our Numtollah School, and her little girl has been there more than a year. At intervals, during her early widowhood, she has been visited by different missionaries, but her family, suspecting her change of religious sentiments, have frequently interrupted her studies. However, through the child, she has continually requested us to take her away from home, but we, fearing mixed motives, so common in many cases, put her off with the exhortation to be a Christian in her own home, and suffer persecution, if it must be. Many dark days might be her portion as a Christian, and if she would be a soldier of the cross she must learn to bear hardness. But, at last, feeling sure that she was sincere, we gave her leave to come, which she did, and we put her in the "Convert's Home," at Barrackpore, a safe and good refuge provided by one of the Missions for the training and instruction of new converts for the first few years.

"There was, of course, at first, some disturbance from her relatives. I received a lawyer's letter commanding me to deliver her up within twenty-four hours, accompanied with the usual threats. The Numtollah School was attacked and children chased away in great alarm, until a few policemen were stationed at several points for one week, and all went on quietly. The relatives also went to Barrackpore, and, before a magistrate, got her own testimony, and as she is of age, of course there is no law to force her; so they have quieted down. The father feels it very deeply; he has always sympathized somewhat with his daughter, and we can only hope that some day the Spirit of God will take possession of his own heart. After a month at Barrackpore she was brought to Calcutta for baptism, and preferred immersion.

"The little daughter, although so young, had given decided evidence of her belief, and was very anxious to receive Christian baptism. Our own family and quite a number of our friends met in the chapel, and after a short address in Bengali and English, and the usual prayers and questions, the pastor administered baptism to the mother. He then reached out his hands to the little child; the pretty little white figure, with solemn face, but no signs of alarm, stepped down and placed her little hands in his with a most trusting air, and to his question if she believed, replied "ha" (yes) strong and clearly. I was never so impressed with the blessedness of leading children to Him who said, "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven." The Spirit of God seemed to fill the place."

A WICKED GOVERNOR'S FALL.

IN a letter to Woman's Work, Mrs. F. W. March, of Tripoli, says: "We are encouraged with the hope that the Government, which has been every year more and more unfriendly to our educational work, will hereafter close no more schools, and will even allow us to re-open those which they have already closed. Our Consul in Beirût has been hard at work in our behalf, and his efforts seem likely to prove successful. In one village not only was the school closed, but the local Governor went so far as to forbid all religious gatherings, even the meeting of two persons to read the Bible together! The preacher and the owner of the house where the Protestant meetings were held were imprisoned, and threats of yet more serious consequences following, if meetings were continued, alarmed the little band of believers. But in the midst of their persecutions the Governor, a drunkard and very wicked man, became involved in a quarrel and shot a man of prominence, for which act he lost his office and was thrown into the common prison at Tripoli. As we have heard of no further trouble in the village, we infer that his successor is less unfriendly to the Protestants. God takes His own methods in delivering His people from the hands of their oppressors, but in some way or other deliverance is sure to come to those who put their trust in Him."

AN ATHEIST'S GANGRENED FOOT.

WHEN Mr. Hudson Taylor was preparing to go to China the first time to establish the China Inland mission, he occupied his time in medical practice, and among his patients he had one whose foot had to be dressed every day, as he was suffering from senile gangrene. "The patient," says Mr. Taylor, "had little idea that he was a doomed man, and probably had not long to live. The family with whom he lived were Christians, and from them I learned that he was an avowed atheist, and very antagonistic to anything Christian. He soon began to manifest grateful appreciation of my services. One day, with a trembling heart, I took advantage of his acknowledgment to tell him of his own solemn position and need of God's mercy through Christ. After dressing the wound, and relieving his pain, I never failed to say a few words to him, which I hoped the Lord would bless. He always turned his back to me, looking annoyed, but never spoke a word, either of protest or assent, in reply.

One day, after dressing his limb and washing my hands, instead of returning to the bedside to speak to him, I went to the door and took hold of the handle, and stood hesitating for a few moments with the thought in my mind: 'Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone. I looked at the man and saw his surprise, as it was the first time since speaking to him that I had attempted to leave without going up to his bedside to say a few words for my Master. I could bear it no longer; bursting into tears I went up to him, and said, 'My friend, whether you will hear or whether you will forbear, I must deliver my soul;' and spoke very earnestly to him, telling him, with many tears, how much I wished that he would let me pray with him. To my unspeakable joy he did not turn away, but replied, 'If it will be a relief to you, do." I fell on my knees and poured out my whole soul to God for him. I believe the Lord then and there wrought a change in the man. Within a few days he definitely accepted Christ as his Saviour. He told me that for forty years he had never darkened the door of church or chapel, and then—forty years ago—he had only gone to church to be married; he could not be persuaded to go inside when his wife was buried. The now happy man lived for some time after this change, and was never tired of bearing testimony to the grace of God."

AN IDOL PROCESSION IN CHINA.

A STRANGE observance, which is annual in Shanghai, was witnessed recently by Mr. F. L. H. Pott, who thus describes it in a letter to the Spirit of Missions:

"Picture to yourself a narrow, dirty street of only eight feet in width, as the route of the procession. First, came the musicians, walking two by two, and even that was sometimes a close squeeze. The music was peculiar, but not at all unpleasant. It consisted principally in the piping of flutes, and the "whanging" of large gongs. The costumes of the musicians, though pretty ragged and dirty, yet displayed numerous colors. Following came what we might call lictors, wearing tall, conical hats, somewhat like our fool's-caps, either black or red; some of them carried in their hands iron chains, and some bore the great umbrellas, the tokens of dignity and honor in China. Their beautiful colors made a very pleasing effect. Horsemen, on shaggy and dirty steeds, rode along, carrying banners or flags in their hands. Men carrying censers and the temple utensils came next, and some of them in a very curious way carried heavy iron ornaments suspended from the skins of their arms, the skin being pierced by little sharp steel wires, and the arm held out horizontally. I was told this operation did not hurt; but nevertheless I would not care to try it.

The great event, and the one eagerly waited for, was the passing of the idols. Soon the image of one of the great gods, seated in a magnificent sedan chair, was borne along on the shoulders of many bearers. As soon as it came in sight, there was complete silence; and then men, women and children—yes, even the babies—put their hands together and respectfully and solemnly moved them up and down, in worship of the idol, amid muttered exclamations of Lau ya, Lau ya, meaning something like "Your reverence." One mother, standing just in front of me, I noticed particularly, and was struck with the anxiety that she showed to have her little baby, which she carried in her arms, perform the act of worship. She seemed much distressed when the little thing fell asleep and could not be roused for the performance.

There were five idols carried in the procession, and each one was saluted in the same way; between the time of their passing, lictors, horsemen, musicians and others passed along, and parents carrying little children on their backs. These children marched in the procession as a mark of gratitude to the gods for the restoration of their health after some severe sickness. They wore red clothing, and had their cues unbraided down their backs.

The procession took nearly two hours in passing. Much of it, owing to the tinsel and gaudy colors, had brought me back in thought to the pageant in the sawdust ring of my childhood's days. Much had been amusing, but also much impressive. To see this people so reverently worshipping these hideous idols as they passed along, could not but make me think what an earnest longing there is in the hearts of all creatures of the earth to know and feel that God is near them, and how the Incarnation of the Son of God satisfies this natural human craving.

WHAT MAY HAPPEN TO THE HOLY LAND ABOUT APRIL 2, 1889.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

A Fulfilled Prophecy—Its Punctual Verification—Why it is Important—The Completion of the 2,300 Years on March 21, 1844—The Starting-point of the 45 Years—A Like Punctuality Probable—The Period Closing on April 2, 1889—A Marked Step of Progress to be Expected—The Events of 1844—The Declaration Extorted from the Sultan—The Event Foreshown by Expositors.

THE termination of the 2,300 years of Daniel 8:14, on the first day of Nisan (March 21, 1844) in its initial commencing fulfillment of the predicted "cleansing of the Sanctuary" of the Holy Land from the "desolating" persecution of the Mohammedan "abomination," was of prophetic interpretations ever known, as we will proceed to explain. And the importance of it to us is that if in this initial commencing fulfillment, the 2,300 years are to be followed by the additional 45 years (the same as they are undoubtedly followed in their ultimate concluding fulfillment by Daniel's 45 years from the last day of Passover Week in April, 1856, to the last day of Passover Week on April 11, 1901), then there will be a termination of these 45 years in such initial fulfillment on Tuesday, April 2, 1889, because that day being the first day of Nisan in 1889, will be exactly 45 years from the first day of Nisan in 1844, which happened in that year to be Thursday, March 21. In such case the event to be expected about April 2, 1889, may be some marked and in the increasing liberation and deliverance of the Holy Land from the Turkish-Mahommedan abomination of desolation: in connection with the mystic "drying up of the Euphrates" in the decay and breaking up of the Turkish-Mohammedan empire. The event may be the separation of the Holy Land, and perhaps also of Syria from Turkey, so as to become practically independent of it.

One of the Clearest Verifications

Signal Step of Progress

The reasons why the 2,300 years were understood in their initial commencing fulfillment to end on March 21 1844, were stated by the Rev. E. Bickersteth as follows:

The European Powers made the Sultan of Turkey in 1844 promise not to execute persons any longer for becoming converts to Christianity. The causes of this intervention were remarkable. In August, 1843, an Armenian youth who, after, under fear of punishment, becoming a Turk, had returned to his Christian faith, was put to death. This called for the interposition of the British Government and its serious remonstrances, and produced in November 1843, some promises of terminating such affairs without capital punishment. In December, however, a young Greek, who had become a Mussulman, returned to his own creed as a Greek Christian, at Biligik, adjoining to Brussa, was executed. This taking place in the midst of the correspondence, called forth Lord Aberdeen's decisive letter of January 16. Thus we are indebted to the faithfulness of Greek and Armenian martyrs for this remarkable change.

Turkey even on the 14th of March, 1844, would have put off the European Powers with a statement that the law did not admit of any change, but such measures as were possible, should be taken. The Ambassadors of the European Powers refused to receive this.

At length, on the 21st of March, 1844, was, as the British Ambassador observed, "happily, and to all appearance, conclusively settled. The concession has been obtained with great difficulty, and even to the last moment it required the firmness of resolution, inspired by your Lordship's instructions to overcome the obstacles which were raised against us." He enclosed in this letter the following "Official declaration of the Sublime Porte, relinquishing the practice of executions for apostacy:

The Question Of Religious Execution

(Translation).

"It is the special and constant intention of His Highness the Sultan, that his cordial relations with the High Powers be preserved, and that a perfect reciprocal friendship be maintained and increased.

"The Sublime Porte engages to take measures to prevent henceforward the execution and putting to death of the Christian who is an apostate.

"March 21, 1844."

To this must be added the following "declaration of His Highness the Sultan to Sir Stratford Canning at his audience on the 22d of March, 1844.

"Henceforward neither shall Christianity be insulted in my dominions, nor shall Christians be in anyway persecuted for their religion."

The Date of the Official Declaration,

March 21, is very remarkable as being in fact the first day of Nisan, the first sacred month of the Jews. And this is the more remarkable, as it is connected with the termination of the remarkable date of 2,300 years, which closed in 1843. The remarks on this date were printed by the Rev. E. Bickersteth in April, 1839, and published in his 'Guide to the Prophecies,' in August, 1839, as follows:

"It will be observed that Ezra is very specific in stating the dates. On the first day of the first month (Nisan in B. C. 457) began he to go up from Babyon (Ezra 7:9). And they made an end with all the men that had taken strange wives by the first day of the first month (Nisan in B. C. 456). Ezra 10:17. The whole time of the return and restoration taking exactly a year.

"The prophecy of this period is in these words: (Dan. 7:13, 14.) 'How long shall be the vision of the daily sacrifice, and of the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, unto two thousand and three hundred days (or evening morning); then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.'

"Ezra's commission for the restoration of the sacrifice (Ezra 7:15; 8:35), was 457 years before Christ. The period of a year was occupied in this work and his return, that is to the first day of Nisan 456 B.C. (Ezra 6;9; 10:17). The restoration of sacrifice continued, with slight exceptions, to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, since which Jerusalem has been trodden down of the Gentiles, to the period of March 21, 1844; this period according to the Jewish year, ending March 20, 1844, makes 2,300 years."

On the first of Nisan, 1844, the power of the Mohammedans to persecute Christianity passed away, constituting a measurable Cleansing of the Sanctuary.

This is the more remarkable also, as 1844 is the 1,260th year of the Hegira (the date fixed by the Mohammedan Antichrist as the rise of this branch of the apostacy), and so the closing year in Mohammedanism of that remarkable prophetical period 1,260 years. In a letter from Tangiers, in 1844, given in the public journals, speaking of the difficulties besetting the kingdom of Morocco, it is stated: "It seems that the Moors have always been exhorting each other to beware of 1,260 (that is of the Hegira), which, according to our reckoning, is the present year."

The Rev. F. Fysh, M. A., in his "Sure Word of Prophecy" (312 pages) published in 1839, also interpreted the same 391 years as a period of the rise of the Turkish Empire in 1062, the first year of Alp Arslan's reign to its zenith in 1453, and thence again of its gradual decline to 1844. He said: "The Turkish Empire was at its height in 1453, and another period of 391 years will end with its fall in 1844, although its final extermination will not take place until some years later." He also said "In 1896 the Jews will be established in their own land."

Alfred Addis, B. A., in his large volume on Prophecy in 1830, clearly showed that 2,300 years would end in 1843, which, as the Jewish ecclesiastical year, ended on March 20, 1844.

Five Cents, Postage Free.

END OF THIS AGE ABOUT THE END OF THIS CENTURY,

and its Last Week Passover Week, Ending on Thursday, April 11, 1901,

As shown by Daniel's 2300 and 1335 and 1290 Years—this being the termination also of the 6000 Years from the Creation of Man, and the 2520 Years from Nebuchadnezzar, and the 360 Years from Luther's Reformation, according to the Bible periods—a pamphlet of 29 pages—by Rev. M. Baxter, Episcopal Clergyman and one of the Editors of the "Christian Herald." Author of "Forty Coming Wonders," "Coming Wars," etc. Address Manager "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The President's Party had a Narrow Escape from a serious accident on July 16. As the train by which he was traveling was passing Glendale, New York, the engineer heard a crash. The connecting bar to the forward driver on the right hand side of the engine broke, and the huge piece of steel revolved with terrible velocity, tearing out one side of the cab and ripping up the ties and the ground as the engine rushed along. A huge fracture was made in the boiler, and the steam escaped in volumes. The engine swayed violently, and the engineer was flung out of the cab into the ditch and was killed by the fall. The fireman was knocked against the side of the cab and his head badly cut. Half blinded with the escaping steam and bleeding profusely from the wound in his head, he retreated to the coach, but recollecting that the lever had not been reversed, he crawled back through the scalding steam to the cab and swung the lever back, thereby in all probability saving the lives of all on board.

An Assimilation of the Laws of the States as to extradition is proposed, and a conference is to be held in New York in August, of representatives of the various States, to arrange a scheme. Each Governor has received a letter inviting him to send a delegate to the conference, and calling his attention to the fact that although the present regulations and practice of the respective States regarding criminals from beyond their borders are substantially similar, they are nevertheless widely divergent in details and particular requirements. This divergence sometimes affords criminals an opportunity to escape from punishment, and often leads to vexatious delays and increased legal expenses. It is expected that a scheme will be framed by the conference in the hope that it will be generally adopted.

The Ohio State Democratic Convention at Cleveland on Thursday last nominated as its candidate for Governor, General Thomas E. Powell, of Delaware County. The majority of the delegates were instructed for Thurman, but he positively refused to allow his name to go before the convention. The choice of General Powell was a surprise to many, as his chief rival held views on the tariff supposed to be more popular in Ohio than those of General Powell. He distinctly announced himself as a "Randall Democrat," but apparently that did not recommend him to the convention and General Powell was chosen on the second ballot. The most significant feature of the convention, however, was its endorsement of the President. This fact is of importance, because there is an impression prevalent that Mr. Cleveland's strongest and most inveterate opponents are within the lines of his own party. The utterances of the convention were so unequivocal as to leave no doubt that, whatever may be the opinion of the Democratic party at large, Mr. Cleveland has the confidence of the party in Ohio. Another remarkable plank of its platform is that relating to the tariff, and this is on a line with its selection of the head of the ticket. This plank runs thus: We demand such judicious reduction of the present burdensome tariff as shall result in producing a revenue sufficient only to meet the expenses of an economical administration of government, the payment of liberal pensions to Union soldiers and sailors, and the payment of the interest and principal of the public debt; and, if necessary, we favor such reduction of internal revenue, except on liquors, as will prevent the accumulation of a surplus in the national treasury, and we denounce any attempt to abolish the tax on liquors for the purpose of keeping up the present unjust, unequal and onerous tariff system. The platform distinctly defines the attitude of the party on the liquor question. It is a demand for the submission of an amendment to the constitution providing for a liquor license. This will consolidate the opposition, because the amendment that enlightened people in Ohio desire to see made is precisely the opposite one. On the immigration question the demand of the convention is radical. It opposes the reception of all "aliens who are not willing to declare their intention of becoming citizens of the United States." This week the Republican Convention assembles at Toledo, and a comparison of its platform with that of the Democrats will furnish indications of the state of public opinion in Ohio.

A New Revision of the Civil Service Rules has been prepared, and will be submitted to the President for his approval as soon as each of the Commissioners has had an opportunity of personally examining them and making suggestions. It is stated that one object of the revision is to cover the new ground opened up by the experiment in the War Office. That was so entirely satisfactory that it is proposed to extend the system to the other Departments. As the Civil Service law, however, was designed to apply to appointments, modifications of the rules will be necessary to the new sphere of promotions. There has been a difference of opinion among the Commissioners on the subject of the Central Examining Board. An effort has been made to increase its number from seven to thirteen, Mr. Oberly taking the lead in the movement. The other Commissioners, however, are opposed to the change, which they think would make the Board unwieldy without increasing its efficiency. It is gratifying to notice that the law is growing in favor, and that even those whose patronage it curtails, appreciate the relief it affords them from persistent applicants.

A Shocking Railroad Accident Occurred near Jersey City, New Jersey, on July 21. A gang of Italians were engaged in filling ballast into the roadbed, between and under the ties on the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad, when a milk train came slowly along and the men moved from the western to the eastern track and and commenced work on that. Before the milk train had passed the Chicago Express, traveling at forty miles an hour, came in sight. The noise of the milk train deadened the sound of the express, and the men, who were stooping over their work, were unconscious of their danger. The overseers saw it and shouted to them, but many of the Italians did not understand English, and, it is supposed, mistook the cries for orders to work harder. The express dashed into their midst with frightful results Ten men were literally cut to pieces and many others injured, one of whom has since died in the hospital.

A Report that Mr. H. M. Stanley was Dead was cabled here from London, and published on Friday last. The despatch stated that the West African Company had been informed by a native that a battle had taken place between Stanley's expedition and some natives, from whom he wanted to obtain supplies of food, and that Stanley had been shot. Another report had it that the steamer on which the explorer was proceeding to the relief of Emin Pasha had sunk and Stanley was drowned. The news caused some uneasiness, but Mr. Stanley's friends do not credit it The New York Herald's correspondent, in fact, received from the King of the Belgians an emphatic contradiction of it, based on Stanley's own despatches, which show him to have been farther up the country than the despatch announcing his death represents him to have been. The King said that he received on July 20 a telegram, announcing Mr. Stanley's safe arrival at the confluence of the Awrimi and the Congo on June 1. Owing to the difficulties caused by the famine, Mr. Stanley, on leaving Bolobo, about May 9, did not expect to reach Awrimi before June 6. His arrival June 1, shows that as he went ahead the famine difficulties diminished instead of increased. King Leopold and the administration of the Congo are firmly convinced that there can have been no reason for his fighting to obtain food, and falling in the struggle.

Prince Ferdinand has Accepted the Throne of Bulgaria, conditionally on the approval of the great Powers. It would appear, however, that Russia is scarcely less hostile to him than to Prince Alexander. The Russian newspapers unanimously disapprove of the election. They all denounce the election by the Sobranjé as the result of Austro-German intrigue, and urge the Porte to intervene and the Powers to withdraw their representatives from Sofia. The Novoe Vremya, of St. Petersburg, says that Russia will in no case allow Prince Ferdinand to go to Sofia, and adds that if he arrives there with an Austrian escort Russia will tell Austria to keep her hands off. It is understood that the question will be discussed by the Emperors of Germany and Austria at their approaching meeting, and united action agreed upon. It is not deemed probable that the Czar, headstrong though he is, would dare to oppose Germany and Austria united.

The Complete Failure of the Anglo-Turkish Convention on the Egyptian question is now admitted. The Sultan, awed by the menaces of Russia and France, definitely refused to sign, and the English special commissioner has been recalled. The result of the failure is not yet apparent. England would, under the convention, have been pledged to withraw from Egypt at a definite date, whereas now she is free from pledges. It may be supposed that Russia and France will now apply pressure in London. An influential French journal says: "We are as well disposed after the rejection of the convention as we were before to negotiate with England. We are ready to largely allow for the position in which accomplished facts and French mistakes have placed England. We are resolved to offer England complete guarantee that we do not think of taking any position on the Nile that she may vacate, but we are determined to maintain France's incontestible rights." Other journals comment in a more hostile spirit, and clamor for a peremptory demand being made by the French Government on England to evacuate Egypt without delay.

News of Emin Pasha has Been Brought to Zanzibar from the interior by traders, who state that Emin Bey was in good health in March, and was projecting an expedition to explore further the Kakibbi River, an immense stream which he discovered in September, rising in the Usongora Mountains, and flowing into the southern part of Lake Albert Nyanza. He proposed that this, his third expedition, should occupy three months. It is thought that he may meet the Stanley expedition in Usongora. Mwanga the ferocious King of Uganda, still refused to grant Emin permission to leave the country, but he permitted messengers to obtain supplies for the expedition. Emin had not heard of Stanley's mission. The British and Italian messengers who were sent to inform him of the expedition were met in May at a point northwest of the Victoria Nyanza by some of the traders who have just arrived there. The messengers had just been released from captivity.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

An Important Change in the Marriage Law of New York State is now gone into operation, and all clergymen should bear the fact in mind, as it affects them more than the persons they marry. The Act passed at the last session of the Legislature, makes it a misdemeanor for any minister or magistrate to solemnize a marriage when either of the parties is known to him to be under the age of legal consent. The law further requires that the minister or magistrate shall use due diligence in ascertaining the age. Having used such diligence, he may not be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor if he has been deceived as to the age. But ignorance would be no excuse where no effort was taken to ascertain whether each of the parties was old enough to get married. The age of consent is now charged from fourteen in males to eighteen, and from twelve in females to sixteen.

A Remarkable Woman Died in Boston, Mass., on July 21. She was the founder and manager of the institution known as "Boffin's Bower," and her name was Jennie Collins. She was formerly an employee in a clothing establishment, but always took a deep interest in philanthropic work. The clothing house was burnt out, and Miss Collins then gave herself up entirely to an effort to help the poor—especially poor women and working girls. She had no funds of her own, but she would go among the poor, get particulars of their cases, and then go among the wealthy, presenting their needs and obtain means to relieve them. Gradually, as she became known, large sums were intrusted to her for distribution, her practical common sense and shrewd discrimination rendering her a better agent than the donors themselves. Poor families have been helped over hard times by her aid, and many a friendless girl provided with employment through her efforts. "Boffin's Bower," under her management, became a centre of helpfulness. Her death will be a serious loss to the poor of Boston. It may be hoped that God will raise up a capable successor.

A Thousand Miles an Hour is the Speed which an inventor expects to realize by his scheme for sending parcels to Europe. The Hartford Courant states that Col. J. H. Pierce is perfecting a project for the use of pneumatic tubes beneath the Atlantic, and that he has arrived at a stage which justifies him in proclaiming his success. Only a few mechanical details remain to be arranged. He proposes to lay on the bed of the ocean a double line of tubes, similar to those in use in cities between telegraph offices. Through these a carriage will be propelled by a blast of air, generated by steam-driven fans, on the principle of those employed in blast furnaces. The interior of the tubes and the exterior of the carriages will be polished steel, with corrugated sides fitting to wheels, with anti-friction bearings. His experiments convince him that a light parcel might be sent so as to reach the coast of Ireland in three hours after its despatch from New York. The advantages of this scheme, if it prove practicable, will be readily perceived by business men, who often require to transmit documents, the value of which depends on their quick delivery. If Christian men were similarly awake to the facilities placed within their reach they would use them more, for God has said, "Before they call I will answer" (Isa. 65 : 24).

A Remarkable Meteorite Fell in Fulton Avenue, Brooklyn, on July 17. A violent thunderstorm broke over the city soon after noon on that day, with high winds. As some persons stood on the corner of Fulton and Troy avenues, watching the vivid flashes of lightning, they observed an object about the size of a man's head descending apparently from the sky. It came swiftly, and struck the earth with terrific force. It was broken into fragments by the concussion, and there was a rush to secure pieces of it, which have been preserved as curiosities. The substance is of a vivid green color, and porous. When first secured it was soft and plastic, taking the impress of the fingers. After remaining over a day it became brittle and friable. It resembles precisely in appearance the green deposit left on a battery. At first it was thought that the lightning had struck a copper wire or roof, had melted portions of it, and, oxidizing it, had carried it to a great distance. Analysis, however, showed its meteoric origin, as it gave with the reagents and the blowpipe unmistakable evidence of the presence of cobalt and nickel, which twin metals are always found in meteorites. There were no traces of copper and faint indications of iron. From the quantity of the material it is thought that the ball when intact must have weighed twenty pounds. Portions have been sent to the Smithsonian Institution. Happily the meteorite did not strike anyone, or it would certainly have caused death. The descent of so formidable a missile reminds us of the boundless resources which God holds in His hand for the execution of the judgments in the last days (Rev. 16 : 21).

A Suicide on a Dog's Grave Occurred Near Philadelphia on July 18. A family residing near the Bryn Mawr Hotel had a favorite collie dog of remarkable intelligence. The dog had been reared in the family, and all were fond of him, but especially a sixteen year old boy, to whom the care of the dog had been committed when he was brought as a puppy into the house some two years ago. On July 18, the dog suddenly died, and the boy was inconsolable. He dug a grave for him in the garden, and erected a small headstone on which he carved a memorial inscription. The boy's depression was noticed by the family, but no particular attention was paid to him. He staid out in the grounds after dark that night, but nothing was thought of this, as the evening was very hot. But as the family were sitting on the porch they heard a sharp report, and on going to the garden to ascertain the cause, saw the boy lying dead across the dog's grave, a revolver in his hand and a bullethole in his head. He had shot himself in his uncontrollable grief. How far the boy was responsible for his rash act it is not for men to say; probably his sorrow had unsettled his reason. Sorrow comes to all in this world, but it cannot overthrow the reason, when the sufferer knows that his chief treasure still remains and is beyond the reach of death (Matt. 6: 20, 21).

A Reformed Parrot is in the Possession of a gentleman at Ballston, N. Y. A local journal states that after the parrot was purchased the owner discovered, to his consternation, that its language was extremely profane. It uttered the most horrible oaths with demoniacal glee. Reproof and punishment had no effect upon it, and the owner decided to get rid of the bird. But it conceived an affection for his little daughter, who fed it and who has a wonderfully sweet voice. The little girl was in the habit of repeating the Lord's prayer before going to bed, and the parrot listened intently. After the child had retired one night the parrot was heard trying to reproduce the child's words, and the following night it did so with greater success. The effort delighted the child, who encouraged the bird and became its teacher. It is now able to repeat the whole prayer, and, what is still more remarkable, its profanity has entirely disappeared. To the parrot, of course, the language of devotion is as meaningless as that of imprecation, but is simply the result of a change of association. The same cause sometimes leads to mistakes as to human beings, who when among religious people quit evil speaking. The mere reformation of speech and habit, gratifying as it is, should never satisfy any one. The only vital and effectual change is one of heart (Ezek. 33: 31).

A Narrow Escape from Lynching is Reported from Toledo, Iowa County, Iowa. Four months ago a man suddenly disappeared from that town, and his employer was suspected of having murdered him, as it was known that the missing man had grievously offended his employer shortly before his disappearance. The employer was arrested, and he admitted that he had charged the man with a heinous offence; a violent quarrel had ensued, and he had then driven him from his house into the darkness. He said that he had not seen the man afterward, but it was shown that after he had pursued him he did not return to his house for more than an hour. He was released after a preliminary investigation, but public opinion was strongly against him and one of his neighbors, who was believed to be his accomplice in the murder. A lynching party visited the neighbor and strung him up to a tree three times, and lowered him again to get him to confess where the body was hidden, but he persisted in saying that he knew nothing about it. The lynchers afterward went to the employer of the missing man and tried to kill him, but he escaped. Soon afterward he left the town, and, with a detective, commenced an exhaustive search for the missing man, traveling all over Iowa and Missouri. After a long and toilsome search they found him at Kansas City, Mo., and took him to Toledo. The appearance of the man who was supposed to be murdered, produced the greatest excitement, and a reaction set in which resulted in a mass meeting to register the vindication of the innocent man who had so nearly fallen a victim to popular fury. There are many innocent men unjustly suspected of wrong-doing, for whom complete vindication appears impossible. In such a situation, the man without faith in God is utterly miserable, but the Christian so situated has a sure hope of vindication (Ps. 37 : 5, 6).

BRIEF NOTES.

In Canada there are now 2,500,000 square miles of territory under prohibition law.

Messrs. Mateer and Parker, Mr. Spurgeon's evangelists, who labored successfully in this country, have left Australia for England.

A. J. Bell has resigned from the Chicago City Mission and is prepared to accept engagements for Evangelistic work. Letters may be addressed to A. J. Bell, 446 W. Randolph Street, Chicago, Ill.

Rev. B. Fay Mills has held a twelve days mission at Exeter, N. H. Two hundred and fifty-four persons, who have been received into various churches since, ascribe their conversion to God's blessing on the services.

The Empress of Japan, accompanied by a retinue of twenty persons, is expected to pay a visit to the United States in October, landing at San Francisco and stopping at Salt Lake, Omaha and Chicago, and will return after a two months' trip.

Thirty-seven young physicians have volunteered to work among the tenement houses of New York City during August. They have been furnished with free tickets, which they may distribute to sick children and their mothers for excursions to the ocean beaches.

A Branch Y. M. C. A. for the employees of the New York Elevated railroads is desired. Thirteen hundred of the men have signed a petition to the directors of the road for the organization of the institution, and have offered to pay 25 cents a month toward the expenses.

At the July meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society grants of books to the value of $9,600 were made, including gifts of Scriptures valued at $1,000 in the Muskogee and Dakota languages for mission work among the Indians, and $1,728 was granted for work in Italy and China.

Mr. J. G. Brown, missionary secretary of Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College, is about to sail for the Congo. At the valedictory meeting in the Tabernacle Mr. Spurgeon, speaking of the dangers of this mission-field, said, "We cannot lengthen our lives by neglecting duty, and could we do so, it would be a wretched existence."

Mormon missionaries have been preaching in South Carolina, and have made converts of about twenty-five white families. The burden of their speeches was that all who did not profess Mormonism before 1893 would be destroyed by fire, and that no woman could obtain absolute perfection in the future state who died unmarried.

Rev. J. D. Herr, D. D., whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on November 11, 1886, has just dedicated a new church building in Milwaukee, Wis. The edifice with its furnishing cost $30,000, apart from the lot. The auditorium is in the form of a circle and is filled with opera chairs, and pews in the rear. At the close of the dedicatory services Dr. Herr reported that the debt had been reduced from $8,500 to $2,800.

An Excellent Opportunity for Boys and Girls now on their vacation to earn pocket money, now offers itself by canvassing for "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" and selling it weekly from house to house in their own neighborhood. A number of boys have commenced this since the holidays, in preference to doing anything else. Send postal card at once, for terms.

LOVING PERSUASION.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Persuading them concerning Jesus."—Acts 28 : 23.

Paul's Single Object—His Three Methods—I. The People to be Persuaded—Notional Believers—Procrastinating Believers—Dispirited Believers—II. The Work of Persuasion—Successful, if Applied by the Spirit—To Think About Christ—To Trust Him—Make Public Avowal—Persuasive Arguments—III. Cases in which Persuasion Fails—IV. A Change of Audience.

WHEREVER Paul is, he has but one errand and whenever Paul preaches, he has but one subject. Once at Athens, when he addressed the Areopagus, he seemed to wander a little from his main point, and no special good followed, but this experience bound him all the faster to the cross; for he afterwards said to the Corinthians: "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." The cross of Christ was his one theme. He henceforth hammered on

The Head of this One Nail.

Whatever faculty, ability and power he had, he turned its whole current into this one channel, and cried, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." "This one thing I do," said he. His motto was—All for Jesus, and Jesus only.

The one topic the apostle brought forward in different ways. When addressing the chief men of the Jews in Rome, observe that he expounded and testified and persuaded. These three methods were needful among the people of those days; and they are the wisest that can be adopted to bring men to Christ, even now. We must expound, set forth, explain, make clear the gospel. We must tell men what the Word of God means, in the plainest possible language; for they need to know what it is that the revelation from heaven has really declared. The more of true exposition the better.

We must also testify. We must bear witness to the effect which the gospel has had upon our heart and life. The telling out of our personal experience is a means of grace to our hearers. Paul was wont to describe

His Own Conversion.

He told the story of how the Lord appeared unto him in the way to Damascus; and he did this so often, that Luke and others must have heard it several times. Indeed, it was a tale so worth the telling that none could weary of hearing it. There is much force in such a personal testimony. Oh, that you and I, after having explained the gospel, may always be able to tell out something from our own experience which will prove it! Yet this was not all, our apostle was not satisfied simply to expound and testify; his heart was full of love to his countrymen; and, therefore, he persuaded them. He entreated, he besought, he implored his hearers to turn to the Lord Jesus Christ.

As Paul was speaking to Jews, he fetched the arguments of his persuasion from their own holy books. I have no doubt that he had spread out on the table before him the books of Moses, and the various rolls of the prophets; to these he continually referred his Jewish friends. We cannot this morning go into that argument, neither is there need; for you are not Israelites, and you are already well acquainted with that mode of argument. I have before me another sort of people, whose condition needs another treatment. I long for your immediate conversion. With earnest prayer have I come hither, seeking with tears and entreaties to win men from destruction. Others have joined me in supplication, and therefore I look to the Holy Spirit that my hearers may be convinced of sin and led to Jesus.

I. Let me first describe those Whom We Would Persuade.

I would persuade those persons who believe the truth notionally, and yet do not receive it in their hearts. It seems a strange thing that men should believe, and yet not believe. This peculiar form of unbelief is current among us at this day. It is strange that men believe the Bible, and even profess to believe it all, and yet they act as if it were all a dream. If we preach the Deity of Christ, it is an easy task; for they never thought of questioning it. If we proclaim the need of the Holy Spirit in regeneration, they are agreed; for they never doubted it. Whatever doctrine it is that we can prove by the Word of God they bow before it. They are not guilty of scepticism. Alas! they hardly give the matter thought enough to observe any difficulties. Avoiding the whirlpool of questioning, they run upon

The Rock of Indifference.

If you were awakened by a cry of fire, and you were sure that your own house was burning, I should expect to see you hurrying from the flame. I could understand you keeping to your bed if you were persuaded that the cry was the mere idle noise of boys in the street; but if you believed it to be a real alarm, I should be perplexed if I saw you seeking a little more sleep. If you were told that you had a disease about you, which would soon bring you to your grave, and that a certain physician could work a speedy cure, if you did not believe the report, I should expect that you would suffer in the patience of despair; but if you did believe in the repute of the physician, and in the cures which he had wrought, I should not be able to understand you if you did not go to him, and seek relief. O sirs, how is it that you are willing to continue in sin when Jesus is able to save unto the uttermost?

Many need persuading, who intend soon to practise what they have believed, but the time has not fully come. You have that before long you will turn to Christ; but the unhappy thing is, that you have for many a day retained this resolve, and it has grown mouldy within your bosoms. When we met you as a child you meant to love the Lord. When we conversed with you as young men and women you were very hopeful, and your parents felt that their prayers would soon be heard. You seemed so thoughtful and impressible, and you had such good intentions, that we all reckoned upon your speedily being decided. You are much older now, but you are not more advanced: still with you it is all intentions and intentions. I wish there could be a time fixed in your mind when it should be either "yes" or "no." "How long halt ye between two opinions?" Oh, you that are for ever resolving and resolving, and yet abide where you are—you are the people whom at this time I would persuade to decision!

A Resolve in Your Heart

Some have gone further still; for they are earnestly seeking salvation, but they have chosen a wrong method of search, which can only end in disappointment. I would fain persuade them to leave off seeking the living among the dead. Salvation is by immediate trust in Jesus; but you want to feel up to a certain degree of anguish, or you want to change yourselves up to a certain point of excellence; in a word, you want to save yourselves first, and then come to Jesus. You are trying to make the lantern shine before a candle is put within it. You want to renew your own nature, and then to come to Christ for a new heart: you are not content to come to Jesus as sinners. All will be done for you if you will but put your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ; but this you fail to do. You need to be led to see that salvation is all finished, and that you have but to take it as a free gift. "Christ hath died," and in that expression lies your life. Believing in Jesus, you have eternal life the moment you believe. You need to be persuaded to accept this as the present truth, the most precious truth you can ever hear.

One other class I should like to deal with this morning: I would fain persuade a long time to do their best, and, having never succeeded, are falling into a state of despair. Theirs is not a painful despair; I wish it were so; but, alas! they have fallen into a lethargy, a paralysis of the mind with regard to heavenly things. "It is no good," they say, "I cannot get peace, I shall never find pardon. A child of God I cannot hope to be; I might as well expect to be a peer of the realm!" Therefore they sit down in sullen hopelessness. They mutter that if it is to be it will be, and it is of no use caring. I must persuade you with all my heart to come to Jesus, for if you perish in the light, you will perish with a vengeance. If you go down to destruction from the borders of salvation, it will be sevenfold destruction.

Those Who Have Tried

These are the people I long to persuade. O Divine Spirit, work through me at this time, and let the eternal purposes of love be fulfilled! O my brethren in Christ, I entreat you, by the love of Jesus, strive together with me in your prayers for this blessing!

II. Our second point shall be: let us persuade them. But are we right in trying to persuade men? Are not human hearts by so feeble a hammer as our persuasion? Yes, I most solemnly believe they are; but that is not the question. "What is the use of persuading them, if you know that they will not be won by your persuasion in and of itself?" Well, brethren, I feel safe in doing what Paul did. I will not stop to solve difficulties, but merely say, Paul persuaded, and so will I. "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." But I know, as Paul also knew, that all the human persuasion in the world will fall short of the mark without divine power. I never dreamed that my persuasion was of the slightest avail without the Holy Ghost. If the Holy Spirit will cause the persuasion to reach the inward ear, then it will prevail, and not else: if He will drive home the persuasion, so that it touches the heart which is encased in the fat of worldly pleasure, indifference, prejudice, and pride, then men will yield, and men will be persuaded indeed. But the Holy Spirit will do this! He has done it; He is doing it; He will do it; and therefore, O sinners, "as though God did beseach you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God!"

Too Hard to be Broken

Once more, in the name of God, I return to the work to which God has ordained me. I would persuade you concerning Jesus. To what shall I persuade you? My dear hearers, I would persuade some of you to think of Christ, the Lord's anointed; to think of Jesus, the Saviour. I would have you read about him, and study his person, work, and character. Turn to the four evangelists, and see what He was, and

What He Did.

Read carefully and reverently the inspired lives of Jesus. Faith often comes to men when they are thinking about Christ. The Cross not only claims faith, but it creates it. To sit and see the Son of God die on the cross is the way to get faith. Some of you, perhaps, have been sitting still, and trying to believe. That is a very absurd thing to do, for faith is not the first effort of the mind, but it follows upon other states. Know what is to be believed, and why you are to believe it. Know who He is in whom you are to put your trust, and why He deserves to be trusted. Shut yourselves up a bit: read the Bible carefully, and then meditate, and meditate, and meditate. This is the way in which faith grows up in the soul, even as plants spring from seeds sown and watered.

The next thing I would persuade you to is to trust in Him. Trust is the essence of saving faith. Faith is not merely believing facts, but trusting to a person. God has set forth Christ to be a propitiation for sin: He becomes to me my propitiation when I trust Him.

Can You Not Trust

Jesus? Is He not worth trusting? Where else can you trust? The moment you trust in Him you are saved. You know that: why not prove it true by personal faith? To trust is the meaning of that text, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all ye ends of the earth." There is life in the glance of trust. You are living men when you look to Christ, or trust Him. "But," you say, "I do not feel——" Away with your buts! What have I said about your feelings? "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." "He that believeth on Him hath everlasting life." Salvation lies in the simple act of trusting in your Saviour. Oh, that I could persuade you to trust!

And when you have trusted Him, I want to persuade you concerning Jesus that you should avow that trust. The Lord puts it thus: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. Be baptized, therefore, in obedience to His command. Come out boldly and say, "I am on the Lord's side." Do not attempt to along some back lane; come into the king's highway; take up your cross and follow Him. I would persuade you to an open confession; may God the Holy Spirit lead you at once to the doing of it!

Go Sneaking to Heaven

And if I were happy enough to persuade you so far, I would persuade you to obey Christ throughout life. "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." Seek to lead a holy, harmless, blameless life. Endeavor to avoid all sin. Endeavor to copy the Son of God throughout your whole course, making Him your model and your Master, your leader and your Lord. Some of you who have openly confessed Him still need to be persuaded to a closer obedience. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." I would persuade you then to think of Christ, to trust in Christ, to confess Christ, and to obey Christ.

What shall be my arguments? I can summon battalions of them from Jesus Himself. He is the Son of God: therefore, trust him. He loves with a supreme love; shall we not love Him, who first loved us? He died! Oh, by His agony and bloody sweat, by His cross and passion, I would persuade you to turn to Him! Moreover, remember the sinfulness of your nature. You will go on to sin; you heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; you will not cease from sinning. Jesus alone can give you a new heart and a right spirit. He is the one physician able to cure your fatal disease. Will you not cry to Him, "Jesus, Emmanuel, heal me with a touch"? Will you refuse to be made whole? I pray you, do not so.

If I wanted more arguments there are many quarters from which they would come at my bidding. I would try to find them in your hopes and fears. I do not know to whom I may be speaking now; but, my friend, there is a glorious future before you if Christ becomes yours. Burdened sinner, there is a peace which passeth all understanding if you will look to Jesus! O distracted, tempest-tossed soul, there is a haven of rest for you if you steer to Christ! I would fain persuade you now to come to Him whose gift is heaven below and then heaven above. I myself have tried Him. Blessed was the day in which I fell into His arms. I have no other hope under heaven, no other joy in heaven, but my Saviour and His infallible word. If you knew the comfort which my soul finds in Jesus you could not desire a better. Surely these arguments ought to prevail with you. They will, if your reason is made reasonable.

III. Now I have to speak a few words upon another subject, with the same object. It is this—let us lament the fact that our in certain cases. Paul found it so; and where this chief of apostles was baffled, can I wonder if I fail? Let me speak to those of you who will, I fear, be our failures. I grieve to think there should be any such. It is a sad business in the present for a man to be living without Christ. We pity abject poverty; but this is worse than the worst poverty. We are sorry for the friendless; but none are so forlorn as those who have not Jesus for a friend. No ignorance is so terrible as ignorance of the Saviour; no blindness so deplorable as blindness toward the Lord Jesus. To live without Christ is not life, but a breathing death. If I had to die like a dog I should still wish to live the life of a Christian. Faith is good for this life. It is a wretched business to be now neglecting the great salvation; but this is not all: your present hardness of heart reveals a good deal as to your past life. If you will not be persuaded of the things concerning Jesus, it shows that your heart and conscience have been injured by years of willful resistance to the power of truth. You have been stopping up your ears, and that is why you are so deaf. Remember the neglected house of God, and see how callous you have now become. We are also fearful about you, because your past and present foretell a future of continued and increasing blindness, deafness, and insensibility. You have almost come to a condition of mind in which you are like a man covered with armor, from which the sharpest arrows glance off. O God, let it not be quite so, we beseech thee, with anyone here!

Persuasions Fail

This is all the sadder because it suggests such tremendous sin, and such Overwhelming Punishment.

I cannot tell you what must be the dread doom of Sodom and Gomorrah, neither can you yourselves conceive its full horror. They gave themselves up unto unmentionable lusts, until at last God was so provoked that He would bear it no longer, and He resolved to destroy the filthy ones, and the place which they had polluted. What their doom must be in the day of judgment I leave you to imagine; but remember these words and weigh them well: "It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for you." Dear boy that you were upon your mother's knee, fair girl that you were in the Sunday-school class, speaking so hopefully in your younger days, you will have to give an account for the delays which are ruining you. It is Christ himself who said to those who heard His word and saw His mighty works, and yet refused to repent, "Woe unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah than for you."

IV. But now, to change my strain, that we may not finish upon so sad a note, let me persevere in persuading others. Notice that the apostle was not hindered in his work by sorrowing over those who rejected his persuasion, but of whom he had better hope. Having spoken a solemn parting word, he said: "Be it known, therefore, unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it." To these Gentiles for two years Paul continued "Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." He kept to his work, but he changed his audience. We also will preach the gospel to those who have not enjoyed Christian privileges. We preach Jesus to you who were not born of godly parents, nor brought up under Christian care. We preach free grace and dying love to you who hitherto have not attended the house of prayer, nor cared to hear the word of everlasting life. If the moral refuse mercy, we declare it to be immoral. We turn with hope to those who have been drunkards, swearers, thieves, harlots, and the like. To the chief of sinners we present the great salvation. To you is the word of this salvation sent: "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men."

Turned To Others,

Ye Far-off Ones,

that dwell out of the reach of the common means of grace, the arm of mercy is stretched out to you. Paul said of the Gentiles, "They will hear it;" and we have the same confidence concerning many great transgressors. I thank God that those who never heard the gospel before have heard it in this great house, and have so heard it that they have at once yielded to its demands, and accepted its provisions. Many who have been without hope, and without God, and without fear of eternal things, have heard the doctrine of free, rich, sovereign mercy, and have turned at once from their sins, and laid hold upon the hope set before them.

Oh that more would come! They will come: "They will hear it." I hope that many such are brought here this morning on purpose to be blessed. I hope they will leap forward to catch at the gracious message. Oh that some of them would cry out, "I believe, I trust, I rest in Jesus"! If it be so, go your way, God has saved you. If thou believest that Jesus is the Christ, thou art born of God. Thou hast been worldly, sinful, abundantly wicked; yet, if thou wilt have Christ now, have Him, and welcome. If thou art now drawn towards Him, come at once, and linger not. "For the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed." May His sweet love persuade you in the things concerning Jesus! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

GEN. GRANT'S GIFT OF A BIBLE.*

ONE summer, during General Grant's second term, the President and several members of his Cabinet with their wives made a cruise in Eastern waters on a revenue cutter commanded by Capt. Fengar. General and Mrs. Grant having accepted an invitation to attend a Sunday-school convention at Chautauqua, went there first, and at New York joined the rest of the party, who had made the voyage around from Washington in the cutter.

Starting from Washington on Saturday, the company were at sea on Sunday, and as they sat in a group on the quarter-deck, Attorney-General Edwards Pierrepont suggested that they hold some brief religious services, and asked Capt. Fengar to send for the books. The weather-beaten old sailor, seing a good chance for a practical joke, asked if a prayer-book would do; and when the Attorney-General said that it would, passed the word forward for "a prayer-book" to be brought to the quarter-deck. In a few minutes two of the sailors appeared, carrying between them a great holystone, and, by the captain's order, placed it before Mr. Pierrepont. The latter, who did not know before that this was a sailor's prayer-book, was at first disposed to be offended, but after a little joined in the laugh with the others.

After having touched at New York and taken General and Mrs. Grant aboard, the cutter went to sea again, and some member of the party was telling the prayer-book story for the President's amusement. At the close of the narrative Attorney-General Pierrepont said that he didn't think Capt. Fengar had occasion to say much, for it turned out that he actually didn't have a Bible on board the ship.

"Is that so?" said General Grant; "then you shall not be without one any longer. Those children up in Chautauqua made me a present of a very fine one, and gave one to Mrs. Grant too. She'll want to keep hers, but I'll give mine to you." So, on returning to his cabin, he sent his Bible to Capt. Fengar. The incident was not told outside until recently, when a number of General Grant's old friends and comrades were dining together and repeating anecdotes of the Old Commander.

HOW TO BECOME A CENTENARIAN.†

THE example of Louis Cornaro, who died at the age of one hundred and one, which has always been thought most instructive, becomes full also of encouragement.

In the first place, it must be remembered that Cornaro was a man of weak constitution. Moreover, from the age of eighteen to that of thirty-five he pursued courses that would have seriously taxed the strongest constitution. Life at thirty-five was a burden to him, because of the disorders brought on by riotous living and indulgence in every kind of excess. The next five years were passed in almost unremitted suffering. He was told by his physicians, when forty years old, that nothing could prolong his life for more than two or three years, but that such life as remained to him might be less painful than the years he had recently lived if he

* From the American Magazine; an illustrated monthly; price 25 cents. Published by R. T. Bush & Son, 130 Pearl Street, New York.

† By Richard A. Proctor, in the Cosmopolitan. A monthly illustrated magazine; 20 cents a month, $2 the year. Published by Schlicht & Field, 29 Park Row, New York.

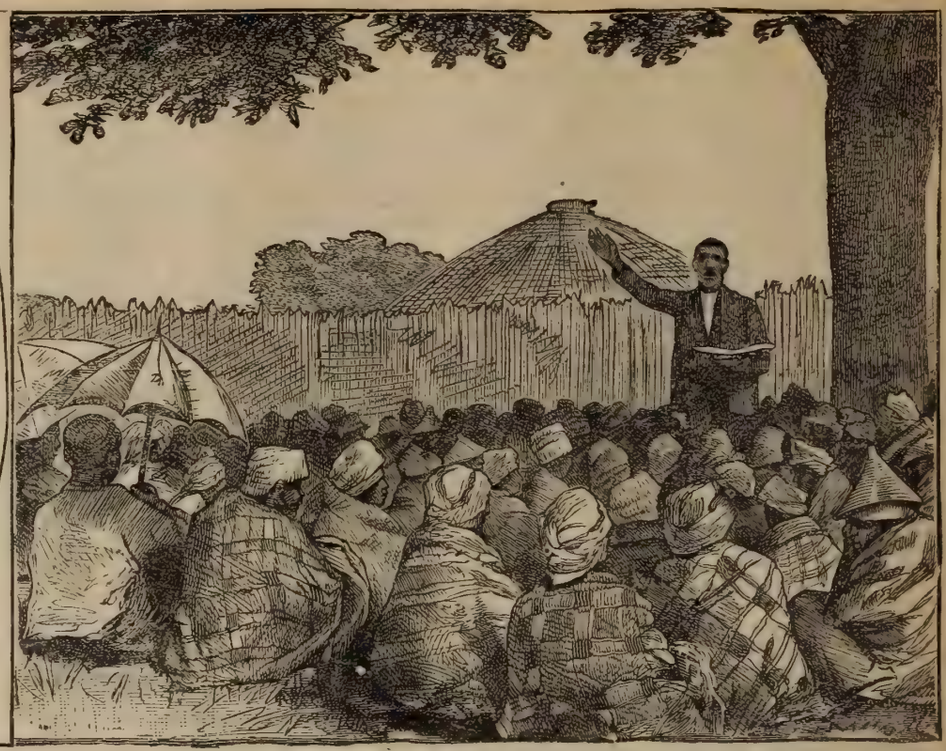
Dr. Celman, President of the Argentine Republic.



A Sunday Morning Service in Bechuanaland. (See page 469.)

would adopt more temperate habits. If ever there was a case where inherited constitution and an intemperate life threatened an early death, this was one.

At the age of forty Cornaro began gradually to reduce the quantity of food, both liquid and solid, which he took each day, till at length he only took what nature absolutely required. He tells us that at first he found this severe regimen very disagreeable, and confesses that "he relapsed from time to time to the flesh-pots of Egypt." But by resuming his efforts after each failure he succeeded, in less than a year, in adopting a spare and moderate system. By this time he was already restored to perfect health. It was after he had recovered his health that he went on to those experiments by which he seemed to show how life may be extended far beyond the usual allowance.

From temperance he proceeded to abstemiousness. When he was within two years of four score his diet was regulated, in quality and quantity, as follows: In four meals he took each day twelve ounces in all of solid food, consisting of bread (stale, of course, for he was not weak-minded), light meat, yolk of egg, and soup. Thus, his solid food, equally divided among four meals, amounted only to three ounces per meal, while he took per meal about three and one-half ounces, or as nearly as possible one-third of pure water.

It must be noted, however, that this extreme abstemiousness, as well as the special nature o the food, solid and liquid, consumed by Cornaro, must not be regarded as absolutely essential parts of his experience, so far as longevity is concerned. If one so weak could live the life of a strong and hearty man merely by reducing his food to what many would call "starvation point," what resources there must be in an abstemous life for those of strong constitution who shorten their lives by what most men call full and generous living.

MIGUEL J. CELMAN,
PRESIDENT OF THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

THOUGH Dr. Celman is the fifth constitutional President of this wonderful country, which now bears the name of the Argentine Republic, he has the distinction of being the first President elected without riot and bloodshed. The election took place in August, last year, and the inauguration on October 12. It was the occasion of much popular rejoicing. Dr. Celman is known as a sagacious, progressive statesman, far superior in ability to his rivals for the presidency, who were mere political schemers.

The country over which he rules is composed of a group of fourteen States and eight Territories, comprising an area of more than a million of square miles, with a population of 3,026,000. It possesses an extensive seaboard on the east coast of South America, and does a large export trade in cochineal, wool, hides, tobacco, etc., chiefly with Great Britain. The country is also rich in minerals, and exports salt, sulphur, coal, copper, silver and gold. It has 4,150 miles of railroad and 7,000 miles of telegraph lines. The constitution is much like our own, but the presidential term is six years. It was framed in 1853 and amended in 1860.

The imports and exports together, aggregate one hundred and seventy-five millions dollars a year, which means a considerable profit to both sides of the trade. The people would be willing to exchange their products for our machinery, and it is stated that President Celman is in favor of extended commercial relations with us. If it were possible to get our statesmen to give to this matter the attention they now devote to appointments in the civil service, to promoting their own influence, and to deals in offices, we might hope for a large share of the trade with the Argentine Republic, which, under existing circumstances, is almost monopolized by England.

CONVERSION IN A JAPANESE PRISON.

THE following remarkable instance of the Holy Spirit's blessing on the unaided study of the Word is reported in the Spirit of Missions: "Sakuma Kichitiro is a graduate of the Tokio University, and a superior Chinese scholar. He belongs to a good family in the province of Bosshiu. For harboring a political offender he was arrested and confined in jail, pending his trial. While he was there a native Christian policeman put in his hands a copy of the Rev. Dr. Martin's "Evidences of Christianity." Sakuma not only read the book eagerly, but he studied it earnestly, and the final result was an apparently sincere and thorough conversion to the truth. Being released from prison on bail, he began to labor for the conversion of others, and opened his house for Christian services and preaching, where in the course of a year twenty-five persons became believers and received Christian baptism, among them, Sakuma's wife, who is an educated woman of strong character. His trial resulted in his being imprisoned for five months. In prison he has steadily labored for the salvation of others, and one of his converts, a physician of notoriously bad character, has since his conversion and release from prison become active in all forms of Christian work. Very naturally, Sakuma takes especial delight in circulating Christian books.

DAVIE'S ESCAPE FROM SAVAGES.

(See Illustration on Page 477.)

THE cry of "Land Ho!" gladdened the hearts of every one on board the good ship Adelaide, one morning after days of storm and darkness, during which none had retained their hope of ever seeing land again. It had been impossible to take an observation for three days, and the ship had drifted at the mercy of the winds and waves far out of her course. The captain, however, believed that the land in sight was to the north of Mombasa, on the east coast of Africa. The ship was desperately in need both of water and provisions, and the captain resolved to go ashore in the hope of obtaining one or both of these necessaries.

A boat was made ready, and the captain, accompanied by his nephew, Davie Matherson, took their seats in the stern, while four sailors pulled for the shore. Apparently the land was uninhabited, but water at last was found, and that was even more necessary than food. A large barrel was filled and was being rolled to the boat, when a movement among the bushes attracted the captain's attention. He watched the spot keenly, and in a few moments caught sight of a dusky form moving stealthily along. It was followed by others, each armed with a long spear and assegais. There was no doubt that they were in imminent danger. Calling to the men to leave the water and fly for their lives, he set the example of running towards the boat. The savages saw the retreat, knew that their presence had been discovered, and rushed after the men at full speed. Happily the sailors had some fifty yards start of their pursuers or escape would have been impossible. As it was, they had barely time to scramble into the boat and push her off when the huge black forms of the ferocí-ous warriors were at the water's edge.

The captain fully expected to see the bloodthirsty men plunge in after them, but they had other designs. They were seen running rapidly towards some high rocks higher up the beach. "Those fellows do not mean us to get away," said the captain; "they are gone for their canoes." So it proved. Looking back, in a few minutes the captain saw them coming, and to his horror perceived that they were coming very swiftly. Now their lives depended on the strength and dexterity of the sailors who were rowing. Unless they could reach the Adelaide before those canoes all their lives would be sacrificed. The captain pointed silently to the canoes, and the men understood his meaning and pulled for dear life. But the boat was heavy and the canoes were light, and besides were in the hands of men who knew how to make the highest rate of speed. The sailors put out all their strength, but they too could see that the race for life would be a close one and that the odds were heavily against them.

The "Adelaide's" Boat Pursued by Canoes of Savages.

Davie sat silently by his uncle in the stern, his face deathly pale, his eyes fixed on vacancy, and his thoughts evidently far away. It was not the mere thought of dying which blanched Davie's cheek. If one plunge into those dark waters would have been the last of Davie Matherson, he could have taken it heroically; but in Davie's ears the mournful music of the sobbing sea kept booming out the farewell words of his favorite sister Jeannie, who had been a true friend to him, and to whom, despite the wild and wayward behavior which had marked his past life, he was devotedly attached—"Ye canna, ye canna gat oot o' God's sicht." Davie felt he could not, and he was terribly conscious that his sins rested upon his head unpardoned. He had often despised the call of mercy, and now the hour of bitter misery had come upon him. He was face to face with death and judgment; he knew it, and his cheek might well be pale.

The boat was by this time nearing the ship, but the canoes had gained upon it during the last mile more than ever. Near as the ship was, at the present rate of traveling the canoes would overtake the boat before it could be reached. The captain saw it, and shuddered. But the race had been observed from the Adelaide, and it was to that fact that the little party was indebted for its escape. The mate, an excellent shot, no sooner realized the danger of those in the boat than he hurried below for his greatest treasure, a repeating Winchester rifle in which he had invested nearly all that remained of his savings before sailing. Taking his stand by the side of the ship he waited until the first canoe was within range, when he fired, and one of the savages fell dead. One enemy less would not have been of much benefit, but the others were seized with panic, apparently having had no experience of fire-arms before. They hesitated, and while they waited the mate sent one more well-aimed bullet among them. That decided them; they turned their canoes and headed back for the shore.

The first thing Davie did when he was safe on board was to go below, and kneeling down, pour out his thanks to God. That escape was the means of his salvation, and when he had found peace through Christ, his greatest comfort and joy were in the new sense that Jeannie's words took, "Ye canna gat oot o' God's sicht."

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 462.)

Invited to Preach—Memorizing a Sermon—Preaching the Same Sermon Twice—An Extemporary Effort—Expounding Assisted—Popular Sermons not Useful—Life with Professor Franke—Relapse into Sin—No Help from a Crucifix—A Bond of Brotherhood—Disunion Ruptures It—An Application to a Wealthy Lady—A Precious Letter.

THE schoolmaster asked me, whether I would not preach in his parish, as the aged and infirm clergyman would be very glad of my assistance. Up to this time I had never preached, though for fifteen months past I might have done so as a student of divinity; for before Christmas, 1825, I had been mercifully kept from attempting to preach, and after Christmas, when I knew the Lord, I refrained from doing so, because I felt that I was yet too little instructed in the things of God. The same reason ought to have still kept me from preaching; yet I thought, that, by taking a sermon, or the greater part of one, written by a spiritual man, and committing it to memory, I might benefit the people.

I now set about putting a printed sermon into a suitable form, and committing it to memory. It was hard work. There is no joy in man's own doings and choosings. It took me nearly a whole week to commit to memory such a sermon as would take up nearly an hour in repeating. I got through it, but had no enjoyment in the work. It was on August 27, 1826, at eight in the morning, in a chapel of ease, in connection with which my friend was schoolmaster.

At eleven I repeated the same sermon verbatim in the parish church. There was one service more, in the afternoon, at which I needed not to have done anything: for the schoolmaster might have read a printed sermon, as he used to do. But having a desire to serve the Lord, though I often knew not how to do it scripturally, and knowing that this aged and unenlightened clergyman had had this living for forty-eight years, and having therefore reason to believe that the Gospel scarcely ever had been preached in that place, I had it in my heart to preach again in the afternoon. But I had no second sermon committed to memory. It came, however, to my mind to read the 5th chapter of Matthew, and to make such remarks as I was able. I did so. Immediately upon beginning to expound, "Blessed are the poor in spirit," &c., I felt myself greatly assisted; and whereas in the morning my sermon had not been simple enough for the people to understand it, I now was listened to with the greatest attention, and I think was also understood. My own peace and joy were great. I felt this a blessed work. After the service I left the aged clergyman, lest I should lose my enjoyment.

On my way to Halle I thought, this is the way I should like always to preach. But then it came immediately to my mind, that such sort of preaching might do for illiterate country people, but that it never would do before a well educated assembly in town. I thought the truth ought to be preached at all hazards, but it ought to be given in a different form, suited to the hearers. Thus I remained unsettled in my mind as regards the mode of preaching; and it is not surprising that I did not then see the truth concerning this matter, for I did not understand the work of the Spirit, and therefore saw not the powerlessness of human eloquence. Further, I did not keep in mind, that if the most illiterate persons in the congregation can comprehend the discourse, the most educated will understand it too; but that the reverse does not hold true.

It was not till three years afterwards that I was led, through grace, to see what I now consider the right mode of preparation for the public preaching of the Word. But about this, if God permit, I will say more when I come to that period of my life.

During 1826, the year following my conversion, I preached frequently, both in the churches of villages and towns, but never had any enjoyment in doing so, except when speaking in a simple way; though the repetition of sermons which had been committed to memory brought more praise from my fellow-creatures. But from neither way of preaching did I see any fruit. It may be that the last day may show the benefit even of these feeble endeavors. One reason why the Lord did not permit me to see fruit, seems to me, that I should have been most probably lifted up by success. It may be also because I prayed exceedingly little respecting the ministry of the Word, and because I walked so little with God, and was so rarely a vessel unto honor, sanctified and meet for the Master's use.

About the time that I first began to preach, I lived for about two months in free lodgings, provided for poor students of divinity in the Orphan-House, built [illegible] dependance upon God by that devoted and eminent servant of Christ,

A. H. Franke, Professor of Divinity at Halle, who died 1727. I mention this, as some years afterwards I was benefited myself through the faith of this dear man of God. About that time I was still so weak that I fell repeatedly into open sins, yet could not continue in them, nay, not even for a few days, without sorrow of heart, confession before God, and fleeing to the blood of the Lamb. And so ignorant was I still, that I bought a crucifix in a frame and hung it up in my room, hoping that, being so often reminded of the sufferings of my Saviour, I should not fall so frequently into sin. But in a few days the looking to the crucifix was as nothing, and I fell about that time more than once.

About this time I formed an intimate acquaintance with a brother, who was also a divinity student; and as we loved one another so much, and were so happy in one another's society, we thought that it would greatly add to our joy, and to one another's benefit, to live together, and that thus we might mutually help one another. Accordingly, in September, 1825, I left the free lodgings in the Orphan-House, and lived with him. But, alas! we were not aware that because God is greatly glorified by the love and union of His people, for this very reason Satan particularly hates it, and will, therefore, in every possible way, seek to divide them. We ought to have especially prayed, and that frequently, that the Lord would keep us together in love; instead of which I do not think that we at all feared disunion, as we loved one another so much. For this reason our great adversary soon got an advantage, by our neglecting prayer concerning this point, and we were disunited, and love and union were not fully restored between us till after we had been for some time separated.

Having heard that a very rich lady of title, residing at Frankfort-on-the-Main, about two hundred miles from Halle, was a very pious person, and, in visiting a charitable institution at Dusselthal, had given very liberally; and wishing much, about the commencement of the year 1827, to help a poor relative with a small sum of money, and also to pay the remainder of the debt which I had contracted for my traveling expenses to Switzerland, I wrote to this lady, asking her to lend me a small sum of money, in actual amount only little above £5, but, as money in the North of Germany has much more value than in England, it was as much as £12 or £15 in that country. Whilst I was writing, however, the thought occurred to me, suppose this lady should not be a believer? I therefore pointed out to her the way of salvation, and related to her how I had been brought to the knowledge of the truth. But I received no answer by the time I might have had one. I would just notice, that for the last twenty-nine years my practice, on account of what I found in the Scriptures (Roman 13:8), is never to borrow or ask for money. And, moreover, I have considered that there is no ground to go away from the door of the Lord to that of a brother, so long as He is so willing to supply our need.

About January 20 I was one day very wretched. Satan obtained an advantage over me through overmuch work; for I was in the habit of writing about fourteen hours a day. One morning I was in so wretched a state that I said in my heart, "What have I now gained by becoming a Christian?" Afterwards I walked about in this wretched state of heart, and at last I went into a confectioner's shop, where wine and ardent spirits were sold, to eat and to drink. But as soon as I had taken a piece of cake I left the shop, having no rest, as I felt that it was unbecoming a believer, either to go to such places or to spend his money in such a way. In the afternoon of the very day on which, in the ingratitude of my heart, I had had such unkind thoughts about the Lord (who was at that very time in so remarkable a manner supplying my temporal wants, by my being employed in writing for an American professor), He graciously showed me my sin, not by severe chastisement, as I most righteously deserved, but by adding another mercy to the many He had already shown me. Oh, how long-suffering is our Lord! how does He bear with us! May I at least, now seek, for the few days whilst I may stay in this world, to be more grateful for all His mercies!

At two o'clock I received a parcel from Frankfort containing the exact sum of money of which I had requested the loan. There was no letter to be found. I was overwhelmed with the Lord's mercy, but very much regretted that there was no letter. At last, on carefully examining the paper in which the silver had been packed I found one, which I have kept, and which I translate from the German:

"A peculiar providence has brought me acquainted with the letter which you have written to Lady B. But you are under a mistake concerning her, both as it regards her character and her stay at D., where she never was. She has been taken for another individual. But that I may lessen in some measure the difficulties in which you seem to be, I send you the enclosed small sum, for which you may thank, not the unknown giver, but the Lord, who turneth the hearts like rivers of waters. Hold fast the faith which God has given you by His Holy Spirit: it is the most precious treasure in this life, and it contains in itself true happiness. Only seek by watching and prayer more and more to be delivered from all vanity and self-complacency, by which even the true believer may be ensnared when he least expects it. Let it be your chief aim to be more and more humble, faithful and quiet. May we not belong to those who say and write continually, "Lord, Lord," but who have Him not deeply in their hearts. Christianity consists not in words, but in power. There must be life in us. For, therefore, God loved us first that we might love Him in return; and that loving we might receive power to be faithful to him, and to conquer ourselves, the world, distress and death. May His Spirit strengthen you for this, that you may be an able messenger of His Gospel! Amen.

"An Adoring Worshipper of the Saviour, Jesus Christ.

"Frankfort-on-the-Main, January 14, 1827."

I saw, in some measure, at the time when I received this letter, how much I needed such a faithful and at the same time loving word of admonition; but I have seen it more fully since. Self-complacency, and a want of quietness, and saying and writing more frequently, "Lord, Lord," than acknowledging Him by my life as such: these were the evils against which, at that time, I particularly needed to be cautioned; and up to this day I am still much—very much—lacking in these points, though the Lord, to His praise I would say it, has done much for me in these particulars since that time.

After having read this letter, my heart was full of joy, shame and gratitude. Truly it was the goodnes of God which brought my heart into this state, and not the money—for that was gone in a few hours after for the two purposes above referred to. With my heart full of peculiar feelings, and ashamed of my conduct in the morning, I left town towards the evening to walk alone in a solitary place; and now, being particularly conscious of my ingratitude to the Lord for all His mercies, and of my want of steadfastness in His ways, I could not forbear falling down on my knees behind a hedge, though the snow was a foot deep, anew to surrender myself wholly to Him, and to pray for strength that I might for the future live more to His glory, and also to thank Him for His late mercy. It was a blessed time. I continued about half an hour in prayer.

After such an experience, it may be difficult for one who does not know the plague of his own heart, to think that I was at that time a true believer, when I tell him that so base was I, so altogether like a beast before my God, and so unmindful of His mercies to me in Christ, that a few weeks afterwards I fell into a wretched backsliding state, in which I continued for many days, during which time prayer was almost given up. It was on one of these days that I rang my bell, and ordered the servant to fetch me wine. And now I began to drink. But how good was the Lord! Though I desired to drink, that I might be able more easily to go on in sin, yet He would not allow me to give up myself to the wickedness of my heart. For whilst in my ungodly days I had drunk once about five quarts of strong beer in one afternoon, in the way of bravado, and once also much wine at one time, without remorse of conscience, I could now take only two or three glasses before the wickedness of my conduct was brought before me; and my conscience told me that I drank merely for the sake of drinking, and thus I gave it up.

It was about this time that I formed the plan of exchanging the University of Halle for that of Berlin, on account of there being a greater number of believing professors and students in the latter place. But the whole plan was formed without prayer, or at least without earnest prayer. When, however, the morning came on which I had to take decided steps concerning it, and to apply for the University testimonials, the Lord graciously stirred me up, prayerfully to consider the matter; and finding that I had no sufficient reason for leaving Halle, I gave up the plan, and have never regretted doing so.

In the vacations, Michaelmas, 1826, and Easter, 1827, and at other times, I visited a Moravian settlement, called Gnadau, which was only about three miles distant from the place where my father then resided. Through the instrumentality of the brethren whom I met there, my spirit was often refreshed.

The public means of grace by which I could be benefited were very few. Though I went regularly to church when I did not myself preach, yet I scarcely ever heard the truth; for there was no enlightened clergyman in the town. And when it so happened that I could hear Dr. Tholuck, or any other godly minister, the prospect of it beforehand, and the looking back upon it afterwards, served to fill me with joy. Now and then I walked ten or fifteen miles to enjoy this privilege. May those who enjoy the faithful ministry of the Word feel exceedingly thankful for it. There are few blessing on earth greater for a believer; and yet the Lord is frequently obliged to teach us the value of this blessing by depriving us of it for a season.

Another means of grace which I attended, besides the Saturday evening meetings in brother Wagner's house, was a meeting every Lord's Day evening with the believing students, which consisted of six or more in number, and increased, before I left Halle, to about twenty, and which, after the Easter vacation of 1827, was held in my room till I left Halle. In these meetings one, or two, or more of the brethren prayed, and we read the Scriptures, sang hymns, and sometimes also one or another of the brethren spoke a little in the way of exhortation, and we read also such writings of godly men as were calculated for edification. I was often greatly stirred up and refreshed in these meetings; and twice being in a backsliding state, and therefore cold and miserable, I opened my heart to the brethren, and was brought out of that state through the means of their exhortations and prayers. "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together," is a most important exhortation. Even if we should not derive any especial benefit, at the time, so far as we are conscious, yet we may be kept from much harm. And very frequently the beginning of coldness of heart is nourished by keeping away from the meeting of the saints. I know, when I was cold, and had no real desire to be brought out of that state, I went a few times into the villages, where I was sure not to meet with brethren, that I might not be spoken to about the things of God. Yet so gracious was the Lord, that my very wretchedness brought me back after a few hours. The Lord had begun a good work in me, and being faithful, though I was faithless, He would not give me up, but carried on His gracious work in me, though it would have progressed much more rapidly, had not my heart resisted.

(To be continued.)

JESUS IN GALILEE.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for Aug. 7, Matt. 4: 12-25. Golden Text ver. 16.

The Effect of the News of Herod's Persecution of John—Christ Comes to the Front—Among Gentiles—A Prophecy Fulfilled—Every Act of Life a Fulfillment of God's Purpose—Futility of Persecution—A Greater Light Takes the Place of the Less—Christ Takes up John's Message—A Definite Call to service—Outsiders Called to the Inner Circle—The Call to Every Man—The Duty is Following—The Promise of Power, I Will Make You—The Loss of the Nets—Loss Always Involved—To Be Fishers Still—Secular Callings Containing the Hint of Higher Service—Christ's Work in Galilee—A Philanthropic Ministry—The Maladies of the Galileeans Still Common—Why the Multitudes Followed.

AFTER His time of sore temptation, "Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee," (Luke 4: 14). "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation," said the apostle James, "for when he hath been approved, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord promised to those that love Him" (James 1: 12, R. V)." "Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations," says the same stalwart, energetic, practical man of God, (James 1: 2). Exercise is as necessary to health as air and food, and the inner man needs exercise as much as the outer man. A minister may sit in his study and draw, out of a heap of commentaries, the best ideas of good and learned men, about faith, but when some simple workingman comes into his neighborhood, telling what God has done for him, and speaking out the truth of God with homely illustrations drawn from the life of workingmen like himself, and when this simple man is used of God to draw to Christ hundreds over whom his ministry has had little power, then his faith is exercised, then is the time for proving if the trying of his faith works patience, and if he can count such a trial, joy. Then it is that self suggests jealous, unkind thoughts; but if his faith conquers, if he sees that God must have a purpose of love in this, if he humbles himself for his own want of simplicity, and takes a lesson from the workingman, claiming the Holy Spirit as his only power, then he will come out of the conquered temptation like his master. His superior knowledge of God's Word, joined with a simplicity given by God, will make him an instrument in God's hands of rare and precious value.

In the Power of the Spirit,

A mother may have the most beautiful theory about the bringing up of her children. God so orders it that the circumstances of her life interfere with all her plans, she is thwarted in everything. The enemy suggests that God is hard, that He does not hear prayer; she is sorely tempted to condemn her husband for not seeing with her, and to lay the blame on her circumstances, which would be, of course, to lay the blame on God. But, in her distress, she turns to God, and He shows her that every promise in His Word holds good, and that He is greater than all the hindrances which press so upon her, and that He is on her side for her children's good; so she rises above things seen and temporal, her faith rests in God, she believes in His love for her children, sees her own nothingness, gives place to God, and comes out of her trial "in the power of the Spirit," stronger in God than if all had been smooth.

To pity ourselves when we are tempted, is the first step towards defeat; to rejoice that God makes us the battle-ground where He will defeat Satan, is the first step towards victory. But, O, how few come out of temptation strengthened. If God cannot conquer us without our suffering loss, He must lame us as He did Jacob, when he halted upon his thigh, but if, from first to last, we let Him have His way, every temptation and every trial is a step forward.

The preparation of Jesus, "the Man," for His ministry was, subjection as a child, labor with His hands as a man, the anointing of the Holy Ghost, and victory over temptation. O, how mistaken an idea man has of that which best fits for the work of God! In our universities and colleges, neither subjection, manual labor, anointing with the Holy Ghost, nor yet victory over temptation are regarded as the prerequisites for the office of a minister of the gospel!

The ministry of Jesus commenced after John was put in prison (Mark 1: 41). John had proclaimed "the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand."

Jesus Preached a Present Salvation.

"The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel." This was a new and blessed message to those who were under the law. It meant, to every one who would repent and turn to God, a present reconciliation. The gospel, the good news of the kingdom, was for "whosoever will," then, as now, he might "take the water of life freely." The way home to God, open this very hour, is the great need of every sinner; a God now reconciled, forgiveness offered now; this breaks the heart of the rebel, and this is what Jesus came to preach. Thus was fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, "The land of Zebulon and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles; the people which sat in darkness saw a great light; and to them who sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up" (Isa. 9: 1, 2). The name of Jesus went out through all the region round about. "And He taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all" (Luke 4: 14, 15). For a time, Jesus made His home at Capernaum, one of the fishing villages on the borders of the lake of Gennesaret. Walking one day by the lake, "He saw two brethren, Simon, called Peter, and Andrew, his brother, casting a net into the sea; for they were fishers. And He saith unto them, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets and followed Him." We have seen Jesus' preparation for His ministry. We now see the preparation of His followers and fellow workers. "Follow me" is the first requisite, and the second is, to be yielded up to Him. "I will make you"—you cannot make yourselves "fishers of men." What is it to follow Christ? We read of a company standing on Mount Zion who "follow the Lamb withersoever He goeth" (Rev. 14: 4). Jesus was yielded up to His Father, He said, "I do always those things that please Him" (John 8: 29). "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me" (John 6: 38), "the words that I speak unto you, I speak not of Myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me, He doeth the works" (John 14: 10). Thus He followed His Father, and He calls His followers to a life thus yielded up. This is not to serve God after our own fashion, but after His. There may be a great deal of devotedness which is not pleasing to God. I have a young friend who is continually giving me presents, and speaking to me in terms of the most ardent affection. Yet if ever I ask her to do anything for me, I find that thing is always neglected for something which she has devised to please me, and which really is only a burden to me. Thus it is with many children of God: they will spend time and money, thought and energy, in and they want Him to bless these efforts. But this is not following, but leading, and all this does not really please God. What He wants is that we shall be supple enough, small enough in our own eyes, to give up the idea of bestowing upon God our time, or money, or labor, as though He were some way dependent upon us, and come down to be really empty vessels. When we are taught of God, He shows us that He must pioneer, not we; He must make plans, and we must fall into them; He must bestow, and we must receive. When we thus take our right place, He makes us real fishers of men, not in name, but in glorious reality. We need to be little enough, not great enough, to be used of God. Peter, again and again, fell into the old idea of patronising and bestowing upon Jesus. "Be it far from thee, Lord" (Matt. 16: 22); "We have forsaken all and followed thee" (Matt. 19: 27); and Peter had to learn that, without the hand of Jesus to uphold him, he was no more than a blasphemer, a swearer, and a traitor. The two brothers did the best they knew how at this time; they "left their nets and followed Him," but they had not yet left their self-life for His sake. Their example was soon followed by James and John, the sons of Zebedee, who left, not only their means of livelihood, like Peter and Andrew, but also their family ties.

Serving God in Their Own Way,

Jesus, with His followers, then went from place to place throughout Galilee, the most despised part of Palestine, "teaching in their Synagogues, and pleading the Gospel of the Kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." Jesus came on earth as the express Image of God's person, and therefore He must manifest God in all His relations to man. "I AM, the Almighty God" (Gen. 17: 1) was manifested in His ruling the wind and the waves; "Jehovah Jireh, The Lord will provide," was manifested in His feeding the multitudes. "I am the Lord that healeth thee" was manifested in His daily ministry, for, wherever He preached, there He healed also, bringing good news for soul and body, for time and for eternity. This was

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

The law was "the ministration of death." "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Ezeck. 18 4); "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." It was vengeance against unrighteousness. The Gospel of the Kingdom was the ministration of life. "The Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them" (Luke 9: 56). Under the law, God sent the pestilence, but Jesus never made any man sick when He was upon earth. Under the law, a man might lose an eye if he had caused blindness to a neighbor, but Jesus came to open the eyes of the blind, and

He Came not to Make Man Sick, but to heal "all that were sick," that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities and bare our sickness (Matt. 8: 16, 17). O, the blessedness of His ministry! The general prejudice against God's way of healing in these days is a trick of the devil to rob the Gospel of its true power. In every age, since the times of the Apostles, when men have recognized the pure unadulterated Word of God as their guide, God's way of healing has been known and experienced. Want of faith or consecration holds men back from taking God at His word. "And His name went throughout all Syria," not Galilee only, "and they brought unto Him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatics, and those that had the palsy; and He healeth them." What a sight! The paralyzed, with their helpless limbs, the cancerous with their terrible wounds, the dropsical with their inflated bodies and painful breath, the consumptive cough, and the lepers' sad wail, "Unclean, Unclean"—such were the sights and sounds wherever Jesus came. But "how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of Him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace." The glad song of Isaiah 35: 3-6, was fulfilled; the weak hands were strengthened, the feeble knees confirmed, the fearful hearted took courage, the eyes of the blind were opened, the ears of the deaf unstopped, the lame man leapt as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sang. No wonder that "great multitudes" followed Jesus, "from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judæa, and from beyond Jordan."

Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a Monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to Mrs. M. Baxter, 10 Drayton Park, Highbury, London, England, or to the manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York. The copies will be mailed each month, direct from Bethshan, London, to American subscribers.

HE KNOWETH BEST.

What if the way seems long and weary
Thy tired feet are forced to tread?
Some day thou shalt look back with wonder,
And say, "My steps were gently led,
The way was short."

What if the rough stones wound thee sorely,
And to thy pathway terrors lend?
Turf soft and green thou wilt find only,
When thou hast reached thy journey's end,
Where thou shalt rest.

What if thou seest more of shadow
About thy path than sunshine's light?
The days that are but gray and cloudy,
End sometimes with a radiance bright,
At sunset time.

What if the work be very heavy
Thou doest now with many fears?
When all thy work slips from thy fingers,
Thine own shall say with falling tears,
They were brave hands.

What if the things thou most desirest
Are given to those who prize them not?
Perhaps some day thou shalt see clearly
That they would not have blessed thy lot.
He knoweth best.

What if thou fain wouldst shift the burden
In sorrow thou hast borne so long?
Before thee lies the crystal pavement,
There shalt thou cast it with a song.
Thou canst but wait.

What if the blessing of God's favor
Seems held from thee, thy work to crown?
Some day thou shalt see that His mercy
Did forever and aye shine down
On thy faint heart.

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form for general distribution at twenty-five cents per hundred.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of
J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

SPAIN
AND SPANISH AMERICA
ILLUSTRATED.

A most beautifully illustrated new work on Spain and Spanish America, edited by Bishop Riley—sold in parts—each part complete in itself and sold separately. The proceeds dedicated to aiding christian work in Mexico. Part I. now ready. Sent to any address on the receipt of price, fifty cents. In asking for it mail your requests to J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York, inclosing fifty cents and the words: "Send Spain and Spanish America, illustrated, to"—and then give your address.

"Demonology or Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern."—"An effective weapon."—"A sword of fire."—"Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Startling disclosures.—History facts and data.—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

Lactated Food

The Mother's Favorite.

Send for our Circular entitled
"LETTERS from MOTHERS,"
which contains a large number of letters, many of which say the life of their baby was saved by the use of LACTATED FOOD.

Read these letters and, if you wish, write to the mothers and get their opinion—every one will gladly answer.

If your baby is not hearty and robust try it.

LACTATED FOOD

Is also a Perfect Nutrient for INVALIDS,

in either chronic or acute cases. Weak stomachs always retain and relish it. Thousands of Physicians recommend it as the best of all prepared foods. Unequalled in DYSPEPSIA.

150 MEALS for an INFANT for $1.00.
Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

THE NEW ORGAN FOLIO.
By HUBERT P. MAIN.

THIS new book has been prepared expressly for the Reed Organ. It contains a thorough course of valuable instruction, a number of useful interludes in different keys, pretty voluntaries, pieces especially adapted for the parlor at home; also, several pages of songs and hymn tunes. Large Folio Boards, $1.50. Sent on receipt of price. Specimen pages free.
Liberal Discount to the Trade.
BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 RANDOLPH STREET, CHICAGO.

MOTH-WAX.

Kills the Moth and the old Moth Miller.
It is a perfect protection of Furs and Woollen Fabrics, and is more economical to use than camphor.
In one-pound boxes containing a dozen cakes. Agents wanted in every city, town and county.
For sale by all druggists.
WM. H. H. CHILDS, 73 MAIDEN LANE, N.Y.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

What Everyone Should Know!

A cyclopedia of Practical Information, containing complete directions for making and doing over 5,000 things necessary in Business, the Trades, the Shop, the Home the Farm and the Kitchen, viz: Recipes, Prescriptions, Manufacturing Processes, Trade Secrets, Chemical Preparations, Mechanical Appliances, Aid to Injured, Business Information, Law, Home Decorations, Art Work, Fancy Work, Agriculture, Fruit Culture, Stock Raising, and hundreds of other useful hints and helps. This book tells how to make and do everything needed in our daily wants. A very useful book for reference to all. Handsomely bound in cloth. 512 Pages.

A Few of the Many Things this Book Contains:

It gives Recipes for Liniments, Balsams, Balm of Gilead, Bitters, Syrups, Wines, Brandies, Harness and Boot Blackings, Blood Purifiers, Camphor Tablets, Cements, Cherry Pectoral, Cholera Mixture, Cholagogue, Cleaning Compounds, Cordials, Cough Cures, Croup Remedies, Dentifrice, Depilatories, Diarrhœa Remedies, Diuretic Tincture, Dysentery Cordial, Dyspepsia Remedy, Eye Lotions, Felon Cures, Fever and Ague Cures, and many others.

It Gives Medical Prescriptions for Abscesses, Acid Stomach, Ague Cure, Asthma, Bald Head, Bad Breath, Bed Sores, Biliousness, Bites and Stings, Black Tongue, Nose Bleeding, Wounds, Blisters, Boils, Boots, Bunions, Burns and Scalds, Cancer, Catarrh Tonics, Chapped Hands, Chicken-Pox, Chilblains, Cholera, Colds, Colic, Consumption, Convulsions, Corns, Costiveness, Whooping Cough, Croup, Dandruff, Deafness, and many others.

It Tells How to Make Harps, Attar of Roses, Baking Powders, Barometers, Baby Baskets, Axle Grease, Beer, Bengal Lights, Blueing, Candies, Candles, Carpets, Castor Oil, Chewing Gum, Cologne, Copying Paper, Court Plaster, Mantel Ornaments, Curtains, Essences, Fire Kindlers, Fruit Extracts, and many others.

It Tells How to Clean Alabaster, Blankets, Copper, Brass, Silverware, Brittania, Crockery, Carpets, Ceilings, Chamois Skins, Chandeliers, Glass Chimneys, Clocks, Coral, Decanters, Engravings, Gilt Frames, Furniture, Furs, Gilt Cornices, Guns, Knives, Glass, Marble, Mica, etc., etc.

It Tells How to Destroy Ants, Grubs, Cockroaches, Flies, Insects, Mosquitoes, Moths, Odors, etc., etc.

It Tells How to Mend Rubber Boots, Iron Vessels, China, Crockery, Glassware, Wood, Metals, etc., etc.

It Tells How to Knit Blankets, Laces, Shawls, Hoods, Leggins, Mittens, Muffs, Over Shoes, etc., etc.

It Tells How to Remove Grease Spots, Marks on Furniture, Freckles, Tan, Vermin from Dogs, Superfluous Hairs, Stains, Dandruff, India Ink Marks, Ink Stains, Iron Rust, Kerosene Stains, Mildew, Paint, etc., etc.

It Tells How to Care for Canaries, Carriages, Brooms, Furniture, Carpets, Harnesses, the Health, Bees, Poultry, Gold Fish, Animals, etc., etc.

For House Keepers. It gives valuable information about Baby Food, to Restore Faded Colors, Dyeing all Colors, Butter and Cheese Making, Pickling, Canning, Preserving, Making Sauces, Cooking all Dishes, Dish Washing, Economical Hints, Facts Worth Knowing, Flower Culture, Fruit Drying, To prevent Glass Cracking, Hanging Baskets, Health, Household Laundry, Medical and Sick Room Hints, Home Comforts, House Cleaning, House Plants, etc., etc.

For Farmers it gives directions about Vines, to Destroy Bugs, Cornerbs, Cows, Crops per Acre, Care of Farm Implements, Fence Posts, Fish Culture, Guano, Hot Beds, Artificial Manures, Care of Bees, etc., etc.

This CYCLOPEDIA OF PRACTICAL INFORMATION will be sent, postpaid, for $1.00. Five Books for $4.00. Get four friends to buy one each, and you will get your book free. Address
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

An Important Duty

Selecting a song book for Church or School is such. The authors of Glad Hallelujahs, Sweney and Kirkpatrick, are practical musicians. A corps of experienced workers assisted them. These know the popular want and need. These helped them to excel all former efforts. But one thought was entertained—putting other books in the shade. Try it.

By mail, 35 cents. By express (not prepaid), $3.60 per dozen; $30 per 100. One sample copy 25 cents.
Further inducements to Schools, Churches and Evangelists. Write us.

T. T. TASKER, SR., PUBLISHER,
921 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

This Magazine portrays American thought and life from ocean to ocean, is filled with pure high-class literature, and can be safely welcomed in any family circle.

PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MAIL.

Sample Copy of current number mailed upon receipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 cts.

Premium List with either.

Address:
R. T. BUSH & SON, Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N. Y.

GET UP CLUBS

AGENTS WANTED (Samples Free) for DR. SCOTT'S beautiful Electric Corsets, Brushes, Belts, Etc. No risk, quick sales. Territory given. Satisfaction guaranteed.
DR. SCOTT, 843 Broadway, New York.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE

A new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents, by J. S. OGILVIE & CO., 31 Rose Street, New York.

Special Summer Prices
IN
Ladies' and Misses' Cambric and Muslin Underwear
And INFANTS' GOODS

We make special mention of the goods in these departments, where will always be found the best goods at the lowest possible prices. Owing to constant changes in the styles of the garments we do not issue any fixed catalogue but will always promptly send our "Daily Price List" upon application for the same.

The French C. P. Corset which we have sold for many years can always be obtained here at the lowest prices.

James McCreery & Co.
Broadway and Eleventh St., N.Y

Ladies' Suits.

Ladies who are unable to examine our stock of these goods personally would find it to their advantage to correspond with us. The most complete information furnished, and careful attention given to special orders.

Lord & Taylor
Broadway & 20th Street, N. Y.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN
In the United States, Canada and England wear
"GOOD SENSE" CORSET WAISTS.
THOUSANDS NOW IN USE.
BEST FOR HEALTH, Economy and Beauty.
Buttons at front instead of Clasps.
☞ Be sure your Corset is stamped "Good Sense."
SOLD BY LEADING RETAILERS everywhere. Send for Circular.
FERRIS BROS., Manufacturers, 341 Broadway, NEW YORK.

"FLORIDA; Its Advantages and Drawbacks." For the above book or free information, address O. M. CROSBY, the author, 76 Park Place, N. Y.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

REPUTABLE
BECAUSE RELIABLE.

All people of Dyspeptic ways
Should learn to lengthen out their days.
When Indigestion makes a call,
Or Constipation, worse than all,
Makes life a burd'n bear in mind,
In TARRANT'S SELTZER health you'll find.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW
ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body while the ball in the center presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES—(avoid Agents and Dealers whose profits and expenses double the cost of every Piano they sell) and send this First-Class UPRIGHT Cabinet GEM 7¼ Octave Rosewood Piano, Warranted 6 years, for $193! We send it—with Beautiful Cover and Stool—for Trial in your own Home before you buy. Send for circulars to Marshal & Smith, 235 East 21st St., N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at 63 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 31. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, AUGUST 4, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF MR. AND MRS. HENRY NAYLOR AND PICTURES OF THE BERACHAH MISSION IN NEW YORK.

EMPLOYMENTS OF HEAVEN. Dr. Talmage's Fourth Vacation Sermon.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

WHAT THE WATCHFUL CHRISTIAN MAY EXPECT. By Rev. H. Grattan Guinness.

A Visit to an Active Volcano—An Underground Wedding—Cheating the Idols in China—Marks on Boundary Stones—A Tumor Removed—A Husband's Dread—Persecution in Spain, Etc.

CURRENT EVENTS—The Ohio Republican Convention—The Internal Revenue and Prohibition, Etc.

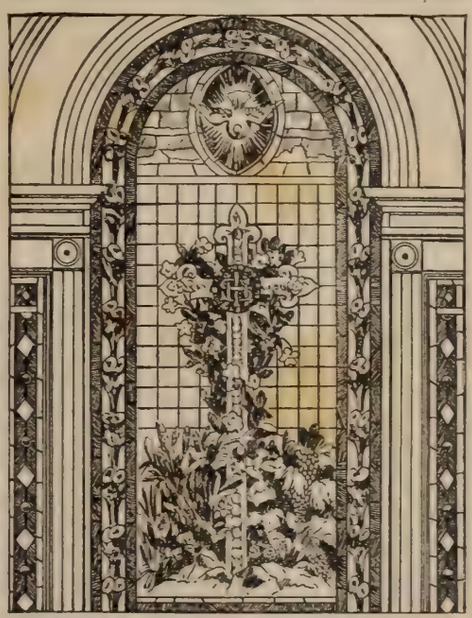
THE BLESSING OF THE LADS. C. H. Spurgeon's New Sermon.

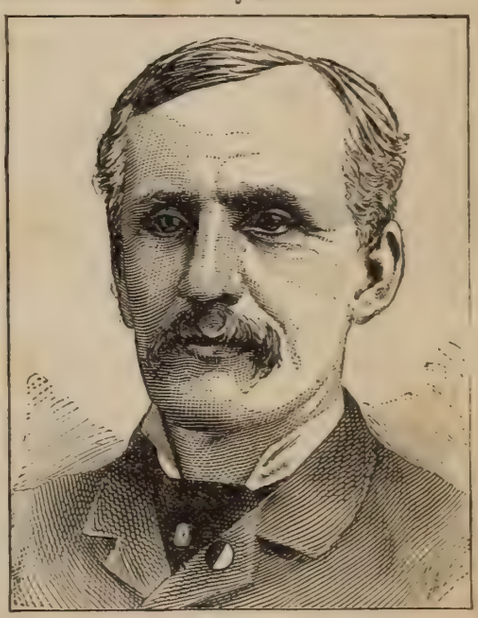
PICTURE OF A CARAVAN OF SHAN MERCHANTS IN BURMAH.

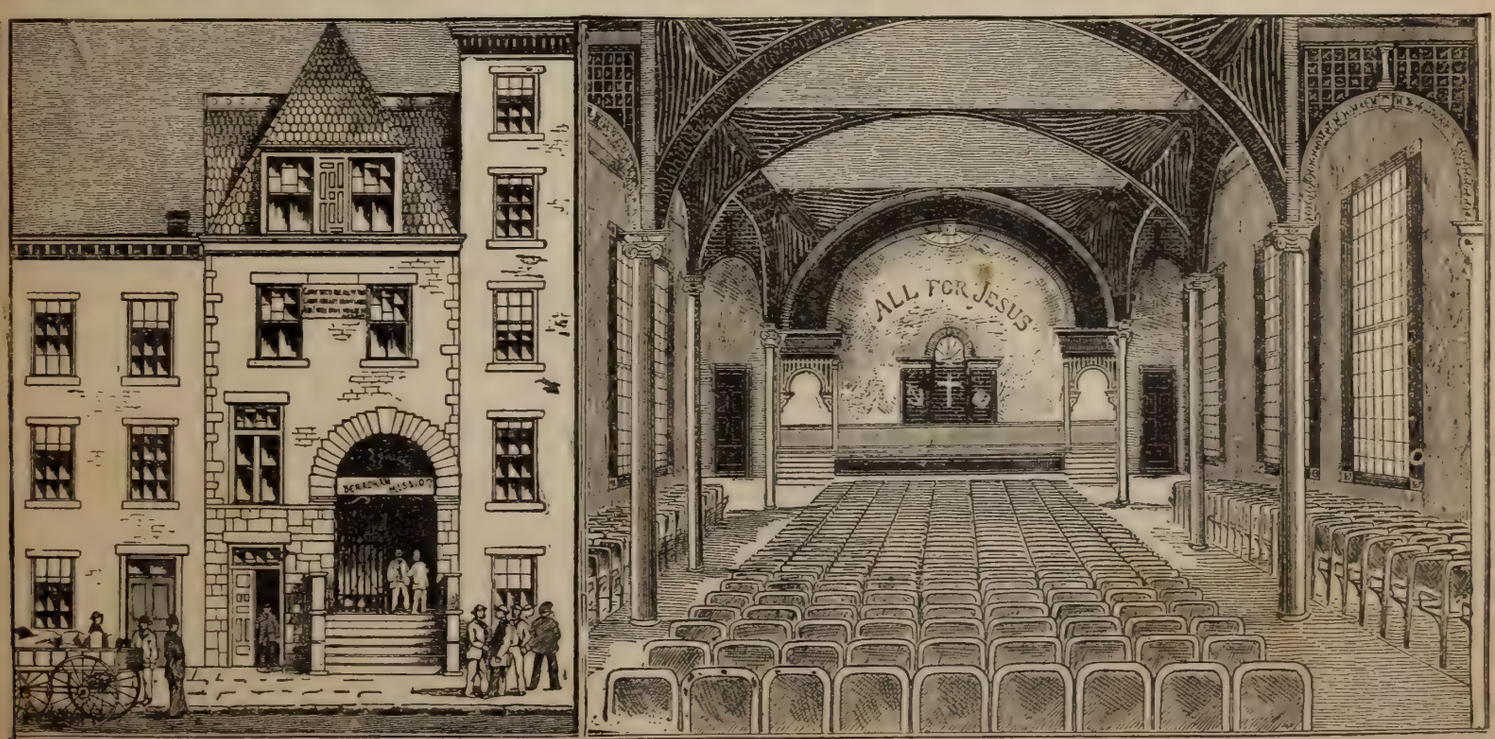
THE HEROIC GYPSY BOY (with Illustration).

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. By George Muller (Continued).

THE BEATITUDES. By Mrs. M. Baxter.







MR. AND MRS. HENRY NAYLOR—Their New Berachah Mission—The Converts' Memorial Window.

MR. AND MRS. HENRY NAYLOR.

Founders of the Berachah Mission, New York.

The Locality of Hell's Kitchen—The Melancholy Propriety of the Name—The Effort to Evangelize It—Mr. Naylor's Career—His Marriage—Mrs. Naylor's Early Piety—Life in Worldly Society—Her Severe Affliction—A Vain Search for Health—A Visit to Dr. Cullis—Mr. Naylor Converted at Rev. A. B. Simpson's Meetings—Desire for Christian Work—Labors Among Dens of Vice—The Berachah Mission—A Window Given by Converts.

THE two portraits on the preceding page are those of the Christian lady and gentleman who have with great courage and at much cost reared the banner of the cross in the crime-stained and poverty-haunted locality of New York, which has become so notorious for iniquity that it has been named "Hell's Kitchen." It is an awful name, but that there is grim meaning in it none can doubt who traverse the district and see the dark, lowering faces of the men who at dusk loaf around the corners of the blocks, and the cunning, cruel countenances of the women sitting at the doors or on the fire-escapes, and the sly, precocious expression that sits on the features even of the children, who, playing in the filthy gutters, utter language so foul that the stranger involuntarily scrutinizes them as he passes, thinking that the lips that could speak such words must belong not to a child but to some dwarfed man, old in the ways of sin. When the wanderer in that locality thinks of those children, and of their training, and of their surroundings, and how they are being prepared as if of set purpose to become the prey of Satan, he does not need to be told why the district has been named

"Hell's Kitchen."

The district lies on the west side of the city, and covers several blocks, between Thirtieth and Fortieth streets, on the North River front. Tenement houses abound there, with rooms into which the sun never shines, and rear buildings behind those, stifling, filthy and stenchful, yet abounding in life, like some horrible rabbit-burrow. Let the cry of fire be raised, or the news of a fight be circulated, and strange creatures of all ages bearing the same dreadful stamp of degradation, issue from these dens by hundreds, a dreadful eagerness manifested in every face for excitement, or for the gratification of their wolfish appetites. If its history could be written it would appall the stoutest heart, for the little that is known of its record is made up of robbery, outrage and murder. It is a horrible, desperate, brutal place, sunk in a barbarism almost as dark as that of some abode of savages in central Africa. The city authorities appear to have despaired of civilizing it, and let it severely alone, save when a detachment of police invade it to capture some ferocious criminal who has been preying outside its borders. It is in the centre of that evil place that Mr. and Mrs. Naylor have built their mission. It is implying strong faith in God for protection and boundless faith in the efficacy of the Gospel as a remedy for the misery and criminality around. Why they have undertaken this work and why two persons with abundant means for living a life of luxurious ease, with refined tastes and the means of gratifying them, should choose to enter into a conflict with evil, and instead of spending their time in pleasure and gaiety, should spend it in an effort to raise their degraded fellow-creatures, is a problem not easy of solution to those who know nothing of "The love of Christ which constraineth." Let us see what light comes from a brief study of their lives.

A Deeply Significant Act,

A Worldly Life.

Mr. Henry Naylor was born in the First ward of New York fifty years ago. His family was in prosperous circumstances, and the boy received a good education at the Mechanics' Society School and Columbia College. At the age of nineteen he was ready to enter the business world, and was taken by his father into partnership in his business. Five years later—in 1861—came the trumpet-peal of war. Young Naylor was among the first to respond to the call to arms. He joined the 71st New York regiment and went into the field with the rank of sergeant. The influences of camp life were not such as he was fitted to bear without injury. When quite young he had attended Sunday-school, but having no other religious training, and having almost unlimited command of money, he had been drawn into the whirlpool of temptation that carries away so many young men in a great city like New York. Fond of the theatre, of smoking and drinking and enjoying worldly society, he and his companions led a gay, frivolous life, and these tastes he carried with him into camp, where, though cut off from some of the means of gratifying them, and amid scenes which might have sobered the most thoughtless, evil associations and relief from the restraints of home had an influence potent for mischief.

After the war he returned with renewed appetite to the scene of his former dissipation. New York presents opportunities unequalled by any other city for a young man of means to gratify vicious propensities, if he has them, and Mr. Naylor, fresh from camp life, unchecked by moral principles or by the restraints of religion, plunged into the vortex with the way to spiritual perdition made fatally easy to him. It would have been a bold man who would have predicted any other end to such a course than utter and irremediable moral and spiritual disaster. But no man passes beyond the reach of God's hand, and in ways that men cannot foresee He can stay their course and call them to repentance.

Marriage.

In 1875 Mr. Naylor took that step which means so much for good or evil in every man's life. He married. It is the popular idea that marriage is a lottery, and certainly our social habits, and the frivolity which charaterizes the opening passages of the story that ends in marriage, tend to give it as much of the element of uncertainty as can be given to any event of life. Few young men or women contemplating matrimony ever set themselves deliberately to apprehend what will be the effect on their future, of the close and constant association with the person to whom marriage will unite them. Without such consideration marriage must be a lottery to the persons concerned, though it is not so to even human onlookers who take the trouble to study character, and knowing which of the two natures is the stronger can predict with some degree of accuracy which influence will be dominant in the family; while with God, before whom all the future lies open, the consequences of a marriage union are not only seen but directed. At first it would appear that the results of this particular marriage were disastrous. Mr. Naylor was thirty-eight years of age, and by that time in a man's life his habits and bent of life have become firmly fixed. The lady who united her lot with his was eminent in his profession, and a devout, godly man, an officer in a Baptist church. In his home his daughter had been surrounded with pious influences, and had from early youth thought deeply about spiritual things. She had conceived an intense desire for vital godliness which would be a real power in her life, not the mere veneer of outward conformance to religious observances, under the cover of which sin and the world may reign supreme in the heart. Though remarkable for rare beauty and for those mental qualities which rendered her attractive in society, and being thus one to whom the world opens all her avenues of pleasure, she turned her back upon them and consecrated her life solemnly to God. What would be the result of a union between two such persons?

The Daughter of a Christian Physician

For some years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Naylor lived a worldly life. Under her husband's influence, Mrs. Naylor abandoned her efforts for the attainment of the close walk with God which had been the ideal of her girlhood, and allowed the sweet allurements of pleasure to draw her into the whirlpool of frivolity. She gave up at last even the semblance of religion and drifted unresistingly on the treacherous waters which have carried so many promising lives to destruction. It was while she was thus wandering far from God, that He laid His hand upon her to draw her back to Himself. The process was a painful one. She was laid from which it seemed that no human skill could deliver her. Unmistakable symptoms of pulmonary disease manifested themselves, and another ailment, which the physicians pronounced a fibroid tumor, was developed. The best medical skill of this country and Europe was sought. Mr. Naylor carried his wife from one physician to another, without obtaining for her any relief. Neither the specialists in consumption nor the specialists in tumors could give any hope of cure. In Germany he was told that her life would be very short; in Luzerne, Switzerland, a distinguished physician declared that she could not live more than three or four months. In Paris, some encouragement was given, and Mrs. Naylor lay in bed eight months, while a renowned surgeon exercised his remedies for her restoration, but at the end of that time, he too confessed his failure, and though he thought she might live for a time, said that she must make up her mind to be

On A Bed of Sickness,

A Confirmed Invalid.

After this fruitless quest, the sorrowing husband and wife returned to New York, and engaging the services of a skillful practitioner, took up their residence in their old home. From this time Mrs. Naylor's life was one of intermittent suffering, brief intervals of comparative health being followed, without warning, by paroxysms of pain, when chloral and other anodynes were administered to obtain temporary ease. Meantime, the tumor was increasing in size, and the impossibility of removing it, either by medicine or the knife, seemed to render an early death inevitable. It must have been an awful situation for one who had once possessed the faith and hope which could have given her comfort in suffering and joy in death, and had lost them.

At this juncture, in the providence of God Mrs. Naylor came in contact with a Christian lady whose faith was not confined to spiritual life but who believed in of all our sickness. The backslider, who was overwhelmed with shame and sorrow, heard the joyful assurance that in the inexhaustable long-suffering of God there was still hope, and that He was ready still to receive and pardon and bless. She was induced to go to Boston and see Dr. Cullis, who confirmed this glad hope. She returned renewed in soul and body, rejoicing in the consciousness of reconciliation with God, of restoration to His favor, and of a complete recovery from her physical maladies. On her return to New York, she found a congenial spiritual home in the Rev. A. B. Simpson's church, and in that earnest pastor a wise and sympathatic teacher who could understand the ordeal through which she had passed.

Christ As The Healer,

It was not possible that this physical and spiritual change in his wife could be without Effect On Mr. Naylor.

If the spiritual recovery was not appreciated by him, the physical restoration was patent and undeniable. He accompanied his wife to Mr. Simpson's meetings and was, as may be supposed, awed by this near approach to a Power which had availed when all worldly means had proved useless. There God revealed Himself to him as a Saviour, and he was deeply impressed. For a time he was held back by the thought of what a Christian profession would demand of him. He thought that he had not the power to sacrifice his wine, his cigars and the enjoyment of the theatre. Eventually he was enabled to give himself to Christ just as he was, and to trust Him for the strength needed to live a consistent Christian life. His trust was not vain. The effort cost him less than he expected. The new life overcame his propensities, the higher pleasures left no appetite for the lower delights which had once fascinated him.

With this new life came the desire for Active Christian Service.

That desire need never long remain ungratified, and in this case Mr. and Mrs. Naylor soon found a sphere for their energies. At that time West Twenty-seventh Street, New York, was the nightly haunt of vicious people of both sexes and was the scene of most revolting orgies. In two blocks extending westward from Sixth Avenue there were fifteen hundred women of depraved character, living on the proceeds of vice. A house was rented in the very centre of this cesspool of iniquity, and in it Mr. and Mrs. Naylor commenced a regular Christian service, which was held every night. It was a strange, almost a startling, thing to hear amid shouts of obscenity and the coarse revelry of the sidewalk, the strains of well-known hymns and the earnest appeals of the servants of Him who was known as the Friend of publicans and sinners. Many a woman engaged in her dreadful pursuit was arrested as she passed, by the singing of some song of praise which she had not heard since the days of her childhood, and was softened by memories of home and Christian associations. Not a few were induced to enter, and many were rescued from their lives of shame. The work is still going on, with the happiest results.

Subsequently the moral darkness of "Hell's Kitchen" attracted the notice of Mr. and Mrs. Naylor, and in November, 1885, services were commenced in a building in West 29th Street, near Ninth Avenue. Of the marvelous conversions which have occurred in connection with this work, mention has been made frequently in these columns. During the seventeen months of occupancy, seven hundred and fifty meetings were held in the building, and over 115,000 persons attended. Among them were many sailors, a large number of whom were converted, and are now leading Christian lives, working for God on their respective ships, and always bringing to the mission, when they come to New York, some friends or associates, for whom they desire the blessing that they have themselves received. So rapidly has this work grown that a Christian seaman was induced to give up the sea for a time, and go with the friends of the mission to the docks, where religious services were held on board ships in the harbor, and much good was in that way accomplished.

The Berachah Mission.

Early this year the growing needs of the mission led Mr. and Mrs. Naylor to look around the neighborhood for a site for a permanent building, better adapted to the work. One was found in West Thirty-Second Street, near Tenth Avenue. On April 30, Mr. Naylor having purchased the ground, the corner-stone of the new structure was laid by the Rev. A B. Simpson, with appropriate ceremonies. Since then the building of which a picture of the exterior and interior appears on the front page, has been erected at a cost, including that of the land, of thirty-five thousand dollars, and was formally dedicated on Mr. Naylor's fiftieth birthday, June 21, 1887.

The building is 19 feet by 40 on 32d Street, running back 55 feet, to a continuation of 58 feet by 55 feet in area. The front is three stories high, finished in pressed brick and brown-stone trimmings. In the rear, a Sunday-school room, 36 feet by 50, and three smaller rooms, occupy the first floor, above which is a handsome, well-ventilated, and brilliantly lighted chapel, 52 feet by 54 and 20 feet high, seating about 400. A free reading-room for sailors, and also a free dispensary, will occupy the first floor of that part of the building facing the street.

One of the most interesting features of the new building is immediately behind the reading desk. This window is a present from the sailors who have been converted at the mission. When they heard of the erection of a new edifice, they begged to have a hand in the work, and when they learned that Mr. Naylor intended to defray the entire cost, they insisted on giving this window as a mark of their gratitude for the interest manifested in their welfare. It is in three panels, the one on the left bearing the device of an anchor, the centre one (a picture of which appears on the first page, between the portraits) of a cross, and the one on the right, of an open Bible, Underneath is the inscription: "Presented by the Converts and Friends of the Berachah Mission." The window cost $140, and is valued by Mr. and Mrs. Naylor as an evidence of the reality and sincerity of the spiritual change which God has worked in these men through their efforts.

A Stained-Glass Window

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Baptizing a Pocket-Book.—"A man, who had been a very stingy man in the beginning of his life, but at last had come to the Lord, resolved to join a Baptist church. At his baptism, as he was about to undergo the ceremony, he took his handkerchief from his pocket and handed it to a friend. While he did so, his pocket-book, which was in the same pocket, fell out. As he stooped to pick it up his friend said, 'Shall I not take care of that also.' 'No,' replied the man; 'let me keep it, for when I am baptized I want my pocket-book to be baptized also.' The Christianity that does not reach down to the pocket is not the true kind. Many people's Christianity is of the head, and sometimes it reaches to the heart, but in how few does it affect the pocket and the purse!"

A Work Eighteen Centuries Old.—The Rev. Mr. Stewart observed at a recent meeting: "A poor man I knew met with an accident; he was carried home, and the doctors pronounced him beyond hope of recovery. The usual ministerial visit was paid, and the pastor, bending kindly over the man, softly said, 'My friend, you are dying; I would exhort you to make your peace with God!' 'Make my peace with God?' repeated the dying man, as if astonished; 'why, that was done by Christ on Calvary eighteen hundred years ago; I rest on that finished work of Jesus; He is my Justifier, and that is all I need.' The man's statement, so unexpected, Scriptural, and emphatic as it was, fairly startled the pastor, but, of course, he was delighted to find that the dying man was in such a happy frame of mind.

A Casket of Valuable Jewels.—Mr. Minto observed: "Some people are very fond of jewels, and like to wear them whenever they can. Others, although they have them, lock them away, and rarely wear them on their person. An old lady friend of mine was in possession of a great many valuable jewels, which she obtained when she was in India. They seldom saw the light of day, being hidden away in a casket. When a very particular or dear friend called upon her, she produced her casket, and it gave her great pleasure to show and relate the history of each shining jewel. I was one of these few and honored friends. But that is not the way God does with His jewels which He picks from the mire of this earth and places in His casket, where they will ever shine in glory of Heaven, 'They shall be Mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up My jewels.'"

A Workman's Sad Story.—"Only this Week I had a paper handed to me from a poor man in this district, in which he asked my advice, and told me a sad story. He was a workman, earning seventeen shillings a week, and had a wife and family; but his wife was a drunkard. When she got his week's wages, it too often almost, if not entirely, went for strong drink. On the other hand, if he did not give her his money, but himself paid the family's debts, then not only did their clothes and their scanty furniture disappear, but, to use his own words, 'she made such a row,' that he had less 'comfort and peace than when she had got and spent it all.' He asked for counsel in his distress. What was he to do? He had heard of places where men could put their wives when so abjectly enslaved by the love of drink, but such places are only for the rich. What was the poor man to do? Is this death-dealing, dehumanizing traffic to be much longer allowed? Have we to stand passively by and see our fellow creatures victimized and demoralized by this all-devouring monster?"

A Young Lady's Confession and Discovery.—Mr. Clarke related: "Not long ago a young lady came to me and said, 'Mr. Clarke, for some time I have been trying to do better, but have completely failed, and fallen far short of the mark which I set up.' 'Then there is no use of trying any longer,' I rejoined; 'I, too, have tried, but it came to nothing. If you are to get to heaven by the law, you must keep it without any flaw or fault whatsoever, for who offends in one point is guilty of the whole. There are only two ways to heaven—by the law and by grace. You have tried the one, and, have found it impracticable, you must turn to the other way, the way of grace. By grace are you saved, through faith.' Happily the young lady took the road of God's grace, accepting as a free gift that salvation which she could not earn, and giving up all her striving, she now rests on the omnipotent arm of Jesus."

A Sweet Farewell Song.—An Evangelist says: "A bright, amiable, young girl of about fifteen years of age, was brought to the Saviour during some meetings which I held last year, and has walked most consistently ever since. When the Gospel meetings were commenced again this year she took a deep interest in them, and on being spoken with at them she expressed her continued faith and joy in Jesus. Not only so, but she found an ever-increasing delight in leading other young people to give themselves to Christ, and devote themselves to His service. But she is now in heaven, and right sure am I that the dear Lord has since called her home. An hour before her death she sang with much sweetness, as far as her strength would permit her, the hymn beginning 'We know there's a bright and a glorious home Away in the heavens high, Where all the redeemed shall with Jesus dwell: Will you be there and I?'"

A Septuagenarian Convert.—The Rev. F. Marrs, of Leeds, referring to a tent-mission held in the locality, relates: "Large numbers of people have been reached who are untouched by the ordinary Christian agencies. Of this class was an old man of seventy years of age, who used to spend his evenings and his Sabbaths in the rum-shop, and who was notorious for his dislike of religious services. He came to the first service in the tent, and his attention was so arrested that for six weeks he was never absent from the services. His visits to the saloon entirely ceased; he became thoughtful, serious, penitent, and was soon led to rejoice in Christ as his personal Saviour. On the last night of the mission at Penny Hill, he spoke to the Evangelist, Mr. M., and said, with tears in his eyes: "I thank God I can now look up and say, 'Though Thou wast angry with me Thine anger is turned away, and now Thou comfortest me.' I hope to meet you in heaven.'"

A Question Before Signing.—Mr. Campbell says: "There is a great necessity for every evangelistic worker to be a total abstainer. I heard of a young lady, an earnest Christian, who, when speaking to a man at a Gospel Temperance meeting, and urging upon him the necessity of signing the pledge, was confounded by the man whom she thought she had persuaded. Turning round towards her as he hesitated, pen in hand, he demanded, 'Are you a total abstainer?' She was not; and all she could stammer was, 'Well, no—not exactly; but, you see, I take wine in moderation.' Her influence was utterly lost. 'Then so will I,' said the man, gruffly, as he threw down the pen and staggered toward the door, for even then he was partially intoxicated. The fate of that man is not hard to foresee; he did strive to call a halt and be moderate, but soon his old habits reasserted themselves with double sway, and he sank into a drunkard's grave, when to our earthly eyes he might have been snatched as a brand from the burning, had that worker been a total abstainer.

EMPLOYMENTS OF HEAVEN.

Dr. Talmage's Fourth Vacation Sermon.

"Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened."—Ezekiel 1 : 1.

Heavenly Visions for the Desolate—A Question often Asked—An Inferential Answer—Present Occupations of Departed Friends—Temperament not Changed by Death—Occupations Various—The Materialistic Conception—I. The Artist in Heaven—At his Old Business—II. The Musician in Heaven—Real Harps—III. The Soldier in Heaven—Enlists in the White Horse Cavalry—IV. The Mathematicians and Metaphysicians Glorified—V. The Explorer at Work Still—VI. The Scientist's Heaven—VII. Professional Men Occupied—VIII. Social People in their Element—Calling on Kings and Queens—IX. The Preacher's Work—X. The Philanthropist's Duties—Worship in Heaven.

Ezekiel, with others, had been expatriated, and while in foreign slavery was standing on the banks of the royal canal, which he and other serfs had been condemned to dig by the order of Nebuchadnezzar—this royal canal in the text called the river of Chebar; had visions of heaven. Indeed, it is almost always so that the brightest visions of heaven come not to those who are on mountain-top of prosperity, but to some John on desolate Patmos, or to some Paul in Mamertine dungeon, or to some Ezekiel standing on the banks of a ditch he had been compelled to dig—yea, to the weary, to the heart-broken, to those whom sorrow has banished.

The Illustrious Exile

The text is very particular to give us the exact time of the vision. It was in the thirtieth year, and in the fourth month, and in the fifth day of the month. So you have had visions of earth you shall never forget. You remember the year, you remember the month, you remember the day, you remember the hour. Why may not we have some such vision this morning?

The question is often silently asked, though perhaps never audibly propounded, "What are our departed Christian friends doing now?" The question is more easily answered than you might perhaps suppose. Though there has come no recent intelligence from the heavenly city, and we seem dependent upon the story of eighteen centuries ago, still I think we may, from inference, decide what are the present Occupations of our Transferred Kinsfolk.

After God has made a nature, He never eradicates the chief characteristics of its temperament. You never knew a man phlegmatic in temperament to become sanguine in temperament. You never knew a man sanguine in temperament to become phlegmatic in temperament. Conversion plants new principles in the soul, but Paul and John are just as different from each other after conversion as they were different from each other before conversion. If conversion does not eradicate the prominent characteristics of the temperament, neither will death eradicate them. You have, then, only by a sum in subtraction and a sum in addition, to decide what are the employments of your departed friends in the better world. You are to subtract from them all earthly grossness and add all earthly goodness, and then you are to come to the conclusion that they are doing now in their best moments. The reason that so many people never start for heaven is because they could not stand it if they got there, if it should turn out to be the rigid and formal place some people photograph it. We like to come to church, but we would not want to stay here to next Christmas. We like to hear the "Hallelujah Chorus," but we would not want to hear it all the time for fifty centuries. It might be on some great occasion it would be possibly comfortable to wear a crown of gold weighing several pounds, but it would be an affliction to wear such a crown for ever. In other words, we run the descriptions of heaven into the ground, while we make that which was intended as especial and celebrative to be the exclusive employment of souls in heaven. You might as well, if asked to describe the habits of American society, describe a Decoration Day, or a Fourth of July, or an autumnal Thanksgiving, as though it were all the time that way.

What they did on Earth

I am not going to speculate in regard to a future world, but I must, by inevitable laws of inference and deduction and common sense, conclude that in heaven we will be just as different from each other as we are now different, and hence, that there will be at least as many different employments in the celestial world as there are employments here. Christ is to be the great love, the great joy, the great rapture, the great worship of heaven; but will that abolish employment? No more than loves on earth—paternal, filial, fraternal, conjugal love—abolish earthly occupation.

The Artist's Heaven.

I. In the first place, I remark that all those of our departed Christian friends who on earth found great joy in the fine arts are now indulging their tastes in the same direction. On earth they had their gladdest pleasures amid pictures and statuary, and in the study of the laws of light and shade and perspective. Have you any idea that that affluence of faculty at death collapsed and perished? Why so, when there is more for them to look at, and they have keener appreciation of the beautiful, and they stand amid the very looms where the sunsets and the rainbows and the spring mornings are woven?

Are you so obtuse as to suppose that because the painter drops his easel and the sculptor his chisel and the engraver his knife, that therefore that taste, which he was enlarging and intensifying for forty or fifty years, is entirely obliterated? These artists, or these friends of art, on earth worked in coarse material and with imperfect brain and with frail hand. Now they have carried their art into larger liberties and into wider circumference. They are yet, but without the fatigues, without the limitations, without the hindrances of the terrestrial studio. Raphael could now improve upon his masterpiece of Michael the Archangel, now that he has seen him, and could improve upon his masterpiece of the Holy Family, now that he has visited them. Michael Angelo could better present the Last Judgment after he has seen its flash and heard the rumbling battering-rams of its thunder. Exquisite colors here, graceful lines here, powerful chiaroscuro here; but I am persuaded that the grander studios and the brighter galleries are higher up by the winding marble stairs of the sepulchre, and that Turner, and Holman Hunt and Rembrandt, and Titian, and Paul Veronese, if they exercised saving faith in the Christ whom they portrayed upon the canvas, are painters yet, but their strength of faculty multiplied ten-thousand fold. The reason that God took away their eye and their hand and their brain was that He might give them something more limber, more wieldy, more skilful, more multiplitant.

At The Old Business

Do not, therefore, be melancholy among the tapestries, and the bric-à-brac, and the embroideries, and the water-colors, and the works of art which your departed friends used to admire. Do not say: "I am sorry they had to leave all these things." Rather say: "I am glad they have gone up to higher artistic opportunity and appreciation." Our friends who found so much joy in the fine arts on earth, are now luxuriating in Louvres and Luxembourgs celestial.

The Musician's Heaven.

II. I remark again that all our departed Christian friends who in this world were passionately fond of music are still regaling that taste in the world celestial. The Bible says so much about the music of heaven that it cannot all be figurative. The Bible over and over again speaks of the songs of heaven. If heaven had no songs of its own, a vast number of those of earth would have been taken up by the earthly emigrants. Surely the Christian at death does not lose his memory. Then there must be millions of souls in heaven who know "Coronation," and "Antioch," and "Mount Pisgah," and "Old Hundred." The leader of the eternal orchestra need only once tap his baton, and all heaven will be ready for the hallelujah.

Cannot the soul sing? How often we compliment some exquisite singer by saying: "There was so much soul in her music." In Heaven it will be all soul, until the body after a while comes up in the resurrection, and then there will be an additional heaven. Cannot the soul hear? If it can hear, then it can hear music. Do not, therefore, let it be in your household, when some member leaves for heaven, as it is in some households, that you close the piano and unstring the harp for two years, because the fingers that used to play on them are still. You must remember that they have better instruments of music where they are. You ask me: "Do they have and real trumpets, and real organs?" I do not know. Some wiseacres say positively there are no such things in heaven. I do not know, but I should not be surprised if the God who made all the mountains, and all the hills, and all the forests, and all the metals of the earth, and all the growths of the universe—I should not be surprised if He could, if He had a mind to, make a few harps and trumpets and organs.

Real Harps,

Grand old Haydn, sick and worn out, was carried for the last time into the music hall, and there he heard his own oratorio of the "Creation." History says that as the orchestra came to that famous passage, "Let there be light!" the whole audience rose and cheered, and Haydn waved his hand toward heaven, and said: "It comes from there." Overwhelmed with his own music, he was carried out in his chair, and as he came to the door he spread his hand toward the orchestra as in benediction. Haydn was right when he waved his hand toward heaven and said, "It comes from there." Music was born in heaven, and it will ever have its highest throne in heaven; and I want you to understand that our departed friends who were passionately fond of music here, are now at the headquarters of harmony. I think that the grand old tunes that died when your grandfathers died, have gone with them to heaven.

The Soldier's Heaven.

III. Again, I remark that those of our departed Christian friends who in this world had very strong military spirit are now in armies Celestial and out on bloodless battle. There are hundreds of people born soldiers. They cannot help it. They belong to regiments in time of peace. They cannot hear a drum or fife without trying to keep step to the music. They are Christians, and when they fight, they fight on the right side. Now when these, our Christian friends who had natural military spirit, entered heaven, they entered the celestial army.

The door of heaven hardly opens but you hear a military demonstration. David cried out: "The chariots of God are twenty thousand." Elisha saw the mountains filled with celestial cavalry. St. John said: "The armies which are in heaven followed Him on white horses." Now, when those who had the military spirit on earth entered glory, I suppose in some heavenly campaign, they volunteered right away. There must needs be in heaven soldiers with a soldierly spirit. There are grand parade days when the King reviews the troops. There must be armed escort sent out to bring up from earth to heaven those who were more than conquerors. There must be crusades ever being fitted out for some part of God's dominion—battles, bloodless, groanless, painless; angels of evil to be fought down and fought back. Other rebellious worlds to be conquered. Worlds to be put to the torch. Worlds to be saved. Worlds to be demolished. Worlds to be sunk. Worlds to be hoisted.

They Right Away Enlisted

Besides that, in our own world there are battles for the right and against the wrong, where we must have the heavenly military.

That is what keeps us Christian reformers so buoyant. So few good men against so many bad men, so few churches against so many grog-shops, so few pure printing-presses against so many polluted printing-presses; and yet we are bouyant and courageous, because while we know that the armies of evil in the world are larger in numbers than the army of the truth, there are celestial cohorts in the air fighting on our side.

I have not so much faith in the army on the ground as I have in the army in the air. O God! open our eyes that we may see them. The military spirits that went up from earth to join the military spirits before the throne—Joshua and Caleb and Gideon and David and Samson, and the hundreds of Christian warriors who on earth fought with fleshly arm, and now having gone up on high are coming down the hills of heaven ready to fight among the invisibles. Yonder they are—coming, coming. Did you not hear them as they swept by?

Mathematicians and Metaphysicians.

IV. But what are our mathematical friends to do in the next world? They found their joy and their delight in mathematics. There was more poetry for them in Euclid than in John Milton. They were as passionately fond of mathematics as Plato, who wrote over his door, "Let no one enter here who is not acquainted with geometry." What are they doing now? They are busy with figures yet. No place in all the universe like heaven for figures. Numbers infinite, distances infinite, calculations infinite. The didactic Dr. Dick said he really thought that the redeemed in heaven spent some of their time with the higher branches of mathematics.

So of our transferred and transported metaphysicians. What are they doing now? Studying the human mind, only under better circumstances than they used to study it. They used to study the mind sheathed in the dull human body. Now the spirit is unsheathed—now they are studying the sword outside the scabbard. Have you any doubt about what Sir William Hamilton is doing in heaven, or what Jonathan Edwards is doing in heaven, or the multitudes on earth who had a passion for metaphysics, sanctified by the grace of God? No difficulty in guessing. Metaphysics, glorious metaphysics, everlasting metaphysics!

Work For Explorers.

V. What are our departed Christian friends who are explorers doing now? Exploring yet, but with lightning locomotion, with vision microscopic and telescopic at the same time. A continent at a glance. A world in a second. A planetary system in a day. Christian John Franklin no more in disabled Erebus pushing toward the North Pole; Christian De Long no more trying to free blockaded Jeannette from the ice; Christian Livingstone no more amid African malarias trying to make revelation of a dark continent; but all of them in the twinkling of an eye taking in that which was unapproachable. Mont Blanc scaled without alpenstock. The coral depths of the ocean explored without a diving-bell. The mountains opened without Sir Humphrey Davy's safety lamp.

The Scientist's Occupation.

VI. What are our departed friends who found their chief joy in study doing now? Studying yet, but instead of a few thousand volumes on a few shelves, all the volumes of the universe open before them—geologic, ornithologic, conchologic, botanic, astronomic, philosophic. No more need of Leyden-jars, or voltaic-piles, or electric batteries, standing as they do face to face with the facts of the universe.

What are the historians doing now? Studying history yet, but not the history of a few centuries of our planet only, but the history of the eternities—whole millenniums before Xenophon or Herodotus or Moses or Adam was born. History of one world, history of all worlds.

What are our departed astronomers doing? Studying astronomy yet, but not through the dull lens of earthly observatory, but with one stroke of wing going right out to Jupiter and Mars and Mercury and Saturn and Orion and the Pleiades—overtaking and passing swiftest comet in their flight. Herschel died a Christian. Have you any doubt about what Herschel is doing? Isaac Newton died a Christian. Have you any doubt about what Isaac Newton is doing? Joseph Henry died a Christian. Have you any doubt about what Joseph Henry is doing? They were in discussion, all these astronomers of earth, about what the aurora borealis was, and none of them could guess. They know now; they have been to see for themselves.

What are our departed Christian chemists doing? Following out following out and following out forever. Since they died they have solved ten thousand questions which once puzzled the earthly laboratory. They stand on the other side of the thin wall of electricity, the wall that seems to divide the physical from the spiritual world, the thin wall of electricity, so thin the wall that ever and anon it seems to be almost broken through—broken through from our side by telephonic and telegraphic apparatus, broken through from the other side by strange influences which men in their ignorance call spiritualistic manifestations. All that matter cleared up. Agassiz standing amid his student explorers down in Brazil coming across some great novelty in the rocks, taking off his hat and saying: "Gentlemen, let us pray; we must have divine illumination; we want wisdom from the Creator to study these rocks; He made them; let us pray"—Agassiz going right on with his studies forever.

Their Own Science,

The Professions in Heaven.

VII. But what are the men of the law, who in this world found their chief joy in the legal profession—what are they doing now? Studying law in a universe where everything is controlled by law, from flight of humming-bird to flight of world—law, not dry and hard and drudging, but righteous and magnificent law, before which man and cherub and seraph and archangel and God Himself bow. The chain of law long enough to wind around the immensities and infinity and eternity. Chain of law. What a place to study law, where all the links of the chain are in the hand!

What are our departed Christian friends who in this world had their joy in the healing art, doing now? Busy at their old business. No sickness in Heaven, but plenty of sickness on earth, plenty of wounds in the different parts of God's dominion to be healed and medicated. I should not wonder if my old friend Dr. John Brown, who died in Edinburgh—John Brown, the author of "Rab and His Friends"—John Brown, who was as humble a Christian as he was skillful as physician, and world-renowned author—I should not wonder if he had been back again to see some of his old patients. Those who had their joy in healing the sickness and the woes of earth, gone up to Heaven, are come forth again for benignant medicament.

VIII. But what are our friends who found their chief joy in conversation and in sociality doing now? In brighter conversation there and in grander sociality.

What a Place to Visit in, where your next-door neighbors are kings and queens. You yourselves kingly and queenly. If they want to know more particularly about the first Paradise, they have only to go over and ask Adam. If they want to know how the sun and the moon halted, they have only to go over and ask Joshua. If they want to know how the storm pelted Sodom they have only to go over and ask Lot. If they want to know more about the arrogance of Haman, they have only to go over and ask Mordecai. If they want to know how the Red Sea boiled when it was cloven, they have only to go over and ask Moses. If they want to know the particulars about the Bethlehem advent, they have only to go over and ask the serenading angels who stood that Christmas night in the balconies of crystal. If they want to know more of the particulars of the crucifixion, they have only to go over and ask those who were personal spectators while the mountains crouched and the Heavens got black in the face at the spectacle. O! what a place to visit in. If eternity were one minute shorter it would not be long enough for such sociality.

Think of our friends, who in this world were passionately fond of flowers, turned into Paradise! Think of our friends who were very fond of raising superb fruit turned into the orchard where each tree has twelve kinds of fruit at once, and bearing the fruit all the year round!

The Preacher in Heaven.

IX. What are our departed Christian friends doing in Heaven, those who on earth found their chief joy in the Gospel ministry? They are visiting their old congregations.

Most of those ministers have got their people around them already. When I get to heaven—as by the grace of God I am destined to go to that place—I will come and see you all. Yea, I will come to all the people to whom I have administered in the Gospel, and to the millions of souls to whom, through the kindness of the printing-press, I am permitted to preach every week in this land and other lands—letters coming from New Zealand and Australia and uttermost parts of the earth, as well as from near nations, telling me of the souls I have helped—I will visit them all. I give them fair notice. Our departed friends of the ministry engaged in that delectable entertainment now.

The Philanthropists' Work.

X. But what are our departed Christian friends who, in all departments of usefulness, were busy, finding their chief joy in doing good—what are they doing now? Going right on with their work. John Howard visiting dungeons; the dead women of Northern and Southern battlefields still abroad looking for the wounded; George Peabody still watching the poor; Thomas Clarkson still looking after the enslaved—all of those who did good on earth busier since death than before.

What are our departed Christian friends, who found their chief joy in studying God, doing now? Studying God yet! No need of revelation now, for unblanched they are face to face. Now they can handle the omnipotent thunderbolts just as a child handles the sword of a father come back from victorious battle. They have no sin, nor fear, consequently. Studying Christ, not through a revelation, save the revelation of the scars, that deep lettering which brings it all up quick enough. Studying the Christ of the Bethlehem caravansary, the Christ of the awful massacre with its hemorrhage of head and hand, and foot and side—the Christ of the shattered mausoleum—Christ the sacrifice, the star, the sun, the man, the God.

But hark! the bell of the cathedral rings—

The Cathedral Bell of Heaven.

What is the matter now? There is going to be a great meeting in the temple. Worshippers all coming through the aisles. Make room for the conqueror. Christ standing in the temple. All heaven gathering around Him. Those who loved the beautiful, come to look at the Rose of Sharon. Those who loved music, come to listen to His voice. Those who were mathematicians, come to count the years of His reign. Those who were explorers, come to discover the breadth of His love. Those who had the military spirit on earth sanctified, and the military spirit in heaven, come to look at the Captain of their salvation. The astronomers come to look at the morning star. The men of the law come to look at Him who is the Judge of quick and dead. The men who healed the sick, come to look at Him who was wounded for our transgressions.

All different, and different forever in many respects, yet all alike in admiration for Christ, in worship for Christ, and all alike in joining in the doxology: "Unto Him who washed us from our sins in His own blood, and made us kings and priests unto God, to Him be glory in the church throughout all ages, world without end!" Amen.

WHAT THE WATCHFUL CHRISTIAN MAY EXPECT.

By Rev. H. Grattan Guinness.

I. Resurrection—II. The Rapture—Typified under each Dispensation — III. The Meeting — IV. The Marriage — V. Manifestation — VI. The Kingdom—VII. The Inaugural Event: the Second Advent.

I. The first glorious experience which lies before the redeemed, collectively, is and, along with this resurrection of the sleeping saints, the transformation of the living. The Bible is full of this; even nature is full of it. The very ground on which you walk speaks about it. The leaves fall, and with them seeds which spring again. The insects have their transformations, and the most beautiful of God's terrestrial creations are those which have passed through some of the most wonderful transformations. I have sometimes thought that fairer than the beauty of any bird is the beauty of the perfect butterfly—some especially with their lustrous loveliness. Yet you know what they pass through—three stages—first, the life of the crawling worm; then death, so to speak, of the chrysalis, and then the perfected, beautiful creature that floats upon the air, and in the sunshine. Now our lives, or our experiences, are triple. There are the three stages—the stage of life, the stage of death—the intermediate stage—and the stage of resurrection. You will find, if you study this Book, that this threefold order is stamped upon it from beginning to end, and most markedly upon the experience of our Lord, as Him who lived, who died, who rose. We know the first of these experiences, the low and terrestrial. If the Lord tarry we shall know the second: we shall sleep in Jesus. And when He comes again, then will follow the third experience—that of resurrection.

Resurrection;

II. Then the second stage in that wonderful experience is this: after the resurrection

The Rapture.

Now we are confined to earth; then, when we are fitted for heaven, we shall be set free to enter it, the earth being still the place for graves, as it will be then, and more or less of imperfection, and, indeed, the scene of judgment—the Church is to be taken out of it. When Jesus comes He will not wait to descend to this earth to remove His people. He will remove them before He reaches the earth. Let us try to be as clear as we can upon this. The air—what is that? People tell us that the atmosphere may be perhaps some two hundred miles in height; an enormous height when compared to our highest mountains, and it may be higher than that. There is plenty of room for the Church to meet Christ in the air. It may be the Church will meet Christ beyond the boundaries of that physical envelope of the world. The Church, when Jesus comes, is to ascend; when He descends she ascends. He is free of that upper heaven. When He rose from the dead, after lingering a certain season on earth, He visibly ascended, and a cloud received Him out of their sight.

In earlier times, in the Jewish dispensation, Elijah ascended; and in earlier times still, in the patriarchal age, Enoch ascended. So, in connection with each dispensation, patriarchal, Jewish and Christian, there is a rapture. In patriarchal times the rapture of the seventh from Adam; in Jewish times the rapture of Elijah; in Christian times the rapture of the Church. What will it be? Is it any use for me to try to say? Still, thought travels on. Oh, what will it be in this perfected form to be set free from this terrestrial life, and then swiftly to ascend, and ascend, earth fading beneath us, and the whole Church gathered and glorified!

III. The next experience is clear. What is it? After the rapture,

The Meeting.

The rapture is in order to the meeting. Jesus says, "I will come again. I would not go otherwise. I would not leave you, but to return. If I depart, I will come again and receive you unto Myself." "Caught up to meet the Lord in the air." What will it be for the Church to meet the Lord? And who is the Lord? He is the express image of God. He is One filled with all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. He is One in whom all power and perfection dwell. He is the brightness of the Father's glory. He is full of tenderness; His inclinations are to intimacy with His people. Wondrous condescension! Therefore it is written, "He that sitteth upon the throne shall dwell among them."

IV. Then, what lies beyond? Because it is wonder beyond wonder, and vista beyond vista. Beyond the meeting

The Marriage.

What will that marriage be? There has been a marriage already. He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit. George Whitfield said that the clearest idea he could get of true religion was that of union of the heart with God. I have often thought of that. Our personal experience, as far as it is what it ought to be, has this for its very core—he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit. What will the marriage of the Lamb be, then? I cannot describe it. I can merely give some faint glimmer of its meaning and glory. The marriage of the Lamb must involve this. First, the gathering of the whole Church into unity, and then its association with Christ in publicity, before an assembled universe. There will be a manifest donation of Himself to the Church, and of the Church to Him—a publication and celebration of their oneness. It will be the commencement of a life of association with Christ, of co-operation, a union of perpetual friendship and ceaseless intimacy in the deepest oneness of mind and heart: perfection of friendship, perfection of trust, perfection of love. Oh, measureless vision! this union of the Church with Jesus Christ! The heart is overwhelmed that contemplates fairly what that oneness is, expressed by the marriage of the Lamb. It will be the joyful, blissful and unspeakable entrance of the Church, as a whole, into an experience of oneness which is never to have an end.

V Then, beyond the marriage, lies in glory. There will be the shining forth, the rising of the sun, the rising of the splendor of a day which shall never set, the revelation of the Church in that glory in which Christ Himself shall be revealed; because He shall be manifested, we shall be manifested as the sons of God, as the Bride of Christ, as the associates of His glory, as the heirs of immortality. The manifestation will not only be for the glory of the Church, and Christ in the Church (because He shall come to be glorified in the Church), but it will be for the purification of the world. It will be for the purification of the temple—the terrestrial temple; it will be for those judgments which will usher in His reign. In that Church is to be associated with Christ. If we are His, when He comes in that triple glory, we shall come with Him.

The Manifestation

VI. What lies beyond this manifestation? There lies

The Kingdom.

This is but the porch, the entrance to the kingdom. Do not imagine that you can easily fathom the depths, or measure the heights, or analyze the real nature of the kingdom. Do not run away hastily with superficial views upon the subject. Study the Word of God, and you will get more light. What says the Scriptures concerning that kingdom? It will be doubly double. Among the stars of heaven there are many stars which seem one to the naked eye; but apply the telescope, and you see that they are binary. So as regards certain truths. They seem one to the uninitiated, but those who study more deeply find single truths divide into binary glories. This kingdom is doubly double. It is double in sphere, and double in time. There is an earthly and a heavenly kingdom; a millennial and an eternal kingdom.

VII. Try to realize this, in conclusion, that

The Great Inaugural Event

—the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ—is distinctly placed in Scripture in a certain historical position. It is so placed by Daniel and Paul and John. It is the close of the fourth Empire at the destruction of Antichrist. Everything indicates the nearness of the termination, that we are on the eve of it now. How things ripen; how the chariot rolls; how He is moving heaven and earth. With what haste, that He may gather in His redeemed, complete His work, and clear the way by the Gospel being preached to the uttermost parts of the earth; that He may come to take His people to be ever with Him? Are you all in Him, and are you looking for that Advent? By all its exceeding and eternal weight of glory, compared to which all earthly glories are the merest vanities; by all its powers, before which all other powers wither and perish; by its eternity and perpetuity; by its height, its depth, its length, its breadth, and its divinity, I beseech you I conjure you, count everything else but loss and dross, in comparison with this.

A VISIT TO AN ACTIVE VOLCANO.

The novel commision entrusted to a reporter of the New York Herald of examining the volcano developed after the earthquake at Bavispe in Mexico, has been executed with conscientious thoroughness, and his description shows how awfully potent are the elements stored up within the earth. He writes:

From Bavispe we had our first sight of our objective point—the volcano. A pennant of smoke, trailed by a wind from the low, square-topped peak to the southwest, defined its location; while a dull and muttering roar, almost incessant, told that the forces of nature were at work. The volcano lies about twelve miles from the site of the town, but over such an extraordinary broken tract of country that we realized at once that it would require two days' journey to reach it, and pushed straight ahead without delay. About four miles from the town we came upon some deep fissures in the earth, and springing from one of these, we encountered a geyser rivaling any of those in the National Park. It is in the centre of a circular basin, with sides of sand and mud, and about forty feet in diameter. At intervals of fifteen minutes an immense stream of boiling water leaps out and up to a height of, I should judge, sixty feet. Its appearance is unaccompanied by any special demonstration, but the enormous volume of water falling sheer back into the basin is a spectacle as impressive as it is startling. The geyser spouts for four or five minutes, and then subsides as quickly as it came, disappearing with a mutter that reverberates far down into the bowels of the troubled earth.

On reaching the vicinity of the volcano, we climbed to an elevation from which we could look down into the seething mass of liquid fire in the crater. The elevation on which we stood was separated from the volcanic peak by a chasm of considerable depth, yet there was a continuous humming vibration of the solid rock beneath our feet, and the air was filled with a grinding noise, as though the universe were rended at its foundations. The fiery convulsions were accompanied by dull detonations, proceeding apparently from far in the interior of the mountain, and flakes of gray ashes and fragments of volcanic stone lying all about warned us that the crater might render our position unsafe.

We had a fine view of a short but violent eruption. Warned by a succession of dull reports, we hurried to the highest elevation, and a moment or two later saw a vivid column of flame shoot upward to an immense height. The top broke and fell back, exactly as some clever piece of pyrotechnics; but it had scarcely fallen before another and another column of fire leaped toward the heavens. During the eruption, which lasted about fifteen minutes, there was no distinct earthquake shock, but the incessant tremor and vibration materially increased. A tin cup of water on the ground was half emptied of its contents, and our effects, which had been placed in a general heap, were scattered about promiscuously. Later on we were enabled to trace the course of the molten river of lava. It had poured straight downward over a steep declivity for about an eighth of a mile, where, checked by a gulch of gigantic proportions, it had swerved to the north, in the direction of the mesa, on which was Bavispe. About two miles from the crater the stream stopped and spread itself over a considerable area, where it has cooled in wild and fantastic formation. It is as if some sea, lashed into a thousand waves, and eddies and ragged whirlpools had been arrested and frozen by some necromancy into stone. In color it is dark gray, and so much heat is still retained that it is impossible to approach nearer than to within one hundred yards of its edge.

A WAR IN A BARREL.

A clergyman who was intimate with Bishop Selwyn, of New Zealand, mentions a remarkable incident which he heard from the Bishop's own lips: The Maories were fighting the settlers, and the Bishop went from the one to the other, and oftentimes arranged a peace. One day he was going down the hill from the Maori settlement to where the army was situated, and he saw three soldiers—two privates and a sergeant—who were rolling a barrel up the hill. The Bishop stopped the men, and said, 'What is it?' 'Whisky, my lord.' 'Fetch a hammer.' They dared not disobey, and one went and fetched a hammer. The Bishop took it in his hand, and knocking in the end, exclaimed, as the whisky ran down the hill, 'At any rate, that has stopped one New Zealand war.'"

A HUSBAND'S DREAD.

A PATHETIC appeal was made in India recently, by a husband to his wife, when he found that she was studying the New Testament, and feared that it would lead to disunion.

Miss Caddy, in writing to the Missionary Link, from India, says: "I was asked to go and see a young woman who was anxious to come out as a Christian, and has a child-like trust in Christ as her Saviour. Her home is a happy one; a kind, indulgent husband, and a sweet boy about four or five years old. I asked her if her husband opposed her following Jesus at home; whether she was obliged to worship idols, or do anything contrary to the teaching of God's Word. She said no; that her husband was very kind and let her do as she pleased about these things; that one day when he found her reading the Testament, he said to her, 'That is a good book; read it; it will do you no harm; only do not run away from me!' We had a long talk with her, trying to direct her to put her whole trust and dependence upon Jesus as her Saviour. I advised her to pray for her husband, and to talk freely to him about Jesus, for she said he was one who would listen. He is not in good health, and no one can tell how the Spirit of God may bless her words to him."

THE MARKS ON BOUNDARY STONES.

IN an Elmira, N. Y., journal is an interesting report of the work of the Commissioners appointed to rectify the boundaries of the States of New York and Pennsylvania. An old standing dispute between the two States was finally settled by an agreement to accept the old boundaries, chiefly because many farm-line fences formed the boundaries and much labor was required to change tax assessments, etc. But the old boundary was ill understood, it being just a century since the boundary monuments were erected, and many of them were broken, covered up, or lost sight of. For the purpose of renewing the monuments a corps of laborers was employed in marking the line on the most easterly point where the two States come together on the Delaware River. The monuments are made of Quincy granite, and are about four feet long and six inches square at the top. Heavy creases are now cut at right angles across each—the letters Pa. and N. Y., which are about two inches long, face Pennsylvania and New York respectively. There will be no difficulty now in any person knowing which State he is in; as there was before. The freedom with which Christian people go to worldly places of amusement and indulge in questionable practices, suggests the thought that a similar work needs doing as to the Church and the world to that which has been done for these two States. The practice of wandering as near the boundary line as possible seems of late years to have become increasingly prevalent, and has led to many sad falls which have brought reproach on the name of Christ (Jer. 2 : 19).

CHEATING THE IDOLS IN CHINA.

THERE are numerous evidences found in heathen lands that though the people worship their idols they have neither love nor reverence for them. Two curious illustrations of this fact are mentioned by Dr. Dowkontt in his Medical Missionary Record. He says: "When boys fall sick there are two very curious customs. Sometimes the little fellow is made a priest, and dressed in priest's clothes. His parents think the gods will not make him die when he is dedicated to their service. But they may not want him to be a priest, as he would have to change his name and leave his family. After a time they take him to a temple, and get the priest to burn incense to the idols and chant prayers. When he has finished he takes a besom and chases the boy out of the temple, who comes home and puts on ordinary clothes. Others try to cheat the gods. They put a silver wire round the boy's neck, and leave off mentioning his name, calling him a pig or dog. They imagine the god, who is looking for a boy, will not search their house for one when he hears them speaking only to a dog. All the children have old coins and charms tied to their clothes to keep off the evil eye and drive away wicked spirits."

A VICIOUS MAN SAVED FROM SUICIDE.

A REMARKABLE conversion has occurred near Osaka, in Japan. The convert is a distinguished personage in Japanese society, a descendant of the illustrious Kusunoki. He is living with his mother and his wife in a large and beautiful mansion about twenty miles from Osaka. Until quite recently he has been leading a proud and dissolute life, to the great grief of his mother and wife, and at last to his own disgust and loathing. "Nothing remains but suicide," he said to himself late one morning, as he was lying in bed. While he was thinking over what method of self-destruction he would take, his wife brought a handful of books and spread them out by his side, so that his eye could run over the titles. Among them was one entitled "Suicide, Revenge and War," written by an American missionary in Osaka. He instantly seized it and began to read it, and the reading was blessed to the opening of his eyes to his own great folly and wickedness. He quickly sought and found the man who had written the book, placed himself under his instruction, was ere long baptized, and returned to his home an avowed and happy believer. His large house was at once thrown open for Christian services and preaching by the missionary and the native assistants from Osaka, and he himself has been acting as a lay reader. He has taught the farmers and others who once feared him how to pray and sing, and has devoted one of his farmhouses to the uses of a chapel and a Sunday-school. Already eight converts have been baptized, among them the long-suffering but now joyful mother and wife of this prodigal, who was dead and is alive again, was lost and is found.

A TUMOR REMOVED.

THE following remarkable incident is related in the current number of Thy Healer by Mrs. F., a missionary in Central India: "For nearly three years I have had a small tumor on my jaw-bone—nothing that would ever kill me—but not a pleasant thing to have. The dentist said I would have to go under chloroform, and have it cut off and the bone scraped. A lady friend, a medical missionary, consulted Dr. S. S., and he said by no means to touch it, as I was so weak I might bleed to death, as he had seen this happen in other cases. Well, the other day they anointed me, that I might be made well. I had not the thing in mind, but for a day and a half it was so sore I could scarcely eat, and then it dropped off! I wrote to the dentist, asking him if they ever dropped off, without telling him what had actually happened. He replied he had never known of a case in which the tumor dropped off, and added, 'Did I not tell you to give it into a surgeon's care?' Well, the Surgeon did take it off."

AN UNDERGROUND WEDDING.

A WEIRD marriage ceremony is described in a Kentucky journal. It states that the famous Mammoth Cave was used for a novel purpose not long ago. It was kept secret at the time, to prevent the presence of too many witnesses, but the facts have been described by a person who was present. A clergyman and about a dozen persons were admitted to the cave to celebrate a marriage. The room in which the ceremony took place is fifty feet square and twelve feet high. The roof is supported by stalagmitic and stalactitic columns, the largest of which are called the pillars of Hercules. From the roof hang many stalactitic formations, on every one of which was hung a lamp. On the farther side of the chapel, near the middle of the exit avenue, stand the Herculean pillars, which form two gothic arches and served as a chancel. Beneath the large arch stood the clergyman. On each side of his head hung a lamp, and as the bride and groom approached within a few yards of his subterranean altar they stopped, being near the centre of the room. In the midst of this pleasant bewilderment the minister's voice was heard commencing the marriage service, which had a strangely solemn effect among the magnificent natural surroundings. It was a weird fancy that led to the young people choosing to commence their married life in the gloom of a subterranean cave rather than in the glorious sunlight of the outer world. We may hope that when in after life they involuntarily descend into the darkness and gloom of trouble, they may find their path, like that to their marriage scene, so illumined that they may see there, as they did in the cave, glorious evidences of God's wisdom and power (Isa. 26 : 9).

PERSECUTION IN SPAIN.

NEWS from Spain seems to imply that the lawyers whom Christ reproved (Luke 11 : 52) for taking away the key of knowledge and hindering inquirers, have left descendants who have become priests. Rev. J. M. Vila, the pastor of the Reformed Spanish Church at Malaga, recently commenced a mission in the adjacent village of Puerto de la Torre. He was received very cordially, the people were eager to listen to the Gospel, and it is said by the British chaplain at Malaga that on some occasions over two hundred persons were unable to gain admittance to the little room where the services where held. The village had been entirely neglected by the Roman Church, and the people asserted that they had not seen a priest for twenty years. When, however, Señor Vila opened schools and began to gather a congregation, the priests thought it time to interfere, but in spite of great efforts to counteract the influence of the reformers, the people simply drove them out of the place. The cura then became very angry, and issued a pamplet full of reckless abuse and misstatements. To this Señor Vila replied by a pamphlet that was spirited and severe.

The priests have commenced a civil suit against Señor Vila for "ridiculing the dogmas of the State Church," and, pending the beginning of the trial, he has been compelled to furnish bail for $400, or else go to gaol. This they did, thinking he would be unable to raise the sum in forty-eight hours, and would thus be put in gaol and kept there, while the church and schools would be closed. "These people found their mistake," writes Mr. Bevan, a merchant of Malaga, "and, by the blessing of God, the work will go on, until Christ is known and loved by all."

Five Cents, Postage Free.

END OF THIS AGE ABOUT THE END OF THIS CENTURY,

and its Last Week Passover Week, Ending on Thursday, April 11, 1901,

As shown by Daniel's 2300 and 1335 and 1290 Years—this being the termination also of the 6000 Years from the Creation of Man, and the 2520 Years from Nebuchadnezzar, and the 360 Years from Luther's Reformation, according to the Bible periods—a pamphlet of 29 pages—by Rev. M. Baxter, Episcopal Clergyman and one of the Editors of the "Christian Herald." Author of "Forty Coming Wonders," "Coming Wars," etc. Address Manager "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Decrease of the Receipts from the Internal Revenue tax on distilled liquors for the financial year now closed, amounts to five million dollars. This is a considerable falling off for one year, and its significance is increased by the facts disclosed by the tabulated Government returns just issued. From these it is evident that the decrease is distinctly attributable to the States in which there is Prohibition or local option. This fact must not be overlooked when the question is being asked, "Does Prohibition prohibit?" Another significant fact disclosed by the return is the increase of half a million in the tax on malt liquors in 1887 over 1886. Doubtless a part of the increase may be due to the extensive German immigration, but it implies a considerable increase in the beer-drinking of the people generally, to counterbalance the loss from the Prohibition States. A third fact of note in the returns is the steady growth in the consumption of tobacco. The tax in 1887 produced a million and a half more than in 1886. It is an unpleasant showing that the bulk of the increase arose from the most injurious form of smoking—that of cigarettes. The total return from the Department shows a net decrease of about two millions.

The Ohio Republican Convention at Toledo on Thursday last was chiefly remarkable for its opening of the Presidential campaign. It had been rumored, before the Convention assembled, that Senator Sherman desired an unequivocal endorsement of his aspirations for the Presidency, but as Governor Foraker, who heads the Republican State ticket, is a Blaine man, and as Mr. Blaine has a very large following in Ohio, it was thought that the Convention could not be captured by Mr. Sherman. On Wednesday, however, at the first trial of strength the Sherman men secured control of the three most important committees, and after that there was little opposition. A proposal to pledge Ohio to the candidate of the National Convention and praising Mr. Sherman, but not formally recommending him, was voted down and the following plank was unanimously incorporated in the platform: "Recognizing, as the Republicans of Ohio always have, the gifted and tried statesmen of the Republican party of other States, loyal and unfaltering in their devotion to the success of the organization in 1888, under whatever standard-bearer the Republican National Convention may select, they have just pride in the record and career of John Sherman as a member of the Republican party, and as a statesman of fidelity, large experience; and believing that his nomination for the office of President would be wise and judicious we respectfully present his name to the people of the United States as a candidate, and announce our hearty and cordial support of him for that office." This resolution, however, as Mr. Blaine's friends point out, is of no value unless the districts are influenced by it in choosing delegates to the National Convention next year. The other planks of the platform are chiefly devoted to the advocacy of protection and to denunciation of the Administration in the matter of the pensions and the flags. On the liquor question the platform says: "We point with just pride to the enactment of the Dow law in fulfillment of the promises of the Republican party, and we pledge ourselves to such further legislation as may be necessary to keep abreast with enlightened public sentiment on this question, to the end that the evils resulting from the traffic in intoxicating liquors be restrained to the utmost possible extent in all parts of the State." This, of course, is not definite enough to win Prohibitionists to its support, though it is less favorable to the liquor interests than was the Democratic platform. The Republicans are practically in harmony with the Democrats on the immigration question. They "urge Congress to pass such laws and establish such regulations as shall protect us from the inroad of the Anarchist, the Communist, the polygamist, the fugitive from justice, the insane, the dependent paupers, the vicious and criminal classes, contract labor in every form, under any name or guise; and all others who seek our shores to make war upon society, to diminish the dignity and rewards of American workingmen and degrade our labor to their level." The Convention renominated Governor Foraker by acclamation.

Rumors of an Effort Being Made to Reach an agreement in the Democratic party, on the tariff, are again being circulated. This is doubtless due to the fact, which the leaders perceive, that if any change is to be made, it should be done next session, so that the National Convention may not go before the country in the Presidential campaign with an uncertain voice. As things now stand, the party is widely divided on the subject, and a Democratic measure is defeated by Democratic votes. This renders the work of constructing a party platform very embarrassing. The New York Times, which, as a free-trade journal, takes a strong interest in the question, believes, after investigating these rumors, that the utmost that can be done will be an agreement between the Randall and Carlisle factions to add to the free list all materials of manufacture not made in this country, and a number of the articles on which the taxes now amount to very little, but that Mr. Randall would not consent to put on the free list or to make any sweeping reduction in the tax on wools, on lumber, on salt and coal, and on metal ores, which is what the Carlisle men desire. From this it would appear that the effort which it will be necessary to make to diminish the surplus will not be made in the next Congress on the side of the tariff.

The Death of John Taylor, the Third President of the Mormon Church occurred on July 25. The place of his death is unknown save to a select few, as he has been a fugitive from justice since March, 1885. The announcement of his death was made in the Deseret News, the official organ of the Mormon Church, and was signed by George Q. Cannon and Joseph A. Smith. It editorially charges the Government with responsibility for his death, and says he might have lived many years longer if he could have had his customary exercise and the comforts of his home. Many other fugitives from justice might make a similar complaint. Evil-doing in a law-abiding country is apt to lead to abbreviation of life. Taylor, however, reached his eightieth year, in spite of the complaints charged by the News. He was born in Westmoreland County, England, and was a Methodist minister before becoming a Mormon. His successor will probably not be appointed for some months. Joseph A. Smith, the nephew of Joseph Smith, the founder of the Church, will probably be the next President. Public opinion is divided about the effect of the death on the future of Mormonism.

An Imperial Acknowledgment of Life Saving service has been received at Washington. It will be remembered that in January last, five members of a life boat crew, in Virginia, lost their lives in an attempt to rescue the crew of the German ship Elizabeth. The secretary of State has received through the German Minister at Washington, from the Emperor of Germany, a check for $1,000, and two handsome gold watches embellished with the likeness and monogram of the Emperor, with a request that the money be divided equally among the families of the dead life-savers, and that the watches be presented to Frank Tedford and Joseph E. Etheridge, the only survivors of the life-saving crew. The money and watches have been turned over to the Superintendent for distribution.

Rumors of Strained Relations Between Germany and France continue rife. New regulations with the object of Germanizing the provinces of Alsace and Lorraine have been issued. The most vexatious is an edict which requires that after the close of the present year the use of the French language in judicial pleadings shall be suppressed. The edict also provides that the use of French in judicial documents shall be suppressed at the close of the year 1888. This edict applies to Metz and other tribunals of commerce. The French would appear to be retaliating if the complaints of German residents in France are true. A German resident of Caudry, Department of the Nord, France, writes to a Mannheim journal that the anti-German feeling in Caudry is terrible, and that he and other Germans have narrowly escaped being killed. He and his countrymen are being insulted in the streets daily, and it is hardly safe to venture out. He will be obliged to move to Saint-Pierre, as he has no hopes that the persecution will cease. The Kreuz Zeitung, referring to this letter, says it is intolerable that Germans should have to endure such treatment. "France," it says, "must be made to understand that there is a 'thus far and no further' in the matter."

An Important Letter from the Pope to Cardinal Rampolla was made public last week. It contains a summary of the Pope's views as to the various European governments. As to Italy, he reiterates his claims to territorial sovereignty as an indispensable condition of settlement, all other schemes, he says, being unworthy of consideration. Italy herself, the Pope thinks, would reap most splendid benefits at home and abroad from a settlement recognizing his temporal power. France, the Eldest Daughter of the Church, is menaced, in the Pope's opinion, by serious evils. He trusted those evils would be dispelled through observance of the letter and spirit of the pacts solemnly concluded with the Church. Turning to Spain, the Pope says the first need is a union of Catholics in defense of their religion, in devotion to the Holy See and in reciprocal charity, so that Spain may not be misguided by personal aims. Regarding Prussia, the Pontiff says it is necessary to continue the work of religious peace-making to its full achievement. Great things have been done. The solicitude felt by the Vatican for Prussia extends equally to the other States of Germany, and those States are now, happily, seeking the friendliest relations with the Vatican. The time is past when the utterances of popes excite anything more than interest and curiosity.

Nearly the whole of Ireland has been Proclaimed under the Coercion Bill. This wholesale application of the measure has alarmed the liberal allies of the Government, who were not consulted on the subject. Mr. Chamberlain has warned the Government that the radical vote will not support their action unless the Dublin Executive directed the exercise of the powers of the act with mildness and discretion. The Irish Secretary, Mr. Balfour, made an explanation in the House of Commons, which shows that the warning has been accepted. The proclamations over the greater area of Ireland are not to operate actively, but as a mere measure of precaution. The land bill occupied the attention of the House throughout the week. It is a composite measure, in which some of the clauses are beneficial to the tenants, while others deprive them of advantages which they have.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mr. D. L. Moody's Reply to a Reporter who interviewed him recently in New York, was unexpectedly personal. A reporter of the Mail and Express, learning that he was passing through the city, waited upon him to find out his plans for the fall. Mr. Moody said: "The first thing I ought to do is to evangelize the reporters and newspaper men. They are sadly in need of a preacher's influence, or something to get them to stop publishing a Sunday paper. The influence of the Sunday paper is bad. Why, it unfits people to attend church. They have their minds filled with sensational news from all parts of the world, and cannot listen to a sermon. I am opposed to all this, and think the reporters, the printers and editors should all take a rest on Sunday." The reporter replied; "Mr. Moody, the work is done for Sunday papers on Saturday." Mr. Moody answered, "Well, then, the Monday paper should be abolished. Everybody should take a day's rest. Another thing I want to stop is Sunday excursions. I think the people should have a whole day on Saturday, and go on excursions then. I see revolution and anarchy ahead. It will begin in the cities. The people are straying from righteousness, and while that continues this young republic of ours is growing weak. Show me a strong nation that has disregarded righteousness. We must change, or else our republic will go to ruin, and revolution will be triumphant."

Six Thousand Englishmen are to be Naturalized this year in Massachusetts, if a society that has been organized in Boston succeeds in its purpose. When Faneuil Hall was engaged recently by the Englishmen of Boston for the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee, there was an indignant protest evoked against its being used for such a purpose. The remarks made at the time, orally and in the press, respecting aliens, have had their influence, and a society has been organized by the various British and Scottish associations in the State for naturalizing their members, and all other British subjects who may be eligible for citizenship. Those interested in the movement feel that the proposed action is necessary for their own protection, and, furthermore, is a duty too long neglected. The first steps in the direction of the proposed plan were taken at a meeting held at the Quincy House, Saturday evening, July 16. Thirty-four organizations were represented. An Executive Board was elected to carry out the idea in view, and the inquiries it has instituted have led to the discovery of the fact that there are twenty-seven thousand unnaturalized British-born men in the State, of whom six thousand are entitled to naturalization. All of these will, it is expected, qualify this year. It would appear that they are willing to be naturalized but have not hitherto taken the trouble to apply for papers. It is much to be wished that a similar awakening of conscience to a neglected duty might be noticed in our churches, where many who are really Christians at heart have long neglected the duty of declaring themselves on the Lord's side (Luke 12: 8).

A Man Was Brought Back to Life After being pronounced dead, at Buffalo, N. Y., last week. A physician residing in that city was hastily summoned, on July 23, to the house of a man who was insensible. The doctor perceived that he was suffering from opium poisoning, and it was found that he had been advised to try the drug for a painful disease, from which he was suffering, and had inadvertently taken an overdose. Two other physicians were summoned, but there seemed no chance of saving him, and at last, after various remedies had been tried, his breathing ceased; and the physicians who were present pronounced him dead. The burial certificate was filled in and arrangements made for the obsequies. Before leaving, one of the physicians suggested, purely as a scientific experiment, a curious operation. It was to open the windpipe, insert a tube, and produce artificial respiration with the bellows employed in vivisection. This was done, and the effect was astonishing. The man began to revive, and after a struggle, recovered consciousness. Later in the day he recognized his friends, and before night, he was pronounced out of danger. This is the first time, so far as is known, that such an experiment has been tried, and the doctors believe it is an important discovery, which will save many lives. A reporter, who inquired of them what was the principle of the cure, received the reply, "Simply the result of keeping the lungs filled with oxygen." It appears that although the man had lost the power to inhale the air, his dormant vital organs were revivified when it was supplied to them. That is the case of the sinner; of himself he is helpless, but when God imparts His Spirit his spiritual powers receive new life (John 11: 25).

A Suit for a Conjuring Stone was Tried at Macon, Ga., on July 18. It appeared that a woman named Jane Blanch has a husband who has a fondness for staying away from home, and Jane has been greatly worried about it. Some time ago, while narrating her troubles to a friend, she learned that this friend and her husband had a peculiar stone that had the power of bringing back husbands, and in fact of performing a number of wonderful things. Some of the less enlightened of the colored people believe in conjuring bags, rabbit feet, etc., and Jane said she wanted a piece of that stone, no matter what it cost. After some persuasion it was agreed that she should have a piece of it for $5. Jane paid the money and waited for the wonderful stone, but it was not delivered, and she therefore sued out warrants for the owners, and they appeared before Justice Freeman with the stone they intended giving Jane. The court compelled them to refund the money. It was proved that the stone is a piece of magnetic iron ore, which is generally kept in drug stores, and sold at the rate of seventy cents a pound. Had the woman been better educated she would have known better than to put her faith in a conjuring stone, but, as the frauds exposed in our courts show, there is no lack of faith on the earth, even among educated people. Unhappily, it is exercised on unworthy objects, while it is withheld from Christ, who offers eternal life to those who believe (Isa. 8: 19).

Remarkable Reasons for a Divorce are set forth in the petition which a lady has presented to the court of Savannah, Georgia. The News of that city states that a lady residing near Hazlehurst, who has been married but a short time, has applied for a divorce, alleging that at the time of her marriage, owing to a defect in her eyesight she was unable to tell just what kind of a looking man her husband was, and that since their marriage she finds that he has a wart on his nose, and is even red-headed. Also that he snores in his sleep, and that it is impossible for her to enjoy necessary rest. The third ground is, that he fails to give her the attention that a good wife should have, and that he has never kissed her since the day they were married. Though the court may sympathize with the lady in her disappointment, it will not, unless the Georgia divorce law is very lax, deem the reasons brought by her sufficient to justify it in dissolving the marriage. Neither the wart nor the red hair has been developed since she married him, and she would have discovered them before, had she used the same means for assisting her defective eyesight then as she has done since her marriage. Unhappily, in marriage, as in other matters which are even more momentous, the opening of the eyes comes after the fatal mistake has been made and it is too late to retrieve it. That is so in the case of those who die in spiritual blindness, having neglected the offer of illumination (John 9: 39).

The Discovery of a Lost Gold Mine is Reported from San Antonio in a dispatch dated June 17. it states that the superintendent of the San José Mining Company, of Tamaulipas, Mexico, arrived there a few weeks ago with old Spanish records relating to the lost San Saba mines, and went to Hoover's Valley, on the Colorado River, 15 miles north of Burnett, and took his bearings. Here is a dividing range of mountains known in the Spanish archives as "Espinoza de Juarez" (in English "The Backbone of Judas"), and at present known as the Pack Saddle Mountains. From here, guided by the Spanish records, he instituted a search, and was rewarded by the discovery of a rich lead. The vein is four feet wide, and consists of rich decomposed ore strained with iron. Seventy acres of the land were bought at a low rate and machinery put in at once for the working of the mine. In making the first excavations an old Mexican furnace was found, showing that the existence of the precious metal in that place had been known in bygone times. People who have been living for years in the vicinity are much chagrined that they did not make the discovery. The superintendent would not have found it if he had not believed the records and acted upon them. If men only knew it, they could find treasure more precious than gold, but they do not believe the Bible which tells them how they may secure it (Ps. 19: 10).

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. A. S. Barnes, of New York, has given $50,000 to erect a building for the Young Men's Christian Association of the Cornell University.

A gospel address is given every Sunday by a converted Chinaman, named Tong, in front of a Chinese pagan Temple in Chinatown, San Francisco.

A secession from the Knights of Labor is announced in Milwaukee, Wis. The assembly of brewers' employees has seceded because of the temperance principles of Mr. Powderly, the head of the order.

In the classification of the immigrants who arrived last year according to occupation, clergymen stand third as to number in the list of professions, the first two being teachers and musicians. There were two hundred and sixty-nine clergymen.

The idea of liquor sellers as to what is a good excise bill will be formulated soon. A liquor dealers' convention is announced to be held in Brooklyn, on August 23, for the purpose of framing "a just and equitable excise bill for the whole State."

Twenty-four Indians have made a profession of faith in Christ, and nineteen have been received into the Indian church at Yankton, Dakota, and five to Hill Presbyterian church. Rev. Henry Selwyn Tawanapinwakin is pastor of both churches.

Evangelistic work is being diligently conducted during the summer in Chicago by Major Whittle and Mr. E. W. Bliss, assisted by other evangelists. Funds have been collected for the purchase of a larger tent, in which meetings will be held in various parts of the city.

The education of the sons of the Viceroy of China, Li Hung Chang, has been confided to the care of the Rev. Charles D. Tenney, late a missionary of the American Board, who has been appointed their private tutor. He is the son of Rev. Dr. D. Tenney, of Englewood, N. J.

It is announced that a method has been discovered of making sea-water drinkable. An ounce of citrate acid will make half a pint of sea-water harmless and palatable. In cases of wreck this knowledge may be useful, if every ship is required to carry this article.

The Society for the Home Study of the Scriptures by correspondence, of which Miss S. F. Smiley is manager, now numbers 258 persons in the United States. The Society has arranged for a course of lectures to be given during the summer at Saratoga, N. Y., in connection with its work.

The population of New York City is now estimated at 1,600,000. This estimate is based on the fact that the new directory contains 324,813, and experience shows that each name may be taken as representing a little less than five persons. In some parts of the city the population is in the proportion of 290,000 to the square mile. This is more dense than London, where the highest proportion is 170,000 to the square mile. In several instances fifteen adults were found occupying one small room with only one window.

Christian workers now on their vacation should arrange to attend the international conference for the development and encouragement of practical Christian work, which will be held in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, for eight days, September 21 to 28 inclusive, under the direction of the Committee for Christian Workers in the United States and Canada, who were appointed at a similar assembly in Chicago, in June, 1887. It is expected that many valuable suggestions will be given there for organized and effective aggressive work.

An Excellent Opportunity for Boys and Girls now on their vacation to earn pocket money, now offers itself by canvassing for "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" and selling it weekly from house to house in their own neighborhood. A number of boys have commenced this since the holidays, in preference to doing anything else. Send postal card at once, for terms.

THE BLESSING OF THE LADS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And he blessed Joseph, and said, God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day, the Angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads."—Gen. 48:15, 16.

Joseph's Peculiar Trials—Followed by Peculiar Blessings—Blessed in his Children—Personal Testimony Efficacious—A Blind Minister's Address—Jacob's Testimony in the Blessing—I. His Ancestral Mercies—Ancestors who Walked Before God—The Family Heirlooms—The Refugee Spurgeon Family—A Visit to a Grandfather's Tomb—II. Personal Mercies—Declared He Had Been Shepherded—Only a Workingman—Fed and Led—III. Redeeming Mercies—IV. Future Mercies—Personal Reminiscences—Richard Knill's Prayer—His Prediction Fulfilled.

JOSEPH was one by himself. In Jacob's family he was like a swan in a duck's-nest; he seemed to be of a different race from the rest, even from his childhood. He was the son of old age, the son of the elders; that is, a child who was old when he was young, in thoughtfulness and devotion. He reached an early ripeness, which did not end in early decay. In consequence of this, Joseph was one by himself in the peculiarity of his trials. Through his brothers' hatred of him he was made to suffer greatly, and at last was sold into slavery, and underwent trials in Egypt of the severest kind. But, brethren, see the recompense; for he had blessings which were altogether his own. He was as distinguished by the favor of God as by the disfavor of his brethren.

When Jacob is old and about to die, he gives Joseph a blessing all to himself, in addition to that which he received with his brothers. In the forty-ninth chapter we read, "Gather yourselves together, and hear, ye sons of Jacob: and hearken unto Israel your father;" and they did so, and received as a family such blessings as their father's prophetic eye foresaw; but before this, "by faith Jacob blessed the two sons of Joseph" at specially granted to them. Our text tells us that Jacob blessed Joseph, and we perceive that he blessed him through blessing his children; which leads us to the next remark, that no choicer favor could fall upon ourselves than to see our children favored of the Lord. Joseph is doubly blessed by seeing Ephraim and Manasseh blessed. Dear young people, to whom I now speak, your fathers can say, "We have no greater joy than this, that our children walk in the truth." God himself, next to giving to His chosen the covenant of grace, can do them no greater earthly kindness than to call their children by His grace into the same covenant. Will you not think of this?

A Private Interview

Furthermore, observe that if we want to bless young people, one of the likeliest means of doing so will be our personal testimony to the goodness of God. Young men and women usually feel great interest in their fathers' life-story—if it be a worthy one—and what they hear from them of their personal experience of the goodness of God will abide with them. I recollect in my younger days hearing speak at the communion table, and bear witness to us young people, who had just joined the church, that it was well for us that we had come to put our trust in a faithful God; and as the good man, with great feebleness and yet with great earnestness, said to us, that he had never regretted that he had given his heart to Christ as a boy, I felt my heart leap within me with delight that I had such a God to be my God. His testimony was such as a younger man could not have borne: he might have spoken more fluently, but the weight of those eighty years at the back of it made the old man eloquent to my young heart. We who are growing gray in our Master's service ought not to be backward to speak well of His name. This is one of the best ways in which to bless the lads. The benediction of Jacob was intertwisted with his biography; the blessing which he had himself enjoyed he wished for them, and as he invoked it he helped to secure it by his personal testimony.

A Minister, Blind With Age,

One thing further: I want you to note that Jacob, in desiring to bless his grandsons, introduced them to God. He speaks of "God before whom my fathers did walk: God who blessed me all my life long."

What Our Boys Need

in starting in this life is a God: if we have nothing else to give them, they have enough if they have God. What our girls want in quitting the nurture of home, is God's love in their hearts, and whether they have fortunes or not, is a small matter.

All this is introduction; so now we must come at once and plunge into the discourse, and I will be brief upon each point of it. Jacob's testimony, wherewith he blessed the sons of Joseph, has in it four points.

I. First, he speaks of Ancestral Mercies;

he begins with that "God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk." As with a pencil he sketches the lives of Abraham and Isaac. He does not fill in with coloring, but the outline is perfect; you see the two men in their whole career in those few words—"God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk." They were men who recognized God and owned Him in daily life. I take the expression, "God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk," to mean that He was their God in common life. They not only knelt before God when they prayed, but they walked before Him in everything. When they went forth from their tents, and when they returned from their flocks, they walked before God. They were never away from His service, or without His presence. He was their dwelling-place.

So Jacob spoke of Abraham and Isaac, and so can some of us speak of those who went before us. Those of us who can look back upon godly ancestors now in heaven must feel that many ties bind us to follow the same course of life. There is a charm about that which was prized by our fathers. Heirlooms are treasured.

The Best Heirloom

in a family is the knowledge of God. When I spoke, the other day, with a Christian brother, he seemed right happy to tell me that he sprang of a family which came from Holland during the persecution of the Duke of Alva, and I felt a brotherhood with him in claiming a like descent. I dare say our fathers were poor weavers, but I had far rather be descended from one who suffered for the faith than bear the blood of all the emperors within my veins. There should be a sacredness to you young people in the faith for which your ancestors suffered.

The way of holiness in which your fathers went is a fitting way for you, and it is seemly that you maintain the godly traditions of your house. In the old times they expected sons to follow the secular calling of their fathers; and although that may be regarded as an old-world mistake, yet it is well when the sons and daughters receive the same spiritual call as their parents. I like to feel that I serve God "from my fathers." I feel that it is right and comely that I should be found preaching out of my whole soul the same doctrine which my grandfather and my father preached, and equally fit that my sons should be found, as they are, preaching none other gospel than that which we have received—"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever."

I stood last Wednesday in a sort of dream as I gazed upon my much-beloved grandfather's place of sepulchre. I was encouraged by seeing the record of his fifty-four years of service in the midst of one church and people, and I rejoiced that, could he rise from the dead, he would find his grandson preaching that self-same old-fashioned and much-despised Calvinistic doctrine of the grace of God, which was his joy in life and his comfort in death.

II. Thus we have seen Jacob seeking to bless his seed by bearing testimony to the blessings which God had bestowed upon his house. Now he comes to deal with Personal Mercies.

The old man's voice faltered as he said, "The God which fed me all my life long." The translation would be better if it ran, "The God which shepherded me all my life long."

This shepherding had been perfect. Our version rightly says that the Lord had fed Jacob all his life long. Take that sense of it, and you who have a daily struggle for subsistence will see much beauty in it. Jacob had a large family, and yet they were fed. Some of you say, "It is all very well of you to talk of providence who have few to provide for." I answer, it is better still to talk of providence where a large household requires large provision. Remember Jacob had thirteen children, yet his God provided them bread to eat and raiment to put on. None of that large company were left to starve. You think perhaps that Jacob was a man of large estate. He was not when he began life. He was a shepherd. God was with him; apart from this, he had nothing to begin life with but his own hands. Whatever he received from his father Isaac afterwards, he had at first to fight his own way; but he knew no lack either at the beginning or at the end, for he could speak of the great Elohim as "the God which fed me all my life long." Hundreds of us can say the same. I remember one who came to be wealthy who used to show me with great pleasure the axle-tree of the truck in which he used to wheel his goods through the streets when he began in business: I liked to see him mindful of his original. Mind you do not go and say, "See how I have got on by my own talents and industry!" Talk not so proudly, but say "God hath fed me." Mercies are all the sweeter when seen to come from the hand of God.

Only a Workingman,

I am glad that he went into detail with these young men, for they needed to be confirmed in their fidelity to God. They were in a perilous condition, for they had the entrée of the rank and fashion of Egypt, and were tempted to forsake the poor family of the Hebrews. Some of you young fellows begin where your fathers left off: and, having the means of self-indulgence, you are apt to follow the fashions and frivolities of the period. Oh, that the Holy Spirit may make you feel that you want God with you with wealth, as much as your fathers needed God without wealth! You may come to beggary yet with all your inheritance, if you cast off the fear of the Lord and fall into sin. You who begin life with nothing but your own brains and hands, trusting in your father's God, shall yet have to sing as your fathers sang, "The God which fed me all my life long." Young men and young women beginning life, I charge you to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness.

III. Thirdly, bear with me while I follow Jacob in his word upon Redeeming Mercies.

"The Angel which redeemed me from all evil." There was to Jacob a mysterious Personage who was God, and yet the Angel or messenger of God. He puts His Angel in apposition with the Elohim: for this Angel was God. Yet was He his Redeemer. When he was in his sorest straits, this Redeeming Angel always interposed. He fell into an evil state through the influence of his mother, and he did Esau serious wrong. He fled for his life, and at that time there was a great gulf between him and God. Then that Angel came in, and bridged the gulf with a ladder by which he might rise to God. The kinsman, God, came in, and showed him how the abyss might be crossed, so that he might return to his God. When he was away in Padan-aram he began to sink very low, while chaffering with churlish Laban. Then again the Angel came and said, "Get thee out from this land, and return unto the land of thy kindred." The Redeeming Angel held back wrathful Laban, and when Esau came to meet him in hot anger the Angel specially appeared to Jacob. The Angel wrestled, as a Man, with Jacob to get Jacob out of Jacob, and raise him into Israel. How marvellous was the redemption which was wrought for him that night at Jabbok! Jacob came forth from the conflict halting, but he walked before the Lord far better than before. That same mysterious person had bidden him go down into Egypt with the promise that He would go down with him. It was the Angel of God's presence who held His shield over Jacob, and preserved him from all evil.

Brothers and sisters, let us also tell of the redeeming mercies of the Lord Jesus towards us. He redeemed us on the bloody tree; but He has also redeemed us from our death in sin. Do you remember the place and time when Jesus first met with you? Perhaps not. But blessed be the Redeeming Angel that quickened me into spiritual life! I recall the place and time with pleasure. He redeemed us also from despair; when, under a sense of sin, we could not dare to hope, He came to us and showed us our healing in Hs wounds, and our life in His death. Afterwards, when our corruptions began to arise, and we had a hard battle to believe that such sinners were indeed saved, the Redeeming Angel confirmed our faith, and gave us inward strength. Do you remember too, when that so that you could not see how to provide things honest in the sight of all men; then Jesus revealed His love and bade you think of the lilies and ravens, which neither spin nor sow, and yet are clothed majestically and fare sumptuously. Many a time has the Lord delivered you because He delighted in you. He did not only redeem us when He died, but He redeems us still by His living power. This is the sum of our life: the angel of the covenant has delivered us, day by day, is delivering us, and will deliver us to the end. Do you wonder that we commend Him to our offspring, and desire to commit them to His loving care? Young friends who know not the Saviour, I would fain lead you to this Guardian Angel, this God-like Man, who will save you from all evil from this day and for evermore.

Pinch Came in Business,

IV. Now comes the last point—I do not know if anyone has gone to sleep in this close atmosphere, but if so, let him kindly wake up, for I have somewhat to say which will interest him. Jacob has spoken of ancestral mercies, personal mercies and redeeming mercies, and now he deals with as he cries "Bless the lads." He began with blessing Joseph, and he finishes with blessing his lads. O dear friends, if God has blessed you, I know you will want Him to bless others. There is the stream of mercy, deep, broad and clear: you have drunk of it, and are refreshed, but it is as full as ever. It will flow on, will it not? You do not suppose that you and I have dammed up the stream so as to keep it to ourselves. No, it is too strong, too full a stream for that. It will flow on from age to age. God will bless others as He has blessed us. The stream of divine grace will flow on. Oh, that it may take our sons and daughters in its course! "Bless the lads." Sunday-school teachers, is not that a good prayer for you? Pray the Lord to bless the lads and the lasses, because He has blessed you. There is the stream, it must flow somewhere; pray, "Lord make it flow to my family, and to my class." For thy mercy's sake, gracious Lord, "bless the lads." We need not say in what precise form or way the blessing shall come: let us leave it in all its breadth of inconceivable benediction. May the Lord bless our youth as only He can do it; and if He causes them to fear and trust Him, He will be blessing all of us, and blessing ages to come.

Future Mercies

In closing, I wish to bear a personal testimony by narrating an incident in My Own Life.

I have been preaching in Essex this week, and I took the opportunity to visit the place where my grandfather preached so long, and where I spent my earliest days. Last Wednesday was to me a day in which I walked like a man in a dream. Everybody seemed bound to recall some event or other of my childhood. What a story of divine love and mercy it did bring before my mind! Among other things, I sat down in a place that must ever be sacred to me. There stood two arbors made of yew-trees, cut into sugar-loaf fashion. Though the old manse has given way to a new one, and the old chapel has gone also, yet the yew-trees flourish as aforetime. I sat down in the right-hand arbor and bethought me of what had happened there many years ago. When I was a young child staying with my grandfather, there came to preach in the village Mr. Knill, who had been a missionary at St. Petersburg, and a mighty preacher of the gospel. He came to preach for the London Missionary Society, and arrived on the Saturday at the manse. He was a great soul-winner, and he soon spied out the boy. He said to me "Where do you sleep? for I want to call you up in the morning." I showed him my little room. At six o'clock he called me up, and we went into that arbor. There, in the sweetest way, he told me of the love of Jesus, and of the blessedness of trusting in him and loving him in our childhood. With many a story he preached Christ to me, and told me how good God had been to him, and then he prayed that I might know the Lord and serve Him.

In My Grandfather's Manse Garden

On Monday morning he did as on the Sabbath, and again on Tuesday. Three times he taught me and prayed with me, and before he had to leave, my grandfather had come back from the place where he had gone to preach, and all the family were gathered to morning prayer. Then, in the presence of them all, Mr. Knill took me on his knee, and said, "This child will one day preach the gospel, and he will preach it to great multitudes. I am persuaded that he will preach in the chapel of Rowland Hill, where (I think he said) I am now the minister." He spoke very solemnly, and called upon all present to witness what he said. Then he gave me sixpence as a reward if I would learn the hymn

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

I was made to promise that when I preached in Rowland Hill's Chapel that hymn should be sung. Think of that as A Promise From A Child!

Would it ever be other than an idle dream? Years flew by. After I had begun for some little time to preach in London, Dr. Alexander Fletcher had to give the annual sermon to children in Surrey Chapel, but as he was taken ill, I was asked in a hurry to preach to the children. "Yes," I said, "I will, if the children will sing 'God moves in a mysterious way.' I have made a promise long ago that so that should be sung." And so it was: I preached in Rowland Hill's Chapel, and the hymn was sung. My emotions on that occasion I cannot describe. Still that was not the chapel which Mr. Knill intended. All unsought by me, the minister at Wotton-under-Edge, which was Mr. Hill's summer residence, invited me to preach there. I went on the condition that the congregation should sing, "God moves in a mysterious way"—which was also done. After that I went to preach for Mr. Richard Knill himself, who was then at Chester. What a meeting we had!

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

After More Than Forty Years of the Lord's loving-kindness, I sat again in that arbor! No doubt it is a mere trifle for outsiders to hear, but to me it was an overwhelming moment. The present minister of Stambourn meeting-house, and the members of his family, including his son and his grandchildren, were in the garden, and I could not help calling them together around that arbor, while I praised the Lord for his goodness. One irresistible impulse was upon me: it was to pray God to bless those lads that stood around me. Do you not see how the memory begat the prayer? I wanted them to remember, when they grew up, my testimony of God's goodness to me; and for that same reason I tell it to you young people who are around me this morning. God has blessed me all my life long, and redeemed me from all evil, and I pray that he may be your God. You that have godly parents I would specially address. I beseech you to follow in their footsteps, that you may one day speak of the Lord as they were able to do in their day. Remember that special promise, "I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me." May the Holy Spirit lead you to seek Him this day; and you shall live to praise His name as Jacob did.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A ROMANCE OF PROVIDENCE.*

[The Rev. Charles F. Deems, D. D., LL. D., thus describes the origin of the Church of the Strangers:]

In 1866, before the organization of any church, and while I was simply preaching to strangers, a lady of high character, living in Mobile, when on a visit to New York, always attended our service with her daughter. With them I became acquainted. The daughter was that excellent woman whom Commodore Vanderbilt had the good fortune to make his second wife. I had very slight personal acquaintance with the Commodore, and had not seen him in six or seven years, but so soon as I discovered it was expected, I called and was very warmly welcomed.

The Commodore paid me special attention; we conversed very freely, I did not hesitate to introduce the subject of religion and talk of it—I trust in a natural and proper way. The Commodore catechized me carefully about my preaching, my past history, and my expectations for the future. I answered frankly. One evening in the sitting-room the conversation ran on clerical beggars. I acknowledged that in early life I had had some reputation in that line, but that I deprecated the whole business. "Now," said I, "here I am: have been preaching two years, almost within ear-shot of the Commodore. The rooms which I have occupied have been overrun with hearers. People have often said to me: 'Why don't you see Mr. Lenox, or Mr. Stewart, or Mr. Astor, or Commodore Vanderbilt, and ask them to build you a church for the strangers? they ought to do it for the good of the city.' And yet," I added, "the Commodore here will bear me witness that I have never solicited a dollar from him for any object on earth." Touching his wife, he said, "Frank, that is so; the Doctor never has." And he gave a look at his wife, as much as to say that he wished by that observation to raise me in her estimation. The look evidently said that it had raised me in his. I added: "And, Mrs. Vanderbilt, I never shall; for if he has lived to attain his present age, and has not got the sense to see what I need and the grace to give it to me, he will die without the sight." We all smiled at that, and the conversation changed.

About that time, the Mercer Street Presbyterian Church had negotiated for lots up-town belonging to Columbia College, and had put their own edifice upon the market. My friend, James Lorimer Graham, Esq., had conversed with me about purchasing it, and I had authorized him to offer $50,000. Somehow this had got to the Commodore's ears, but I did not know it.

One Monday evening I called, and he invited me into a little office adjoining his bedroom, and sat down upon one side the table and pointed to a seat upon the other. He said, "Doctor, what is this about the Mercer Street property?"

"Well," said I, "Commodore, only this: it is in the market. They want $65,000 for it, and I ventured to offer them $50,000. It is on leased ground, and I think it is worth about that."

"Well," said he, "how much have you got toward your $50,000?"

I said, "about seventy-five or eighty cents."

*From the History of The Church of the Strangers, in the City of New York. Edited by Joseph S. Taylor (Illustrated). Pp. 247; Price $1.25. Published by Wilbur B. Ketcham, 71 Bible House, New York.

A Caravan of Shan Traders on the Way to Rangoon.

"How do you expect to pay for it, then?"

"Well, Commodore, this is my thought about it: I have been preaching some little time. My work seems to prosper. I shall propose to the Mercer Street Presbyterian Church to let me have their building for six months. I shall preach in it those six months. I shall announce to the people of New York that I wish to establish, on an unsectarian basis, a free church for all comers, especially for strangers in the city—a church that shall be evangelical and undenominational; and I shall appeal for the money in large sums and small. Now, Commodore, if God wants me to stop in New York and do this work, the money will come."

The Commodore looked me straight in the eye, and said, "Doctor, I'll give you the church!"

"Commodore," I said, "I should not like to be under so great a pecuniary obligation to any gentleman that, when I had the guns of the gospel directed against the breastworks of any particular sin, and should see his head rising above them, I should be tempted to suspend my fire or change the range of my shot."

"Doctor," said he, "I would not give you a cent if I did not believe you were so independent a man that you would preach the Gospel as honestly to one man as another. Now I believe that, and I want to give you the church."

We both rose at the same moment, I extended my hand and said, "Commodore, if you give me that church for the Lord Jesus Christ, I'll most thankfully accept it."

"No," said he, "I would not give it you that way, because that would be professing a religious sentiment I do not feel. I want to give you a church. That's all there is. It is one friend doing something for another friend. Now if you take it that way, I'll give it you."

I said, "Commodore, in whatever spirit you give it I am deeply obliged, but I shall receive it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Said he, "Offer them the $50,000 cash. The property is worth it, and always wil be worth it. Fix the day for the transfer."

Through my friend, General Graham, this was done. The Commodore went to Saratoga. I communicated to him the day when the papers were to be ready. He directed me to call at his office, which I did, and when I entered his office his clerk, Mr. Wardell, said, "Doctor, here is a package containing $50,000 in money from Commodore Vanderbilt for you."

I said to him: "Do you know what this $50,000 is for?"

"No, sir, I don't."

"Didn't the Commodore tell you?"

"No, sir."

"Shall I give you a receipt?"

"No, sir."

"Why don't you take a receipt?"

"The Commodore didn't tell me to take one."

And that is the way I got The Church of the Strangers.

SHAN TRADERS IN BURMAH.

(See Illustration.)

Among the curious features of life in Burmah, which has become more generally known since the British government acquired possession of the country in 1885, is the trade carried on with the merchants of the Shan states, which lie between Burmah and China. The Shans are a quiet, sluggish race, chiefly devoted to agriculture. They placate their more warlike neighbors by an annual tribute, of which part is paid to Burmah and part to Siam. They produce rice, maize, red pepper, calabashes and a variety of fruits. These they carry into Burmah in panniers on the backs of oxen. They travel in caravans, and often penetrate as far as Rangoon. They are closely affiliated to the Burmese in language and religion. The missionaries, who since the capture of the savage King Theebaw have had greater facilities than before to preach the Gospel in Burmah, will, it may be hoped, succeed in reaching these traders. Already Christian work has been done in Laos, the mountainous region of the Shan country, where a mission has been established.

In Burmah Americans must ever take an undying interest, for it was to the evangelization of that land that Adoniram Judson, the prince of American missionaries, gave his life. Toiling against hope for nearly half a century, cheered only by an unfaltering faith in God's promises, spending twenty-one long months in a dungeon, his ankles chained together, and at last, worn out by incessant labor, laying down his life, he left a memory which the Christians of his native land cannot cherish in any better way than by giving their prayers, their money and their labor for the completion of his work.

THE HEROIC GYPSY LAD.

(See Illustration on page 493.)

"We have a remarkable case in the accident ward, Mrs Clarke," said the superintendent of a city hospital to a Christian lady whose labors had been blessed of God to many a patient in that hospital. "It is that of a lad preternaturally acute in intelligence, but as densely ignorant as an African savage in everything of an educational character. I suspect he is just as ignorant of religion."

"Who is he? An immigrant?"

"No; he belongs to a gang of gypsies who were very much averse to leaving him here."

"What is the matter with him?"

"Well, that is as sad as any part of the story, for the lad is a regular little hero. It seems that he was hanging about outside the camp over in the vacant lots beyond the city line, where the gypsies had fixed their abode for the summer, when a runaway team came along. The horses were going at a terrific pace, the coachman had been knocked off the box by an overhanging branch, and the occupants of the carriage—a lady and her daughter—were beside themselves with fright. The boy ran right in front of the horses, caught their bits in his hands and hung on. He was bruised with the carriage pole and knocked about by the horses, but he would not let go his hold. A lad of that size is a little too heavy even for maddened horses to carry by their mouths, and they had to stop. He saved the ladies' lives, but when they got out to thank him, he fell down in a dead faint, and there was a pretty bad hurt on his chest where the pole struck him."

"I should like to see him very much," said Mrs. Clarke. "He must be a brave boy."

The lady was conducted to the boy's bedside. She was surprised to see a face singularly sweet and gentle on the pillow, and to notice the look of pleasure with which she was greeted. The boy was evidently pleased when the superintendent told him that the lady had asked to see him, and would stay with him for a time. Mrs. Clarke sat down and asked him about his injuries. He was averse to speaking about his heroic deed, but did not conceal his gratification at having stopped the team. "It was a hard job," he said, but he knew they must stop if he held on.

Mrs. Clarke turned the conversation to religious subjects, and was met, as the superintendent expected, with the most complete ignorance. The boy had never heard of the Bible, had never heard of God or Jesus Christ, and could not read or write. It was not even virgin soil, for he had some heathenish beliefs in witches and superstitions of all kinds. The Christian lady had never had to do with such a case before, and for the moment was puzzled where to begin. There was absolutely no foundation in the boy's mind on which she could build. A silent prayer for guidance was followed by a light which she had no hesitation in following. She told him in simple words the story of the Cross. The boy followed her with deep interest, astonished most by the idea that there could be another life after death. Trusting that the Holy Spirit would apply the truth that was most needed, Mrs. Clarke left the boy then, promising to return the following day.

The Death of the Heroic Gypsy Lad.

When she arrived she found the boy still full of the idea he had caught the day before, and anxious to ask her a number of questions, which proved that he must have thought deeply about the subject in the interval. His questions, too, showed how remarkably acute were his natural powers. The lady could not forbear speculating on what such a boy would have become with the advantages of education. Where did people live after death? How could they live without bodies? Many similar questions were put, with an eagerness for information positively painful to witness. Following the line of the Spirit's working, Mrs. Clarke tried to convey the idea of eternity to him, and then the object of Christ's life and death. It was interesting to watch the mental activity aroused by this Gospel teaching. There was no skepticism, no captious objection, such as the Christian worker frequently meets. Nothing but a strong effort to grasp the information imparted, and to assimilate it. The boy was clearly making progress, and Mrs. Clarke was deeply interested. Seeing that he would prefer to meditate on what he had heard rather than hear more, she left him after about two hours' conversation.

On the next day she was again eagerly welcomed. The patient had more questions to ask, but now the light was evidently breaking, for he asked nothing about the future life, manifested little curiosity about that, but wanted to hear more about Jesus. He was weaker, too, but still mentally acute. Mrs. Clarke told him about that wonderful life, read to him from the gospels, and prayed with him. She explained over and over again the principle of Christ's vicrious suffering, and finding that he grasped it, she prayed again and left.

Early the next day the superintendent sent for her. The boy was dying, and she hurried as fast as she could to the hospital. Yes, there was no doubt of it; death was very near. The eyes were closed, and the head rolled from side to side wearily. She bent over and spoke to him. He opened his eyes with a strong effort, recognized her and smiled. "For Jesus' sake," he said, feebly. Evidently the great truth was in his soul. Mrs. Clarke knelt down and thanked God. When she rose the soul had fled, but a peaceful smile sat on the pain-drawn face that told of the peace which passeth all understanding

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 478.)

A Common Snare—His Neglected Bible—Slow Growth in Grace—Lack of Earnestness in Prayer—Volunteers for Mission Work at Bucharest—Visits his Father—Desire to Work among the Jews—The Opening at Bucharest, Closed by the War—Work among Criminals—Application to a London Committee—Accepted on probation—Held for Military Service—Serious Illness.

As to the other means of grace I would say: I fell into the snare into which so many young believers fall, the reading of religious books in preference to the Scriptures. I could now no longer read French and German novels, as I had formerly done, to feed my carnal mind; but still I did not put into the room of those books the best of all books. I read tracts, missionary papers, sermons, and biographies of godly persons. The last kind of books I found more profitable than others, and they might have done me much good. I never had been at any time of my life in the habit of reading the Holy Scriptures. When under fifteen years of age, I occasionally read a little of them at school, afterwards God's precious Book was entirely laid aside, so that I never read one single chapter of it, as far as I remember, till it pleased God to begin a work of grace in my heart.

Now the Scriptural way of reasoning would have been: God Himself has condescended to become an author, and I am ignorant about that precious book, which His Holy Spirit has caused to be written through the instrumentality of His servants, and it contains that which I ought to know, and the knowledge of which will lead me to true happiness; therefore I ought to read again and again this most precious book, this Book of books, most earnestly, most prayerfully, and with much meditation; and in this practice I ought to continue all the days of my life. For I was aware, though I read it but little, that I knew scarcely anything of it. But instead of acting thus, and being led by my ignorance of the Word of God to study it more, my difficulty in understanding it, and the little enjoyment I had in it, made me careless of reading it (for much prayerful reading of the Word gives, not merely more knowledge, but increases the delight we have in reading it); and thus, like many believers, I practically preferred, for the first four years of my divine life, the works of uninspired men to the oracles of the living God.

The consequence was that I remained a babe both in knowledge and grace. In knowledge, I say; for all true knowledge must be derived, by the Spirit, from the Word. And as I neglected the Word, I was for nearly four years so ignorant, that I did not clearly know even the fundamental points of our holy faith. And this lack of knowledge mostly kept me back from walking steadily in the ways of God. For it is the truth that makes us free (John 8; 31, 32), by delivering us from the slavery of the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eyes, and the pride of life. The Word proves it; the experience of the saints proves it; and also my own experience most decidedly proves it. For when it pleased the Lord, in August, 1829, to bring me really to the Scripture, my life and walk became very different. And though even since that I have very much fallen short of what I might and ought to be, yet, by the grace of God, I have been enabled to live much nearer to Him than before.

The most important means of grace, namely, prayer, used to be comparatively but little improved by me. I prayed, and I prayed often. I also prayed, in general, by the Grace of God, with sincerity; but had I been more earnestly praying, or even only as much, as I have prayed of late years, I should have made much more rapid progress.

In August, 1827, I heard that the Continental Society in England intended to send a minister to Bucharest, the residence of many nominal German Christians, to help an aged brother in the work of the Lord; the two other German Protestant ministers in that place being, the one a Socinian, and the other an unenlightened orthodox preacher. After consideration and prayer I offered myself for this work to Professor Tholuck, who was requested to look out for a suitable individual; for with all my weakness I had a great desire to live wholly for God. Most unexpectedly my father gave his consent, which I thought he would not do, though Bucharest was above a thousand miles from my home, and as completely a missionary station as any other.

I then went home to spend a short time with my father. In the town where he lived, containing about 3,000 inhabitants, I could not hear of a single believer, though I made many inquiries. The time I stayed with my father was more profitably spent than it had formerly been. I was enabled more than ever before to realize my high calling. I had, by the grace of God, power over sin; at least much more than at any period of my life.

I returned to Halle, and now prepared with earnestness for the work of the Lord. I set before me the sufferings which might await me. I counted the cost, and he who once so fully served Satan, was now willing, constrained by the love of Christ, rather, to suffer affliction for the sake of Jesus, than to enjoy the pleasure of sin for a season. I also prayed with a degree of earnestness concerning my future work.

One day, at the end of October, the abovementioned brother, Hermann Ball, missionary to the Jews, attended the Lord's Day evening meeting in my room, on his way through Halle, and stated that he feared, on account of his health, he should be obliged to give up laboring among the Jews. When I heard this, I felt a peculiar desire to fill up his place. About this very time also I became exceedingly fond of the Hebrew language, which I had cared about very little up to that time, and which I had merely studied now and then from a sense of duty. But now I studied it for many weeks with the greatest eagerness and delight.

Whilst I thus from time to time felt a desire to fill up Brother Ball's place as a missionary to the Jews (about which, however, I did not seriously think, because Dr. Tholuck daily expected a letter from London, finally to settle the particulars respecting my going to Bucharest), and whilst I thus greatly delighted in the study of Hebrew, I called in the evening of November 17 on Dr. Tholuck. In the course of conversation he asked me whether I ever had a desire to be a missionary to the Jews, as I might be connected with the London Missionary Society, for promoting Christianity among them, for which he was an agent. I was struck with the question, and told him what had passed in my mind, but added that it was not proper to think anything about that, as I was going to Bucharest, to which he agreed.

When I came home, however, these few words were like fire within me. The next morning I felt all desire for going to Bucharest gone, which appeared to me very wrong and fleshly, and I therefore entreated the Lord to restore to me the former desire for laboring on that missionary station. He graciously did so almost immediately. My earnestness in studying Hebrew, and my peculiar love for it, however, continued. About this time I had an offer of becoming tutor to the sons of a pious gentleman of title, which I did not accept on account of my purpose of going to Bucharest, and if that should come to nothing, on account of my desire of being a missionary to the Jews.

About ten days after, Dr. Tholuck received a letter from the Continental Society, stating that, on account of the war between the Turks and Russians, it appeared well to the committee, for the time being, to give up the thought of sending a minister to Bucharest, as it was the seat of war between the two armies. Dr. Tholuck then asked me again, what I now thought about being a missionary to the Jews. My reply was that I could not then give an answer, but that I would let him know, after I had prayerfully considered the matter. After prayer and consideration, and consulting with experienced brethren, in order that they might probe my heart as to my motives, I came to this conclusion, that, though I could not say with certainty it was the will of God that I should be a missionary to the Jews, yet that I ought to offer myself to the committee, leaving it with the Lord to do with me afterwards as it might seem good in His sight. Accordingly, Dr. Tholuck wrote about the beginning of December, 1827, to the committee in London.

At Christmas I spent a few days at Belleben, a village about fifteen miles from Halle, where I had been once or twice before, both for the sake of refreshing the few brethren living there, and also of having my own spirit refreshed by their love. One evening, when I was expounding the Scriptures to them, an unconverted young man happened to be present, and it pleased the Lord to touch his heart, so that he was brought to the knowledge of the truth.

In the beginning of the year 1828, there was a new workhouse established at Halle, into which persons of bad character were put for a time, and made to work. Being disposed to benefit unbelievers, I heartily desired to have permission statedly to preach the Word of Truth to them while I stayed at Halle, particularly as I understood that one of the lecturers of divinity in the University, who was a Socinian, had applied for this living. I wrote to the magistrates of the city, and offered to preach to those criminals gratuitously, hoping that in this way there would be less objection to my doing so. The reply was, that Dr. ——— had applied for this living, and that it had been laid before the provincial government for consideration, but that they would be glad if I would preach in the workhouse till the matter was decided. The decision did not come for some time, and I had thus an opportunity of preaching twice every Lord's Day, and once or twice on the week evenings; and besides this I took the criminals one by one into a room, to converse with them about their souls. Thus the Lord condescended to give to one so unworthy, so ignorant, so weak in grace, and so young in the faith and in years, a most important field of labor. However, it was well that even under these circumstances I should have labored there; for, humanly speaking, had I not been there, they would have had either no instruction at all, or a Socinian or an unenlightened preacher would have preached to them. And besides this, I had at least some qualifications for ministering there; for I knew the state of those poor sinners, having been myself formerly, in all probability, a great deal worse than most of them, and my simplicity and plainness of speech they would not have found in every minister. After some months the matter was decided; the Socinian lecturer of divinity, Dr. ———, was appointed to the living, and I had to discontinue my labors.

It was not before March, 1828, that Professor Tholuck received an answer from London respecting me, in which the committee put a number of questions to me, on the satisfactory answers to which my being received by them would depend. After replying to this first communication, I waited daily for an answer, and was so much the more desirous of having it, as my course in the University was completed. But no answer came. Had my desire to serve the Lord among the Jews, been of the flesh, it would in all likelihood not have continued; but I still thought about it, and continued to make it a subject of prayer. At last, on June 13, I received a letter from London, stating that the committee had determined to take me as a missionary student for six months on probation, provided that I would come to London.

I had now had the matter before me about seven months, having supposed, not only that it would have been settled in a few weeks, but also that if I were accepted, I should be sent out immediately, as I had passed the University. Instead of this, not only seven months passed over before the decision came, but I was also expected to come to London, and not only so, but though I had from my infancy been more or less studying, and now at last wished actively to be engaged, it was required that I should again become a student. For a few moments, therefore, I was greatly disappointed and tried. But on calmly considering the matter, it appeared to me but right that the committee should know me personally, and that it was also well for me to know them more intimately than merely by correspondence, as this afterwards would make our connection much more comfortable. I determined therefore, after I had seen my father, to go to London.

There was, however, an obstacle in the way of my leaving the country. Every Prussian male subject is under the necessity of being for three years a soldier, provided his state of body allows it; but those who have had a classical education up to a certain degree, and especially those who have passed the University, need to be only one year in the army, but have to equip and maintain themselves during that year. Now, as I had been considered fit for service when I was examined in my twentieth year, and had only been put back, at my request, till my twenty-third year, and as I was now nearly twenty-three, I could not obtain a passport out of the country till I had either served my time or had been exempted by the King himself. The latter I hoped would be the case; for it was a well-known fact that those who had given themselves to missionary service had been always exempted. Certain brethren of influence, living in the capital, to whom I wrote on the subject, advised me, however, to write first to the president of the government of the province to which I belonged. This was done, but I was not exempted. Then those brethren wrote to the King himself; but he replied that the matter must be referred to the ministry and to the law, and no exception was made in my favor.

I now knew not what to do. In the meantime, at the beginning of August I was taken ill. It was a common cold at first, but I could not get rid of it, as formerly. At last a skillful physician was consulted, and powerful means were used. After some time, he prescribed tonics and wine. For a day or two I seemed to get better, but after that it appeared, by the return of giddiness in my head, that the tonics had been too soon resorted to. At last, having used still other means, I seemed in a fit state for tonics, and began again to take them. At the same time one of my friends, an American professor, took me as a companion with him to Berlin and other places, so that we rode about the country for about ten days together. As long as I was day after day in the open air, going from place to place, drinking wine and taking tonics, I felt well: but as soon as I returned to Halle, the old symptoms returned. A second time the tonics were given up, and the former means used.

About ten weeks had by this time passed away since I was first taken ill. This illness, in which a particular care for the body seemed to be so right, and in which therefore frequent walks were taken, and in which I thought myself justified in laying aside the study of Hebrew, &c., had not at all a beneficial effect on my soul. In connection with this, one of my chief companions at this time, the last-mentioned American professor, was a backslider. If the believing reader does not know much of his own heart and of man's weakness, he will scarcely think it possible that, after I had been borne with by the Lord so long, and had received so many mercies at His hands, and had been so fully and freely pardoned through the blood of Jesus, which I both knew from His Word, and had also enjoyed, and after that I had been in such various ways engaged in the work of the Lord, I should have been once more guilty of backsliding, and that at the very time when the hand of God was lying heavily upon me. Oh, how desperately wicked is the human heart!

It was in this cold state of heart that I rode with my friend to Leipsic, at the time of the famous Michaelmas fair. He wished me to go with him to the opera. I went, but had not the least enjoyment. After the first act I took a glass of ice for refreshment. After the second act I was taken faint in consequence of this, my stomach being in a very weak state; but I was well enough after a while to go to the hotel, where I passed a tolerable night. On the next morning my friend ordered the carriage for our return to Halle.

(To be continued.)

THE BEATITUDES.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for August 1. Matt. 5: 1—16. Golden Text, John 1: 17.

Christ Leaves the Multitude—An Opportunity for Teaching—Neither Preaching nor Parables for the Disciples—Their Introduction to the new Philosophy—Eight Gates to True Blessedness—None of them Popular—Three Aspects of the Blessed Man—In Himself Pure—Toward God Hungering—Toward Men Merciful—His Influence—Active, Like Salt and Light—Passive, Like a Conspicuous City—His Responsibility—The Savorless Salt and the Hidden Light—The Light to Shine in a Specified Way—So as to Reveal the Work, not the Worker—So as to Cause the Observer to Praise God, not Man.

OUR blessed Lord came on earth to set up a Kingdom. It was not such as the Jews were longing for when He appeared. The national feeling of the Jews was for political freedom, and had Jesus proclaimed Himself a warrior-King, the people would have risen, from Dan to Beersheba, and have rallied round Him. But Jesus Himself declared to Pilate: "My Kingdom is not of this world" (John 18: 39). Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream "a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people . . . and it shall stand forever" (Dan. 2: 44). This is it is "a kingdom which cannot be moved" (Heb. 12: 28). Thank God, it is an "everlasting kingdom" (2 Peter 1: 11); it is a kingdom "prepared" for us (Matt. 25: 34). It is a kingdom "appointed" unto Christ's disciples (Luke 22: 29). The preaching of Jesus was the gospel or good news of this Kingdom of God.

The Kingdom of God,

When the kings and potentates of earth make known the laws of their kingdoms or empires, they generally seek, by all the adjuncts of pomp and state, to inspire awe and respect in their subjects. They gather together the lords, ecclesiastical and temporal, and all the representatives of the people. Not so Jesus. When He declared the laws and customs of His Kingdom, He called together none of the great ones of church or state, but simply sat down on a mountain-side, thus bringing Himself to the level of His hearers; and, instead of announcing Himself by proclamation, He was heralded by His works of mercy and healing, and by the rejoicing multitudes which sat in happy gladness at His feet. He conferred no titles of dignity or honor, but His

First Word was "Blessed."

"Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven." The world looks with contempt on a man who does not stand up for his own rights, and fails to assert himself. "Men will praise thee when thou doest well unto thyself" (Ps. 49: 18). "All seek their own" (Phil. 2: 21). Poor in spirit—this is the exact contrary to the spirit of the world. They "seek not their own;" they deny themselves, they live, not unto themselves, but unto Him that died for them and rose again (2 Cor. 5: 15). The world is self-centred, the true disciple is Christ-centred. The worldling weighs and measures all things by their relation to men; the true child of God, who is poor in spirit, measures all things by their relation to God. Thus the worldling imperiously demands to have what he desires, and complains if he cannot get it; he acts as though things and people were created for him and must bow to him; the one who is poor in spirit, acts, on the contrary, as though he were not to be considered at all; he asks: "What would God have me to do or to be?" and he is as ready to be nothing as to be something, if it can only bring glory to God. A man who does not know God, cannot understand this; he knows nothing like it in his own experience; and thus he imputes the worst of motives to the man who is poor in spirit. How little he knows that while the man of faith yields himself up to God, God comes and fills him with Himself. He does not see that in that gentle, meek Moses there dwells the very power of God; that in that loving John there dwells Him who is "King of kings and Lord of lords." He does not see that they who are in themselves nothing, are "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ" (Rom. 8: 17). "Theirs is the kingdom of heaven," and, in point of fact,

They Are Reigning Now.

Look at that man of the world, fretting and fuming about a loss in business—he gives way to anger; in his madness he drinks to forget his trouble; he makes everyone miserable around him, but the trouble is there, and it rules over him. Look at that man of God under a similar trial. He looks it in the face, and says: "Well, I can only pay my debts by selling off all I have; it is all the Lord's; let Him do what seemeth Him good;" and, with a joyous heart, he goes out from his old home to find that God has made a better provision for him in a more lucrative employment. This is the Kingdom of heaven—the circumstances did not overcome him; he was above them, and reigned with Christ in heavenly places all the time, proving that it is more blessed to be poor with Christ than rich with the world.

"Blessed are they that mourn." God hates indifference. The reproach of the Laodicean Church was, "So, then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold not hot, I will spue thee out of My mouth" (Rev. 3: 16). It was God's reproach of the priests in the time of Malachi, "If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto My name, saith the Lord of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings; yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart" (Mal. 2: 1). While we are tempted to "rejoice in the Lord alway" (Phil. 4: 4), yet God would have us lay to heart the lessons He teaches us in the Discipline of Our Daily Life.

He would have us "weep with them that weep," as well as "rejoice with them that do rejoice" (Rom. 12: 15). There are many things which we can only learn by suffering. Jesus Himself was "made perfect through sufferings." But God does not want us to remain under the burden. He calls us to cast all our care on Him, for He careth for us (1 Pet. 5: 7). They that mourn "shall be comforted." Some try to avoid trial, others, the blessed ones, walk straight into "the valley of the shadow of death" with Jesus, and "fear no evil," because He is with them (Ps. 23: 4), they are comforted.

"Blessed are the meek." The poor in spirit cannot but be meek. They do not retaliate, they accept all from the hands of God and do not murmur, and as they thus trust Him, He explains Himself to them, and, even now, they inherit the earth. Everything which they endure for God's sake, they become masters of.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness." All men who have any character have some aim in life. One has the aim to excel in science, one in literature, one in fine art, one in architecture, one in commerce, one in agriculture. But the pursuit, and the only one to which God promises certain success, is that of righteousness; the man who hungers and thirsts after it, "shall be filled;" the man who has set his heart on and given his life to being holy, and propagating God's righteousness on earth, "shall be filled."

"Blessed are the merciful." Perhaps in this day of religious impostors—of would-be evangelists who live a parasitical life by imposing on the generosity of those whom they can get to believe in them—it is very difficult to be merciful without putting a premium upon religious mendicancy. It is difficult not to encourage men who work "not at all, but are busybodies" (2 Thes. 3: 6–12). But God knows how to deliver His children "from unreasonable and wicked men" (2 Thes. 3: 6–12). If we will take time to inquire of the Lord and do not act hastily, He will answer our prayer, and show us, by some means, whether those with whom we have to do are true or false disciples. If we live in the habit of referring everything to God, He will not suffer us to be misled. In any case, it is better to err on the side of mercy. But it is in word more than in deed that we are apt to be unmerciful. Let us never forget that "now we know in part." Things which we may hear about a Christian brother may, from his side, and under circumstances of which we know nothing, look very different from what they do to us. God's plain command is, "Judge not, that ye be not judged" (Matt. 7: 1).

Disorderly Christians,

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Much has been spoken and written of late years on the subject of "a clean heart." Here we have it linked with seeing God. "There shall no man see Me and live" (Ex. 33: 20), said God. Thus, only they who die to themselves and remain dead to self in the circumstances which try them; seeing and owning Jesus in them all, are what God calls, "pure in heart," because a pure heart is a single heart. Some who have gone through wonderful experiences see their own purity and talk of it more than they see and talk of God. "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

A Peacemaker Sees Both Sides.

Jesus came to be a Mediator between God and man, a daysman who lays His hand upon both (Job 9: 33). A peacemaker brings those who are opposed, to understand each other. Every soul-winner is a peacemaker between God and man. Every child of God who can interpret God's dealings to one who is wrecked and depressed, is a peacemaker. Every one who takes the threads of the controversy between Christians who differ, and puts them into the hands of God for Him to unravel, with a complete readiness to yield up his view of the case if it should be wrong—every such one is a peacemaker between man and men.

"Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake," they have the same reward as "the poor in spirit," "Theirs is the Kingdom of heaven." And this persecution consists not always, or chiefly, in physical torture, like that of burning at the stake, the confiscation of property, or such horrors as the Uganda massacres, but also, and chiefly, in that which comes upon us in the family circle, the house of business, the workshop, the kitchen, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely for My sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven, for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." The natural heart shrinks from suffering, and it is the most natural thing to pity ourselves and feel we are ill-used when persecuted for righteousness' sake. But when God shows us it is blessed, and we accept it from His hand, there is a wonderful sweetness in this fellowship with His sufferings, which we would not miss for all the world could give.

"Ye are the Salt of the Earth."

We cannot make ourselves to be the salt of the earth, but "God, who commanded the light to shine out of the darkness," has declared by the same authoritative and creative word, "Ye are the salt of the earth." Yet, the salt may lose its savor. We stand by faith, constantly exercised, not by date or experience. "Ye are the light of the world," made so by the same God who set the sun in the firmament of the heavens. Whether we will or not, we who are God's children are as conspicuous as lights in the darkness, and God commands that we shall not hide our light under a bushel. God has saved us for the world's sake, He would have us serve our own generation. Therefore He says, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Let, not make your light shine. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 2: 5). "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom" (Col. 3: 16). If we yield to God and let Him have His way, He will take care of the shining of our light, He will keep our lamps trimmed and keep us full of the Holy Ghost.

SO NEAR.

By Rev. J. Clark.

So near the cleansing Fountain,
In this the Gospel day,
O guilty one! awaken,
And wash thy sins away.

So near the Refuge City,
Then why not enter in?
Pass through the open gateway
And life eternal win.

So near the fold of Jesus,
No longer stay outside,
Come, find a peaceful shelter,
Where God's redeemed abide.

So near the loving Saviour,
Why stand in fear and doubt?
In simple faith approach Him,
He will not cast thee out.

So near the Great Physician,
Go, touch His garment's hem;
See, while His saints adore Him,
What grace has done for them.

So near the Ark of safety,
Arise, and enter thou;
The storm of wrath is bursting!
O soul! escape it now!

Refrain.

Salvation, peace, and pardon,
The Lord will freely give;
The way of life is easy.
'Tis only Look and Live.

Nictaux, N. S.

J. E. Jewett, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form for general distribution at twenty-five cents per hundred.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.
Royal Baking Powder Co., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of
J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

SPAIN
AND
SPANISH AMERICA
ILLUSTRATED.

A most beautifully illustrated new work on Spain and Spanish America, edited by Bishop Riley—sold in parts—each part complete in itself and sold separately. The proceeds dedicated to aiding christian work in Mexico. Part I. now ready. Sent to any address on the receipt of price, fifty cents. In asking for it mail your requests to J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York, inclosing fifty cents and the words: "Send Spain and Spanish America, illustrated, to"—and then give your address.

CHOLERA INFANTUM

This most fatal disease of Infancy,
PREVENTED, CONTROLLED and CURED by

Lactated Food

It has been successful in hundreds of cases where other prepared foods failed.

FOR INFANTS,

of any age, it may be used with confidence, as a safe and complete substitute for mother's milk.

FOR INVALIDS,

it is a Perfect Nutrient in either chronic or acute cases. Weak stomachs always retain and relish it. Physicians and mothers concede its superiority. The most palatable, nourishing and economical of Foods.

150 MEALS for an INFANT for $1.00.

Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.
Valuable circulars and pamphlets, sent free.
Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THREE CHOICE BOOKLETS.

No. 1. "THY WILL."

A beautiful poem of submission.
By Jean S. Figott.
"Teach me to do thy will, for Thou art my God."

"Beneath the splendor of Thy choice,
Thy perfect choice for me, I rest."

18 pages. Silk-tied. In titled envolope.

No. 2. "I SHALL BE SATISFIED."

A poem of contentment.
"Far out of sight, while yet the flesh enfolds us, Lies the fair country where our hearts abide."

18 pages. Silk-tied. In titled envelope.

No. 3. "ONE LESS AT HOME."

A poem of sweet comfort for those who have lost dear friends.
"One less at home!
The charmed circle broken — a dear face
Missed day by day from its accustomed place,
But cleansed, and saved, and perfected by grace;
One more in Heaven!"

18 pages. Silk-tied. In titled envelope.

Each of the above are printed with handsome type on extra heavy bristol board, 18 pages, with a delicate spray in tint on each page, silk-tied, and enclosed in titled envelope. Sent post-paid for 20 cents each, or the three together for 50 cts.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE

A new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents, by J. S. OGILVIE & CO., 31 Rose Street, New York.

"FLORIDA; Its Advantages and Drawbacks." For the above book or free information, address O. M. CROSBY, the author, 76 Park Place, N. Y.

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,

it makes no difference where you see them advertised, or by whom or where they are published or sold, send your orders to me and I will attend to them promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamps received for fractional parts of a dollar.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

Keep The Question Open.

Until you've examined Glad Hallelujahs, keep the question of a song book open. We haven't space to tell much. Authors, Sweney and Kirkpatrick. Pieces, more new than old. The old, are selected from the best and most popular. One and only one idea has prevailed—making the best. We think we have.

By mail, 35 cents. By express (not prepaid), $3.60 per dozen; $30 per 100. One sample copy 25 cents.
Further inducements to Schools, Churches and Evangelists. Write us.

T. T. Tasker, Sr., Publisher,
921 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

This Magazine portrays American thought and life from ocean to ocean, is filled with pure high-class literature, and can be safely welcomed in any family circle.

PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MAIL.

Sample Copy of current number mailed upon receipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 cts.

Premium List with either.

Address:
B. T. BUSH & SON, Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N. Y.

GET UP CLUBS

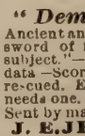
THE NEW ORGAN FOLIO.

By HUBERT P. MAIN.

THIS new book has been prepared expressly for the Reed Organ. It contains a thorough course of valuable instruction, a number of useful interludes in different keys, pretty voluntaries, pieces especially adapted for the parlor at home; also, several pages of songs and hymn tunes. Large Folio Boards, $1.50. Sent on receipt of price. Specimen pages free.

Liberal Discount to the Trade.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 RANDOLPH STREET, CHICAGO.



UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World.—$85 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35
MARCHAL & SMITH,
235 East 21st Street, New York.

"Demonology or Spiritualism," Ancient and Modern."—"An effective weapon."—"A sword of fire."—"Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Startling disclosures.—History facts and data—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

FOR GAS. FOR OIL.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

WANTED. A situation in a private family is desired by a graduate; will teach English, Higher Mathematics, French, Latin, Vocal, and Instrumental Music on Piano. Best references. Address Miss Moffett, Brownsberg, Rockbridge Co., Va.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED. SEND for particulars and liberal terms W. B. Ketcham, 71 Bible House, New York

Special Summer Price

IN

Ladies' and Misses' Cambric Muslin Underwear

And INFANTS' GOO

We make special mention of the in these departments, where will a be found the best goods at the l possible prices. Owing to, co changes in the styles of the gar we do not issue any fixed cata but will always promptly sen "Daily Price List" upon applicati the same.

The French C. P. Corset which we sold for many years can always tained here at the lowest prices.

James McCreery & Broadway and Eleventh St.,

Ladies' Underwea

Ladies who are unable to ex our stock of these goods perso would find it to their advanta correspond with us. The most plete information furnished, and ful attention given to special or

Lord & Tayl

Broadway & 20th Street, N.

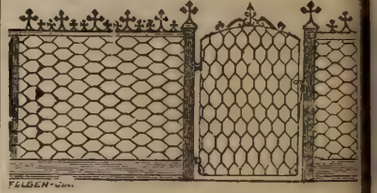
MOTH-WA

Kills the Moth and the old Moth Miller. It is a perfect protection of Furs and Fabrics, and is more economical to use camphor.

In one-pound boxes containing a dozen Agents wanted in every city, town and cou For sale by all druggists.

WM. H. H. CHILDS, 7 Maiden Lan.,

SEDGWICK STEEL WIRE FEN



The best Farm, Garden, Poultry Yard, School Lot, Park and Cemetery Fences and Perfect Automatic Gate. Cheapest and N Iron Fences. Iron and wire Summer Houses, Furniture, and other wire work. Best Wire St er and Plier. Ask dealers in hardware, or ad

SEDGWICK BROS., RICHMOND.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

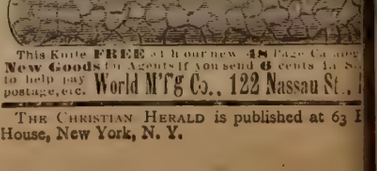
For Adults,

For Children,

For Both Sex

When on the sultry summer's day
The sun is mostly a mile away;
When comes Sick Headache to oppress
And every moment brings distress,
Then TARRANT'S SELTZER promises a
That Druggists all can recommend.

This KNIFE FR



This Knife FREE at our new 48 Page Catalogue New Goods for Agents If you send 6 cents to help pay postage, etc. World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St.,

The Christian Herald is published at 63 House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. X., No. 32. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, AUGUST 11, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT and LIFE of the Late Dr. R. Harold Schofield, Medical Missionary in China.

SHOULD CHRISTIANS INSURE? A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE WATCHMAN'S ANSWER.

Christian Union in Japan—Contrasts Under One Roof—A Heroic Stage-Driver—A Puzzled Gardener—Patience Too Quickly Exhausted, etc.

A MINISTER SAVED FROM PARALYSIS.

Gems from New Books: Mr. Moody's Anecdotes of the Ten-Cent Man, The Mother's Touch, etc.

PICTURE OF THE SARAWAK, IN BORNEO.

GOD'S NEARNESS. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

CURRENT EVENTS: Secretary Fairchild's Order—The Virginia Convention—The Earthquake in the Southwest—How to Keep Cool—The Death of the Czar's Mentor—An Important Election—News of Stanley—A Suit over a Beggar's Will—A Double Funeral Ceremony—Curious Identification of a Horse, etc.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF REV. JOSEPH PARKER, D. D.

A WAIF FROM THE SEA. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. By George Muller. (Continued.)

JESUS AND THE LAW. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

The Late Dr. R. Harold Schofield, Medical Missionary in China—Scenes in his Life.

THE LATE DR. R. H. A. SCHOFIELD,

Of the China Inland Mission.

Born in 1851—Early Aptitude for Preaching—Education—Boyish Escapades—Student Life and Successes at Manchester—A Water Excursion—Removes to Oxford in 1870—Gains an Important position in London in 1873—Goes to Servia in 1876, Turkey in 1877, Germany and Austria in 1878—A Tour in Palestine in 1879—Duties in London—Resolves on Foreign Mission Work—Sets Sail for China—Medical and Gospel Work—Incidents—Illness and Death.

WERE it not that we have a sure and certain hope of a life beyond this, and a future in which the acquirements of this life will be used for the Master's service, the life of the saintly man whose portrait appears on the first page would awaken none but melancholy reflections. As it is, we know that in devoting his magnificent talents to the Lord's service, and in giving up wealth and honor that he might win souls, he will not miss his reward.

Robert Harold Ainsworth Schofield was born in London, England, in the year 1851, and died in China on August 1, 1883, at the early age of thirty-two. He was the third son of Robert Schofield, Esq., of Heybrook, near Rochdale, England. When he was a mere child he began to manifest a singular desire for preaching. A favorite occupation on Sunday afternoons, after returning in the morning from Divine service, was to attempt an imitation of what he had witnessed. Pet rabbits would be brought up and carefully barricaded in two extemporized pews, the nurse at the table completing the congregation. (See Illustration No. 1 on First Page.)

Either Harold or his brother—now Dr. A. T. Schofield—would then gravely mount on a high chair as parson, while the other occupied a lower one in front as "sing minister" or clerk. In spite of the behavior of the rabbits, the parson never lost his gravity for a moment, even when compelled to suspend his discourse for a hot chase round the room to bring the congregation back to their pews.

His Education

during the first few years of his life was carried on by his mother, who says: "He was more distinguished by a painstaking endeavor to grasp a subject thoroughly, in which he was eminently successful, than by what is called 'seizing the idea' rapidly." When Harold was seven years old the family removed for a time to Torquay, and afterwards to Rochdale. In 1861, Harold and his brother were placed under the care of the late Mr. Pridham, at East Budleigh, near Exeter. Here he seems to have developed an innate love of fun, sometimes at considerable risk to life and limb. "Our favorite amusements," writes his brother, "were driving in a small emerald-colored gig drawn by a yellowish pony, alternately getting out and pushing up the hills, and then tearing down at full gallop. At night we would either prowl about the lanes on stilts five feet high, or, providing ourselves with dark-lanterns, would climb the loftiest elms overhanging the road, and fastening the lights to the boughs, would sit and learn our lessons with our legs dangling some seventy feet above the heads of the people beneath. (See Illustration No. 2.) In one of our climbs Harold fell heavily to the ground, and was carried home partially stunned.

"These, however, were by no means the most daring of our Boyish Escapades.

The house had a long thatched roof, ending in a very broad and substantial gutter, and it will hardly be believed that we used to get a board well wetted, and, sitting on it, fly down from the ridge at the top to the gutter. It is a matter of wonder now that we did not go over the edge and fall into the yard beneath. Poor Harold fell into sad disgrace one day when following me, his teacher in all mischief, along some beams over the washhouse, for he slipped, and his two little legs stuck through the plaster into the room below, sending a shower of débris on to the bald head and down the neck of our indulgent tutor, who had just looked in to see if we were there." (See Illustration No. 3.)

These scenes of revelry and freedom were left in 1863, when Harold Schofield became a pupil in the Old Trafford School, near Manchester, where he stayed some time, and gained special distinction. In 1866, he entered Owens College, at Manchester. It was during the interval of hard work there, that several long boating tours took place. In 1869 was planned through the Irish lakes and rivers, when a singular accident occurred, which came near ending his life. He and a companion were in a boat and his brother in a canoe, and after rowing for some time he noticed that the boat was leaking rapidly. He says: "I gave a shrill whistle to attract the attention of my brother Will, who at a distance was paddling away in fine style, looking out for wild fowl. He turned his head to see us one moment, apparently sitting on the surface of the lake (for the boat was invisible), and the next, as she rolled over,

A Grand Water Excursion

Falling Into the Water.

Had our lives depended on swimming, we should certainly have been drowned, for we were two miles from the nearest shore. We did nothing but hold on, one at each end of our boat which we knew would not sink. (See Illustration No. 4.) We were soon seen, and a boat came to the rescue from a yacht, and picked us up."

Having gained an exhibition scholarship for Lincoln College, Oxford, Mr. Schofield took up his residence there in 1870. The distinction which he had already earned as a student was augmented from year to year. He graduated with first-class honors in Natural Science, and afterwards filled an appointment in the Museum of Comparative Anatomy under the late Professor Rolleston. He left Oxford to live in London in the autumn of 1873, having gained an open scholarship in science at St. Bartholomew's Hospital. His activity was wonderful. He was an enthusiast in anatomy, and his zeal with the microscope was very great. He secured numerous scholarships, and in addition thereto the Greek Testament Prize, open to the whole university. He was an energetic member of the Abernethy Debating Society and of the Hospital Christian Association. Outside the hospital walls he was superintendent of a large Sunday-school in the north of London, and constantly preached both in mission halls and in the thoroughfares. His heart was full of the love of Christ, and he was not backward in speaking of that love to others, when he could wisely use the opportunity of serving the Master.

In 1876, on the war between Turkey and Servia breaking out, Dr. Schofield went to Servia as a surgeon to the Red Cross Society, and was put in partial charge of the hospital at Belgrade for some months. He returned by the Danube, Black Sea, Constantinople, and Greece. After being at home a short time he went to Paris, and attended the far-famed medical schools there for some time. Returning to England, after taking his second M. B. degree at Oxford, he went to London, only to find, early in June, that he had been selected by the National Aid Society to go out to Turkey with medical stores and help for the wounded in which had just broken out. His diary contains a full description of the expedition.

The Russo-Turkish War,

Having at length, in February, 1879, completed his medical studies on the Continent, Dr. Schofield seized the opportunity to carry out a long-cherished plan of

A Tour Through Palestine,

Leaving Vienna, therefore, he traveled through parts of Turkey and Egypt before reaching the Holy Land. Landing at Jaffa—the Bible Joppa—he proceeded straight to Jerusalem. The following is an extract from the record of this most delightful tour: "In Jerusalem I retired to our quiet little room in Christian Street. Throwing open the window, I looked down across the flat and domed roofs of the city, past the dome of the Mosque of Omar to the opposing slope of Olivet; hovering over its summit above the Church of the Ascension was one little cloud. As I gazed it faded away, and my thoughts went back to the time when on that very summit 'a cloud received Him out of their sight;' and the promise was given them as they still gazed into the blue vault where He had vanished—'This same Jesus

Shall So Come in Like Manner

as ye have seen Him go into heaven.' Those of us who were not too tired went out down the Via Dolorosa out of St. Stephen's Gate (close to which a deep depression was pointed out to us as the site of the pool of Bethesda)."

On May 10 Dr. Schofield arrived in London again, and on the 15th of the same month began his duties at St. Bartholomew's Hospital. From the entries in his diary it is most evident that his interest in foreign mission work daily grew more intense and deep. In one place we read: "I have finished the account of Protestant missionaries in China, and I feel more than ever that the Lord has shown me His will that I should go there." The following day, as if to encourage himself in the new view which he had obtained of God's purpose concerning him, he went to see the veteran African missionary, Dr. Moffat (See Illustration No. 5), and subsequently made the following entry: "I went to visit that old missionary, Dr. Moffat. He seems strong and powerful, although he has been a missionary since 1816: full of the love of Jesus, full of zeal for the Lord. It is really soul-stirring to see such an old warrior." On September 30 ended his work at the hospital.

The China Inland Mission

attracted him by its Saturday prayer-meeting, in which each missionary is individually prayed for, and his special wants laid before God. The simplicity of its organization, its simple trust in God, and the absence of fixed salaries, together with long conversations with Mr. Broomhall, the devoted and genial secretary, all combined most favorably to impress Dr. Schofield, who had long yearned for intercourse with men so self-sacrificing.

At first the news of his intended departure was received with incredulity. It seemed impossible that he would willingly throw up the splendid openings which lay before him. But he was prepared to lay everything at the feet of Christ. His loved home was to be given up, and while he had succeeded in finding a wife to be the companion of his travels and exile, his warm heart felt none the less the sacrifice he was making in leaving so many friends behind. On April 7, 1880, he and some fellow-missionaries set sail from the Victoria Docks, in the steamship Elysia (Anchor Line), for

New York, en Route for China.

Having visited Chicago, where he heard Mr. Moody preach, and Galesburg, where he took part in the Twenty-first Annual State Sunday School Convention of the State of Illinois, he proceeded via Salt Lake City, to San Francisco. From the latter place he sailed for Japan, on May 22, by the steamship Gaelic. The passage of 4,600 miles lasted exactly twenty days, and on June 12 Yokohama was safely reached. Shanghai was entered on the evening of June 28, and on July 9 a start was made for Chee-foo, where Dr. Schofield remained two months, and commenced the study of the language.

Having made considerable progress with the language, on November 1, 1880, the missionary bade farewell to Chee-foo, and steamed across the Yellow Sea, and in a few days arrived at Tien-tsin, whence he proceeded to T'ai yüen Fu, Shansi, his destination. "Arriving at Hwai-lu," the missionary thus writes: "We always attracted considerable attention in passing through large villages or towns. When we entered the inn yard for our midday halt, we were generally followed into it by a promiscuous crowd of one hundred to two hundred people, who tried persistently to get a sight of us at lunch, and seemed especially amazed to see us wielding knife and fork instead of chopsticks. On more than one occasion they made peep-holes in the paper windows, in order to be able to watch our proceedings more satisfactorily. Sometimes when at our midday meal, the sudden appearance of one of us at the door was sufficient to produce a panic, and all would rush helter-skelter from the yard, as if they really believed us to be what they called us, viz., foreign devils." (See Illustration No. 6.)

Shortly after his arrival at T'ai-yüen Fu, Dr. Schofield opened a small dispensary, with accommodation for ten to twelve in-patients. "Our object from the first," says the doctor, "has been, by means of medical help rendered to the Chinese, to undermine the prejudice with which they regard all foreigners, missionaries included, and above all to use the opportunities which this work so abundantly affords of preaching the Gospel of Christ to those who have never heard it." The work was most successful.

In Dr. Schofield's diary, under date May 1, 1883, we find a record of some attempts at burglary. He writes that on March 12 and broke open the window and door of my study, and thoroughly searched through the cupboards. Our woman-servant, who sleeps in a room close by, heard a noise, and struck a light, which probably caused the robber to decamp, leaving more than half the booty he meant to carry off. "On the night of March 21 (nine days after the first robbery), the thief returned. In the middle of the night, shortly after one, we were again awakened by the dog barking, and dressed quickly in the dark. I rushed out through the garden gate into the back garden, feeling sure from the barking that the thief was in that direction. Our man, sleeping in the empty house at the back, ran out into the garden a few minutes before I reached it, and looking up, saw the thief on the roof of my study (See Illustration No. 7), who immediately threw down a brick, wounding him in the forehead, and then ran rapidly down the roofs and made good his escape. It was at least pleasant to reflect that he went away empty-handed." Eventually the thief was discovered and punished, and the stolen property restored.

A Robber Visited Us,

The Journal Breaks off Abruptly on July 13. Dr. Schofield was first taken ill on that day, and a few days later passed away from his busy life on earth. The following is from the pen of Mr. Sowerby, his fellow-laborer, and gives some details of the T'ai-yüen Fu life of his friend, as seen by others: "In December, 1881, it was my privilege to see Dr. Schofield at times engaged in his medical work, and I noticed with what true Christian kindness he treated every patient. I have sometimes been present also when he has been operating, and although just before leaving England I had spent some time at a large London hospital, and seen some of the first surgeons of the day, it was a treat to see the skill and ability with which he treated the cases. Always before commencing

A Serious Operation,

he would kneel in prayer with sincerity and simplicity. On one occasion the doctor was trying to reduce an old case of hip dislocation. After several attempts, it seemed impossible to succeed, but during a pause he offered a few words of prayer (See Illustration, No. 8), and shortly afterwards was completely successful in restoring the hip to its position. This will show the spirit in which Dr. Schofield did his work.

There is not much more to tell. On July 19, 1883, the devoted medical missionary felt really unwell, but did not discontinue work until the 21st. Two days later the symptoms were clearly indicative of typhus fever. He grew gradually worse and worse, until at 2:15 A. M. on August 1, he quietly breathed his last. A few days before he died, he cheerfully said to his wife, "Tell Mr. Taylor and council I have found my Lord's grace sufficient to sustain me in the most trying illness of my life, and that these three years in China have been by far the happiest in my life."

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Willie's Satisfactory Testimony.—Mr. Campbell said: "I once visited a boy who was lying on his death-bed, and, to see if he were really trusting in Jesus, I asked him: 'And how do you feel just now, Willie?' 'I am continually trusting in Christ,' was the prompt and beautiful reply. 'But,' I continued, 'how do you know you are trusting in Him, and how did you do it at first?' He looked at me with a bright smile, and quietly answered: 'I am sure that I am trusting in Christ, and when I first trusted Him I felt that He was with me, at my very side; and I knelt at His feet, and, looking up into His face, I asked Him to have mercy on me and take care of me. And He did,' he confidently added, 'and is doing so still!' As the boy related to me his simple testimony, I thought, 'O that more of us had that child-like confidence in Jesus!'"

A Determination Made in Prison.—A Workingman gives the following personal testimony: "The first time I was brought under the power of God's Word was in Millbank Prison. There I had time to think, and as I looked back on my career, how I had sinned, and then at my present unenviable and dishonorable position, I determined to give up my evil ways and turn to the Lord. But when I was released I gradually sank back into my old evil habits. It became clear to me that my resolutions were self-made, and self, unaided by God, could not keep them. I had not got the new heart and the right spirit, but soon I remembered the words of Christ, the blessed One, 'Come unto Me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.' From that time I learned to put my trust entirely in Jesus, and not in myself."

God Sends Both Doctor and Money.—Rev. John Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, observed: "After the Mission had been some time established, I wished particularly to have a medical mission attached to it; so I prayed the Lord, if it were His will, to send a doctor, and I soon got one. He wrote me a letter, saying he was anxious to know where he could serve the Lord, as, when he was a young man studying in Edinburgh, it had been strongly impressed upon his mind that he should be a medical missionary; and now, having been successful in his profession, he longed to help in the Lord's work, and asked my advice upon the matter. I went over to his place, and both of us knelt down in his room and prayed that the Lord would send us the money. That prayer also was soon answered, and we knew that it was the Lord's will that we should have a mission."

A Triumph of God's Grace.—Mr. W. H. Murray said: "When I was in China, I stayed six months at Mokten, preaching daily in the streets, and every night I had my room filled with people who were anxious to know about the Gospel. A young man came to me who was one of China's best scholars, and had taken a very high degree. He said he had come to ask me about heavenly things; from his youth he had studied such things, and so very anxious did he seem, that I felt God was preparing this man for some great work. I told him the simple story of the salvation of Jesus Christ. As he rose to go, he asked me to lend him the Old and the New Testaments. 'I can read them in three days,' he said, 'and during that time I will not sleep!' At the end of three days he came back, and said, 'Now I have read and believe, and from this time I will worship none but the living God, and accept His Son as my all-sufficient Saviour and Lord.'"

A Crippled Sailor's Fear of God.—Mr. Morrison, a seaman's missionary says: "A short time ago, as I was walking along one of our streets, I came upon a young sailor whom I recognized. The last time I had seen him he was well and hearty, and I had hard work to drag him into our meeting, and although I spoke to him earnestly, he seemed too light-hearted to be serious about even his salvation. But now, what a change had passed over him! It was not the change, however, from death unto life; he was only humbled and dispirited through a serious accident which had occurred while he was engaged on one of the Anchor Line ships. He had been struck with the boom, and, to save his life, his leg had to be amputated; but even that narrow escape did not result in leading him to Christ. He seemed on account of his previous careless and sinful life to be afraid of God, and he could not, would not, believe that God was waiting to be gracious unto him; and that to him Jesus said, 'Come unto Me.' However, I believe that his heart is deeply impressed, and that soon he will give himself to Christ. Pray for him!"

A Dying Hindoo Widow.—Miss Rainey Remarked: "On one occasion, when in India, I was invited by a friend to visit a hospital. As I passed through the place I was much struck by the face of a woman I saw. I inquired who she was, and was told that she was a widow, poor and blind, who had had a fall lately, and was lying there through the effects of it. She was dying, but happily was a Christian and did not fear death. She was very weak, and it was plain she would be unable to hold out much longer. I went and spoke to her, and though she did not know English, she seemed partly to understand what I said to her. Turning towards me, she smiled brightly, pointed upwards, and then lovingly kissed my hand. It is when we come across such individual cases that we more fully realize the value of the work done by our missionaries in India, in spreading abroad the knowledge of Christ, who died that believers in Him might live for ever."

A Martyr-Missionary's Conversion.—Mr. Love observed: "About twenty years ago the Rev. John Williams, a missionary in the South Sea Islands, was martyred for the cause of Christ. After a long life of unselfishness, he went to be with Christ, for whom he labored and died. When he was a very young man he was not a Christian, and one Sunday agreed to go with a companion to a questionable place of amusement. He was the first at the trysting-place, and, as he waited about, there came along, on her way to church, a lady of his acquaintance. 'Ah, John,' she said, 'I am glad to see you. Are you going to church this forenoon?' 'No, I am waiting for a friend,' was the reply. 'Why not go to church?' she asked, and she would not go on her way until he reluctantly consented to accompany her. At church that day he was met by a message of the Gospel, overpowered by God's Holy Spirit, and left the sanctuary a converted man. There he consecrated his life to God; and that vow of consecration he kept until he sealed his testimony with his blood."

Enthralled by a Demon.—Mr. Oatts related: "Some time ago a man called at my office to see if I could in any way help him. He was of a respectable family, married, and had three children. He had been comfortably well-off, but taking to drink, he had sunk lower and lower, until now he was destitute. His situation had been forfeited, his furniture had been sold, and, being unable to pay his rent, the landlord's agent was about to eject him. Death also had been busy in his house, and one of his little ones was to be buried the next day. At his urgent request I promised to be at the funeral. Next day I ascended the stairs of his house. I met the men with the coffin coming down. I thought I must have made some mistake and was late, and, on reaching the landing, I inquired of the woman at the door if I were late. 'No,' she said; 'will you come in?' I entered, and there, in the corner of the room, sat the man who but yesterday was protesting and resolving to have done with intoxicating liquors forever. There he sat, his eyes staring vacantly before him, helplessly intoxicated. Drink is the monster which causes its debased slave to forget all that was once dear to him, and which so enthralls him that he is unable, even with his best resolutions, to overcome it. The only beverage which takes away the appetite for this curse is that Water of Life, of which, if any drink, he shall never thirst again."

SHOULD CHRISTIANS INSURE?

A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

"Let him appoint officers over the land and take up the fifth part of the land of Egypt in the seven plenteous years."—Genesis 41 : 34.

The First Life Insurance Company—Joseph its President—The Record of the Societies—The Bible Principle—The Injunction to Hezekiah—Devastation in the Household—The Question of Faith—How God Provides for Neglected Children—Vicissitudes of Business—Excuses for not Insuring—Dr. Guthrie's Life Insurance—One Cause of Crime and Pauperism—A Foolish Woman's Struggle—The Needs of the Companies—The Responsibilities of the Office—Insured for Eternity—The Fire Insurance Business—The Final Conflagration.

THESE were the words of Joseph, the president of the first life insurance company that the world ever saw. Pharaoh had a dream that distracted him. He thought he stood on the banks of the river Nile, and saw coming up out of the river, seven fat, sleek, glossy cows, and they began to browse in the thick grass. Nothing frightful about that. But after them, coming out of the same river, he saw seven cows that were gaunt and starved, and the worst looking cows that had ever been seen in the land, and, in ferocity of hunger, they devoured their seven fat predecessors. Pharaoh, the king, sent for Joseph to decipher these Midnight Hieroglyphics.

Joseph made short work of it, and intimated that the seven fat cows that came out of the river are seven years with plenty to eat, the seven emaciated cows that followed them are seven years with nothing to eat. "Now," said Joseph, "let us take one-fifth of the corn crop of the seven prosperous years, and keep it as a provision for the seven years in which there shall be no corn crop." The king took the counsel and appointed Joseph, because of his integrity and public-spiritedness, as the president of the undertaking. The farmers paid one-fifth of their income as a premium. In all the towns and cities of the land there were branch houses. This great Egyptian life insurance company had millions of dollars as assets.

After a while the dark days came, and the whole nation would have starved if it had not been for the provision they had made for the future. But now these suffering families had nothing to do but go up and collect the amount of

Their Life Policies.

The Bible puts it in one short phrase: "In all the land of Egypt there was bread." I say this was the first life insurance company. It was Divinely organized. It had in it all the advantages of "the whole life plan," of the "tontine plan," of the "reserved endowment plan," and all the other good plans. We are told that Rev. Dr. Anhate, of Lincolnshire, England, originated the first life insurance company in 1698. No! it is as old as the corn cribs of Egypt; and God Himself was the author and originator. If that were not so, I would not take your time and mine in Sabbath discussion of this subject. I feel it is a theme of vital, religious, and of infinite import, the morals of insurance.

About ten or twelve years ago there was a great panic in life insurance which did good. Under the storm the untrustworthy and bogus institutions were scattered, while the genuine were tested and firmly established, and where does the life insurance institution stand to-day? What amount of comfort, of education, of moral and spiritual advantage, is represented in the simple statistic that in this country the life insurance companies in one year paid seven million dollars to the families of the bereft; and in five years they paid three hundred millions of dollars to the families of the bereft; and are promising to pay—and hold themselves in readiness to pay—two thousand millions of dollars to the families of the bereft!

They have actually paid out more in dividends and death claims than they have ever received in premiums. I know of what I speak. The life insurance companies of this country paid more than seven million dollars of taxes to the Government in five years. So, instead of these companies being indebted to the land, the land is indebted to them. To cry out against life insurance, because here and there one company has behaved badly, is as absurd as it would be for a man to burn down a thousand acres of harvest field in order to kill the moles and potato-bugs—as preposterous as a man who should blow up a crowded steamer in mid-Atlantic for the purpose of destroying the barnacles on the bottom of the hulk.

What Does the Bible Say

in regard to this subject? If the Bible favors the institution, I will favor it; if the Bible denounces it, I will denounce it. In addition to the forecast of Joseph in the text, I call to your attention Paul's comparison. Here is one man who, through neglect, fails to support his family while he lives, or after he dies. Here is another man, who abhors the Scriptures, and rejects God. Which of those men is the worse? Well, you say the latter. Paul says the former. Paul says that a man who neglects to care for his household is more obnoxious than a man who rejects the Scriptures: "He that provideth not for his own, and especially those of his own household, is worse than an infidel." Life insurance companies help most of us to provide for our families after we are gone; but, if we have the money to pay the premiums, and do not pay them, we have no right to expect mercy at the hand of God in the Judgment. We are worse than Tom Paine, and worse than Voltaire. The Bible declares it—we are worse than an infidel.

After the certificate of death has been made out and thirty or sixty days have passed, and the officer of a life-insurance company comes into the bereft household and pays down the hard cash on an insurance policy, that officer of the company is performing a positively religious rite, according to the Apostle James, who says: "True religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction," and so on. The religion of Christ proposes to take care of the temporal wants of the people as well as the spiritual. When Hezekiah was dying, the injunction came to him:

"Set Thy House in Order, for thou shalt die and not live." That injunction in our day would mean: "Make your will; settle up your accounts; make things plain; don't deceive your heirs with rolls of worthless mining stock; don't deceive them with deeds for Western lands that will never yield any crop but chills and fever; don't leave for them notes that have been outlawed, and second mortgages on property that will not pay the first." "Set thy house in order." That is, fix up things, so your going out of the world may make as little consternation as possible. See the lean cattle devouring the fat cattle, and in the time of plenty prepare for the time of want.

The difficulty is, when men think of their death, they are afraid to think of it only in connection with their spiritual welfare, and not of which will come because of their emigration from it. It is meanly selfish for you to be so absorbed in the heaven to which you are going that you forget what is to become of your wife and children after you are dead. You can go out of this world without leaving a dollar, and yet die happy if you could not provide for them; you can trust them in the hands of the God who owns all the harvests and the herds and the flocks; but if you could pay the premiums on a policy, and neglect them, it is a mean thing for you to go up to heaven while they go into the poor-house. You, at death, move into a mansion, river front, and they move into two rooms on the fourth story of a tenement house in a back street. When they are out at the elbows and knees, the thought of your splendid robe in heaven will not keep them warm. The minister may preach a splendid sermon over your remains, and the quartette may sing like four angels in the organ loft; but your death will be a swindle. You had the means to provide for the comfort of your household when you left it, and you wickedly neglected it.

Devastation in the Household,

"O," says some one, "I have more faith than you; I believe when I go out of this world the Lord will provide for them." Go to Blackwell's Island, go through all the poor-houses of the country, and I will show you how often God provides for the neglected children of Neglectful Parents.

That is, He provides for them through public charity. As for myself, I would rather have the Lord provide for my family in a private home, and through my own industry, and paternal and conjugal faithfulness. But says some man: "I mean in the next ten or twenty years to make a great fortune, and so I shall leave my family when I go out of this world very comfortable." How do you know you are going to live ten or twenty years? If we could look up the highway of the future, we would see it crossed by pneumonias, and pleurisies, and consumptions, and colliding rail trains, and runaway horses, and breaking bridges, and funeral processions. Are you so certain you are going to live ten or twenty years, you can warrant your household any comfort after you go away from them?

Besides that, the vast majority of men die poor! Two—only—out of a hundred succeed in business. Are you very certain you are going to be one of the two? Rich one day, poor the next. A man in New York got two millions of dollars, and the money turned his brain and he died in the lunatic asylum. All his property was left with the business firm, and they swamped it; and then the family of the insane man were left without a dollar. In eighteen months the prosperity, the insanity, the insolvency, and the complete domestic ruin!

Besides that, there are men who die solvent, who are insolvent before they get under the ground, or before their estate is settled up. How can knock the life out of an estate! A man thinks the property is worth fifteen thousand dollars: under a forced sale it brings seven thousand dollars. The business man takes advantage of the crisis, and compels the widow of his deceased partner to sell out to him at a ruinous price, or lose all. The stock was supposed to be very valuable, but it has been so "watered" that when the executor tries to sell it he is laughed out of Wall Street, or the administrator is ordered by the surrogate to wind up the whole affair. The estate was supposed, at the man's death, to be worth sixty thousand dollars; but after the indebtedness had been met, and the bills of the doctor and the undertaker and the tombstone-cutter have been paid, there is nothing left. That means the children are to come home from school and go to work. That means the complete hardship of the wife, turned out with nothing but a needle to fight the great battle of the world. Tear down the lambrequins, close the piano, rip up the Axminster, sell out the wardrobe, and let the mother take a child in each hand and trudge out into the desert of the world. A life insurance would have hindered all that.

The Auctioneer's Mallet

But says some one one, "I am a man of small means, and I can't afford to pay the premium." That is sometimes a lawful and and there is no answer to it; but in nine cases out of ten, when a man says that, he smokes up in cigars, and drinks down in wine, and expends in luxuries enough money to have paid the premium on a life insurance policy which would have kept his family from beggary when he is dead. A man ought to put himself down on the strictest economy until he can meet this Christian necessity. You have no right to the luxuries until you have made such provision.

A Genuine Excuse,

I admire what was said by Rev. Dr. Guthrie, the great Scottish preacher. A few years before his death he stood in a public meeting and declared: "When I came to Edinburgh, the people sometimes laughed at my blue stockings, and at my cotton umbrella, and they said

I looked like a common ploughman, and they derided me because I lived in a house for which I paid thirty-five pounds rent a year, and oftentimes I walked when I would have been very glad to have a cab; but, gentlemen, I did all that because I wanted to pay the premium on a life insurance that would keep my family comfortable if I should die." That I take to be the right expression of an honest, intelligent, Christian man.

The utter indifference of many people on this important subject accounts for much of the

Crime and Pauperism

of this day. Who are these children sweeping the crossings with broken broom and begging of you a penny as you go by? Who are these lost souls gliding under the gaslights, in thin shawls? Ah! they are the victims of want; in many of the cases the forecast of parents and grandparents might have prohibited it. God only knows how they struggled to do right. They prayed until the tears froze on their cheeks; they sewed on the sack until the breaking of the day; but they could not get enough money to pay the rent; they could not get enough money to decently clothe themselves; and one day, in that wretched home, the angel of purity and the angel of crime fought a great fight between the empty bread-tray and the fireless hearth, and the black-winged angel shrieked. "Aha! I have won the day!"

Says some man, "I believe what you say; it is right and Christian, and I mean some time to attend to this matter." My friend, you are going to lose the comfort of your household in the same way the sinner loses heaven, by procrastination. I see all around me the of parents who meant some day to attend to this Christian duty. During the process of adjournment the man gets his feet wet, then comes a chill and delirium, and the doleful shake of the doctor's head, and the obsequies. If there be anything more pitiable than a woman delicately brought up, and on her marriage-day, by an indulgent father, given to a man to whom she is the chief joy and pride of life until the moment of his death, and then that same woman going out, with helpless children at her back to struggle for bread in a world where brawny muscle and rugged soul are necessary—I say, if there be anything more pitiable than that, I do not know what it is. And yet there are good women who are indifferent in regard to their husband's duty in this respect; and there are those positively hostile, as though a life insurance subjected a man to some fatality.

Destitute and Suffering Families

There is in Brooklyn to-day a poor woman who vehemently opposed the insurance of her husband's life, and when application had been made for a policy of ten thousand dollars, she frustrated it. She would never have a document in the house that implied it was possible for her husband ever to die. One day, in quick revolution of machinery, his life was instantly dashed out. What is the sequel? She is, with annoying tug, making the half of a miserable living. Her two children have been taken away from her in order that they may be clothed and schooled, and her life is to be a prolonged hardship. Oh, man, before forty-eight hours have passed away, appear at the desk of some of our great life insurance companies, have the stethescope of the physician put to your heart and lungs, and by the seal of some honest company decree that your children shall not be subjected to the humiliation of financial struggle in the day of your demise.

Keeping a Small Candy Shop,

Dishonest Companies.

But I must ask the men engaged in life insurance business whether they feel the importance of their trust, and charge them I must that they need Divine grace to help them in their work. In this day, when there are so many rivalries in your line of business, you will be tempted to overstate the amount of assets and the extent of the surplus, and you will be tempted to abuse the franchise of the company, and make up the deficits of one year by adding some of the receipts of another year. Under the pressure many have gone down, and you will follow them if you have too much confidence in yourself, and do not appeal to the Lord for help. But if any of you belong to

That Miscreant Class

of people who, without any financial ability, organize themselves into what they call a life insurance company, with a pretended capital of two hundred thousand dollars or three hundred thousand dollars, then vote yourself into the lucrative position, and then take all the premiums for yourself, and then, at the approach of the State Superintendent, drop all into the hands of those life insurance undertakers whose business it is to gather up the remains of defunct organizations and bury them in their own vault—then, I say, you had better get out of the business, and disgorge the widows' houses you have swallowed.

But my word is, to all those who are legitimately engaged in the business: You ought to be better than other men, not only because of the responsibilities that rest upon you, but because the truth is ever confronting you that your stay on earth is uncertain, and your life a matter of a few days or years. Do not those black-edged letters that come into your office make you think? Does not the doctor's certificate on the death claim give you a thrill? Your periodicals, your advertisements, and even the lithography of your policies warn you that you are mortal. According to your own showing the chances that you will die this year are at least two per cent. Are you prepared for the tremendous exigency? The most condemned man in the Judgment Day will be the unprepared life insurance man, for the simple reason that his whole business was connected with human exit, and he cannot say: "I did not think." His whole business was to think on that one thing. O, my brother, get Insured for Eternity.

In consideration of what Christ has done in your behalf, have the indenture this day made out, signed and sealed with the red seal of the cross.

But I have words of encouragement and comfort for those of my hearers who are engaged in

The Fire Insurance Business.

You are ordained by God to stand between us and the most raging element of nature. We are indebted to you for what the National Board of Underwriters and the Convention of Chiefs of the Fire Department have effected through your suggestions, and through your encouragement. We are indebted to you for what you have effected in the construction of buildings, and in the change in the habits of our cities; so that by scientific principles orderly companies extinguish the fire, instead of the old-time riots which used to extinguish the citizens! And we are indebted to you for the successful demands you have made for the repeal of unjust laws—for the battle you have waged against incendiarism and arson—for the fatal blow you have given to the theory that corporations have no souls, by the cheerfulness and promptitude with which you have met losses, from which you might have escaped through the technicality of the law.

I do not know any class of men in our midst more high-toned and worthy of confidence than these men, and yet I have sometimes feared that while your chief business is to calculate about losses on earthly property, you might without sufficient thought go into that which, in regard to your soul, in your own parlance, might be called "hazards," "extra hazards," "special hazards." An unforgiven sin in the soul is more inflammable and explosive than camphene or nitroglycerine. However the rates may be—yea, though the whole earth were paid down to you in one solid premium—you cannot afford to lose your soul. Do not take that risk, lest it be said hereafter that, while in this world you had keen business faculty, when you went out of the world you went out everlastingly insolvent.

The scientific Hitchcocks and Sillimans and Mitchells of the world have united with the sacred writers to make us believe that there is to sweep across the earth, compared with which that of Chicago in 1871, and that of Boston in 1872, and that of New York in 1835, were mere nothings. Brooklyn on fire! New York on fire! Charleston on fire! San Franisco on fire! Canton on fire! St. Petersburg on fire! Paris on fire! London on fire! The Andes on fire! The Appennines on fire! The Himalayas on fire! What will be peculiar about the day will be that the water with which we put out great fires will itself take flame; and the Mississippi, the Ohio and the St. Lawrence, and Lake Erie, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and tumbling Niagara, shall with red tongues lick the heavens. The geological heats of the centre of the world will burn out toward the circumference, and the heats of the outside will burn down from the circumference to the centre, and this world will become, not only according to the Bible, but according to science, a living coal—the living coal afterward whitening into ashes, the ashes scattered by the breath of

A Conflagration Coming

The Last Hurricane,

and all that will be left of this glorious planet will be the flakes of ashes fallen on other worlds. O! on that day will you be fire-proof, or will you be a total loss? Will you be rescued, or will you be consumed? When this great cathedral of the world, with its pillars of rocks, and its pinnacles of mountains, and its cellar of golden mine, and its upholstery of morning cloud, and its baptismal font of the sea, shall blaze, will you get out on the fire-escape of the Lord's deliverance? O! on that day for which all other days were made, may it be found that these life insurance men had a paid-up policy, and these fire insurance men had given them, instead of the débris of a consumed worldly estate, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens!

THE LITTLE WAIF OF THE SEA.

(See Illustration on page 509.)

Minute guns proclaimed a ship in distress, and the life-saving crew put forth their best efforts to get their boat to her. In such a sea as that raging outside the bar it was impossible. The sky was black as ink, and only by the sound of the guns could any one guess where the ship was. There was a dangerous line of rocks nearly two miles out, and the general opinion was that the ship had struck there. If so, there was no hope for her.

With the first gleam of dawn came confirmation of the fact, for beaten to pieces on the jagged edges lay the fragments of the wrecked ship. The sea was quieter now, though still beating furiously on the reef, and the gallant crew set out to see if there might still be any one left alive.

Suddenly one of the men called out that he saw a raft and some one upon it. The other men, looking in the direction in which he pointed, saw it too and bent to the oars. Guiding the boat skillfully among the floating wreckage, they were soon alongside the raft. There, lying on two of the wooden gratings, lashed together, lay a woman with a child in her arms. One glance showed that the mother was dead, A dreadful bruise on her forehead indicated the manner of her death, showing that she had been struck there by either a piece of the wreck or the rocks in the darkness. But the child still lived. The dead mother and the living child were lifted into the boat, and the crew pulled back for the shore.

Very tenderly one of the rough men took the little waif in his arms, and carried her to the little parsonage of the village, which, as he well knew, was always open for any who might need hospitality. Who the child was they never learned. The clergyman made many fruitless inquiries at first, but ultimately giving up hope of discovering her identity, he and his good wife accepted her as a gift from God, and brought her up in the ways of the Lord as their own.

THE WATCHMAN'S ANSWER.

"THE MORNING COMETH." Isa. 21 : 12.

What the Night is—1. Nature's Darkness—2. Satan's Dominion—3. Death's Desolation—What the Coming Day is—1. Nature's Deliverance—2. Resurrection Life—3. Christ's Personal Presence.

IF the Christian Church were in truth—as so many people erroneously suppose—the great kingdom of prophecy—that "Kingdom of the Heavens" for the establishment of which on this earth we are taught continually to pray, there would be a difficulty in understanding this and other passages of Scripture. One passage especially, which is full of grand and glorious meaning when correctly understood, is otherwise comparatively meaningless. It is that in which the Apostle Paul reminds Christians (Rom. 13 : 11, 12) of what they ought to be in view of the fact that "the night is far spent; the day is at hand." The image before the apostle's mind is that of men who have been redeemed by the blood of Christ, cleansed by the washing of regeneration and sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, spoken of as still covered by still needing to be awakened out of sleep; still uncrowned with the anticipated great salvation. In what sharp contrast with this is the language of the same apostle, in another Epistle: "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that the day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day; we are not of the night, nor of the darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober. For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that are drunken, are drunken in the night. But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation."—1 Thess. 5 : 4–8.

The Shadows of the Night;

And yet there is no real contradiction between these two Scriptures. All that is needed in order to harmonize them is, that we understand that in the one case the night and darkness are spoken of objectively, and in the other subjectively. True believers are even now "children of the light and of the day," the day-star has already arisen in their hearts; but they are still walking in what St. Paul calls

"This Present Darkness"

(Eph. 6: 12); waiting and watching for that long-promised and radiant morning without clouds, which will only come when the Sun of Righteousness shall arise, with healing in His wings.

Let us for a few moments meditate on some of the most marked characteristics—first, of the "night" whose approaching termination is now near; and, secondly, of the glorious "day" which succeeds.

1. The night, then, which is far spent, is the night of nature's darkness. Its shadows fell upon the groves of the lost Eden, when man's sin had dimmed its primal sunshine, and its wailing winds awoke when he was driven out and heard the clang of its closing gates behind him. Above all, the moral night has been deep and abiding; "darkness has covered the earth, and gross darkness the people." Oh! long and weary night! shall it never end? Yes; even when St. Paul wrote, four thousand years of it had passed away, and, therefore, it was verily true that "the night was far spent." But, if true then, how emphatically true is it now, for how much nearer are we to that blessed day when "the creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the sons of God."

2. Again, the night to which the apostle refers, is

The Night of Satan's Dominion.

In Eph. 6 : 12, we read: "For our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world-rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places." And our Lord Himself speaks of the evil one as "the power of darkness" (Luke 22 : 53). As long, then, as Satan rules, not only in the hearts of men and the government of the nations, as we are taught in the Book of Daniel, but in some sort over the powers of nature, the night must continue, and not till he is bound and imprisoned can the morning dawn. This shows the folly of those who anticipate that by the advance of civilization, the more earnest and universal preaching of the Gospel, and the larger outpouring of the Holy Spirit, the dark shadows of the night will be dispersed, and the Millennial day dawn upon the world. No; the night, though "far spent," will not be passed till the oppressive curse be removed—till Satan be bound—till the Lord has come.

3. Once more, the night which is, blessed be the Lord of Life, so soon to end, is

The Night of Death's Desolation.

The history of this fallen world is most emphatically the history of death. Death has reigned, not only "from Adam to Moses," and from Moses to Christ, but even from Christ to the present hour, and still the veil of its dreadful night is spread over the world. Oh! ye bereaved ones, believing, how may you rejoice in the thought that the night of death is far spent! One by one we have laid the beloved ones—parents, friends, children—in the silent tomb. But, glorious tidings!—"the night is far spent, the day is at hand."

"The night is wearing fast away,
The glorious light is dawning;
I see the streaks of coming day.
The bright Millennial morning."

"The day is at hand!" What day? We have seen some of the characteristics of the night.

What Kind of Day

is it that we look forward to?

1. It is the day of creation's deliverance. For this the winds are sighing, as they make their sweet but melancholy music amid the leafy groves of summer; for this the wild waves cry aloud, as they dash themselves upon the rocky shore; for this the starving beasts of the forest, and the birds perishing in the cruel frost, and all the innocent, suffering creatures God has made, send up to Him their constant, inarticulate prayer. "For the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God." Oh, blessed thought! "The day is at hand. The day when all Nature's wounds shall be healed; when her sorrowing heart shall be comforted; and when, as in a mirror from which all obscurations have been removed, she shall truly reflect the glory of her Creator.

2. Again, the day which the Apostle declares to be at hand is

The Day of Resurrection-Life.

Of the wicked it is said, in the 49th Psalm, "Like sheep, they are laid in the grave (sheol); death shall be their shepherd." But, it is added, "the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning." And what morning is this but the morning of the resurrection? When they that have slept in Jesus shall awake, and be—to use the exquisite figure of the Psalmist—as the multitudinous dewdrops shining in the brightness of the morning sun.

Oh, glorious day! when disease and death shall no more torture and destroy "this trembling house of clay;" when by the possession of nobler powers we shall be fitted for a nobler though not a more acceptable service than we have been able to render here; when that which was "sown in corruption shall be raised in incorruption, and that which was sown in weakness shall be raised in power."

3. Lastly, "the day" which not only inspired testimony, but many concurrent signs also assure us is even now "at hand" is

The Day of Christ's Presence.

As long as He is absent, the night continues, for is He not the Sun of the moral and spiritual world? Yea, even before He rises on the world as the Sun of Righteousness, He will be to His waiting and watching saints "the bright and morning star." Hence, in the parable of the Ten Virgins, the period during which the Bridegroom tarries is represented as the time of night, for it is "at midnight" that the cry is made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and the prophetic midnight immediately precedes the dawn.

In vain do we hope that the night shall end and the shadows flee away till the Day-star shines in the eastern sky; in vain we look for the dawn of Millennial day till "the Sun of Righteousness arise, with healing in His wings." No rest for creation till Christ comes; no binding of Satan till Christ comes; no Millennium of peace till Christ comes; no resurrection-life till Christ comes; no consummation of bliss in body and soul till Christ comes; for in His presence only is the fullness of joy, and on the wings of love and power He brings the everlasting day.

And, oh glorious assurance! that day is about to dawn. Yes, "the night is far spent, the day is at hand." And what then? What are the solemn words which the Apostle adds? "Let us, therefore, cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." Strange and sad that such an exhortation should be needed by "the children of the day;" stranger and more sad that it should never be so much needed as now.

A MINISTER SAVED FROM PARALYSIS.

A REMARKABLE testimony from the Rev. John S. Haugh is published by the Rev. A. B. Simpson in his Word, Work and World. Mr. Haugh, who is a member of the New York East Conference of the M. E. Church, and has for thirty-one years won the respect and esteem of the churches which he has served, relates his sufferings and cure with much interesting detail. We extract the following from his narrative:

In the winter of 1877 I began to have trouble in my head—as though a gimlet were being worked over my left eye—accompanied by insomnia, so that I was in constant distress of brain, and had my sleep limited in length to three hours in the twenty-four. Of course I was unable to attend to my ministerial work, and my dear people, seeing my condition, released me from the pastorate until our conference met—a period of nearly two months—when I was appointed to a little place among the hills of Litchfield County, Conn. Here I resided for one year—a variable one indeed. I was at no time strong or efficient, and now and then was wholly unnerved and incapable. I then removed to Redding, where, in my second year, I entirely broke down, and was sent by my family and friends to Dansville, N. Y,, and put in care of Dr. Jackson, who was at the head of the institute there. He wrote to my family that I had congestion of the brain and partial paralysis of the vocal organs, and that I was very near to permanent paralysis of the brain. My memory almost wholly left me, and I was nerveless and without any real will-power. I was afraid to meet any one, and had a shrinking from looking in any person's face, or being obliged, even, to say "good morning" to any member of my family. I had a dread of religious meetings, and especially of those in which I might have to take part. I partially recovered, and, in spite of the doctor's persuasions, who wanted me to rest a year longer, I having a family dependent upon me, resumed ministerial labor, this time at North Canton, Conn. The people in this place were considerate and patient, and the labor light. At times I seemed to improve, but again I entirely failed. The following year I was stationed at East Chester, N. Y., where I spent a sad and hopeless twelve months. All attempts to do any kind of mental labor were followed by distress and great depression. . . . . Finally, in April of this year I was retired at my own request. It was a very solemn time for me, and seemed just like my funeral.

Perhaps I ought to have said, sooner, that a few friends, including my wife, had been urging me to apply directly to Jesus for my Healing; they had been reading about Christ as the Healer of the sick, and strove with me to give the subject my attention. I did think of it, but could have no assurance as touching my own case, not seeing why the blessed Lord should especially give me aid, even if He had done so to others. These praying friends wished me to visit the Berachah Home in East Sixty-first Street, New York, and to see Rev. A. B. Simpson, who is at the head. I had read of him, at times, in the public prints, and had seen some testimonials of healing which were put in my hands, when occasionally at home. But I was not drawn toward him at all, and rather felt that he was visionary and an enthusiast. Yet, in my very great distress, and having resorted to all merely human helps, I resolved, as a forlorn hope, to go to the Home and see about it. I attended an anointing service held in the Tabernacle (Madison Avenue and 45th Street) on Friday afternoon, the 29th of April. Never before did I so feel the merciful tenderness of my heavenly Father as on that occasion. Without giving me the least care or labor in the case, He came into my mind as a great Teacher and caused me to see, as if in panoramic view, the doctrine of Healing as in the Atonement of Jesus for me. My whole being melted down before the Lord in tenderness and gratitude and love, and I felt that my redemption was not far distant. The next day, Saturday, April 30, 1887, in the afternoon, I was anointed for Healing in the name of the Lord Jesus, as directed in James 5: 14. Contrary to all previous experience, I slept pleasantly through the night, and when I awoke there was no pain or confusion or weariness or depression in my brain or eyes or voice. I was in an entirely new world. My inner life seemed more changed, even, than my body—Jesus was so near, and real, and enrapturing.

I arose early, and from that time on, I was at services every evening, and was not unemployed or in quest of rest at any moment for twenty-one days. Then I came home on Saturday, May 21 giving, on that one day, my testimony to ten different persons. And it has been my conversation and life to tell the sick, and all whose ear I could gain, of the wonderful work of God in my body and soul. No period of my ministerial life has been so crowded with earnest and unceasing labor. Monday brings no reaction, even of weariness to my brain, for on that and every other day I am just as busy as on Sunday. I would like to be where I could have services nightly, and I am putting in as much work as opportunity permits. If any one desires to correspond with me as touching my experience or any help I might afford them, I give a cordial welcome. My home is at Sandy Hook, Conn.

A HEROIC STAGE-DRIVER.

A CALIFORNIAN stage-driver's courage and heroism in the midst of extreme personal danger, is described by a correspondent of the New York Tribune. A stage was being driven one night over a precipitous mountain road, with a rocky wall on one side and a precipice on the other. The only outside passenger was awakened from a doze by a sharp jerk, and was alarmed by finding that the seat beside him, where the driver had been sitting, was empty. He knew perfectly well that the stage unguided would soon be upset, so he reached down to gather up the reins but he could not feel them. The driver must have taken them with him when he fell. The team was going at a fast trot, and the passenger knew not what to do. Death stared him in the face, and he was giving himself up for lost when he heard the driver's voice from behind directing him how to put on the brake and stop the coach. He obeyed, and as the team halted the driver crawled from under the coach, having held on to the reins when he fell and been dragged by them along the rough road, preferring injury and danger rather than to risk the lives of his passengers by letting go. The passengers stood aghast as they realized the danger from which the driver's herosim had delivered them, and their gratitude to him as he stood covered with dirt, and bruised, knew no bounds. If the stage-driver had considered his own interest he would have loosed the reins and allowed the stage to go on to destruction, but he was one of those men who do not regard their own personal welfare as the highest concern in life. Well is it for the world that there are such men, who hold in contempt the maxim "every man for himself," and who are ready in their respective positions to sacrifice ease and comfort and even life itself for the welfare of others. Every true follower of Christ must be such a man, for He made Himself of no reputation, and humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, that men might have eternal life (Phil. 2: 6, 8).

A HINDOO BOATMAN'S TEST.

ZALIM SINGH, a Christian convert, was crossing the Ganges in his boat in which were two Brahmins, who began to reproach him for having become a Christian. "What do you know, you ignorant fellow, of your own religion, or of Christianity?" Zalim replied, "What you have said, pundits, about my ignorance, is all true; but whether I have acted foolishly in ceasing to worship my thakur (household idol) is another thing. I had a capital god at my house; he was beautifully made and cost me some money, for the man who made him was a skillful workman, and I paid him handsomely. But, look here, pundits, suppose I had my thakur here in this boat, and in my left hand this little dog, and cast them both into the Ganges, what would become of them?" The pundits were silent, but the people said, "Why, the god, being of stone, would sink, and the dog would swim ashore." "If so," the Christian replied, "then the dog must be greater than the god, for he can save himself, which the god cannot do. Do not expect me, pundits, to worship a God which is inferior to a dog. No; I will no longer worship a stone, but I will worship Him who made the stone. I worship the Lord Jesus, who died for me, and from this day forth Him only will I serve."

PATIENCE TOO QUICKLY EXHAUSTED.

IN the early days of the mission work at Bimbia, on one of the hilly spurs of the Cameroons mountain range, West Africa, a missionary devoted his morning hours to visiting the natives in their own homes. In one of the most miserable of these huts lived a poor, lonely woman; stolid apathy and indifference the only expression on her face; no desire in life had she except to prolong it, and so she farmed her little piece of land, and ate or fasted, according to the season, or the state and productiveness of her ground. Pity touched the missionary's heart, and over and over again he told her the story of her Creator's love and her Redeemer's sufferings. One day, out on his daily rounds, he resolved to pass her house, and give his time to others who apparently listened and understood. The evening came. In his own home he heard that a woman was at the door, wanting to see him. It was the lonely woman whom he passed by in the morning. Weeping, she inquired, "Why did you pass me by? Is it not true that He loves me? Have you deceived me? Just as I was beginning to feel it all, do you leave me? Is it too late?" The barrier was broken down. The mandate had gone forth, "Let there be light," and there was light. Her life was changed; she lived to show, by a happy, consistent life, that "the Lord heareth the poor," and He it is "that giveth strength and power unto His people."

A PUZZLED GARDENER.

A JOURNAL devoted to the interests of horticulture states that a gardener in the employ of a gentleman at Pittsford, New York, has recently solved a problem which has long perplexed him. In the garden under his care is a large lawn on which he has bestowed much labor, and which was his especial pride. For some time past a small patch on this lawn disfigured it, for the grass that grew there was poor and withered in marked contrast to all around. For a long time the gardener vainly endeavored to discover the cause of its decay. One day as he stood meditatively gazing at it he saw several birds settle upon it and thrust their beaks through the sod with much diligence and satisfaction. The gardener had the curiosity to turn up a portion of the punctured turf, and discovered to his amazement that the earth beneath was alive with a greedy multitude of large white grubs, which had completely consumed the roots of the grass. He continued the work, and at every fresh removal of the sod the same phenomenon presented itself, until quarts of the larvæ were gathered and destroyed. The grub is to be examined by the entomologists of Pittsford, and, it is hoped, identified. It is to be feared that the lack of vigorous life in some portions of Christ's vineyard, the Church, may have a similar cause. The root of the piety of the members is being destroyed by Satan's worms of avarice, ambition, and love of pleasure (Rev. 3: 15-18).

CONTRASTS UNDER ONE ROOF.

A VISIT to some tenement houses in New York City, which is described in the Times, shows how close together are merriment and misery in great cities. In one of the tenement houses several families were found living on the second floor. In the front room was a woman who the same morning had given birth to the infant which lay upon her breast. In the rear dwelt a family which had been bereaved by death, and a stricken mother mourned the loss of her only son, a young man of twenty-two years of age. While at either end of the same floor the two extremes of life were thus represented, a merry party was in progress in the intervening apartments. The strains of the violin regulated the movements of amatuer step dancers and merry vocalists added at times to the general entertainment. As the fun grew faster it was interrupted by a knock at the door. The host answered the summons, and beheld the undertaker straining at one end of the coffin containing the remains of the dead man. The professional mourner requested that the door might be opened in order to enable them to turn the casket in the narrow passage. The request, of course, was complied with, and the funeral procession passed slowly down the staircase and from the house, and the jovial party, unmoved by the depressing reminder of their mortality, resumed their hilarious gaiety. The same contrasts exist everywhere, and these were startling chiefly because they were so close together; though each family was thus, while in close contact, as widely separated by its special circumstances as though thousands of miles apart (Prov. 14: 10), they all had a common bond of brotherhood but too little recognized, and all might find in the same gospel a message adapted to each lot (1 Cor. 7: 29-31).

CHRISTIAN UNION IN JAPAN.

AT the recent Synod in Japan the Presbyterian Church accepted the proposals of the Congregationalists for union in missionary work in that country. This is a very hopeful sign, as the field has extended with a rapidity unparalleled before in the history of missions. The Rev. J. C. Hepburn, M. D., in writing to the Church, thus refers to it: When I and my dear wife landed on these shores we knew not where to lay our heads, the grossest darkness of heathenism covered the nation, and there was not a single heart which beat with love to Christ in all this land. Now there are at least fifteen thousand church members and two hundred churches all told, besides theological seminaries, colleges, female seminaries, Sunday-schools and day-schools. The Home Missionary Society connected with the synod has now charge of the evangelical work connected with our united church, and is a most efficient body. The great and most interesting question that came before the Synod was the proposition which came from the Congregational churches on the subject of union with the Presbyterian Church. The subject was thoroughly discussed, and a committee appointed to arrange with them a basis of union. The report of this committee has now been accepted and adopted.

Five Cents, Postage Free.

END OF THIS AGE ABOUT THE END OF THIS CENTURY,

and its Last Week Passover Week, Ending Thursday, April 11, 1901,

As shown by Daniel's 2300 and 1335 and 1290 Years this being the termination also of the 6000 Years from the Creation of Man, and the 2520 Years from Nebuchadnezzar, and the 360 Years from Luther's Reformation, according to the Bible periods—a pamphlet of 29 pages—by Rev. M. Baxter, Episcopal Clergyman and one of the Editors of the "Christian Herald." Author of "Forty Coming Wonders," "Coming Wars," etc. Address Manager "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Secretary of the Treasury has Come to the relief of the money market, which was threatened with stringency through the large accumulation in the Treasury, which, at the end of July, was $456,000,000. On August 3 he issued an order offering to anticipate the payment of interest due in January next, and also to purchase bonds maturing in 1891. Thus interest to the amount of twenty-two millions can be collected at once, and if that amount is not sufficient for the relief of business, more money can be had by selling bonds to the Government. The necessity for such devices is an evidence that Congress ought to concentrate its attention on the revenue. It is the merest folly for the country to continue paying into the Treasury money which the Government does not need, and which could be profitably employed in business. Either in the internal revenue or the tariff such reductions ought to be made as will relieve the unnecessary burdens of the people, and special care should be taken that relief should be given to those classes which are held in poverty and crippled by the grievous exactions of our ridiculous system of finance.

The Prohibition Amendment in Texas Appears to have been defeated by an unexpectedly large majority. At the date of writing the actual figures had not been received, but the lowest estimate is 30,000 majority against it. This is not due to any lack of vigorous effort. The Prohibitionists of the State worked valiantly to the last, and even on polling day the ladies were present encouraging the workers and using their influence. The liquor interest evidently made a desperate struggle, having become really alarmed by the progress the Prohibition party was making. Reports show that the Prohibitionists polled a heavy vote in northern Texas and were victorious in that section, but the big majorities which the anti-Prohibitionists claim come from the South and West. Fort Worth was carried by the Prohibitionists. It is predicted that the question will split the Democratic party in the State, a large section of the party having pledged themselves to bolt the ticket at the next Convention if a Prohibition plank is not embodied in the platform.

The Virginia State Democratic Convention at Roanoke, on Thursday last, showed no disposition to make concessions on the question of the State debt, which is the subject of most interest to the country generally, that the convention had to consider. The platform adopted by the Convention, says: "We approve the action of the last General Assembly, at its extra session in 1887, in refusing to accept the terms proposed by the bondholders in connection with a settlement of the public debt. The Democratic party will never support or sanction any adjustment of the debt which shall impose larger liability upon this commonwealth than that recognized and provided for by the Riddleberger bill, and we pledge the party to enact all laws necessary to render such a settlement effective, final and decisive." On the Tariff the platform is somewhat ambiguous, but on the whole favors protection. It says: "We favor raising the revenue requisite for the support of the Federal Government by a tariff upon imports, limited to the necessities of government economically administered, and so adjusted in its application as to prevent unequal burdens, encourage productive interests at home, the development of our material resources, and afford just compensation to labor, but not to foster monopolies." The other planks endorse the Administration, demand the abolition of the internal revenue system, deprecate payment of taxes in coupons, ask the Representatives in Congress from the State to call upon the Federal Government to help pay the State's debt, and advocate the passage of the Blair Educational bill, or a better bill for the same purpose. No State officers are to be elected this year.

A Remarkable Decision, Which Will Probably surprise many people, and may revive the old disputes about State sovereignty, was rendered by Justice Bradley, of the United States Supreme Court, on August 1. The suit was part of the famous litigation about the Arthur Kill bridge. The Justice declared that by the authority of Congress not only may a bridge be built over the navigable waters of a State, but land for piers, under water and on shore, may be taken without the State's consent. Furthermore, a railroad corporation empowered by Congress to engage in inter-State traffic, may do business in a State without the consent of the State. He emphasized that opinion by saying that the power of Congress is supreme over the whole subject, unimpeded and unembarrassed by State lines or State laws; that in this matter the country is one, and the work to be accomplished is national, and that State interests, State jealousies and State prejudices do not require to be consulted. In matters of foreign and inter-State commerce there are no States. An appeal is to be taken to the whole bench, and, if the decision of Justice Bradley is confirmed, a large number of persons will have to revise their ideas of the Constitution.

An Earthquake Passed Through Indiana, Illinois, Tennessee, Kentucky and eastern Missouri about midnight on August 2. It appears to have done but little damage except in southwestern Kentucky, where a tract of land of about three hundred acres sank under water to the depth of nearly five feet, and compelled a farmer and his negroes to fly to the higher ground. Though happily without the fatalities often associated with earthquakes, the shock caused general alarm in the districts disturbed. At St. Louis several persons were thrown from chairs or beds, and when they attempted to rise from the floor they found it impossible to retain their equilibrium. At the Lafayette Park Police Station the officer on duty was thrown from his chair to the ground. A great many persons were so far disturbed that they ran out on the street in their night-clothes. At the hospitals the patients were awakened by the rattling of the windows and the rocking of the beds on which they lay. Many of them sprang out of bed, but the shock subsided so quickly none of them was seriously affected by it. At Evansville, Ind., the vibrations caused the large houses to sway, rattling windows and in some instances throwing down pieces of bric-à-brac and moving articles of furniture. Frightened citizens rushed from their beds, as the undulations continued for about twelve seconds. No casualties of consequence are reported, though everybody was thoroughly aroused, and it was several hours before the panic subsided.

The Death of a Remarkable Man Occurred in Russia on August 1, and it may have an important influence on the destinies of Europe. It was that of Michael Katkoff, the veteran editor of the Moscow Gazette; a man who exercised a very strong influence over both the present Czar and his father. Katkoff was sixty-six years of age, and belonged to a noble family. He was educated at Moscow University, and also studied in Germany. He subsequently became professor in the University of Moscow, but fell into disgrace with the Czar Nicholas for advocating constitutional government, and had to resign his professorship. Becoming editor of the Gazette, he abandoned his former principles and became an extreme advocate of autocratic rule and a bitter opponent of anything in the shape of freedom on the part of the people. No measures were too repressive or too sanguinary for him. When the revolt of 1863 occurred in Poland he urged the most energetic measures for its suppression. This accorded well with the temper of Czar Alexander II. The iron heel of imperial power crushed the revolt with plentiful effusion of Polish blood. So vindictive was he that some more moderate advocates of the same doctrines suspected him of being a nihilist in disguise, who was Jesuitically seeking to ruin the monarchy by making it odious. When the present Czar came to the throne he fell under Katkoff's influence, and under his leading became enamored of the Panslavist idea of organizing a union of all the Slav populations of Europe in one grand empire. Katkoff was opposed by the Foreign Secretary, Giers, whose counsels tended to peace, and the Czar was alternately swayed by the two men—his instincts leading him to the policy of Katkoff, while his prudence inclining him to that of Giers. Katkoff's name has been brought into great prominence within the last few months by his bitter attacks on Germany, and his combating the influence which Bismarck was said to have in controlling Russian policy in relation to foreign affairs.

An Important Election Took Place in Scotland on August 2. It was to fill the seat of a Gladstone Liberal at Glasgow who had resigned. At the last election he received 4,364 votes, against 3,567 for his Conservative opponent. The election last week resulted in the return of Sir George Otto Trevelyan, the liberal candidate, by a vote of 4,654, Evelyn Ashley, the Conservative nominee, receiving 3,353. This increase of the Gladstone vote was the more remarkable because, although there are a large number of Irish voters in the division, Sir George Trevelyan was not expected to poll them, as he became unpopular with Irishmen when he was secretary for Ireland in Mr. Gladstone's former administration. The leaders on both sides actively joined in the fray. Mr. Gladstone made a speech in Trevelyan's favor. Mr. Bright, Mr. Chamberlain and Lord Hartington wrote letters urging the people to vote against him. It is expected that this will weaken the influence of the Liberal Unionists with the Conservative government, as it proves that the Conservatives polled more votes when they ran their own candidate than when the Unionists had the choice of a man.

A New Home Rule Scheme for Ireland was promulgated last week by the Pall Mall Gazette. That journal professes to have received for it the endorsement of the liberal leaders. The scheme gives Ireland a national legislature and executive. There is to be no separation of Ulster. Irish members will continue to sit in the Imperial Parliament in their present numbers. The powers of the Irish Parliament shall be delegated, matters to be controlled in Dublin being clearly defined, and also subject to revision by the Imperial Parliament. The appointment of judges to remain in office fifteen years is to be vested in the imperial government, and afterwards vested in the Irish government. The police are to be similarly treated. Customs and excise are to remain under imperial control. The proportion of the Irish quota to the imperial expenditure shall not be more than one-fifteenth. The land question is left to the Irish Parliament. Though the scheme is, in some of its features, less obnoxious to Liberal Unionists than Mr. Gladstone's bill, its concessions are not sufficient to win them back to the Liberal party.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Reassuring Reports as to Mr. Stanley's Safety arrived from Africa on August 4. A despatch to London from St. Thomas, says: "Letters received at Stanley Pool, from Henry M. Stanley, announce that the expedition arrived at Aruwhimi Falls, on June 18, that all the members of the expedition were well, and that preparations were being made for the overland march." This is clearly later intelligence, and arrives from a point farther advanced in his journey than that of the despatch announcing his death. Though it does not absolutely disprove the disquieting rumors, it encourages the hope that they are false.

Mr. William Noble, the Well-known Gospel Temperance advocate, has been holding meetings in the Eastern District of London. The meetings were held in a tent, which was crowded every night for three weeks with audiences of from 1,500 to 2,500 persons. Over four thousand persons signed the pledge. The London Daily News says: "The president, Mr. A. F. Hills, Thames Iron Works, and the local executive committee, feel loth to allow such results to fall through for want of a permanent result being achieved, and they have accordingly a scheme in hand for the purchase of the land on which the marquee stood, and the erection of a permanent hall to hold 1,500 or 1,600 people."

How to Keep Cool and Well in Summer has become a serious question, owing to the abnormal humidity which has accompanied the torrid heat of the past six weeks. During the greater part of that time the moisture in the air is said to have averaged seventy-five per cent., and on several days it was so high that, if the temperature had suddenly fallen, there would have been rain inside the houses. As the weather bureau intimates that no relief is to be expected during this month a letter of advice published in the Epoch by Dr. Cyrus Edson, of the New York Health Department, deserves general attention. He lays great stress on the need of breathing pure air, which those who cannot leave the cities should seek on the outskirts where the wind blows from the country. But his chief warning is directed against the use of alcoholic beverages. He says: "The first effect of alcoholic drinks is to cause a rise in temperature. The blood-vessels of the brain are congested, the heart is stimulated. The secondary effect is to lower the temperature slightly. But you never find alcohol used in moderation. People who use it invariably use it to excess. When taken to excess, nothing could be used that would produce sunstroke or heat-exhaustion quicker. The best and the most wholesome summer drink is cold water. It should be freely used, and should be cooled by keeping it on the ice, and not by putting ice in it."

A Panic on a Cunard Steamship is Reported. The Umbria, which arrived at New York on July 31 from Liverpool, had a more tempestuous passage than is usual at this time of the year. One of the passengers said it was a series of storms and fogs. Two days after leaving Queenstown a regular panic occurred. All night the wind and sea were raging furiously, with enormous waves breaking over the ship, some of them dashing even to the top of the funnels. A gigantic tidal wave struck the vessel at dawn the next morning. The officers of the ship saw it in the distance and altered the course of the vessel to meet it diagonally, and the speed of the ship was slowed up. The wave looked black in the early morning, while its top was a seething mass of white. It seemed to rise higher and higher with its glistening white combing. As it came over the Umbria it gave away and settled down upon the vessel with torrents of water. Above the bridge it rolled over the ship and collapsed. The forward hatch of thick teak wood gave way like paper and was broken into splinters. The bridge was wrecked and its iron railing flattened in an instant, while big iron stanchions were twisted and turned at angles. The weight bent the plating on the turtle-back. The water rolled in rivers along the ship. Afterward the bulkheads were closed. Many of the passengers were asleep at the time, and after the great wave struck they came running into the dining-room. Some were in their night garments only, while others carried their clothing with them. Happily their alarm was needless, though it was not surprising in the circumstances. A wave that could twist iron stanchions was a peril not to be despised even by passengers on a Cunarder. They had reason to be thankful that they were upon so stout a ship. It is a pity that men, who in the voyage of life are exposed to peril from gigantic waves of trouble, prefer the bark of pleasure and worldly joy instead of sailing on the great ship of God's salvation, which can never be overwhelmed (Ps. 46 : 1–3).

A Curious Mode of Identifying a Horse was adopted in Connecticut last week. A young man visiting Worcester, Mass., saw a horse which he declared was the property of his mother, and which had been stolen from her sixteen months ago. His statement was disputed, and the authorities were in doubt because the horse was not in several particulars like the description given by the young man. Its tail and mane were shorter, and in other respects it differed. Finally it was agreed that the horse should be taken to the town in Connecticut where the young man's mother lived and set free in the presence of witnesses. The horse was accordingly taken there and put in a livery-stable and fed. He was then allowed to go where he chose. He seemed to have no hesitation, but walked up the street in the direction of the lady's house, quickening his pace into a trot as he came in sight of her barn, and the door being open, he entered and went straight to the stall from which, as the young man said, he had been stolen more than a year before. Thus the horse settled the question of identification, and also furnished a modern illustration of the fact which the prophet Isaiah used as a reproach to backsliders: "The ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know" (Isa. 1 : 3).

A Suit over a Beggar's Will, Which was Decided last week in a New Jersey court, revealed a curious history of a life. The suit was brought by a woman who claimed a share of the estate of her deceased mother, who had left property valued at thirty thousand dollars. For years prior to her death at Jersey City the mother had been a mendicant. During half of each week she sat on a corner near the Barclay Street Ferry soliciting alms. She attired herself in the humblest of arrays, and wore on her face the most woe-begone of expressions. The thirty thousand dollars was the result of her investment of the alms she received. Her family say that the half of the week she did not spend in begging, she devoted to speculations in real estate. Her ventures proved fortunate, and the estate was the outcome of her dual life. The woman's imposition was successful because the persons who gave her alms had not seen her in the other character of her dual life, investing her capital. If they had known what she did with the money they would have ceased giving to her. The all-seeing God cannot be so imposed upon, and that is the reason why some who pray to Him for worldly blessings do not receive them. The apostle says: "Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may spend it in your pleasures." (James 4: 3 R. V).

A Double Funeral Ceremony Took Place at the Cemetery of the Evergreens, near New York, on July 29. About noon a number of Chinamen arrived in carriages, following the remains of a fellow-countryman, named Chu Ming Mey Soo, who died at the Presbyterian Hospital two days before. As Chu Ming was a converted Chinaman, the funeral services were Christian, and the body was interred after prayer. When the ceremony was concluded, a wagon drew up in which were a number of Chinamen who dragged a trunk out of the wagon and set it beside the grave. From the trunk was produced a new feather bed, a large red woolen blanket, a patchwork quilt, and a complete suit of clothing. These were set fire to and burned, piece by piece, the trunk forming the fireplace, and burning with the rest. While these burned, the relatives, two cousins and a brother, repeated a ritual in an almost inaudible voice. A hole was next dug in the side of the grave at the foot and a five-quart tin kettle full of cooked rice was deposited in it and covered with a tin cover. Another sheet of paper was laid upon the ground, the brother and two cousins knelt upon the paper, and bowed themselves three times to the earth, and upon the third time reverently and slowly kissed the ground. This completed the ceremony. They explained to the undertaker and the crowd which watched the proceedings, that, believing the Christian service inadequate to ensure the happiness of the departed, they had decided to supplement it by the proper Chinese ritual which was now done, and they were satisfied. Many who would ridicule the idea of this ceremony benefiting the dead man are themselves oblivious of the fact that the blessedness of the dead can be ensured only by the acceptance of Christ during life (Eccles. 11 : 3).

BRIEF NOTES.

A Baptist church in Ocala, Fla., has summarily expelled all its members whose names have appeared on petitions for liquor licenses.

The brother of the King of Siam, Prince Devawongse, is now in New York. He is a quiet, well-bred Asiatic, speaking English, and well-versed in Western ways.

The Ministerial Jubilee of the Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar will be signalized by a suitable testimonial, expressive of the affection in which he is held throughout the Christian world.

United evangelical work is to be done in Philadelphia in the fall. The churches are realizing that, as against Satan, they can work together, and are organizing for a systematic aggressive campaign.

A storage warehouse in New York was burnt down recently: its contents were destroyed, and the place gutted, but one wall was left standing, and on that was the inscription, "This building is fireproof."

The Superintendent of the Pittsburg Division of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has warned the men, both in the transportation and machine departments, that any of them found visiting a saloon at any time, day or night, will be instantly discharged.

A court in Springfield, Mo., recently heard the petition of a wife for divorce, took the evidence of witnesses, decided in favor of the petitioner, awarded her $40,000 and the family homestead, and saw the money paid and deeds transferred—all in half an hour.

Revival meetings have been conducted at Marion, Grant Co., Ind., by Mrs. J. Mershoun with much blessing. The Marion journals speak in high terms of the good that has been done. She is now assisting the Rev. R. J. McKenney in holding special services for two weeks at Bruce Park, Indianapolis, Ind.

Dr. Van De Water, the missioner of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has arranged to hold a series of services in St. Louis at an early date. Dr. Rainsford, of St George's, New York, will take part, and "Father" Osborne will preach to business men at noon-day service All the Episcopal churches are uniting in the movement.

A New York police captain says that the best way to find a policeman is to set out so that the left hand is toward the buildings of the street. As the policeman is required to patrol his post with the buildings on his right, a person reversing the position would meet him, while one walking in the same direction might follow him by the hour.

Ben Hogan has found a congenial sphere in helping Major Whittle in his tent services in some of the worst districts of Chicago. Last week the tent was set up at the junction of Crosby and Division streets, in the locality known as "Little Hell." Mr. Hogan's vigorous, pointed utterances were much appreciated by the hard crowd collected there.

An interesting camp meeting is in progress at Pendleton, Ind. Mr. Elwood Scott, of Carthage, and Mrs. Esther Cook, of Newcastle, assisted by other workers, are conducting the meetings. A remarkable feature of the work is the number of children who have been converted since the commencement of the meetings. This is owing to God's blessing on the special services for children conducted by Mrs. Cook.

An Excellent Opportunity for Boys and Girls now on their vacation to earn pocket money, now offers itself by canvassing for "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" and selling it weekly from house to house in their own neighborhood. A number of boys have commenced this since the holidays, in preference to doing anything else. Send postal card at once, for terms.

GOD'S NEARNESS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Though He be not far from every one of us."—Acts 17:27.

A Fact Distinctly Revealed—Personal Experiences—Providential Escape of a Congregation—A Driver's Providential Mistake—Coincidences of a Journey—The Prayer Bell—I. Men Who Are Feeling After God—A Startling Reflection—Bees in a Glass Hive—Successful Deception Impossible—No Escape Open—The Bright Side—God Sees True Religion—II. Those Who Have Found God—Strictly Observed—A Lady's Dream—The Higher Life and the Highest—A Man in a Sack—Some Forgotten Ducks.

WHEN man disobeyed his God he died spiritually, and that death consisted in the separation of his soul from God. From that moment man began to think that God was far away, and this has since been his religion in all ages. Either he has said, "There is no God," or he has believed the visible creation to be God, which is much the same as having no God; or else he has thought God to be some far-away, mysterious Being, who takes no note of man. Even after obtaining a better conception of God, he has thought Him hard to find and hard to be entreated of. Because his own heart is far from God, he imagines that God's heart is far from him. But it is not so. The living God is not far from any one of us; for "In Him we live, and move, and have our being."

That God is near by His omnipresence and by His gracious dealings with men, is the clear teaching of the inspired volume. To the enlightened mind, God is evidently seen to be near in the works of nature. So also is the Lord very near in providence. Albeit that this godless age seeks to banish God, yet is He present in the transactions of every-day. All things come of Him, both the little and the great. He ordains, and rules, or over-rules. Pestilence and famine, earthquake and hurricane, are His heavier treads; and days and nights, harvests and springtides, are His gentler footsteps. The events of history, whether on a large or small scale, betray an evident design and arrangement. All things work together, with singular accuracy and punctuality, to accomplish a lofty purpose. It is the fashion nowadays to say that these are coincidences. It is a pretty word for boys to play with. Some of us observe God's providences, and we are never without a providence to observe. We see the hand of God in daily life, and we are glad to do so, though we are laughed at as poor fools. Those who can see may well be content to bear the jests of the blind. In

My Own Personal Experience

I have met with numbers of singular and special tokens of God's working in providence, some of which I would scarce dare to tell, because they might seem incredible. I remember preaching at Halifax, in a huge timber building which was erected for the purpose. During the previous day the snow fell heavily, and it lay deep upon the ground. Nevertheless, the people came in their thousands, and thronged the enormous edifice; and gratefully do I remember how they went away to their homes in safety. They had no sooner cleared the building to the last man than it fell in one gigantic ruin. Why had it not fallen when the crowds were there? In my joy that no one was harmed I thought that God was there, and I praised His holy name. Was that a piece of superstition?

Take another instance. I was one day

In Great Perplexity

upon a certain matter of great importance to the cause of God. I laid it before God in prayer, but still I did not see my way; I could get no direction or guidance. Having to preach in North London, a friend kindly drove me to the spot, and afterwards I asked him to take me to the house of one of our people whom I wished to see. I scarcely noticed my way, till at last I found myself in a street unknown to me. I then said, "You are surely going wrong." "No," he said, "I am right enough." He was making for the private house of the person I had named, but I knew he would at that time be at his office in the city, and I had intended to go there after him. We were on the wrong track, and so the horse's head was turned down a side street unknown to me, and as we passed along it, I saw the only man in all the world who could assist me out of my difficulty. How he came to be there I could not tell; how I came to be there I have already told you. Strangely had the Lord guided me, and the information guided the affair to a happy issue. God was near me. Mere coincidences, they tell me! Mere coincidences! Let me tell

A True Story.

The other day I met with a series of similar "mere coincidences." I set out by railway to a certain town, and the train went on till we came to a junction, and I was bidden to change. By a strange coincidence another train had drawn up, and was going in the direction I desired. I had only time to cross a platform and take my place, and off it went. A few miles further again I heard a voice, saying "Change here!" I changed a second time, and, by another coincidence, a train was just starting for my destination. When I reached the end of my railway journey, another coincidence was in store for me, for a well-known friend was waiting with his carriage, and he took me to his house, where, by another coincidence, a dinner was ready. At the dinner there happened to be a dish upon the table intended for a person who did not eat flesh meat. Was not this a special coincidence for me? I went to the chapel to preach, and I found it crowded with people anxious to hear; another coincidence, of course! Somebody cries, "You talk nonsense;

It Was All Arranged."

I confess I thought so. I am glad that you own the arranging hand; but, pardon me, I saw an arranging hand in the other cases also, and I think it was as clear in the other cases as in this. In the story of my journey you find a clue in a previous arrangement, and in the history of nations, and in the story of each human life, I also find a clue in the presence of a Divine mind which arranges all things. When human arrangement explains a series of events you admit it without question; why not admit Divine arrangement, since it equally well explains the great occurrences of history? Do you demur? I fear it is that you resolve not to believe in the one case, while in the other, having no theory to maintain, you follow your natural commonsense.

God is so near us that He hears the prayers of His people, and orders events in correspondence to those prayers. Do you doubt this? Do you tell me that the many answers to prayer which we joyfully narrate, are mere coincidences? I have hardly patience to answer you. Yet let me tell you of which happened to me yesterday, In the morning, when I came into my study, I needed to break my fast. I had scarcely wished it before my breakfast was on the table. During the day I wished for a glass of water. In a few moments it stood by my side. I required some one to take a telegram to the post-office for me. Heigh! Presto! A suitable messenger appeared. Was this magic? The evening came on, and I desired to have the lamps lighted and the curtains drawn. In a few seconds my desire was accomplished. Were these matters "mere coincidences?" "No," cries one, "you rang the bell." Now I come to think of it, some one did pull at a handle; but I saw no bell. Yet you assure me that the ringing of a bell accounts for it all. I will not argue the point with you. Only when I yield to you, I want you also to yield to me when I tell you that we pray to the Lord our God, and that we receive answers to our prayers.

Some Strange Incidents

Our daily experience is that prayer is answered by the Lord our God, for He is near to fulfil His promises, and to grant the petitions of them that put their trust in Him. You believe in the power of the bell, and we believe in the power of prayer. Our speaking to the living God is as much a fact and a reality to us as the ringing of a bell to you; why, then, do you heap scorn upon us? Why do you snuff us out with your big talk about coincidences? Scoff away! We shall not pray any the less so long as in our experience we find the Lord so swift to hear, so bountiful to bless.

First, I am going to address myself for a little to those who only feel after Him, but as yet have not perceived Him; and then I shall speak to those who have found Him, and who know by experience how near He is to His chosen.

I. To those of you who are

Feeling After God,

I speak in deep earnestness. Like blind men who grope for the wall, you stretch out your hands to feel after Him. Rejoice, for He is not far from you! What then? How impious is sin when seen in this light!

You have, perhaps, seen those hives which permit you, through a glass, to see all that the bees are doing. You have watched them busy in their cells. All the world is but a hive of this sort to the mind of God. You could not read the designs and intents of the bees, but the Lord has read your thoughts and imaginations. Would some of you sinned as you have done if you had realized the Divine presence? Would you have dared to go to such lengths as you have gone, if you had seen Him as He has seen you? "Hush," they say, when they are speaking evil of any person, "here he comes." Why did you not "hush," since God was there? Servants who have wasted their master's time will hurry up when they see that he is near: how is it that you have not only loitered, but done mischief while your Master has been looking over your shoulder?

How Impious is That Sin which is done in spite of the presence of God! Furthermore, if God be so near, this shows the evident impossibility of deceiving Him. God is not mocked. Thinkest thou that if thou wilt go to God's house that will avail thee, though thou goest not to God? Dost thou imagine that to repeat certain gracious words will suffice, though thy heart be wandering on the mountains of vanity? Hast thou thought that to make a religious profession will be enough? and that God will be so duped as to think thee His servant and His child, if thou takest upon thee the names which belong to such relationship? Dost thou think that He can be deceived when He is near thee, around thee, and within thee? Beware, I beseech you, of having any dealings with God but those which are in downright honesty. We must be true to the core before the All-seeing One. A lie to our fellow-men is meanness. but a lie to God is madness. That God is as near to us as we are to ourselves should make us greatly ashamed if, in any way, we seem to be what, in the depths of our being, we are not.

But, hark! this shows us how vain is all hope of escape from God! What if a man says there is no God? God is all the same. What if a man forgets God, and therefore ceases to tremble! There is as much cause for trembling as ever, and somewhat more. It was said once of the whole world that it was nothing better than a prison for the man that had offended Cæsar; and I may say of the great universe, however wide it be, that it is but a narrow cell for the man who has offended God. This is the solemn side of the matter, and I confess it is dark as the pillar of cloud when it turned its blackness on the Egyptians.

There is a bright side to this great truth of the Divine nearness. If God is not far from each one of us, then of Him! If I seek God, and He is not far from me, I shall surely find Him.

How Hopeful is our Seeking

How perceptible must repentance be! If God be near you, He sees that tear which just now scalded your cheek. He marks that sigh; He sees that heaving of the breast; that trouble of the soul He knows; that restlessness He sees. He heard thee, and He pitied thee when yesterday in thy chamber thou wast in an agony of shame and fear. He sees thee at this moment in thy loneliness and dire distress. A fugitive and a vagabond thou mayest be, but yet the Lord is near. Since the Lord is near to us, how quick will He be to perceive our faith! If you, this morning, glance an eye to the cross, the Lord will see your eye looking that way. He sees the feeble as well as the strong; if thou hast but a grain of mustard seed of faith He will at once discern it.

If God be so near thee, poor soul, how readily He can reveal Himself to thee! I know how sadly you are urged to despair, and yet ere that clock hath finished the half-hour your despair may vanish. There is nothing between thee and thy Saviour but thine unbelief. Let unbelief go, and thou shalt see Jesus, to thy heart's joy. A prisoner was taken out to die, and as he rode his heart was heavy at the thought of death, and none could cheer him of all the throng. The gallows-tree was in sight, and this blotted out the sun for him. But lo, his prince came riding up in hot haste bearing a free pardon. Then the man opened his eyes, and, as though he had risen from the dead, he returned to happy consciousness. The sight of his prince had chased all gloom away. He declared that he had never seen a fairer countenance in all his days: and when he read his pardon he vowed that no poetry should ever be dearer to his heart than those few lines of sovereign grace. Friends, I remember well when I was in that death-cart, and Jesus came to me with pardon. Death and hell were before me; but I rejoiced exceedingly when I saw the nail-prints in His hands and feet, and the wound in His side. When He said, "Thy sins, which are many, are all forgiven thee," I thought I never saw such loveliness before, and never heard such music in all my days. Nay, it was not mere thought; I am sure my judgment was right.

In The Death-Cart,

II. The time is too short, therefore I must turn at once to God's people, and speak to the Lord. Brothers, you need not that I seek out choice words when I speak to you. You are soldiers, and you only want short sentences, such as captains give to the ranks. I say to you, redeemed by precious blood, and made sensitive to the all-surrounding God, note how strictly God observes us! Let us walk in His sight, let us live in His presence. I charge you, remember that the Lord your God is a jealous God. Under such weighty obligations to Him, and bound to Him by such marvellous ties of love, live—live obediently, live intensely, live with concentration of heart and mind and strength; live wholly unto Him. Being ever in His sight, set Him always before you. Be your life such as life should be in the light that beats about the throne of Deity.

Those who have Found

If God be not far from us, let us see how readily He hears our prayers! I am sometimes startled at the power of a feeble prayer to win a speedy answer. "Startled," you will say: why am I startled? for it is written, "Before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear." Yes, it is so written, but we do not always apprehend the fact. When the promise comes speedily to pass, have you never felt your flesh creep with a solemn awe in the presence of God, who has so remarkably drawn near at the voice of prayer? The presence of incessant occupation racks your mind, but it would be less if you felt that God is there to help.

A Lady's Dream.

Further, dear brethren, if God be so near us, how securely are we defended! A Christian lady not long ago dreamed a dream, which was not a dream, but fact. She saw herself as surrounded with God; encircled above, beneath and all around, as with a blaze of light. Brilliance inconceivable made a pavilion for her; and while she stood in the midst of the glory she saw all her cares and her troubles and her temptations and her sins wandering about the outside of the wall of light, unable to reach her. Unless that light itself should open and make a way for them, she was serenely secure, although she could see the perils which else would destroy her. Is not the Lord a wall of fire round about us, and the glory in the midst? I want you, dear people of God, to feel that you are never in real danger, because never far from God. How can he be in peril whom the Lord keepeth both night and day?

If the Lord be thus near us, how speedily He can renew our graces! Alas! our souls too often need restoring; but, blessed be His name, He is at hand to renew our life. I confess with shame that I have felt dull and dead and heavy, and I thought it was the weather, or my bodily weakness, or some other matter; but whatever was the cause, I have Found Only One Cure.

In a moment, quicker than the twinkling of an eye, I have been lifted into life and love and light and energy; I have awakened in the night with all the bells of my soul ringing out peals of praise. Plato used to say that by thought the soul could get out of the body. I am not philosopher enough to know whether this is true or not; indeed, I never tried to quit my body, for I am afraid I might not find my way back again: but this I know, that by the spiritual life the spirit can rise above the body. Some grievous ache, some bitter pain, has made you feel as if you did not care to live, and yet a flash of sacred joy has gone through you, and you have laughed at the pain, and have even been quickened by it. Now, if God be with us we see how such a thing can be. Never despair while the living God is near. Believe in the living One, and, touching the hem of His garment, the virtue of His life shall stream into your dying heart; "He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." I hear people sometimes

Talk about "the Higher Life."

Happy is that man who obtained the highest life when he first believed in Jesus Christ. The Divine life is neither lower nor higher, but there are increasing degrees of its strength. These are all reachable, for God is near to help us. If God be near us, brothers, infinite resources are near us. We need not be unbelieving, we need not be sorrowful, we need not be afraid. We need not be the captives of sin; we are able to overcome it by the Divine help. We can master ourselves, for God is near us to give us the victory.

I read in the Life of John Wesley a story of Methodists meeting in a barn, and how certain of the villagers, who were afraid to break through the door, resolved to place one inside who would open the door to them during the service, that they might disturb the congregation. This person went in before the service began, and concealed himself in a sack in a corner of the barn. When the Methodists began to sing, he liked the tune so well that he would not get out of the sack till he had heard it through. Then followed a prayer, and during the prayer, God worked on so that he began to cry for mercy. The good people looked around, and were astonished to find a sinner in a sack seeking his Saviour. The door was not opened to the mob after all; for he who intended to do so was converted. It does not matter why the people come to hear the gospel; God can bless them in any case. If Christ is preached, men will be saved, even if they come to disturb. "Sir," said one to me, "I had been to bargain about a pair of ducks on Sunday morning, and I passed by the door, and I thought I would just look in. There and then the Lord met with me, and those ducks were forgotten, for I found a Saviour." He is not far from any; and, in answer to believing prayer, he can deal with men and turn their hearts to Himself. Wherefore, work on! Go round with your tracts this afternoon. God is not far away from those houses. Stand on the street corner and preach; God is not far away from those who pass by. Go to your Sunday-school class, for God is not far from any one of the children. Work with hope, for the Lord is near you.

The Man in the Sack.

This presence of God, which cheers in life, also sustains in death. He is not far from any one of us, when all the world flies far away. Go your way and make no bargain as to whether you live or die; only plead that promise, "Certainly I will be with thee." God is with us now, and soon we shall be with Him. Until the day break and the shadows flee away, abide with us, O Lord. Amen, and amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

MR. D. L. MOODY'S ANECDOTES.*

Let me tell you about confession. Every man ought to make public confession if his sin has been public. Suppose, now, I have done this man a wrong, and no one knows it but us two; then the confession ought to be between us two alone. I don't believe in making confession of such a thing publicly—it is not called for. Suppose I had a difficulty with my family; it ought to be settled with my family; it needn't go forth to the world. But suppose I have been a public blasphemer, have been seen reeling drunk in the streets of Northfield; it is known by all the people here; I ought to make my confession so that the whole town will hear it, and the chances are they will receive my testimony.

The Ten-Cent Man.

It is a good thing for one to realize his own weakness. "I am as weak as water," says some one; then God can hold you. I remember when we were in New York—in the hippodrome—there was a poor, miserable man in the inquiry meetings, and a good, Christian lady was toiling and working with that poor fellow. After she had explained to him the way, the man went out into the great city. In those days we had scrip for small currency, and as this man put his hand into his pocket he found ten cents. He had not been able to carry so much money in his pocket for many years. He could not pass a saloon if he had any money; some insane power would seize him, and he would spend every cent for whisky. As he took out this bit of paper, he just prayed that the Lord would enable him to hold on to that ten cents for twenty-four hours; then he would have no more doubt that God was able to keep him. And he did hold on to the money. Next day he came into the meeting, told the story, and held up the scrip as a token that God was keeping him. Every time I go to New York I ask, "How is the ten-cent man going on?" and Mr. McBurney always tells me, "He is going on first-rate."

Could not Believe.

I was once talking with a man, and he said, "I can't believe." Said I, "Who?" "You do not understand my case; I can't believe." "Who?" The man began to color and squirm around, and he said, "Mine is a peculiar case; I can't believe." "Who?" The man became more and more embarrassed, and said he, "You don't understand my case at all; I have a great many intellectual difficulties; there are a great many things I can't believe." I kept on asking, "Who?" And, finally, the man broke down, and said, "I can't believe myself." Said I, "Thank God for that; "I thought you meant you could not believe God." When a man says he can't believe, the question is whether he can believe the Lord, and I just press him on that one point.

The Mother's Touch.

At the battle of Gettysburg a young man was severely wounded and taken to the hospital. In his anguish he called for his mother, and the

---

* From "D. L. Moody at Home: His Home and Home-Work." Pp. 288; price, $1.00. Published by Fleming H. Revell, 148 Madison Street, Chicago.

Rev. Joseph Parker, D. D.

A Scene on the Sarawak River, Borneo.

surgeon telegraphed for her. She came immediately, and wanted to pass to the bedside of her boy. But the doctor said, "You can't go in to your son; it is a very critical time; it is barely possible that we can save his life; we cannot allow the slightest agitation, for his life trembles in the balance and he may die." She waited two hours, and finally said, "Can't I go in and wet his forehead, doctor? I shall die if I stay here." The doctor allowed her to enter, on condition that she would avoid disclosing who she was. As she drew near to her son, his face was turned to the wall. Tenderly she bathed his forehead, and in a moment he turned around, saying, "Why, that is just like my mother's touch!" I never think of Jesus touching the leper but I think that was just like His heavenly touch—no one else could have done it.

A Memory for Hogs.

The Sunday-school missionary, Stephen Paxson, once went into a farmer's house and asked him how many children he had. He called his wife and said, "Sarah, you count, and I will call their names." By that process he found he had eleven children. A little later he began talking about his property, and his face lighted up as he said, "I have got a hundred and seventy-nine of the finest hogs you ever saw." He cared more for his hogs than for his children, and in that was like those people in Scripture (Matt. 8: 33); they wouldn't have their hogs lost, but would rather have the devils in the men.

REV. JOSEPH PARKER, D. D.

(See Portrait)

THE arrival in this country of Dr. Parker, the pastor of the London "City Temple," arouses more interest than usually attaches to the visits of English preachers. That is due chiefly to the fact that, though he is not formally recognized as a candidate for the pulpit of Plymouth Church in succession to the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, an impression prevails that he is very likely to be invited, and also that he is very likely to accept. Dr. Parker comes to pronounce the official eulogy on the dead preacher, at the special request of the church. The selection was doubtless due to the high esteem in which Mr. Beecher held him, and to the intimate friendship subsisting between the two men for many years. Mr. Beecher always spoke of him in terms of affection, and the church would feel, in inviting him to the pastorate, that their dead pastor would have approved the choice.

Joseph Parker was born in Northumberland, England, in 1830. He is therefore now fifty-seven years of age. In many of his characteristics he shows the influence of his birth-place. He has the clear, hard-headed perception of the marrow of a subject, and the penetration and force of thought which generally distinguish men who hail from that section of Great Britain. With this is joined a robust confidence in himself and an absolute certainty of the truth of his convictions, which he would hold to though he were in a minority of one against the whole world—and in this also he is a typical north-countryman. To these characteristics must be attributed, in some degree, the impression which strangers have of him when they first hear him, that he is arrogant and conceited. Some of his brethren in the ministry who do not know him intimately, have that opinion of him, too, though they respect him, as was proved some five years ago when they elected him to the chair of the Union.

Dr. Parker's first religious association was with the Wesleyan Methodists, but before entering the ministry he severed his connection with that body and became a Congregationalist. His first charge was at Banbury, in Oxfordshire, where he preached in a small building, which was soon filled to overflowing. A new church was erected, but before it was paid for Dr. Parker was invited to the pastorate of Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, one of the largest and most wealthy churches of the denomination in England. It is to the credit of Dr. Parker that the dazzling offer did not make him oblivious of his poorer church at Banbury, who in losing their popular pastor would have found their church-debt a heavy burden. He stipulated that, if he accepted the invitation from Manchester, the Manchester people should pay the debt on the Banbury Church, and they agreed, and paid the debt.

In 1869 Dr. Parker was induced to transfer his services to the metropolis. He became pastor of the Poultry Chapel, London, and soon gathered around him a large and intelligent congregation. The building was pulled down to make way for city improvements soon after his arrival, but a new church edifice was erected on the Holborn Viaduct, near the former site, and called the "City Temple." One of the peculiarities of Dr. Parker's work there is a remarkable evidence of is power and popularity as a preacher. He announced that he should preach every Thursday at noon. It was expected that only a few ladies would attend, as the men would be too much engaged in business at that hour on the busiest day of the week to go to church. But to the general astonishment, the church was crowded by bankers, merchants, lawyers, stock-brokers and tradesmen, and continues to be so every week when Dr. Parker is preaching. His sermons are full of original thought, and are delivered in a singularly weighty, impressive manner. Epigrams abound in them, and they fix themselves in the hearer's memory and are seldom forgotten. It is a remarkable fact that men who have heard Dr. Parker among many preachers, find, after years have passed, that they can remember more of his sermons than of those of any other preacher.

Dr. Parker has written several well-known works. Prominent among them is "Ecce Deus," which he intended as a complement to Professor Seeley's "Ecce Homo." He is now engaged on the production of "The People's Bible," which he regards as the work of his life. It is a popular commentary in the modern style of thought. Several volumes of it have been republished in this country by Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, Astor Place, New York.

A SCENE IN BORNEO.

(See Illustration.)

THE picture on this page depicts a scene on the Sarawak River in Borneo, and is typical of the river scenery in the country generally. Borneo, though comparatively little known, is the largest island in the world except Australia. It is eight hundred miles long and seven hundred wide, or more than three times the size of Great Britain. Its population is estimated at two millions. It is situated in the Indian Ocean, to the South of China, and the Equator runs through it. The aboriginal natives are called Dyaks, but there are a large number of Chinese, Mohammedan Malays, Javans and Arabs on the island, chiefly on the coast, and there are about seven hundred Europeans there. The Dutch rule a large portion of the country, but the northern part, covering an area of 30,000 square miles, with a coast line of 620 miles, belongs to the British. This cession of territory was chiefly due to the efforts of Sir James Brooke, who was made Rajah of Sarawak in 1839, by the Sultan of Borneo, in gratitude for assistance rendered to him by Brooke in crushing a rebellion.

Mission work on the island has been carried on since 1835, when the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel sent missionaries there. The late Dr. McDougall was appointed missionary bishop of the island, and worked indefatigably in the effort to evangelize the Dyaks. He met with formidable obstacles, not only in the dense ignorance of the Dyaks, but in the prejudices of the Chinese and the Mohammedans, who interfered with the work. Progress of late years, however, has been rapid. Dr. Hose, the present bishop, writing home in January of this year, reports not only the formation of churches, but the erection of church buildings and schoolhouses. He says:

"This has been a year of building. First, our new schools, which were begun in 1885, were finished, and have been opened by the Rajah. There are now 110 boys in attendance, Chinese, Dyaks of several tribes, Malays and others; of these fifty-six are boarders. The old school, as soon as we can find money to put it in repair, will be the girls' school above and the printing-office below. The girls' school is now held in the Bishop's house. There are seventeen in attendance, of whom seven are boarders. Besides this is the Mission-house at Temudok. It is a two-story house, of ironwood frame and roof, and has within it a good-sized school-chapel, as well as accommodation for the missionary and schoolboys.

"Besides this, a church is nearly finished at Kuala Lumpoe, and another at Taiping, in the Strait of Perak. These are the first two churches in these Malay countries. A new Tamil mission school and house for the missionary have been built at Penang. There have also been a large number of baptisms. I myself baptized twenty-seven in one day at Kuching."

A marked impetus was given to the work recently in a most interesting manner. Among the Dyak converts was a chief named Apai Insol, whose native dignity is Orang Kaya. Not long ago there was trouble with some marauding tribes on the Dutch frontier, and Apai Insol, though an old man, took an active part in the campaign organized by the Rajah to suppress them. The old chief's valor and generalship won him the admiration of all, even of old enemies of his race, the Dyaks of Banting, who were now fighting by his side. That he had become a Christian was well known, and a party of these people, the fighting portion of the population of a village not far above Sabu, would gather around old Apai Insol during the night encampments on the dry gravel beds of the Batang Lupar River, and ask him to tell them what he thought of Christianity. They knew Mr. Crossland and Mr. Howell, the missionaries, and some of their own people had become Christians, but they did not know what to think about it all, and they would like to ask one who was so generally esteemed in the country what his opinion was. What good was there in the new religion? Why had he abandoned the time-honored customs of his ancestors? Then the old man spoke. He told them what faith in Christ meant to him, what he believed and why he believed. They listened, and made little reply, but when the short campagin was over they came to Mr. Howell and said: 'The Orang Kaya has convinced us. Teach us to pray. Teach us to worship God. We wish to put ourselves under your guidance in these matters for the future.' And Mr. Howell went to them, and spent long evenings with them on the veranda of their chief house, where they gathered around him, when their work was done, to learn the way of God more perfectly. At last the whole village was baptized, and other villages, hearing of it, are now asking that a teacher may be sent to them too. Thus though the process of seed-sowing may be a long and tedious one, the harvest may be sudden and abundant.

The Little Waif from the Wreck. (See page 501.)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 494.)

An American Professor's Confession—Invites Muller to Berlin—Conversation with Titled Ladies—Offers Himself for Military Duty—Rejected by the Medical Examiner—A Visit to his Home—Finds a lonely Believer—Journey to England—Delayed at Rotterdam—Arrives in London in 1829—Irksome Restriction.

THIS sudden illness at the Opera the Lord graciously used as a means of arousing me; and on our way home I freely opened my mind to my friend about the way in which we had been going on; and he then told me that he was in a different state of heart when he left America, He also told me, when I was taken faint, that he thought it was an awful place to die in. This was the second and last time, since I have lived in the Lord Jesus, that I was in a theatre; and but once, in the year 1827, I went to a concert, when I likewise felt that it was unbecoming for me, as a child of God, to be in such a place. On my return to Halle I broke a blood-vessel in my stomach, in consequence of the glass of ice. I was now exceedingly weak, in which state I continued for several weeks, and then went for change of air into the country, to the house of a beloved brother in the Lord, who up to this day has continued a kind and faithful friend to me. My heart was now again in a better state than it had been before the rupture of the blood-vessel. Thus the Lord, in the faithful love of His heart, seeing that I was in a backsliding state, chastised me for my profit; and the chastisement yielded, in a measure at least, the peaceable fruit of righteousness. Heb. 12: 10, 11.

Before this period I had been much opposed to the doctrines of election, particular redemption, and final persevering grace; so much so that I called election a devilish doctrine. I went to the Word, reading the New Testament from the beginning, with a particular reference to these truths. To my great astonishment I found that the passages which speak decidedly for election and persevering grace were about four times as many as those which speak apparently against these truths; and even those few, shortly after, when I had examined and understood them, served to confirm me in the above doctrines. As to the effect which my belief in these doctrines had on me, I am constrained to state, for God's glory, that though I am still exceedingly weak, and by no means so dead to the lusts of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, as I might and as I ought to be, yet, by the grace of God, I have walked more closely with Him since that period. My life has not been so variable, and I may say that I have lived more for God than before.

Whilst I was staying in the country, I received a letter from the American professor, who had in the meantime changed Halle for Berlin, and wished me to come to Berlin, where, being near the Court, I should be more likely to obtain an exemption from my military duty; and he mentioned at the same time that all the expenses connected with my staying in Berlin would be fully covered by the remuneration I should receive for teaching German to himself and two of his friends, for a few hours every week. As I had no more connection with the University at Halle, my course having been finished for more than six months past, and as I had the prospect of being spiritually benefited through my stay in Berlin, and there was no probability, if I remained at Halle, of obtaining the exemption, I came to the conclusion to go to Berlin.

Two ladies of title traveled with me to Berlin in a hired carriage. As I knew we should be for two days together, I thought, in my fleshly wisdom, that though I ought to speak to them about the things of God, I should first show them kindness and attention, and that, after having thus opened a way to their hearts, I might fully set before them their state by nature, and point them to the Lamb of God. We went on together most amicably, I making only a few general remarks about divine things. On the second evening, however, when we were near the end of our journey, I felt that it was high time to speak. And no sooner had I begun plainly to do so, than one of them replied, "Oh, sir, I wish you had spoken sooner about these things, for we have for a long time wished to have some one to whom we might open our hearts; but seeing that the ministers whom we know do not live consistently, we have been kept from speaking to them."

I now found that they had been under conviction of sin for some time, but did not know the way to obtain peace, even by faith in the Lord Jesus. After this I spoke freely to them during the hour that yet remained. They parted from me under feelings of gratitude, and regret that they could hear no more, for they only passed through Berlin. I felt myself greatly reproved, and all I could do was, by a long letter, to seek to make up for my deficiency in ministering to them on the journey. May this circumstance never be forgotten by me, and may it prove a blessing to the believing reader!

My chief concern now was, how I might obtain a passport for England, through exemption from military duty. But the more certain brethren tried, though they knew how to set about the matter, and were also persons of rank, the greater difficulty there appeared to be in attaining my object; so that in the middle of January, 1829, it seemed as if I must immediately become a soldier. There was now but one more way untried, and it was at last resorted to. A believing major, who was on good terms with one of the chief generals, proposed that I should actually offer myself for entering the army, and that then I should be examined as to my bodily qualifications, in the hope that as I was still in a very weak state of body, I should be found unfit for military service. In that case it would belong to the chief general finally to settle the matter; who, being a godly man himself, on the major's recommendation would, no doubt, hasten the decision, on account of my desire to be a missionary to the Jews. At the same time it stood so that, if I should be found fit for service, I should have to enter the army immediately.

I was examined, and was declared to be unfit for military service. With a medical certificate to this effect, and a letter of recommendation from the major, I went to this chief general, who received me very kindly, and who himself wrote instantaneously to a second military physician, likewise to examine me at once. This was done, and it was by him confirmed that I was unfit. Now the chief general himself, as his adjutants happened to be absent, in order to hasten the matter wrote with his own hands the papers which were needed, and I got a complete dismissal, and that for life, from all military engagements. This was much more than I could have expected. This military gentleman spoke to me in a very kind way, and pointed out certain parts of the Scriptures, which he in particular advised me to bring before the Jews, especially Romans 11.

Thus far the Lord had allowed things to go, to show me, it appears, that all my friends could not procure me a passport till His time was come. But now it was come. The King of kings had intended that I should go to England, because He would bless me there, and make me a blessing, though I was at that time, and am still, most unworthy of it; and, therefore, though the King of Prussia had not been pleased to make an exemption in my favor, yet now all was made plain, and that at a time when hope had almost been given up, and when the last means had been resorted to.

On considering why the Lord delayed my obtaining this permission, I find that one of the reasons may have been that I might both be profited myself by my stay in Berlin, and that I also might be instrumental in benefiting others. As to the first, I would mention that I learned a lesson in Berlin which I did not know before. Whilst I was at Halle, I thought I should much enjoy being among so many Christians as there are in Berlin. But when I was there I found that enjoyment in the Lord does not depend upon the multitude of believers by whom we are surrounded. As to the second point, perhaps the last day may show that the Lord had some work for me in Berlin; for, from the time of my coming until I left, I preached three, four or five times every week in the wards of a poor-house, which was inhabited by about three hundred aged and infirm people. I also preached once in a church and likewise visited one of the prisons several times on Lord's Day to converse with the prisoners about their souls, where I was locked in by the keeper with the criminals in their cells.

On the whole, my time in Berlin was not lost; and I was in a better state of heart than I had been for any length of time before. I was not once overcome by any former outward besetting sins, though I have nothing to boast of even as it regards that period; and were only the sins of those days brought against me, had I not the blood of Jesus to plead, I should be most miserable. But I think it right to mention, for the glory of God, as I have so freely spoken about my falls, that whilst I was more than ever unobserved by others, and whilst I was living in the midst of more gaiety and temptations than ever, and had far more money than at any previous time in my life, I was kept from things of which I had been habitually guilty in my unconverted days! My health was in a very weak state almost the whole time whilst I was staying in Berlin, and I was in no degree better, till, on the advice of a believing medical professor, I gave up all medicine.

Having now without any further difficulty obtained my passport, I left Berlin February 3, 1829, for London. The Lord gave me more grace on my way from Berlin than on my way to it; for my mouth was almost immediately opened to my fellow-travellers, and the message of the Gospel seemed to be listened to with interest, particularly by one. On February 5, I arrived at my father's house; it was the place where I had lived as a boy, and the scene of many of my sins, my father having now returned to it after his retirement from office. I came to it with peculiar feelings. These feelings were not excited merely by the fact of my having been seven years absent from it, but arose from the spiritual change I had undergone since I last saw the place; for I had never been at Heimersleben since my father fetched me from thence, which was a few days after my imprisonment at Wolfenbuttel had come to an end.

There were but three persons in the whole town with whom my soul had any fellowship. One of them had spent all his money in coalmines, and was then earning his daily bread by thrashing corn. As a boy I had in my heart laughed at him, for he seemed so different from all other people. Now I sought him out, having previously been informed that he was a believer, to acknowledge him as such, by having fellowship with him, and attending a meeting in his house on the Lord's Day evening. My soul was refreshed, and his also. Such a spiritual feast as meeting with a brother was a rare thing to him. May we believers, and especially those of us who are surrounded by many children of God, seek for grace, more highly to prize the blessings which we enjoy through fellowship with brethren.

This dear brother, who had then been a believer for more than twenty years, had only a few times heard the Gospel preached during all that period. What a wonderful thing that I, one of the vilest of those brought up in that small town, should have been so abundantly favored as to have been brought to the knowledge of the truth, whilst none of my relations, and scarcely one of those who grew up with me, so far as it has come to my knowledge, knew the Lord!

I left my father's house on February 10, with the prospect of seeing him again in about a twelvemonth, as missionary among the Jews. But how has the Lord graciously altered matters! I was kindly lodged for a night at Halberstadt by an aged brother, and then proceeded towards Rotterdam by the way of Munster. At Munster I rested a few days, and was very kindly received by several brethren. They were officers in the army, and two of them had been but a little while before this, Roman Catholics. I lodged in the house of a beloved brother, a tailor, who likewise had been a Roman Catholic.

About February 22 I arrived at Rotterdam. I took lodgings in the house of a believer, where two German brethren lodged, whom I had known at Halle, and who intended to go out as missionaries in connection with the Dutch Missionary Society. It was a peculiar feeling to me, for the first time in my life to find myself among Christians of another nation, to attend their family prayer, hear them sing, &c. In spirit I had fellowship with them, though our communication was but broken, as I understood but little of the Dutch language. Here also I heard for the first time the preaching of the Gospel in English, of which I knew enough to understand a part of what was said.

My going to England by the way of Rotterdam was not the usual way; but consulting with a brother in Berlin, who had been twice in England, I was told that this was the cheapest route. My asking this brother, to be profited by his experience, would have been quite right, had I, besides this, like Ezra, sought of the Lord the right way (Ezra 8: 21). But I sought unto men only, and not at all unto the Lord, in this matter. When I came to Rotterdam, I found that no vessels went at that time from that port to London, on account of the ice having just broken up in the river, and that it would be several weeks before the steamers would again begin to ply. Thus I had to wait nearly a month at Rotterdam, and, therefore, not only needed much more time than I should have required to go by way of Hamburg, but also much more money.

On March 19, 1829, I landed in London. I now found myself, in a great measure, as it regards liberty, brought back to the years when I was at school; yea, almost all the time I had been at school, and certainly for the last four years previous to my coming to England, I was not so much bound to time and order as I was in this seminary; and had not there been a degree of grace in me, yea, so much as not to regard the liberty of the flesh, I should now probably have given up all idea of being a missionary to the Jews. But as I did not see that anything was expected from me which I could not conscientiously accede to, I thought it right to submit myself, for the Lord's sake, to all the regulations of the institution.

My brethren in the seminary, most of them Germans, had instruction in Hebrew, Latin, Greek, French, German, &c., scarcely any of them having had a classical education; I read only Hebrew, and was exempted from all the rest. I remember how I longed to be able to expound the Scriptures in English, when I heard a German brother do so, a few days after my arrival. And I also remember what joy it gave me, when a few weeks after, for the first time, I spoke in English to a little boy, whom I met alone in the fields, about his soul, thinking that he would bear with my broken English.

I now studied much, about twelve hours a day, chiefly Hebrew; commenced Chaldee; perfected myself in reading the German-Jewish in Rabbinic characters, committed portions of the Hebrew Old Testament to memory, &c.; and this I did with prayer, often falling on my knees, leaving my books for a little, that I might seek the Lord's blessing, and also, that I might be kept from that spiritual deadness which is so frequently the result of much study. I looked up to the Lord even whilst turning over the leaves of my Hebrew dictionary, asking His help, that I might quickly find the words. I made comparatively little progress in English; for living with some of my countrymen, I was continually led to converse in German.

My experience in this particular leads me to remark that, should this fall into the hands of any who are desirous to labor as missionaries among a people whose language is not their own, they should seek not merely to live among them, for the sake of soon learning their language, but also as much as possible to be separated from those who speak their own language; for, when, some months after, I was in Devonshire, completely separated from those who spoke German, I daily made much progress, whilst I made comparatively little in London. Soon after my arrival in England I heard one of the brethren in the seminary speak about a Mr. Groves, a dentist in Exeter, who, for the Lord's sake, had given up his profession, which brought him in about fifteen hundred pounds a year, and who intended to go as a missionary to Persia, with his wife and children, simply trusting in the Lord for temporal supplies. This made such an impression on me, and delighted me so, that I not only marked it down in my journal, but also wrote letters about it to my German friends.

(To be continued.)

JESUS AND THE LAW.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for August 21. Matt. 5:17-26. Golden Text, Matt. 5 : 17.

Verse 17: Possibility of Having Wrong Views of Christ's Mission—Did not Come to Destroy—The Law not a Mistake—A Preparation—Its Introductory Work—Its Promise Fulfilled—Jesus as a Culmination—The Topstone of a Building—The Keystone of an Arch—Verse 18: Nothing Superfluous in the Law—The Jots and Tittles Momentous—Verse 19: Doing and Teaching must Go Together—Verse 20: Righteousness Indispensable—Formalism not Sufficient—Orthodoxy Insufficient—The Kingdom of God must be Within—Verses 21, 22: Anger Incipient Murder—Verses 23-26: Duty Before Worship—The Altar to be Left Until Duty is Done.

JESUS came to set up a spiritual kingdom which "is not meat and drink; but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 14 : 17). He had given to His disciples the laws of His kingdom in the language of the kingdom, which was not the "Thou shalt" of the law, but the "Blessed" of the gospel; and He added, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." "He will magnify the law, and make it honorable" (Isa. 42 : 21). He alone, of all men, could say with absolute truth at every moment of His life, "I do always those things that please Him" (John 8 : 29). Thus Christ is "the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" (Rom. 10 : 4). He finished the work which His Father gave Him to do, as much by fulfilling the law in of His life, as by the sacrifice of His death. The principle of the law is love, "Thou shalt love" is both the Old and New Testament summary of the law (Deut. 6 : 5; Lev. 19 : 18; Luke 10 : 27), and Jesus, the true Image of God in man's nature, was in His own Person all which those words express, "God is Love" (1 John 4 : 8). Love cannot destroy the law of God, for "love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. 13 : 10). Thus our blessed Lord declared that not one jot, i. e., not the smallest tittle of one of the words of the law of God should pass away till all should be fulfilled. Therefore, in the kingdom of heaven, he that shall do God's commands and teach others to do them shall be great, but those who break them, least.

The Perfect Obedience

Having thus set His own seal upon His Father's law, Jesus shows how the gospel of the kingdom supersedes the old law. "Except your righteousness shall exceed ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." What then was the righteousness which must be exceeded? Saul of Tarsus was a Pharisee, and he would speak of himself "as, touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless" (Phil. 3 : 6); he was "taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous toward God" (Acts 22 : 3). No doubt, he was most punctilious about the paying of tithes, even to "mint, anise and cummin," and more zealous about everything he could do. Yet this man, with all his zeal, and all his doing, knew so little about love that he would breathe out threatenings and slaughter! The observance of the law was all outside of the real man; love, which "is the fulfilling of the law," had not taken possession of him. Saul was still Saul, and represented himself and his own earnestness, establishing his own righteousness and not submitting himself to the righteousness of God. Except your righteousness, reader, exceed this, the entrance to the kingdom of heaven stands barred against you. Christ is the Door, the hinges turn on what He is for you, or what He is in you, and not on what you are.

The Righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees,

Our Lord then proceeds to contrast the law and the gospel. The law says, "Thou shalt not kill;" for murder, man must die. But there are very few, thank God, who have in act committed murder. How many thousands, when hearing this commandment, have drawn in their breath with a sigh of relief and said in their hearts, "Well, at any rate, I am not guilty there." But the gospel of Jesus searches below the deed level, to the thought and intention level, right down into the heart, and says, "Hast thou never been Angry without a Cause?"

If thy brother hath aught against thee, go and be reconciled to him, or thine offering to God cannot be accepted, whether it be prayer, or service, or whatsoever it be. Who can say, "I never was angry with my brother, my sister, my fellow-servant, my friend, my partner in business, without a cause?" "Agree with thine adversary quickly"—this is the law of the kingdom; "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath" (Eph. 4 : 26), keep short accounts with God, and short accounts with one another. Not one of the commandments is more often violated in spirit than this one. All family disputes and jars, all gossip, all unkind words, all heart-burnings come from this root, and Christ accounts them heart-murder. It is this which often brings a terrible sense of condemnation—just as the adversary delivers to the judge, and the judge delivers to the officer, and we see no way out but the impossible one of paying the uttermost farthing. O, how many souls are in this case! But when there is a prompt reconciliation for God's sake, a turning over of the wrong which others have done us to Him, and getting quit of it, an open, free confession of that which we have done, "He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John 1 : 9). Then our soul escapes "as a bird out of the snare of the fowler; the snare is broken and we are escaped"

Again, the old law condemns the breaking of

The Seventh Command

in actual deed, and the punishment is the same as for murder, but Jesus, in the laws of His kingdom, condemns the sinful look, the sinful thought, the sinful wish. It is almost worse than murder when an impure man blasts the life of a pure young girl and condemns her to a life of shame, but God has seen the impure habits which have led up to this sin, and He says, "But fornication and all uncleanness or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints" (Eph. 5 : 3). Is not the reading of impure books and the long newspaper reports of criminal cases a violation of the laws of Christ's kingdom? Surely if there had not been a fearful leaven of iniquity in England, the fiendish practice of that Government in legalizing prostitution in India and other dependencies would never have been tolerated for a moment. To what has England sunk, as a nation, that she, who is reckoned as the nation to be most forward in missionary work, now forces drink, prostitution and opium upon the heathen who have the misfortune to live within the bounds of the British Empire! O, it is a burning shame that we, of all nations of the earth, should be thus guilty!

Jesus teaches us as children of the kingdom to stand at nothing. If a right hand or a right eye cause us to stumble, better by far cut it off or pluck it out than harm the interests of the kingdom of our God. The morality of the kingdom is based on love, not on selfishness, and thus it cuts right across the divorce laws which some countries have cleverly devised. God says that for no other cause may a man put away his wife but for fornication, and the one who is put away is not to marry again; this is clear as daylight. The plea of incompatibility of temper and taste, which men have devised as a reason for dissolving the marriage tie, is met by the stern decision of the King, "What, therefore, God hath joined together, let not man put asunder (Matt. 19 : 6). God permits the difference of tastes, in order that His love coming in may be the link of unity—that He may stand as the link between husband and wife.

Jesus next proclaims the laws of His kingdom concerning oaths. The law condemned perjury; the Gospel condemns the very Making of Oaths.

Jesus would have His people so perfectly truthful that their "Yea" should be yea and their "Nay" nay. One of the greatest marks of man's degeneracy is the want of perfect truthfulness. When Isaiah described the falling away of Israel he said, "Our transgressions are multiplied before Thee. . . . In transgressing and lying against the Lord, . . . conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood, and judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off, for truth is fallen in the street and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth" (Isa. 59 : 12-15). The words and the very face of a truthful man carry weight.

The Father of the Writer, whilst traveling in Italy more than thirty years ago, found himself short of money. He went to a banker, to whom he was quite a stranger, and to whom he had no introduction, and told him his dilemma, saying how he needed money, but had no security at hand. The banker said he would lend him as much money as he needed, up to £100. My father asked him, "How do you thus trust an utter stranger?" The answer was, "Sir, your face is sufficient guarantee." Yes, my father was a man of his word, and of the most transparent truthfulness.

Our Lord next cuts at the very root of self-life, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, 'An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth' (Ex. 21 : 24), but I say unto you that ye Resist not Evil."

"Resist not evil! But if we do not resist we shall be imposed upon all round," say many; "why, it would be putting a premium upon wrong-doing." How do we know that, if we have never tried it! On the contrary, it has been proved, again and again, that where a child of God has had the faith and courage and self-denial to take wrong without resisting, the one who has injured him has been brought to the Lord and become his close friend. Alas! that in most of our holiness meetings these practical truths about a holy life are so little taught. Jesus says, "Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." Who does it? "If any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also." Who does it? "Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." Who does this? "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." Who does this? We cannot, indeed, give what we are asked to give—drink to the drunkard and relief to those who will not work, but we may give our time and interest and prayers. Self says, "But I must look after my own interests; I must stand up for my rights." In the kingdom of Christ we have no rights but His, and He so cares for our interests that we can say, "Jehovah is my Shepherd, I shall not want."

Our Lord further says: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy; but I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." This is going directly against the grain, against every instinct of self-love. It is only possible as Christ takes possession of us, and lives His own love-life in us. Then it is as easy as breathing to love our enemies, for we see them as He sees them, and not as they touch us. He calls us to be to our enemies as He was to us when we were enemies, that we may not simply talk about being the children of our Father which is in heaven, but that the likeness to our Father in our lives may be unmistakable. "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for He maketh His sun to shine on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same?" What proof is there that there is a difference between them and you? It is Godlike to love our enemies, it is divine. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

"THE TWO ROADS ONE."

I am the Father's child
Each pilgrim day,
E'en though by sin defiled
Through all the way.
Dare think I to repine,
Since my Beloved's mine,
He died for me
Upon the tree
His matchless grace and love combine
At Calvary.

The road which now I tread
A thorny path,
On it the Master led
But not in wrath.
For there He's my Fortress
My Saviour nothing less,
And on He'll guide,
As days do glide
He'll never leave me comfortless
He's at my side.

But soon the golden street
I'll tread with joy,
At death the two will meet
Thorns wont annoy.
And then with Jesus blest,
And those I loved he best,
I'll ever raise
The song of praise
To our great King, while thus I rest
And at Him gaze.

Who is there now afraid
Of thorns so sharp?
Since He our debt has paid
Oh for a harp!
Though now through thorns you're led
The golden street's ahead,
Stay thou but near Thy Shepherd dear,
The thorns will, on the way you tread
Soon disappear.

REV. G. B. GREIG.

SYDNEY, Australia.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form for general distribution at twenty-five cents per hundred.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of
J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

SPAIN AND SPANISH AMERICA.

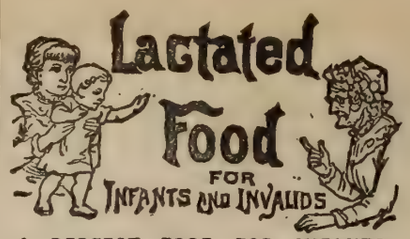
ILLUSTRATED.

A most beautifully illustrated new work on Spain and Spanish America, edited by Bishop Riley—sold in parts—each part complete in itself and sold separately. The proceeds dedicated to aiding christian work in Mexico. Part I. now ready. Sent to any address on the receipt of price, fifty cents. In asking for it mail your requests to J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York, inclosing fifty cents and the words, "Send Spain and Spanish America, illustrated, to"—and then give your address.

WOOD-CARPET

Parquetry or Ornamental Wood-Floors For Rooms of all kinds in Private Houses, Hotels, Stores, etc. Also Borders for Rugs. Stamp for Book of Designs

BOUGHTON & TERWILLIGER,
23d Street, under Fifth Avenue Hotel
NEW YORK CITY



A PERFECT FOOD FOR INFANTS.
THE MOTHER'S FAVORITE.

It has been successful in hundreds of cases where other prepared foods failed.

FOR INVALIDS AND DYSPEPTICS.
The Most Nourishing, Most Palatable, Most Economical,
OF ALL PREPARED FOODS.
EASILY AND QUICKLY PREPARED.

Send for circulars and pamphlets giving testimony of Physicians and Mothers, which will amply prove every statement we make.

For sale by Druggists 25c., 50c., $1.00.
Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

This Magazine portrays American thought and life from ocean to ocean, is filled with pure high-class literature, and can be safely welcomed in any family circle.

PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MAIL.

Sample Copy of current number mailed upon receipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 cts.

Premium List with either.

Address:
R. T. BUSH & SON, Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N. Y.

GET UP CLUBS.

THE NEW ORGAN FOLIO.

By HUBERT P. MAIN.

THIS new book has been prepared expressly for the Reed Organ. It contains a thorough course of valuable instruction, a number of useful interludes in different keys, pretty voluntaries, pieces especially adapted for the parlor at home; also, several pages of songs and hymn tunes. Large Folio Boards, $1.50. Sent on receipt of price. Specimen pages free.

Liberal Discount to the Trade.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 RANDOLPH STREET, CHICAGO.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE

A new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents, by J. S. OGILVIE & CO., 31 Rose Street, New York.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED. SEND for particulars and liberal terms. W. B. KETCHAM, 71 Bible House, New York

Infant Wardrobes

Ladies who are unable to examine our stock of these goods personally, would find it to their advantage to correspond with us. The most complete information furnished, and careful attention given to special orders.

Lord & Taylor,

Broadway & 20th Street, N. Y.

WANTED. A situation in a private family is desired by a graduate; will teach English, Higher Mathematics, French, Latin, Vocal, and Instrumental Music on Piano. Best references. Address Miss Moffett, Brownsberg, Rockbridge Co., Va.

James McCreery & Co

PREVIOUS TO OPENING THEIR NEW STOCK OF FALL DRESS GOODS OFFER THE FOLLOWING BARGAINS:

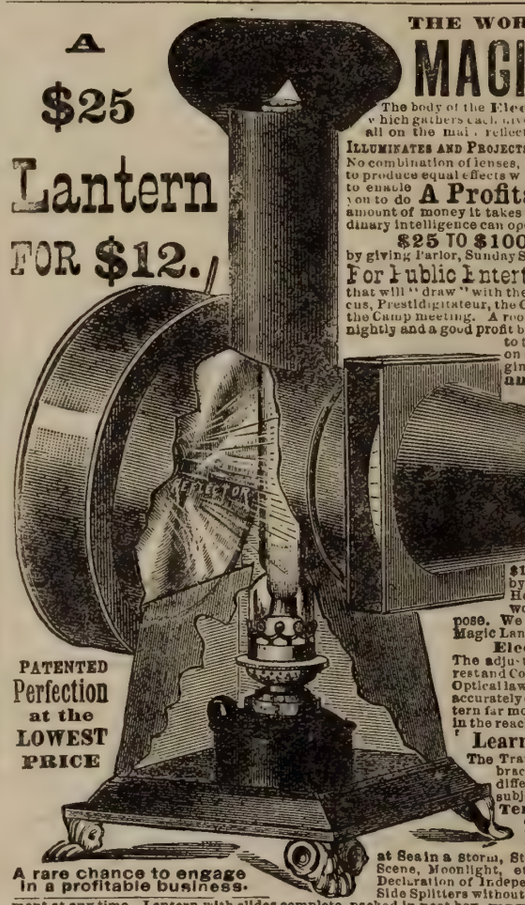
ONE LINE OF MIXED SUITINGS, 44 INCHES WIDE, AT 75 CTS., FORMER PRICE, $1.25 PER YARD.

ONE LINE OE FRENCH CANVAS CLOTHS 50 CTS., FORMER PRICE $1 PER YARD, BOTH OF THE ABOVE LINES ARE ALL WOOL AND VERY DESIRABLE.

ORDERS BY MAIL WILL RECEIVE PROMPT AND CAREFUL ATTENTION.

Broadway and Eleventh St.,
New York.

A $25 Lantern FOR $12.



PATENTED
Perfection at the LOWEST PRICE

A rare chance to engage in a profitable business.

THE WORLD ELECTRO RADIANT

MAGIC LANTERN.

The body of the Electro Radiant is a cone-shaped reflector which gathers each divergent ray of light and concentrates them all on the main reflector whence the whole mass of brilliancy

ILLUMINATES AND PROJECTS THE PICTURE WITH STARTLING CLEARNESS

No combination of lenses, however ingenious, has ever been known to produce equal effects with the light used. The cost of an outfit to enable A Profitable Business is small compared with the amount of money it takes to do any other business. Any one of ordinary intelligence can operate it, and

$25 TO $100 PER NIGHT MAY BE EARNED by giving Parlor, Sunday School, Academy or Public Entertainments. For Public Entertainments Radiant has something that will "draw" with the combined power of the Theatre, the Circus, Prestidigitateur, the Country Fair, the Temperance Crusade, and the Camp meeting. A room that will hold 100 persons may be filled nightly and a good profit be cleared. You have only to tack the sheet to the wall, darken the room, place Lantern on stand, light lamp, and you are ready to begin the exhibition. The Electro Radiant projects on the screen a PICTURE

8 Feet in Diameter.

$10,000 were paid for the use of our patent by Railroad Companies for Locomotive Headlights, it being considered the most wonderful light ever produced for the purpose. We have retained the exclusive right to make Magic Lanterns on the same principle, and the Electro Radiant is the result.

The adjustment of Reflector, Lenses, Tubes, Slide-rest and Cone, are made with mathematical nicety. Optical laws governing such adjustments have been accurately calculated, so that you have in our Lantern far more than appears, and we are placing within the reach of all, unsurpassed advantages for Learning, Amusement and Profit.

The Transparent Slides for these Lanterns embrace views on wonderful natural scenes from different parts of the world. The Scripture subjects from both the Old and New Testament Temperance—Showing the folly and misery of the Drunkard. Art—Copies of famous Statues, Bas-reliefs, and Engravings. Miscellaneous—Such as ships at Sea in a Storm, Steamboat Race, Fort Sumpter, Daylight Scene, Moonlight, etc. History—Landing of Columbus, Declaration of Independence, Yankee Doodle, etc. Comic—Side Splitters without numbers. You can add to your assortment at any time. Lantern with slides complete, packed in neat box, may be easily carried in the hand.—

The Electro Radiant No. 2 (shown in cut) with 12 slides and fittings complete, will be sent by express on receipt of $12.00 or C.O.D. at $3.00 is sent with order, purchaser paying the balance $9.00 at express office. Full instructions and list of other views sent with each Lantern. Send money Order or Registered Letter. Send all orders to World M'f'g Co. 122 Nassau Street, New York.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

For Adults,
For Children,
For Both Sexes.

When on the sultry summer's day
The sun seems scarce a mile away;
When comes Sick Headache to oppress
And every moment brings distress.
Then TARRANT'S SELTZER proves a friend
That Druggists all can recommend.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body while the ball in the cup presses back the Intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free. ECCLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS WANTED (Samples Free) for DR. SCOTT'S beautiful Electric Corsets, Brushes, Belts, Etc. No risk, quick sales. Territory given. Satisfaction guaranteed
DR. SCOTT, 843 Broadway, New York.

"Demonology or Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern."—"An effective weapon."—"A sword of fire."—"Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Startling disclosures.—History facts and data—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

This Knife FREE with our new 48 Page Catalogue of New Goods for Agents if you send 6 cents in Stamps to help pay postage, etc. World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., N. Y.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES—(avoid Agents and Dealers whose profits and expenses double the cost on every Piano they sell) and send this First-Class UPRIGHT Cabinet GEM 7⅓ Octave Rosewood Piano, Warranted 6 years, for $193! We send it—with Beautiful Cover and Stool—for Trial in your own Home before you buy. Send for circulars to

Marshal & Smith, 235 East 21st St., N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at 63 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 33. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, AUGUST 18, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE REV. G. M. MURPHY, the London Evangelist.

CONCERNING BIGOTS. A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

PROPHETIC NOTES: The Endings of the Dispensations—A Revived Napoleonic Rite—A Stirring Among the Dry Bones, etc.

PICTURE OF TRAVELLING IN CHINA.

A Bulgarian Lieutenant's Recovery—A Miner's Persistence—A Mohammedan Pilgrim's Discovery—A Hindoo Village Miller—A Sailor Curing a Savage—A Mohammedan Naaman, etc.

THE SUFFERING SAVIOUR'S SYMPATHY. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

CURRENT EVENTS:—The Shocking Railroad Calamity in Illinois—The Irish Land Bill Denounced—The Cholera in Italy—The Pauper Burial of a Scotch Viscount—Deplorable End of a Quarrel in Georgia—An Hour in Niagara Rapids—A Leap from the Clouds, etc.

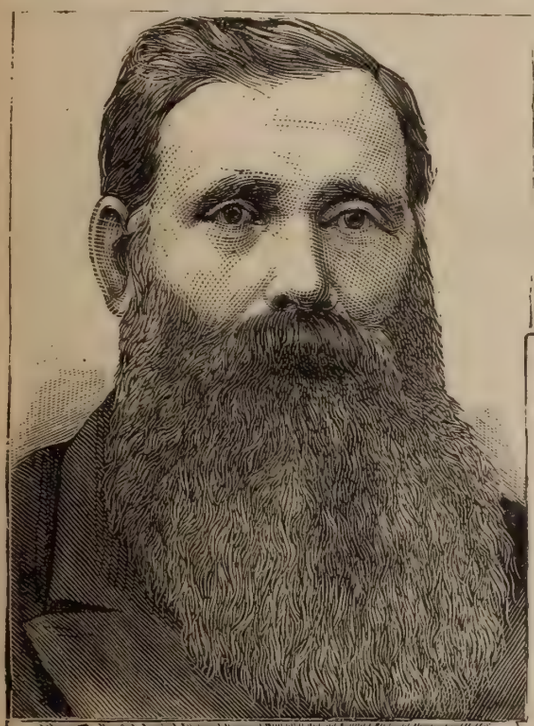
THE MENTOR'S REMORSE. (With Illustration.)

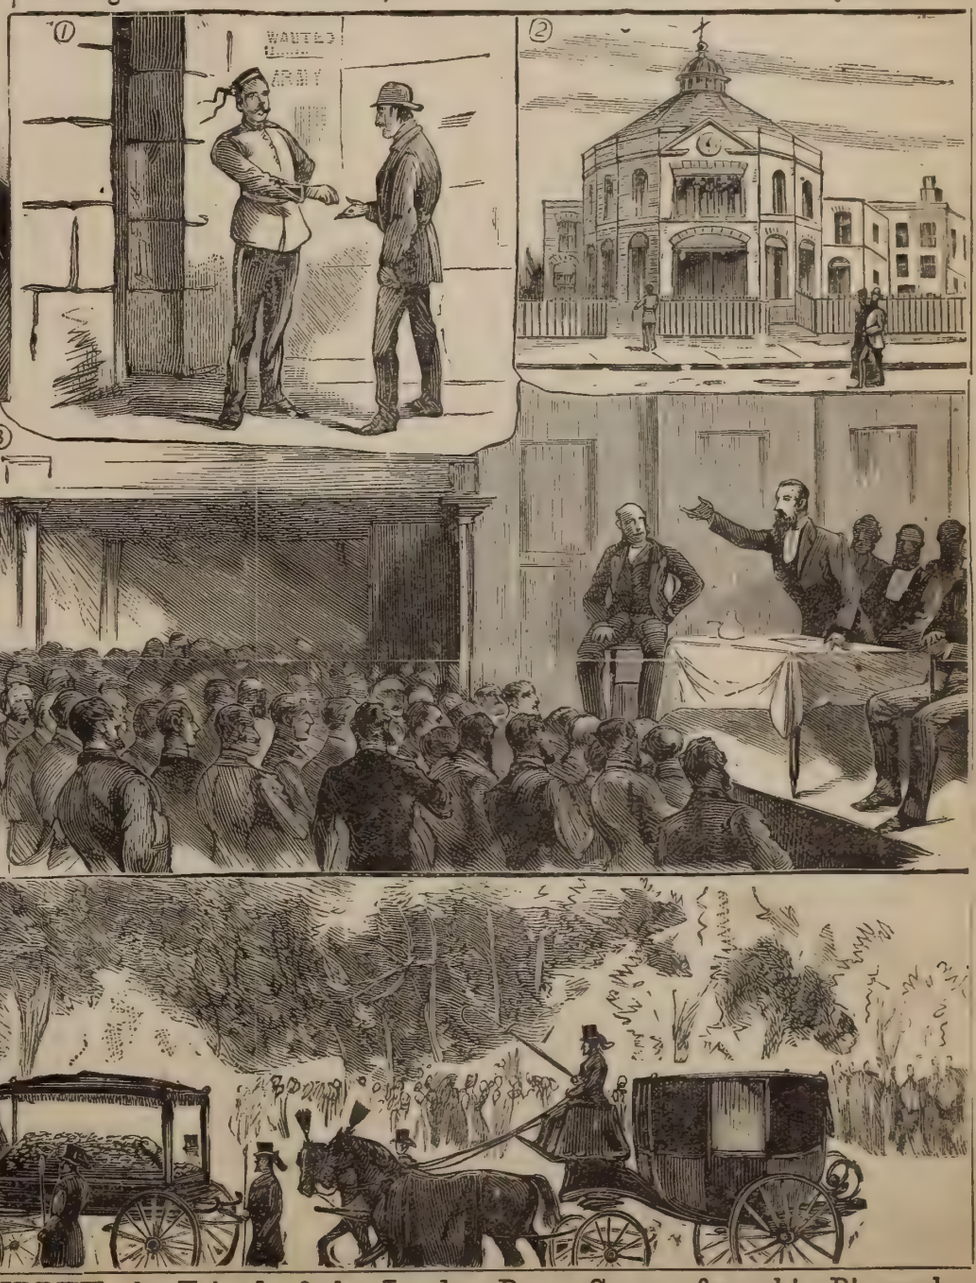
Gems from New Books: Mr. Moody's Anecdotes.

PORTRAIT OF THE SIAMESE PRINCE.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. (Continued.)

PIETY WITHOUT DISPLAY. By Mrs. Baxter.





THE LATE REV. GEORGE M. MURPHY, the Friend of the London Poor—Scenes from his Biography.

THE LATE REV. G. M. MURPHY.

The Christ-like Worker.

Character of his Work—A Hack-driver's Testimony—A Betrayed Girl Saved from Suicide—Born in 1823—Enlists as a Soldier—Warden on a Convict Hulk—Gospel Temperance Work—Becomes Evangelist of the London Slums—The Lambeth Baths' Winter Meetings—A Congregational Church Formed—Latest Labors and Sudden Death—Memorial Services.

THOUGH unknown to the great majority of our readers, the remarkable man whose portrait appears on the first page was a man whose character will repay study. He was a plain Congregational minister in the British metropolis, unambitious, unselfish, unassuming, content to be unknown and unhonored, if he could but serve the people, relieving the wants of the poor, brightening their lot, and teaching them the way to heaven. George Murphy was emphatically the friend of the poor, and, like his Master, "the common people heard him gladly." They went to him for sympathy in their troubles, and advice in their perplexities; and if he heard of any one in need of either he did not wait for them to go to him, but went and sought them out. On Sunday, July 16—the Sunday before he died—a stranger in London wishing to hear him, hailed a cab, but the driver did not know the building to which he was directed, but when the name of the minister was mentioned, he said: "Murphy?

I Have Cause to Know Murphy.

Fourteen years ago he got me to sign the pledge, and all the fellows in our yard." Only a few days before he died a young woman spent a night on the Embankment of the river Thames, in utter despair. She had been beguiled from her home under promise of marriage—betrayed, robbed, deserted. George Murphy, within four days, caused the poor girl, under proper escort, to be conveyed nearly one hundred miles to her home, and afterwards received letters from the mother and daughter of heartfelt gratitude. He simply, unostentatiously "went about doing good," following in his Master's footsteps; the motto of his life, the text which he had chosen for the sermon he intended to preach on the morning of July 17: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (Luke 2: 49.) That sermon he never preached, though all his public life was a commentary on the text. About three hours before the time for its delivery, he was summoned by the Master he had served so well, and went to receive his reward.

George Mollett Murphy was born at Hans Town, in the suburbs of London, on September 9, 1823. He was therefore nearly 64 years of age when he died. His father and mother were godly people. Mr. Murphy, who was their seventh son, received his earliest religious training at Ranelagh Chapel, under the Rev. R. H. Shepherd. Upon his father's death his mother and four sisters removed from Chelsea, and became members of Surrey Chapel (Rev. Rowland Hill's), his connection with which exercised an important influence on young Murphy's future career. He grew up a strong, heathy, high-spirited lad, whose very vigor and energy became the cause of danger and temptation. He when a young man (See Illustration No. 1 on first page), much against his mother's will. But the discipline of the army was not altogether disadvantageous to him, and he gained golden opinions from his superiors. After serving for some time with credit, though never, we believe, engaged in actual warfare, his mother purchased his discharge, and he was next employed as a warder on board a convict hulk off Gosport. At that time prison discipline was characterized by many abuses which have now happily been reformed. The Gosport hulk was the scene of practices which revolted Mr. Murphy's better feelings. He could not restrain his indignation. He was suspected, not without justice, of communicating to the Press certain articles in which the evils were exposed. But to oppose iniquity, if it is part of the system under which a man serves, is commonly treated as disloyalty. Accordingly Mr. Murphy was dismissed from his post. He found employment, however, under a firm of contractors, who were at that time constructing the New Street railroad station at Birmingham. There he began his career as A Temperance Advocate.

Enlisted as a Soldier,

He was happily brought under the immediate influence of the late John Angell James, the pastor of Carr's Lane Chapel, and the author of "The Anxious Inquirer," with whom he most cordially and successfully labored.

In Birmingham, Mr. Murphy soon gained a reputation as a devoted Sunday-school teacher a staunch teetotaler, an effective open-air preacher; and was frequently found occupying the pulpit in places of worship in Birmingham, where he was ever welcome. In 1856 he left Mr. James's church at Carr's Lane, Birmingham (now Dr. Dale's), much to the regret of that congregation, and went to London. This step was not taken with the object of improving his social condition, but that he might devote himself exclusively to the Lord's service and the cause of humanity. The Rev. Newman Hall needed an earnest, energetic man to do evangelistic work among the dense population which surrounds Surrey Chapel, where he was then laboring. Young Murphy was mentioned to him, and he learned that the youth who had nearly broken his mother's heart by "going for a soldier," who had subsequently been a warder on a convict ship and had been discharged, was now spending all the time he could spare from his occupation in Birmingham in preaching the gospel to the poor and advocating total abstinence. A man who could do that was precisely the man Newman Hall wanted to carry the gospel into the slums of London. He, therefore, invited Murphy, and had no difficulty in persuading him to resign and become A Missionary in the Slums.

Nature and Divine grace well fitted him for missionary work. He had great determination and force of character, and his perserverance, kindliness of manner, and genuine humor, enabled him to make himself a welcome friend to the masses of South London. For ten and a half years Mr. Murphy labored in connection with Surrey Chapel (a picture of which occupies panel No. 2 of the illustration on the front page), and took his full share of the onerous labors attaching to the various institutions of that church. Mr. Murphy, however, did not consider he had fulfilled all his duty when he had preached the gospel to the poor and had visited them.

Practical Christianity

had charms for him, which kept their hold upon him to the last. He wanted to help the poor in this world while pointing the way to a better world. In studying their ways and habits, and noting their difficulties and temptations, he perceived that the weary, jaded man needed something different as an occupation for his evenings than sitting in the room which he called home, reading a book. He saw that the power of the saloon consisted in the fact that it offered excitement and change to the working man, and he set himself to work to compete with it. He arranged weekly meetings in secular buildings, such as old Hawkestone Hall, the Victoria Theatre, the mission-rooms at Kent Street, Dockhead, and took care that they were of a character that could not be called dull. He also tried to help the younger people by establishing drawing and other educational classes, and took a keen interest and active part in organizing popular lectures. His popularity as Temperance advocate and open-air preacher soon gained for him a position of great influence among the people of the district. He originated workingmen's exhibitions, and promoted in many ways the industries of the people.

Once, by the advice of the Rev. Newman Hall, he selected a number of representative artisans to visit Mr. Gladstone at his residence, at that gentleman's request, with a view to the better understanding of their class by actual contact. Some dozen or two of these, accompanied by Mr. Hall and Mr. Murphy, were entertained at luncheon by Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone, who entered into conversation with them on matters of interest then rife in the nation. They took with them various specimens of their handiwork in leisure hours, such as models, stuffed birds, carving, &c., and their host showed them his pictures and articles of vertu. The interview left pleasant impressions on both sides.

The Saturday Night Meetings were, however, the great work of his life, by which he will be best remembered. The thoughtless custom of employers in paying their men on a Saturday obtained largely in London when Mr. Murphy went there first, and the men knowing that they had Sunday in which to get over a debauch, frequently spent the bulk of their week's earnings in the saloon on that night. Thinking over this evil, Mr. Murphy came to the conclusion that if he could get hold of the men on Saturday night, the wives would have a better chance of getting their money for housekeeping, and the men would be in better condition for worship on Sunday, and work on Monday. He looked around for a building and found one called the Lambeth Baths, which was adapted to his purpose. Samuel Morley, the London philanthropist, gave him five hundred dollars to hire it for every Saturday night for a year, and in 1862, a series of meetings were commenced, which have since become famous in the city. They were simple social gatherings, quite informal in character. Mr. Murphy was the leader. Sometimes he read the newspapers to the crowds of working people who had assembled to hear it, the readings being interpersed with songs; sometimes lectures, concerts, and other entertainments were given. The people were sure of being interested, and they came in crowds (See illustration No. 3). One saloon-keeper in the neighborhood said he would gladly give a fiver (twenty-five dollars), every Saturday night, if that place could be shut up, and it would pay to do it. Very clear testimony to the value of the work when only one of the many saloons lost so much in profit by it!

Every winter for twenty-five years the Baths meetings were held, and as their value was more clearly proved their number was increased by opening the building on other nights besides Saturday. It was always full, each season showing an average attendance of nearly 1,000 at each of the 150 meetings. Every winter from 1,250 to 1,500 persons signed the pledge. When these splendid results are added up for a period of twenty-five years, it will readily be conceded that Mr. Murphy had reason to be thankful for the results of his work in Lambeth.

At the Lambeth Baths Mr. Murphy established the first large Surrey-side workingmen's exhibition, the prizes in connection with which were distributed by the popular Lord Palmerston, who eulogized in the warmest terms the splendid work being done by Mr. Murphy, whom he humorously dubbed

The "Bishop of the New Cut."

In 1866 so many people had been converted by the blessing of God on the labors of Mr. Murphy that they desired to form a church, with him as their pastor. With the full consent of the Rev. Newman Hall and the friends of Surrey chapel, they were given the use of the Surrey Tabernacle, and the place became a very hive of religious activity. The membership soon ran up to 400, and more than 1,200 have joined it in the twenty-one years of the church's existence. Sunday-school and classes, tract and Dorcas societies, Bands of Hope and Temperance societies were in full operation. Open-air preaching and Temperance addresses were frequent. The whole was carefully organized and worked under Mr. Murphy's pastorate.

The twenty-first anniversary of this church was celebrated on Thursday, July 14, when a local magnate who presided said: "During all these years Mr. Murphy has been laboring amongst us his work has been varied, and carried out with conspicious ability. He has gained the confidence of all, while he commands the admiration of all outside his sphere of work, for he has devoted himself energetically and continually to labors which have contributed much to the public weal. Twenty-one years is a long span in a man's life; to a man of an active turn of mind like Mr Murphy it means a great deal. As a portion of his work, I may say that he has attended some 20,000 temperance, social and other meetings. He is a workingman amongst workingmen. Literature has been distributed broadcast through him, and I believe he has been more or less instrumental in the dissemination of a million and a half tracts, pamphlets, &c. During the time he has been at work in connection with the Temperance cause, he has witnessed some 30,000 persons pledge themselves to total abstinence. In political matters Mr. Murphy has ever been found in the forefront in all movements having for their aim the benefit, the advancement, and elevation of the people."

A Mark Of Confidence

was manifested in Mr. Murphy by the people among whom he labored when in 1873 they had to elect a representative of the district on the London Board of Education. Mr. Murphy was chosen by a large majority, and became one of the most efficient members of the board. His thorough knowledge of the people, for whom the common schools were established, enabled him to give valuable practical advice and to exercise his power in the wisest and most beneficent manner. He was re-elected at subsequent contests, and was a member when he died.

He Died in Harness.

He was at two meetings on Saturday July 16, one in favour of preserving an open space for the people of the district, the other in the interests of the Gladstone candidate for a seat in Parliament. At both meetings he spoke with his usual vigor. He returned home in good spirits, looking forward to his full Sunday services, and he enjoyed the night's rest. It was not till eight o'clock on Sunday morning that his wife awoke to find him sitting on a chair by the bedside, when, getting no reply to her inquiries, she called the servant, and on returning saw her husband fall back in the chair dead.

His Funeral

on July 23 was an imposing spectacle, not because of its splendor, for it was very plain, but because the streets on both sides all the way to the cemetery were lined by his personal friends, workingmen whom he had helped, who had run out from the bench or anvil to see the procession pass (See Illustration No. 5.) One man, as the hearse passed, called out in a rich Irish brogue: "Uncover, every one of you." At another point a woman, as the coffin passed, said to her neighbor: "What a splendid lot of flowers; the reply, in a loud voice and again unmistakably Irish, was: "Well, he deserves every one of them." One man wanted to see the body, and said: "I was a poor drunkard; now I am well off, all through him." There was an Irishman came into this church to look at the coffin; he remained a time in silent prayer, and then he lifted up his head and said: "He loved everybody." Nor was the mourning confined to the poor and uneducated. Mr. Gladstone wrote to Mrs. Murphy when he heard of the death: "It was with deep regret that I learned the unexpected death of your excellent husband. During all the later years of his career I heard with pleasure the good report on all hands of his ability, zeal and patriotism in all he undertook. At an earlier period I had the pleasure of some intercourse with him, and my experience was in full accord with what I have since heard from others. I only add the expression of my hope that you may be enabled to support this heavy bereavement in faith and hope."

At the church where the funeral service was held a crowd of distinguished persons was gathered (See Illustration No. 4.), and Rev. Newman Hall and other eminent clergymen spoke of his grand character and the debt which London owes to his tireless activity.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Most Faithful Warning.—A Christian worker relates: "The other day I walked home with a gentleman who holds a very good social position, and commenced talking of Christ as the Saviour of the world. Quite unexpectedly the gentleman interrupted me, saying, 'If ever I am saved it will be by myself; no person will ever do that for me.' 'And what do you think of Christ?' I inquired of him. 'A great deal, a very great deal,' was the answer; 'and I take much pleasure in reading the Bible; there is no other such book; yet if I am to be saved it must be by myself.' I felt constrained to turn towards him, and, looking him straight in the eyes, I said, "If you go on in that way of thinking, then, as surely as you are standing here with me, so surely you will go straight to hell.' It was a strong thing to say to a proud man, who thought he was able to save himself, but it was true, and God blessed it to his salvation.'"

Fighting Against Great Odds.—A Minister relates: "Three weeks ago while I was in London, a man came to me asking how he might live a better life. He was middle-aged, and respectable, but I knew that for years he had been struggling with sin in his own strength. I asked him how it was he had never had recourse to the one Divine and unfailing remedy, the great antidote for sin, the Lord Jesus; and he honestly owned to me that he had never sought it. Then I took my Bible, and showed him from God's testimony he could never expect to receive until he asked. 'Seek and ye shall find: knock and it shall be opened unto you.' The Holy Spirit blessed the means I used, and soon the man knocked, and the door of mercy was opened unto him. He sought and found the dear Saviour because he asked aright. God does not always give us just what we ask, but He never refuses to give the Holy Spirit to those who want Him."

A Very Popular Delusion.—A Worker Relates: "Not long ago I met a woman to whom I spoke of Christ and her need of Him. 'Are you all right with Him?' I asked. 'Oh, yes,' was the rejoinder; "I know all about that. I read my Bible as often as you do, and I go to church just as often. I know all about it.' 'True,' I replied, 'but it is one thing to know about a person, and another to know that person yourself as a loving and beloved friend. Have you had a personal interview with Christ?' She could not say that she had, and there she was contentedly going on her way, as thousands do, thinking she was safe for eternity because she read her Bible and went to church. Oh, what a delusion! I solemnly told her that she must turn from her own way to Jesus, who is God's only way of salvation and the only sin-bearer, upon whom the Lord hath laid 'the iniquities of us all.' I believe that she did so, and found peace in the blood of Christ."

A Surprise in a Counting-House.—A Minister says: "A gentleman entered the counting-house of a wholesale warehouse, and said: 'My name is S.; I owe this firm an account, and have now called to pay it!' The book-keeper turned up the ledger, and, failing to find it, asked about what time the debt was contracted. 'About seven years ago,' was the answer. With this information the entry was soon found, and, on being read, the man recognized it, and remarked: 'I was unable to pay it at the time, but since then I have been more successful, and now I'll square it off.' 'I am afraid,' replied the cashier, 'I cannot take payment, for, the fact is, it has already been paid.' 'What? Paid! How is that? It was not paid when I left this country; since then I have been in America.' 'Some one else must have paid it for you,' said the clerk. 'I do not know who could have done that,' said the man. 'I have wanted to pay it a long time. I could not rest with the thought of this account being left unpaid. You must take payment of it, if only to ease my conscience.' But the cashier could not and did not do so. Similarly, there are some people who, though Jesus has paid their debt of penalty for sin, insist by some good work or virtue, real or imagined, on repaying it; but God will not accept such payment; already He has been paid in the only acceptable way—the blood of Jesus Christ—and all we have to do is to trust in the veracity of the receipt that Jesus has procured for us."

On the Eve of a Great Battle.—A Friend Relates that "When the Spartans encamped in front of the Persian host before the great battle of Marathon, they spent the day previous to the battle in combing their long locks and thoroughly cleansing their bodies. The Persians, as they watched them, said, one to the other, 'Are these the great Spartan warriors of whom we have heard so much, these effeminate creatures who think of nothing but the beautifying of their person? Truly it will not take much valor to overthrow them.' They did not know that these men had sworn to return with their shields or upon them, and they were thus adorning themselves that when dead, if they should die, their bodies might be presentable. Similarly, when the world sees a consecrated man cleansing his heart, and giving up petty tricks of business, and separating himself from things of doubtful rectitude, the world is apt to say, 'What a foolish fellow, he has no management,' and predicts his speedy downfall. They know not that he is thinking of the time when, after his death, he may be able to stand accepted before his Master, and hear His, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'"

"The Right Train for Richmond."—An Evangelist remarks: "One day I was in a train in the metropolis, and a lady, coming hurriedly up the platform, was about to enter the compartment in which I was sitting. Standing at the door she asked the guard, 'Is this the train for Richmond?' On receiving an answer in the affirmative, she got in. The train started, and at the first station at which it stopped, the lady put her head out of the window and asked a porter, 'Is this the train for Richmond?' Although she got the same answer she was not content, and at the next station the same scene was again enacted; and when she had seated herself for the third time I said, 'You need not trouble yourself any further; this train goes to Richmond; I go by it nearly every day.' And she believed me, because, being bound for the same place, I was traveling in the same conveyance. She had no faith in the conductor or porter, but she had faith in a fellow-traveler. Similarly, while the assurances of a pastor or a minister may fail to assure, simple testimony of a Christian relation or companion who believes and acts upon his belief may and often does lead doubters and those who are halting into the kingdom of Christ."

Why Milly Stayed With Her Father.—A friend observes: "I heard the story of a man, a drunkard, who, coming home one night in his usual state of intoxication, staggered up the stairs to his wretched apartments. He was clothed in rags, and entering his miserable home he threw himself, just as he was, upon his bed, and soon was in the drunkard's restless sleep. In the morning when he opened his eyes, the first thing he saw was the form of his daughter, Milly, as she went about preparing breakfast, and trying her best to make things clean, bright and tidy. The father listlessly watched her for some time, then called, 'Milly, Milly!' The girl walked to the bedside, and gently placed her hand on her father's heated forehead 'Milly, my child,' he said, 'why do you stay so long with me? Why do you not leave me?' 'Because I love you,' was the sweet answer. 'What! Do you really love me?' 'Yes,' continued the girl, 'and when mother died, she said, "Milly, stay by your father, and love him, and help him, for one day he will come to Christ, and be good to you."' As his daughter repeated the words of her dead mother, tears stood in the eyes of the man. His heart was touched, and in the strength of God he gave himself to Christ, and found salvation in Him."

CONCERNING BIGOTS.

A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

"Then said they unto him, Say now, Shibboleth: and he said Sibboleth: for he could not frame to pronounce it right. Then they took him and slew him at the passages of Jordan."—Judges 12 : 6.

The Civil War in Judæa—Enemies Detected by a Provincialism—The Differences Between the Sects—Sometimes Frivolous—All Entitled to Liberty of Conscience—Sectarianism not Religion—A Nothingarian Worse than a Sectarian—The Evil of Bigotry—I. Its Origin—In Wrong Education at Home—Bigots Ten Years Old—In Wealth and Influence—In Ignorance—Four Descriptions of an Obelisk—II. Its Baleful Effects—Cripples Investigation—Inspires Disgust with Religion—Hinders the Gospel Triumph—The Test of Beehives—Fails of Its Purpose—III. How to Overcome It—Beware of Self-Conceit—Giving Prominence to Principles, not Details—Doing Each Sect Justice—Association in Work—The Rescue of Lives on a Wrecked Steamer.

Do you notice the difference of pronunciation between shibboleth and sibboleth? A very small and unimportant difference you say. And yet, that difference was the difference between life and death for a great many people. The Lord's people, Gilead and Ephraim, got into a great fight, and Ephraim was worsted, and on the retreat came to the fords of the river Jordan to cross. Order was given that all Ephraimites coming there be slain. But how could it be found out who were Ephraimites? They were Detected by their Pronunciation.

Shibboleth was a word that stood for river. The Ephraimites had a brogue of their own, and when they tried to say shibboleth, always left out the sound of the "h." When it was asked that they say shibboleth they said sibboleth, and were slain. "Then said they unto him, Say now Shibboleth: and he said Sibboleth: for he could not frame to pronounce it right. Then they took him, and slew him at the passages of Jordan." A very small difference, you say, between Gilead and Ephraim, and yet how much intolerance about that small difference!

The Lord's tribes in our time—by which I mean the different denominations of Christians—sometimes magnify a very small difference, and the only difference between scores of denominations to-day is the difference between shibboleth and sibboleth.

The Church of God is divided into a great number of denominations. Time would fail me to tell of the Calvinists and the Arminians and the Sabbatarians and the Baxterians and the Dunkers and the Shakers and the Quakers and the Methodists and the Baptists and the Episcopalians and the Lutherans and the Congregationalists and the Presbyterians and the Spiritualists and a score of other denominations of religionists, some of them founded by very good men, some of them founded by very egotistic men, and some of them founded by very bad men. But as I for myself I must give that same liberty to every other man, remembering that he no more differs from me than I differ from him. I advocate the largest liberty in all religious belief and form of worship. In art, in politics, in morals and in religion let there be no gag law, no moving of the previous question, no persecution, no intolerance.

Demand Liberty of Conscience

You know that the air and the water keep pure by constant circulation, and I think there is a tendency in religious discussion to purification and moral health. Between the fourth and the sixteenth centuries the Church proposed to make people think aright by prohibiting discussion and by strong censorship of the press, and by rack and gibbet, and hot lead down the throat, tried to make people orthodox; but it was discovered that you cannot change a man's belief by twisting off his head, and that you cannot make a man see things differently by putting an awl through his eyes. There is something in a man's conscience which will hurl off the mountain that you threw upon it, and, unsinged of the fire, out of the flame will make red wings on which the martyr will mount to glory.

In that time of which I speak, between the fourth and sixteenth centuries, people went from the house of God into the most appalling iniquity, and right along by consecrated altars there were tides of drunkenness and licentiousness such as the world never heard of, and the very sewers of perdition broke loose and flooded the Church. After a while the printing-press was freed, and it broke the shackles of the human mind. Then there came a large number of bad books, but where there was one man hostile to the Christian religion there were twenty men ready to advocate it; so I have not any nervousness in regard to this battle going on between Truth and Error.

The truth will conquer just as certainly as that God is stronger than the devil. Let Error run, if you only let Truth run along with it. Urged on by skeptic's shout and transcendentalist's spur, let it run. God's angels of wrath are in hot pursuit, and quicker than eagle's beak clutches out a hawk's heart God's vengeance will tear it to pieces.

I propose this morning to speak to you of sectarianism—its origin, its evils and its cures. There are those who would make us think that this monster, with horns and hoofs, is religion. I shall chase it to its hiding-place, and drag it out of the caverns of darkness, and rip off its hide. But I want to make a distinction between bigotry and the lawful fondness for peculiar religious beliefs and forms of worship. I have no admiration for a nothingarian.

In a world of such tremendous vicissitude and temptation, and with a soul that must after awhile stand before a throne of insufferable brightness, in a day when the rocking of the mountains and the flaming of the heavens and the upheaval of the sea shall be among the least of the excitements, to give account for every thought, word, action, preference and dislike—that man is mad who has no Religious Preference.

But our early education, our physical temperament, our mental constitution, will very much decide our form of worship. A style of psalmody that may please me may displease you. Some would like to have a minister in gown and bands and surplice, and others prefer to have a minister in plain citizen's apparel. Some are most impressed when a little child is presented at the altar and sprinkled of the waters of a holy benediction "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;" and others are more impressed when the penitent comes up out of the river, his garments dripping with the waters of a baptism which signifies the washing away of sin. Let either have his own way. One man likes no noise in prayer—not a word, not a whisper. Another man, just as good, prefers by gesticulation and exclamation to express his devotional aspirations. One is just as good as the other. "Every man fully persuaded in his own mind."

George Whitefield was going over a Quaker rather roughly for some of his religious sentiments, and the Quaker said: "George, I am as thou art; I am for bringing all men to the hope of the Gospel; therefore, if thou wilt not quarrel with me about my broad brim, I will not quarrel with thee about thy black gown. George, give me thy hand."

I. In tracing out the religion of sectarianism, or bigotry, I find that a great deal of

It Comes from Wrong Education in the home circle. There are parents who do not think it wrong to caricature and jeer the peculiar forms of religion in the world, and denounce other sects and other denominations. It is very often the case that that kind of education acts just opposite to what was expected, and the children grow up, and after awhile go and see for themselves, and looking in those churches, and finding that the people are good there, and they love God and fear His commandments, by natural reaction they go and join those very churches. I could mention the names of prominent ministers of the Gospel who spent their whole lives bombarding other denominations, and who lived to see their children preach the Gospel in those very denominations. But it is often the case that bigotry starts in a household, and that the subject of it never recovers. There are tens of thousands of Bigots Ten Years Old.

I think sectarianism and bigotry also rise from too great prominence of any one denomination in a community. All the other denominations are wrong, and his denomination is right, because his denomination is the most wealthy, or the most popular, or the most influential, and it is "our" church, and "our" religious organization, and "our" choir, and "our" minister, and the man tosses his head, and wants other denominations to know their places. It is a great deal better in any community when the great denominations of Christians are about equal in power, marching side by side for the world's conquest. Mere outside prosperity, mere worldly power, is no evidence that the church is acceptable to God. Better a barn with Christ in the manger, than a cathedral with magnificent harmonies rolling through the long-drawn aisle, and an angel from heaven in the pulpit, if there be no Christ in the chancel, and no Christ in the robes.

Bigotry is often

The Child of Ignorance.

You seldom find a man with large intellect who is a bigot. It is the man who thinks he knows a great deal, but does not. That man is almost always a bigot. The whole tendency of education and civilization is to bring a man out of that kind of state of mind and heart. There was in the far east a great obelisk, and one side of the obelisk was white, another side of the obelisk was green, another side of the obelisk was blue, and travelers went and looked at that obelisk, but they did not walk around it. One man looked at one side, another at another side, and they came home each one looking at only one side; and they happened to meet, the story says; and they got into a rank quarrel about the color of that obelisk. One man said it was white, another man said it was green, another man said it was blue, and when they were in the very heat of the controversy a more intelligent traveler came, and said, "Gentlemen, I have seen that obelisk, and you are all right, and you are all wrong. Why didn't you walk all around the obelisk?" Look out for the man who sees only one side of a religious truth. Look out for the man who never walks around about these great theories of God and eternity and the dead. He will be a bigot inevitably—the man who only sees one side. There is no man more to be pitied than he who has in his head just one idea—no more, no less. More light, less sectarianism. There is nothing that will so soon kill bigotry as God's sunshine.

II. So I have set before you what I consider to be the causes of bigotry. I have set before you the origin of this evil. What are some of

The Baleful Effects?

First of all it cripples investigation. You are wrong, and I am right, and that ends it. No taste for exploration, no spirit of investigation. From the glorious realm of God's truth, over which an archangel might fly from eternity to eternity and not reach the limit, the man shuts himself out and dies, a blind mole under a corn-shock. It stops all investigation.

While each denomination of Christians is to present all the truths of the Bible, it seems to me that God has given to each denomination an especial mission to give particular emphasis to some one doctrine, and so the Calvinistic churches must present the sovereignty of God, and the Armenian churches must present man's free agency, and the Episcopal churches must present the importance of order and solemn ceremony, and the Baptist churches must present the necessity of ordinances, and the Congregational Church must present the responsibility of the individual member, and the Methodist Church must show what holy enthusiasm hearty congregational singing can accomplish. While each denomination of Christians must set forth all the doctrines of the Bible, I feel it especially incumbent upon each denomination to put particular emphasis on some one doctrine.

Another great damage done by the sectarianism and bigotry of the Church is that with the Christian religion. Now, my friends, the Church of God was never intended for a war barrack. People are afraid of a riot. You go down the street and you see an excitement, and missiles flying through the air, and you hear the shock of fire-arms. Do you, the peaceful and industrious citizen, go through that street? Oh, no! You will say, "I'll go around the block." Now, men come and look upon this narrow path to heaven, and sometimes see the ecclesiastical brickbats flying every whither, and they say, "Well, I guess I'll take the broad road; if it is so rough, and there is so much sharp-shooting on the narrow road, I guess I'll try the broad road."

It Disgusts People

Francis I. so hated the Lutherans that he said if he thought there was one drop of Lutheran blood in his veins, he would puncture them and let that drop out. Just as long as there is so much hostility between denomination and denomination, or between one professed Christian and another, or between one church and another, just so long men will be disgusted with the Christian religion, and say, "If that is religion, I want none of it."

Again, bigotry and sectarianism do great damage, in the fact that they hinder the triumph of the Gospel. Oh, how much how many men of splendid intellect have given their whole lives to controversial disputes, when, if they had given their life to something practical, they might have been vastly useful! Suppose this morning, while I speak, there were a common enemy coming up the bay, through the Narrows, and all the forts around New York began to fire into each other—you would cry out, "National suicide! why don't those forts blaze away in one direction, and that against the common enemy?" And yet, I sometimes see in the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ a strange thing going on: church against church, minister against minister, denomination against denomination, firing away into their own fort, or the fort which ought to be on the same side, instead of concentrating their energy, and giving one mighty and everlasting volley against the navies of darkness riding up through the bay.

It Wastes Ammunition,

I go out sometimes in the summer, and I find two beehives, and these two hives are in a quarrel. I come near enough not to be stung, but I come just near enough to hear the controversy, and one beehive says, "That field of clover is the sweetest," and another beehive says, "That field of clover is the sweetest." I come in between them, and I say, "Stop this quarrel; if you like that field of clover best, go there; if you like that field of clover best, go there, but let me tell you that that hive which gets the most honey is

The Best Hive."

So I come out between the churches of the Lord Jesus Christ. One denomination of Christians says, "That field of Christian doctrine is best," and another says, "This field of Christian doctrine is best." Well, I say, "Go where you get the most honey." That is the best church which gets the most honey of Christian grace for the heart, and the most honey of Christian usefulness for the life.

Besides that, if you want to build up any denomination, you will never build it up by trying to pull some other down. Intolerance never put anything down. How much has Intolerance accomplished, for instance, against the Methodist Church? For long years her ministry were forbidden the pulpits of Great Britain. Why was it that so many of them preached in the fields? Simply because they could nor get in the churches. And the name of the Church was given in derision and as a sarcasm. The critics of the Church said, "They have no order, they have no method in their worship; and the critics, therefore, in irony called them "Methodists."

I am told that in Astor Library, New York, kept as curiosities, there are seven hundred and seven books and pamphlets against Methodism. Did Intolerance stop that Church? No; it is either first or second amid the denominations of Christendom, her missionary stations in all parts of the world, her men not only important in religious trusts, but important also in secular trusts. Church marching on, and the more intolerance against it, the faster it marched.

What Has Intolerance Accomplished against the Baptist Church? If laughing scorn and tirade could have destroyed the Church it would not have to-day a disciple left. The Baptists were hurled out of Boston in olden times. Those who sympathized with them were confined, and when a petition was offered asking leniency in their behalf, all the men who signed it were indicted. Has Intolerance stopped the Baptist Church? The last statistics in regard to it showed about thirty thousand Churches and two and a half million communicants. Intolerance never put down anything.

In England a law was made against the Jew. England thrust back the Jew, and thrust down the Jew, and declared that no Jew should hold official position. What came of it? Were the Jews destroyed? Was their religion overthrown? No. Who became Prime Minister of England years ago? Who was next to the throne? Who was higher than the throne because he was counsellor and adviser? The descendant of a Jew! What were we celebrating in all our churches as well as synagogues a few years ago? The one hundredth birthday anniversary of Montefiore, the Jewish philanthropist. Intolerance never yet put down anything.

III. But now, my friends, having shown you the origin of bigotry, or sectarianism, and having shown you the damage it does, I want briefly to show you how we are to War Against This Terrible Evil,

and I think we ought to begin our war by realizing our own weakness and our own imperfections. If we make so many mistakes in the common affairs of life, is it not possible that we may make mistakes in regard to our religious affairs? Shall we take a man by the throat, or by the collar, because he cannot see religious truths just as we do? In the light of eternity it will be found out, I think, there was something wrong in all our creeds, and something right in all our creeds. But since we may make mistakes in regard to things of the world, do not let us be egotistic and so puffed up as to have an idea that we cannot make any mistake in regard to religious theories. And then, I think, we will do a great deal to overthrow the sectarianism from our heart, and the sectarianism from the world, by chiefly enlarging upon those things in which we agree rather than those on which we differ. Now, here is

A Great Gospel Platform.

A man comes up on this side the platform and says, "I don't believe in baby sprinkling." Shall I shove him off? Here is a man coming up on this side the platform, and he says, "I don't believe in the perseverance of the saints." Shall I shove him off? No; I will say, "Do you believe in the Lord Jesus as your Saviour? Do you trust Him for time and for eternity?" He says, "Yes." "Do you take Christ for time and for eternity?" "Yes." I say, "Come on, brother, one in time and one in eternity; brother now, brother forever." Blessed be God for a Gospel platform so large that all who receive Christ may stand on it!

I think we may overthrow the severe sectarianism and bigotry in our hearts, and in the Church also, by realizing that all the denominations of Christians have yielded noble institutions and noble men. There is nothing that so stirs my soul as this thought. One denomination yielded a Robert Hall and an Adoniram Judson; another yielded a Latimer and a Melville; another yielded John Wesley and the blessed Summerfield; while our own denominatian yielded John Knox and the Alexanders—men of whom the world was not worthy. Now, I say, If we are honest and when we come up in the presence of such churches and such denominations, although they may be different from our own, we ought to admire them, and we ought to love and honor them. Churches which can produce such men, and such large-hearted charity, and such magnificent martyrdom, ought to win our affection—at any rate, our respect. So come on, ye four hundred thousand Episcopalians in this country, and ye eight hundred thousand Presbyterians, and ye two and a half million Baptists, and ye nearly three and three quarter million Methodists—come on, shoulder to shoulder we will march for the world's conquest; for all nations are to be saved, and God demands that you and I help in it. Forward, the whole line.

Fair-minded Men,

Moreover, we may overthrow the feeling by

Joining in Christian Work

with other denominations. I like, when the spring-time comes, and the anniversary occasions begin, and all denominations come upon the same platform. That overthrows sectarianism. In the Young Men's Christian Association, in the Bible Society, in the Tract Society, in the Foreign Missionary Society, shoulder to shoulder, all denominations.

Perhaps I might more forcibly illustrate this truth by calling your attention to an incident which took place fourteen or fifteen years ago. One Monday morning, at about two o'clock, while her nine hundred passengers were sound asleep in her berths, dreaming of home, the steamer Atlantic crashed into Mars Head. Five hundred souls in ten minutes landed in eternity! Oh! what a scene! Agonized men and women running up and down the gangways, and clutching for the rigging, and the plunge of the helpless steamer, and the clapping of the hands of the merciless sea over the drowning and the dead, threw two continents into terror. But see this brave quartermaster pushing out with the life-line until he gets to the rock, and see these fishermen gathering up the shipwrecked, and taking them into the cabins, and wrapping them in the flannels snug and warm; and see that minister of the Gospel with three other men getting into a life-boat and pushing out for the wreck, pulling away across the surf, and pulling away until they saved one more man, and then getting back with him to the shore. Can those men ever forget that night? And can they ever forget their companionship in peril, companionship in struggle, and Companionship in Rescue?

Never! never! In whatever part of the earth they meet, they will be friends when they mention the story of that awful night when the Atlantic struck Mars Head. Well, my friends, our world has gone into a worse shipwreck. Sin drove it on the rocks. The old ship has lurched and tossed on the tempests of six thousand years. Out with the life-line! I do not care what denomination carries it. Out with the life-boat! I do not care what denomination rows it. Side by side. In the memory of common hardships and common trials, and common prayers and common tears, let us be brothers forever. We must be. We must be.

"One army of the living God,
To whose command we bow;
Part of the host have crossed the flood,
And part are crossing now."

And I expect to see the day when all denominations of Christians shall join hands around the cross of Christ, and recite the creed: "I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth, and in Jesus Christ, and in the Communion of Saints, and in the Life Everlasting." May God inspire us all with the largest-hearted Christian charity!

PROPHETIC NOTES.

THE ENDINGS OF THE DISPENSATIONS.

In a meeting which was held recently under the auspices of the Council of the Evangelical Alliance, Dr. Fraser took occasion to declare his belief as to the teaching of the Scriptures in relation to the future of the world and the Church, and the duty of the Church in view of that future, in the following clear and unmistakable language:

"The Church began with suffering persecutions, and the Church will end with an epoch of judgment. That I believe to be the case with regard to all ages and dispensations of God. The age of the 'old world,' as it is called in the Bible, ended in judgment, and in deliverance through judgment. It ended in judgment by water, and in deliverance by water. Then came the Patriarchal age, ending in judgment, the children of Israel being saved through the same element that destroyed the pursuing Egyptians. The age of Israel ended with the judgment of those who were against Christ—by sword and fire. The present age of the Church, beginning with persecutions, will end with an epoch of judgment, and that judgment is the Coming of the Son of Man from heaven. Judgment will begin at the house of God. The Lord will come and try His servants. The Lord will afterwards judge the world, but His people will not come into condemnation, even as at the former crises, when His people were delivered. We are in a pause before the Lord's coming. We should be laboring for the edification of the Church. We do not know how long or how short a time we may have peace. This is not a time to waste our resources in little wars among ourselves, in fretful friction and in troublesome controversies about things upon which, evidently, we are not coming to any agreement."

A Revived Napoleonic Rite.

A Napoleonic anniversary long unobserved, even during the Second Empire, was revived on July 25, namely, that of the death of Louis Bonaparte, King of Holland. His death took place on July 25, 1846, at Forli, and his remains were transported by his family in the following year to Saint Leu, near Paris. St. Leu, and its twin burg, Tavernay, contain a large population, chiefly of small landowners, who themselves cultivate their fields in the neighborhood. The anniversary mass was intended as a means of reviving the latent Bonapartism of the locality, the politics of which are now led by a Radical watchmaker. It may be, also, that the Bonapartists thought that in bringing St. Leu into notice they would revive the interest in the death of the Duc de Bourbon, which cast a stigma on the reign of Louis Philippe. The parish priest of St. Leu is, what is extremely rare among the secular clergy, a man of great wealth, and the owner of extensive house property in Paris. He announced beforehand that there would be a free distribution of food and clothing to all the indigent persons who attended, in consequence of which the nave was filled with the blind, the maimed, and the halt of the parish, as well as the poverty-stricken. A special train brought political sympathizers down from Paris, and the household of the Princess Mathilde drove over in a waggonette from St. Fratian. The church was draped in black. After the mass the congregation descended to the crypt of the Napoleons, which is lighted from above by a dome, and sprinkled the tombs there with holy water. Though people who study the condition of France in the light of the cable despatches are apt to regard Napoleonism as a dead issue, it is evident that there is life in it yet. This revival of the weird rite shows that a section of the French people fondly and tenaciously cling to the Napoleonic cause; and in a country so changeable as France, where opportunities come unexpectedly, a few faithful followers may easily start a movement which, if launched at a propitious moment, would place a Napoleon on the throne. While observation shows us that this may occur, prophecy shows us that it will occur. In a few years a Napoleon will be, not only master of France, but the monarch of the world.

A Statesman's Foresight.

People who are optimistically counting on a time of peace, will be surprised to learn that the Marquis of Salisbury, who is a clear-sighted statesman of phlegmatic temperament, by no means inclined to adopt a gloomy view of the situation, and who has made European politics the study of his life, entertains the opposite view. In the course of a debate in the British House of Lords, on July 26, the Marquis of Bristol called attention to the subject of international arbitration, and moved "That this House, in view of the yearly increasing armaments of European nations, is of opinion that the formation of an international tribunal for the reference of national disputes in the first instance is highly to be desired." He said he was old enough to remember the Great Exhibition of 1851, at which time the most hopeful anticipations of the future prevailed, and it was believed that a new era was opening, in which all the nations of Europe would be bound together in a brotherhood of amity and concord. Now nothing was seen or heard in Europe but the preparations and the operations of war. No effort, therefore, ought to be spared to lessen and minimize, and, if possible, put an end to, the existing deplorable state of things.

The Marquis of Salisbury said in reply: "My lords, it is impossible for me to mistake the spirit of earnestness in which my noble friend has brought this subject before the House; and I know that he does not stand alone in the feeling with which he regards the proposal he has made. There are a certain number of persons, very earnest and very excellent, who believe that this would be a remedy for the terrible evils of war, and from time to time urge it on the public mind. He has had some great predecessors. Yet I confess—and I think it is the general feeling—that, deeply as everybody sympathizes with the object my noble friend has in view, and earnestly as we must desire to see the day when the horrors of war may be prevented by the establishment of some species of international arbitration, it is very far from us now, and further apparently than it was some years ago. No one, I think, can watch the progress of Affairs on the Continent of Europe, and the tendency of various States, without seeing that the pacific spirit has not increased, and that the chances of avoiding war are not more favorable than they were. The chief effort of all nations now with regard to its warlike machinery is not merely to make it as potent as it can be made, but also to bring it into such a state of perfection that it can be set in operation at the earliest possible time. I fear, therefore, that the proposal of my noble friend is contrary to the tendency of all modern nations, and is not likely to meet with acceptance at their hands. I do not believe that one man in one hundred proposes that such an issue as my noble friend desires, intensely desirable as it is, will be witnessed by ourselves, by our children, or by our grandchildren; and it is idle to attempt to conceal from our minds the terrible realities of the case." These words of the Marquis indicate that the present time is one to which we may apply the prediction of Christ concerning the sign of His coming, and of the end of the world, as recorded in Matt. 24: "Ye shall hear of wars, and rumors of wars; for nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famines and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places."

"A Stirring Among the Dry Bones."

We are taught to expect, as one of the signs that will precede the coming of Christ, a period of unrest among the Jews, some of them turning to Christ and others yearning for their own land with an intensity which will lead them to accept the aid even of Antichrist in their effort to return. Another significant movement is reported amongst the Jews. A contemporary says: "News comes from ice-bound Siberia of a Gospel movement essentially the same as that of Rabinowitz. The leader is Jacob Scheinmann, a Polish Jew, who, twenty years ago came to the conclusion that the Messiah, the Son of David, was the true Saviour. The strict Talmudic Jews got him transported to Siberia, where for fifteen years he labored, almost unheeded, to awaken faith in his fellow-exiles. Among the uncalled-for mail matter which he found at Tomsk, where he was engaged in business, was a pamphlet by Rabinowitz, with whom he at once communicated. He has been busy disseminating his views through pamphlets called 'The Voice of One Crying in the Wilderness.' Delitzsch's Hebrew translation of the New Testament is being eagerly read and studied by the Siberian Jews." Thus in many quarters there are tokens of a stirring among the dry bones: Rabinowitz in Bessarabia, Lichtenstein in Hungary, and now Scheinmann in Siberia. These movements will be followed with prayer and interest by thousands who see therein the working out of Divine prediction.

A HINDOO VILLAGE MILLER.

The Rev. J. D. Bate, of Allahabad, India, says: "A Hindoo of about fifty years of age was brought to me by Ramanath, who had been instructing him in the way of salvation. Three or four years ago he purchased a simple one-pice tract in our bázár here. This tract he took with him to his village, ten miles to the north of us, across the Ganges; and, not content with merely reading it, he committed the whole of it to memory. He then obtained a copy of the Gospel of Matthew, and proceeded in the same way to dispose of it. On seating himself by my side he answered some of my inquiries respecting his religious condition by reciting the 'ipsissima verba' of the tract, and when I had put to him the third or fourth question he started off with the repetition of all he had committed to memory. The tract he rehearsed from beginning to end without a slip, and then proceeded to recite the Sermon on the Mount. He was a poor hard-working villager, earning his livelihood by grinding food-grain with a simple handmill. The tract, I should mention, is called 'Upadesh-mala,' and contains the account of the way of salvation, in the words of Scripture alone, from the first promises, all through the ages, down to the writings of the oldest apostle. What may we not hope for in connection with this man, when we remember the words of our Lord, 'The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life'? But the man avows his firm faith in the Saviour thus revealed to him. He tells us that since he began these studies he has entirely relinquished the worship of idols, and that he has reposed all his hope on Christ, the Son of God, fully and without reservation."

A MOHAMMEDAN PILGRIM'S DISCOVERY.

In a letter from Mr. J. Ewen, of Benares, India, he writes: "I have had the pleasure of baptising two men, one of whom is a convert from Mohammedanism. He was born in Calcutta, and educated in Dr. Duff's institution. While attending it, the first seeds of truth were sown in his heart. The rules of the College necessitated his attending the Bible-class; but he hated the Bible because it condemned him. He left, as he thought, as unbelieving as when he entered. He commenced the study of medicine, and entered upon independent practice in his native city. For a time all went well; but it was a time of thoughtlessness. At last a storm of trouble broke about him, while he was still unprepared for it. His wife and children were cut off with cholera. The thoughts and reflections which filled his mind led him to give up his practice and set out on a pilgrimage to Mecca in the costume of a fakir. His journey led him through Benares, where he enjoyed the hospitality of his co-religionists. While in the city, the Sankudara mela occurred. Though a Hindoo festival, many Mohammedans attend, and he was thus led to join the crowd of pleasure-seekers. Some Christian evangelists were at work when he reached. He stopped to listen, when their words fell upon his soul like oil upon the troubled waters. His doubts vanished before the new peace he enjoyed in learning, as never before, that Christ is a Saviour from sin. He delayed his departure to Mecca. A second meeting with the evangelists brought him to a decision. He gave up his pilgrimage, and accompanied them to their houses to receive fuller instruction. I met him on the day of his decision, and heard from himself how eagerly he desired the pardon of his sins. I could but point to the 'Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world,' and urge him to trust the 'Mighty and able to save.' He is now, I rejoice to say, joyously trusting in Jesus; a pilgrim to the better land; approving himself to us by his quiet manner, and justifying his baptism by his walk and conversation."

A BIRD CHARMED BY A SNAKE.

AN incident witnessed by a gentleman near Petersburg, Va., illustrates the power exercised by Satan over his victims. They often become so powerless when they have recklessly ventured into the temptations which he spreads for them that they are unable to struggle, and they become his prey unless Christ, whose power he dreads, interferes for their rescue (Mark 5: 1–13).

The Virginian gentleman states that he was walking leisurely along a path which led through his plantation, when his attention was directed to the movements of a brown thrush which was circling about a small plum bush. This circling was kept up for a while, and then the thrush seemed gradually to weaken and at length stood perfectly still—immovable, with its wings partly open, and with its head bent forward. He drew nearer to the bush, when he heard an ominous hiss, and, looking down under the bush, he saw a large black snake coiled up and about to spring upon the bird. He frightened the snake away, and picked up the bird, which made no effort to escape, and seemed powerless. In a few minutes, however, the bird revived and shortly afterward flew off, doubtless glad to be delivered from the paralyzing charm.

A SAILOR CURING A SAVAGE.

AMONG the reminiscences of a sea-captain published in a Boston journal, is one of an amusing escape from a difficulty in which he was placed by a misconception of his abilities. The captain, when a mate on board a New Bedford ship, was sent ashore with a boat's crew to obtain water on the coast of Patagonia. The men were set upon by the savages, and the mate was made prisoner. Relating the experiences of his captivity, he says that the savages persisted in regarding him as a wonderful physician. Thinking that this veneration for the healing art might give him a chance to escape, he humored them in their belief. He had, however, considerable difficulty in keeping up his assumed character. On one occasion he was called to attend an old squaw widow who had suddenly fallen ill. There was no way of escaping the ordeal, so he went to her tent. The sick woman was crouched on a horse's skin, and she was the filthiest creature he ever beheld. He produced his watch with much solemnity, and felt the old squaw's pulse in the approved medical manner. He fumbled at the wrist for some time without finding the artery, but very justly reflecting that he would have been no wiser had he found it, he was not much disconcerted. The prescription was the next thing, and there he was puzzled, for he knew nothing of the Patagonian or any other Pharmacopœia. He thought, however, that the woman would be no worse for a good bath, so he ordered her to be carried to the nearest water and placed therein. She was to be well rubbed, and he gave minute directions as to the scrubbing being smart and thorough. His instructions were carried out, and when the layers of dirt were removed the old woman recovered, and the amateur physician's reputation was established among the natives. Had the mate received a thorough medical training, it is doubtful if he could have given a better prescription in this case, but the same treatment would not have cured every disease. In the affairs of the soul cleansing is not sufficient, though it is necessary. The cleansed soul would soon be mired again with sin, were it not that the Saviour, whose blood cleanses, also gives a new heart (Ps. 103: 3).

A MINER'S PERSISTENCE.

CANON WILBERFORCE, whose recent visit to this country was a source of good to many, was dwelling, in the course of one of his addresses, on the importance of the word "now," and related the following incident in point: A miner having heard the Gospel preached, determined that, if the promised blessing of immediate salvation were indeed true, he would not leave the presence of the minister who was declaring it, until assured of its possession by himself. He waited, consequently, after the meeting to speak with the minister, and, in his untutored way, said: "Didn't ye say I could have the blessin' now?" "Yes, my friend." "Then pray with me, for I'm not goin' awa' wi'out it." And they did pray, these two men, wrestling in prayer until midnight, like Jacob at Peniel, until the wrestling miner heard the silent words of comfort and cheer. "I've got it now!" cried the miner, his face reflecting the joy within; "I've got it now!" The next day a terrible accident occurred at the mines—one of those accidents which so frequently shock us with their horror merely in the reading of them. The same minister was called to the scene, and among the men dead and dying was the quivering, almost breathless, body of this man, who only the night before, big and brawny, came to him to know if salvation could really be had "now" for the asking. There was but a fleeting moment of recognition between the two, ere the miner's soul took flight, but in that moment he had time to say, in response to the minister's sympathy, "Oh, I don't mind, for I've got it—I've got it—it's mine." Then the name of this poor man went into the list of "killed." There was no note made of the royal inheritance to which he had but a few hours before come into possession, through faith in Christ, and all by his believing grip of the word "now."

A BULGARIAN LIEUTENANT'S RECOVERY.

IN the current number of *Thy Healer is a remarkable narrative related by Mrs. Mumford, of Phillipopolis, in Bulgaria, from which the following facts are obtained: Mrs. Mumford has had a girls' school in Bulgaria for about nine years. Some time before the recent war a boy came and asked to be taught English. He was admitted, and proved an apt scholar. In the course of his study he was led to abjure the Greek faith and become a Christian. Then the war broke out and he was required to go into the field. He acquitted himself so well that he was promoted from time to time until he became a lieutenant. Shortly afterward his name appeared in the list of those fatally wounded. There was no hope, the surgeons said, and the young man wrote farewell letters home and also to Mrs. Mumford, who immediately set out to visit him in the field hospital.

On her arrival, Mrs. Mumford says: "I saw how bad his case was, for I had had some experience of wounds in the American war. My husband was killed in that war. The day after my arrival in Sofia, there were three consultations, but the most skilful physicians pronounced his case hopeless. As I stood by the bedside of this young man, I looked at him and said: 'You see there is no help in man?' 'Yes,' he said. 'Would you like to live longer if the Lord wills it?' I asked. 'Yes,' he replied. 'But if you live longer and lose your soul afterwards, would you not rather die now and be saved?' 'Yes.' 'Do you suppose the Lord could heal you if He was here on earth?' 'Yes, I think He could.' 'Suppose He stood near your bed, would you ask Him to heal you?' 'I think I would.' 'Suppose, then, we ask Him to heal you, for He is here as much as if you saw Him.' He agreed, and so I put my head near the pillow, for he was very weak and ill, and prayed. It was not five minutes after this before he slept, and every symptom began to mend. In the morning, when the doctor came to visit him, he was astonished. He said: 'Why, you are better, and I think you are going to get well,' and he turned round to a sister who was nursing him and said: 'Keep on with the same medicine.' 'No, doctor,' I said, 'we do not give him any medicine.' 'No medicine?' he asked. 'No, I have not given him any since yesterday.'"

To the doctor's astonishment, the patient whom he and his colleagues had given up in despair completely recovered, and the young Christian testified that the Lord had healed him.

A MOHAMMEDAN NAAMAN.

A SINGULAR case of conversion is described by Dr. Dowkontt in his excellent Medical Missionary Record. It is communicated by Dr. W. Carey, a grandson of the renowned missionary whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on April 28. Dr. Carey says that he had frequently noticed a Mohammedan of striking appearance engaged in a mosque, opposite his house in Delhi, India, reciting and teaching passages from the Koran. One day, to Doctor Carey's astonishment, this man entered the dispensary, where the doctor was giving an address to his patients.

"He had been taken ill," says Dr. Carey, "and came to our dispensary for advice. He listened to my address, and at the close of the service came forward directly. Although he was the last to come in, he thought he had a right to be seen first. He came pushing his way up. When he came up to me I said, 'What do you want?' 'Treatment, of course.' 'Treatment you will have; but we have a rule here, and you must respect it—"First come, first served." We make no distinction between caste here. All who come shall be seen in their turn.'

"The man went back in a great rage, and went out of the place, his dignity hurt. However, he reconsidered the matter, and returned to his place. There he waited until I had seen every patient. 'Now,' I said, 'my man, it is your turn; come up.' He would not move, so I had to persuade him to come up. He was quite sulky, but told me what was the matter; and I treated him and he was soon restored to health. The last time he came I said: 'You are well now, and there is no necessity for coming again.' He replied, 'Yes, thank God, I am,' and for a time disappeared.

"But one day I saw him sitting in his old place, right in the corner at the door. He waited till I had seen one or two cases, then went away. I kept my eye on him, and saw him come two or three times in this manner. One day I detained him. 'I want to see you,' I said, 'Are you not well?' 'Thank God, I am very well,' he replied. 'Then why do you come here?' His answer was, 'I have been greatly impressed with what I heard you say about Jesus Christ, and I am anxious to know more about Him. Will you tell me?' Of course I was only too glad to tell him all I could. I took him into my room, and with a native brother taught him to the best of our ability. At last he asked to be baptized, and we found no reason to refuse. He was baptized, and became a consistent member of the Delhi Church. So God is blessing our work.

---

*Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a Monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to Mrs. M. Baxter, 10 Drayton Park, Highbury, London, England, or to the manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, N. Y.

Volume IX. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1886, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1883, 1884, and 1885 are also for sale. We have none prior to 1883.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to The Christian Herald. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Railroad Catastrophe in Illinois on Wednesday of last week has sent a thrill of horror throughout the country. No accident on record equals it in the number of deaths and fatal injuries. It is believed that over one hundred persons were killed and over four hundred were seriously injured. This terrible result is not astonishing when we learn that the train contained 960 passengers, and that it fell through a burning bridge. It appears that the train was an excursion train for Niagara Falls, on the Toledo, Peoria and Western Railroad, and it was filled up at various stations on the way through Central Illinois; the larger part of the passengers, however, being from Peoria. When it drew out of Peoria at eight o'clock on Wednesday night, every sleeping berth was occupied and all the day cars were full. Two engines were required to draw it, and as it was an hour and a half behind time, extra speed was put on. No stop was made at Chatsworth, the station eighty-five miles from Chicago, and the train dashed on till it came to a wooden bridge running over a dry slough three miles beyond Chatsworth. When about a hundred yards from the bridge the engineer on the front engine saw tongues of flame leaping up. There was no possibility of stopping, and the next moment the train was among them. The first engine passed over safely, but the bridge fell beneath the train, and the cars were telescoped and piled one on the other in indescribable confusion. The second car had run clean through the first, killing or maiming every person in it. On top of the second car lay the third, and its bottom was smeared with the blood of its victims. The other three cars were not so badly crushed, but they were broken and twisted in every conceivable way. All the cars lay on the burning bridge and speedily caught fire. Then the shrieks of the wounded and dying burst forth, and it seemed as if all who were unable to crawl out of the wreck must be burned. There was no water to put out the fire, but the survivors worked desperately to smother it with earth, and they labored at it from midnight until four in the morning, when it was finally extinguished. Soon afterward help arrived, and the wounded were cared for and the dead removed.

The New Postal Treaty with Mexico is Already producing practical results. The past month shows a larger increase of commercial intercourse between the two countries than was expected of the first month under the convention, especially in the matter of sending small dutiable packages by mail. Under the new plan these packages are examined by the customs authorities, and the duties called for by the Mexican tariff are simply added to the postage and collected on delivery, without any of the costly machinery of certified invoices, consular certificates, and other charges, which were virtually prohibitory. The only drawback now to a more complete reciprocal relation between the two countries is the lack of some system of exchange. The Mexicans have not yet taken advantage of the money-order system in their home offices, and consequently it will be a work of time and difficulty to negotiate a supplementary postal treaty establishing money-order facilities between the two countries. When this is done the benefits of the Convention will be more fully felt, and that they will be very valuable is proved by the advantages already reaped in spite of the difficulties experienced in the remission of money.

The Government Report of Exports, Issued last week, show an increase for the month of July in the exportation of breadstuffs. All the ports of the United States, except two, contributed to the aggregate. The value of the cargoes sent from New York were nearly $1,250,000 in excess of 1886; from Philadelphia, over $500,000 in excess; from New Orleans nearly $500,000 in excess, and from other customs districts $1,500,000 in excess of the exportation for the corresponding month of 1886. The only fallings off were $50,000 in Boston, and $60,000 in Baltimore.

The Work of Constructing a Navy Appears to be making progress. On August 8, bids were opened at the Navy Department for three additional cruisers and two gunboats. The maximum speed of the cruisers is to be at least nineteen knots an hour. For every quarter knot developed above the guarantee a premium of $50,000 will be awarded, and on the other hand, for every quarter knot below that speed $50,000 will be deducted from the contract price. These contracts were divided between Messrs. Cramp & Sons, of Philadelphia; the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, and the Columbia Iron Works, of Baltimore. The aggregate cost of the vessels will be $5,400,000, not including their armament. In twenty-four months the cruisers are to be completed, and the gunboats in eighteen months. The United States have no intention nor apprehension of being engaged in a foreign war, but it is quite time that the Government owned something better than Robeson's wooden hulks with which to protect our commerce and our citizens abroad who may be endangered by foreign broils.

The Promotion of Engineer Melville to the head of the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy Department in the place of Commodore Loring who has resigned, is an arrangement which gives general satisfaction. Mr. Melville won the admiration of the whole country by his bravery in the Arctic in the Jeannette expedition and by the tact and energy he displayed in bringing home the bodies of his dead comrades. He was also a member of the expedition which, after Senator Sherman's opposition had been defeated, was sent out to the relief of the brave explorers of the Greely party and succeeded in rescuing the survivors. Though these feats do not prove his capacity for his new duties, it is stated by those who know him that he does possess that capacity, and they do prove him to be a man of energy and activity, of whom much may be expected in the responsible position in which he is now placed.

Liabilities Amounting to Twenty Millions caused the assignment of a firm in New York last week. Messrs. Ives & Co., whose operations in Wall Street have kept the Stock Exchange in a ferment for several months, finally announced their suspension on Thursday last. An unusual circumstance was, that the announcement of the assignment was greeted by the assembled brokers with shouts of joy. In some respects, the rise of the young man who is the head of the firm, from a clerkship at $10 a week to a speculator manipulating millions, resembles the career of Ferdinand Ward, but it is believed that the disasters which accompanied and followed the Ward failure will not be duplicated in this case. The daring of the speculator, and the colossal character of the schemes he had in hand, are a characteristic sign of the intense greed of the times after riches.

A Vast Forest Fire Raged for Several Days last week on the frontiers of Germany and Belgium. It broke out on August 7, in the forest, which extends twenty-five leagues on Belgian and German territory on the road from Verviers to Aix-la-Chapelle. The fire began on the German side of the line and spread rapidly on the Belgian side, in a sheet of flame over one mile and a quarter wide, toward the district known as Les Hautes-Fagnes. Efforts were made to prevent its reaching the great peat bogs of that neighborhood, as, if it seized them, it was feared that the fire would last for weeks. Gendarmes and forest keepers toiled unceasingly to get it under control, but it increased in spite of their efforts, until the flames held an area that it took seven hours to walk around. On August 10, a large force of military was sent to assist in extinguishing it, but a heavy downpour of rain did more effectual service in getting it under control. It is believed that the worst of the danger on the German side is now over.

The Spread of Asiatic Cholera Through Southern Italy is causing alarm again this year. Daily reports come by cable of increasing mortality. Most of the towns from which reports are received are on the eastern coast of Sicily, but from Messina the disease appears to have been carried northward to Naples and to several places in the neighborhood of that city. Last year the first cases were found at Brindisi, and the disease was carried northward along the west coast of the Adriatic to Venice and thence into Hungary. This year its course is toward the other side of the peninsula.

The Irish Land Bill in its Amended Form was passed by the British House of Lords on Friday last after a heated debate and one or two of the changes made by the House of Commons had been modified. The bill was vigorously opposed by some of the Liberal Unionists, which fact implies that the concessions it makes to the Irish tenants are more important than was supposed. The Duke of Argyll especially denounced the measure as one which would foster among the Irish not industry, but laziness, making tenants more unthrifty. It would, he said, give tenants the privilege of regulating the rents to such an extent as to enable them, however lazy or ignorant, to remain on their holdings. The bill was a violation of recognized truths. Some of the amendments simply proposed the robbery of land owners.

Further News from Mr. H. M. Stanley was received last week. On June 6, his expedition for the relief of Emin Pasha, had reached a point half way between Yambi and Yambunga, the latter point being the furthest point on the Aruwhimi reached by Stanley in 1883. Navigation was difficult and slow, because the boats were carrying all necessary supplies for Emin Pasha, in addition to the supplies of the expedition. Stanley chose the Aruwhimi route in preference to that by the Stanley Falls route, because he learned that by the former he would have better resources, and because the natives were more friendly. He hoped that his steamers would be able to ascend the rapids above Yambunga, beyond which the river is easily navigable. Stanley expected to reach Wadelai, where Emin Pasha is, about the beginning of August. It would appear that Stanley had been obliged to await the arrival of the contingents left at Bolobo and Leopoldville, and had adopted the overland route.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of The Christian Herald. Received, with thanks, $20 from J. T. Barker, Niles Mich.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal, have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $11.50. They are from Lowell, Mass., $2; Linden, Md., $2; Chambersburg Pa., $1; East Vassalboro, Me., $5; Buncombe Iowa, 50c; Orwigsburg, Pa., $1. A large number of applications for the paper from colored ministers whose merits on our consideration are strongly endorsed are on hand. The fund, however, is now exhausted; but should our friends be moved to contribute we shall of course be glad to put the new names on our list as requested. For every dollar received one name is put on the list for a year.

Dr. McGlynn, the Excommunicated Roman Catholic priest, has written an article in the North American Review, in which he declares, what Protestants have long believed, that the Romish Church is the enemy of the common school system. He also contends that the present exemption from taxation of churches and religious institutions is an injustice to the community. His doctrine, as he now states it, embraces these propositions: 1. That "only common schools and common charities should be supported by the common treasury." 2 That "only the common language of the country should be taught in common schools." 3. That the doctrine of equal taxation should be applied to all corporations, civil and religious, "without exemption in favor of any church, charity or school, or, in a word, of any institution that is not the property of the people and controlled for some public and common use by public officials."

A Leap from the Clouds was taken at Rockaway, N. Y. on August 9, by an aeronaut named Baldwin. He ascended in a balloon from Jamaica Bay, carrying with him a parachute of his own invention. This was like an enormous sun-umbrella in which cords supplied the place of ribs. The cords extended below the sides of the muslin top, which was twenty-five feet across, and were collected in an iron ring ten feet in diameter, and were continued to a smaller iron ring below. When the balloon had reached the height of more than a thousand feet, the aeronaut climbed out of the car, and opening the parachute clung to the lower ring, and dropped. At first the parachute did not open properly, and the man fell like a stone; but presently it fully expanded, and the speed of descent was checked. The air under the big muslin dome reduced the fall to twelve feet a second, and after about a minute and a half the man's feet struck the water, and he was brought ashore breathless, but otherwise uninjured. The aeronaut's foolhardy feat was witnessed by several thousand persons, who went out from New York and Brooklyn to see him risk his life. When he stepped out of the basket of the balloon at that dizzy height, he showed a faith in the efficiency of his invention which it is difficult to get the anxious sinner to exercise though it is not to any human device but to the Saviour that he is urged to trust himself (2 Tim. 1 : 12).

A Young Viscount Died in Extreme Poverty and was buried by charity in New York on August 6. His name was Lord Drummond, Viscount Forth, and he was a grandson of the Earl of Perth and Melfort and a cousin of the Duke of Argyll and the Duchess of Northumberland. His grandfather and his titled relatives cast him off because he had married a domestic servant. They offered however to forgive him and receive him back if he would desert his wife. This the young man refused to do, and coming to America in 1871, he tried to earn a livelihood here. At one time he hired out as a farm-hand; later he and his wife were in domestic service in Madison Avenue, New York, afterwards he got his living by fishing and hunting on the shores of Long Island. Then he became a porter for a wholesale house and his wife worked as a seamstress. They were always poor, but seemed happy until the young man took to drinking, when his health broke down and his wife had to keep him and her child out of her slender earnings. Last month he was admitted to St. Luke's hospital, where he died on August 4, at the age of thirty-one. Whatever we may think of his prudence, it is impossible not to admire the fidelity he displayed toward his wife, and the love which led him to prefer poverty and hardships with her to wealth and honors without her. She on her side appears to have loved him devotedly. Had she not been true to the man who made so great a sacrifice for her, she would have been singularly unworthy. Yet many who would have denounced her conduct then are themselves guilty of an act still more discreditable. They reject Christ, who humbled Himself for their sakes and died for them (II Cor. 8 : 9).

The Deplorable End of a Quarrel in Georgia has caused general regret through a wide circle of society. On Sunday evening, August 7, a few friends were assembled at the house of Mr. Lewis, in Atlanta. They were chatting sociably when another friend of the host entered and was introduced to the company. This man, it appears, had some weeks previously offended one of the persons present, who had vowed to chastise him the first time they met, wherever it might be. He regretted that the meeting should have taken place at the house of a common friend, and asked the man to go outside, that he might put his threat in execution without annoyance to his host. Consent being given the two went out, but one of the company, noticing their departure and knowing something of the trouble, followed them and endeavored to make peace. But he was too late; the men had already clinched and were engaged in a furious struggle. In attempting to separate them, one of them, who had a revolver in his hand, fired a shot, which struck him and killed him. It was very sad that he should have died by the hand of a man he sought to serve. That was accidental, and probably no one grieves so much as the man who fired the shot. It was different in the case of the great Peacemaker who laid down His life in making peace between the world and its God. Then the world designedly killed Him who had come to save it (Acts 2 : 23).

Fifty Acres of Land for a Wife Was a Reward offered recently by a settler, in the northwest of Canada, to a relative who arranged the affair. He was visiting his brother at Owen Sound, and was so impressed with the contrast between the comfort his brother enjoyed as a married man, with the discomfort of his own surroundings, in his bachelor home in the northwest, that he became earnestly desirous of changing his condition before his return. As his visit was nearing a close when he reached this determination, it was necessary that the preliminary proceedings should not be delayed, and as he was acquainted with no one of the opposite sex in the town except his brother's wife, he offered her a deed of fifty acres of land if she would get him a wife by the Saturday following the date of the offer. The sister-in-law met with indifferent success in her mission until Friday, when she met an unmarried lady, who was willing to accept matrimony on any reasonable terms. The two were introduced to each other on Saturday evening just as the boat was leaving. A consultation was held, the pair were married on the spot, the sister-in-law was handed over the deed for the fifty acres of land, and the bride and groom steamed away for their prairie home. Unhappily, Christian people do not live up to their privileges, or worldly people who see their happiness would similarly be moved to seek the blessing for themselves (1 Peter, 2 : 22).

A Terrible Hour in the Rapids of Niagara was spent by a Montreal man on August 10. He and a companion went by Goat Island to the Horseshoe, early in the morning. He noticed several logs lying close to the brink, and beyond them past the old Terrapin Bridge, a large rock. He had a strong desire to stand upon that rock, and, in spite of his companion's warning, tried to walk to it over the logs. He did very well until he came to a point on the logs covered with green slime, where he slipped off, and fell into the rapids. Instantly he was carried under the logs, but while under water he caught hold of the third log and hung on, with his feet projecting over the brink. Fortunately the log breaks the current somewhat, and he was enabled to hold on until he had fully recovered his senses. His comrade was surprised to see his head above water, supposing, of course, he had gone over the Falls. When, however, he saw him clinging to the log, he ran away for assistance, and meeting a man driving a wagon and team, he persuaded him to come and help. Taking the harness off the horses, they buckled the lines and straps together into a line, which they threw to the almost exhausted man, and drew him out. He had been on the brink of the rapids a full hour. It was a terrible experience, clinging there on the verge of destruction, and unable to extricate himself from the mighty current. That is the case of the man who has fallen in the slippery paths of sin, and realizes his danger. Happy is he then, if, perceiving his own helplessness, he puts his trust in Him who is mighty to save (Isa. 63 : 1).

BRIEF NOTES.

Nearly $20,000 have been subscribed since April 1 to liquidate the debt on the school for Christian Workers at Springfield, Mass.

The Rev. George F. Pentecost is now preaching at Hope Church, Springfield, Mass. In the fall he will resume his evangelistic labors.

A State university for colored people is to be built in Montgomery, Ala. The city has given $5,000 and three acres of land to the institution.

The Rev. Thomas Harrison's twelve weeks' services at Worcester, Mass., were blessed of God to the conversion of more than eight hundred persons.

The American Missionary Association will hold its annual meeting at Portland, Me., on October 25. The Rev. Dr. Behrends, of Brooklyn, N. Y., will preach.

Out of 8,034 saloon-keepers in the city of Philadelphia there are only 470 Americans, while there are 2,179 Germans, 3,041 Irish, and 2,344 of other nationalities.

Mr. W. F. Bischoff is holding services in a large tent, near his home at Springfield, Ill. He went home to rest, but the churches of the city erected the tent for him, and he is taking his rest in work.

The National Association of Local Preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church will hold its thirtieth annual session in Harrisburg, Pa., September 17–20, in the Ridge Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church.

E. J. Garvie, a Sioux Indian, in a recent address, stated that there are 2,000 living Sioux converts, and as many more have died in the faith. There are sixty-eight tribes of Indians in our country without missionaries.

The erection of a handsome Presbyterian Church at Minneapolis, Minn., is to be commenced this month for the use of Dr. Stryker's congregation. The money already subscribed to the building-fund amounts to $20,000.

Rev. Dr. Fulton has been lecturing on the Pauline Propaganda in California. Efforts are being made to secure his permanent services in that State. The Metropolitan Temple at Los Angeles is spoken of as a suitable building for his mission work.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey, the evangelist, has given the Methodist church of New Castle, Pa., the land on which their new edifice is being built. Mr. Sankey was a member of this church in his youth, and was superintendent of its Sunday-school for several years.

One result of the open-air preaching in New Orleans this summer is the organization of five new Sunday-schools in various parts of the city. The mission has confided the management of them to the respective churches in whose neighborhood they are.

The Christian work conducted by Mr. R. Knudson among the lumbermen at Marinette, Wis., has been much blessed. Several of the churches in the neighborhood have received large accessions to their membership through the instrumentality of his special mission.

At the re-union of ex-army chaplains at Ocean Grove on August 4, the Rev. J. William Jones, who was a chaplain in the Confederate Army, was present, and participated with his Northern brethren in the exercises. The welcome accorded him would have shocked or palsied Gen. Fairchild, had he witnessed it.

An Excellent Opportunity for Boys and Girls now on their vacation to earn pocket money, now offers itself by canvassing for "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" and selling it weekly from house to house in their own neighborhood. A number of boys have commenced this since the holidays, in preference to doing anything else. Send postal card at once, for terms.

THE SUFFERING SAVIOUR'S SYMPATHY.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"For in that He himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted."—Hebrews 2 : 18.

A Special Requisite in a High Priest—Sympathy Conspicuous in Jesus—I. Jesus Suffering—Suffered in Temptation—Temptation Not Always Causing Suffering—Suffered by Association With Sin—Tempted in His Circumstances—By His Kindred and Friends—By the Devil—By the Hiding of God's Face—The Fruit of His Temptation—Made Perfect—Comforting Inferences—II. Jesus Succoring—A Divine Business—A Lady's Resolve Abandoned—His Methods of Succoring—III. Jesus Sought After—Good Reasons for Seeking—Lady Huntingdon's Answer to a Downcast Man.

We are told by the apostle, in the fifth chapter, that one special requisite in a high priest was that he could have compassion upon men. However dignified his office, he was still a man. He was one of whom we read that he could lose his wife, that he could lose his sons. He had to eat and to drink, to be sick and to suffer, just as the rest of the people did. And all this was necessary that he might be able to enter into their feelings and represent those feelings before God, and that he might, when speaking to them for God, not speak as a superior, looking down upon them, but as one who sat by their side, bone of their bone, and flesh of their flesh.

Now this is peculiarly so in the case of our Lord Jesus Christ. He abounds in tenderness, and though He has every other quality to make up a perfect high priest, though He is complete, and in nothing lacking, yet if I must mention one thing in which He far outshines us all, but in which we should all try to imitate Him, it would be in His tender sympathy to those who are ignorant and are suffering and sorely distressed.

I. First, then, and to begin, here is Jesus Suffering.

I call your attention, first, to the feeling that is here expressed: "in that He Himself hath suffered being tempted." Many persons are tempted, but do not suffer in being tempted. When ungodly men are tempted, the bait is to their taste, and they swallow it greedily. Temptation is a pleasure to them; indeed, they sometimes tempt the devil to tempt them. They are drawn aside of their own lusts and enticed. But good men suffer when they are tempted, and the better they are the more they suffer. I know some children of God to whom temptation is their constant misery, day and night. If it took the form of external affliction they would bravely bear it; but it takes the shape of evil suggestions and profane insinuations, which leap into their minds without their will, and though they hate them with their whole heart. These suggestions continue to annoy some dear saints whom I know, not only daily, but nightly, and that month after month. These thoughts beset them as a man may be surrounded by swarms of midges or flies, from which he cannot get away. Such brethren are tempted, and they suffer being tempted. Our Lord Jesus Christ enters into this trying experience very fully; because His suffering through being tempted must have been much greater than any suffering that the purest-hearted believer can know, seeing that He is more pure than any one of us.

It was a trying thing to the Blessed Christ even to dwell here among men. He behaved Himself with most condescending familiarity, but He must have been greatly sickened and in this world of sinners. Our Lord and Master had such a delicate sensitiveness of soul with regard to holiness, that the sight of sin must have torn Him as a naked man would be torn by thorns and thistles and briers. There was no callousness about His nature. He had not made Himself familiar with sin by the practice of it, as many have done; neither had He so associated with those who indulge in evil as to become Himself lenient toward it. He suffered in being placed where He could be tempted.

Saddened by what He Saw

When sin actually assailed Him, and He was bidden to prove His Sonship by working a miracle to feed Himself, thus anticipating His Father's providence by a hasty act of self-seeking, how He must have loathed the suggestion! When Satan bade Him presumptuously cast Himself down from the temple's pinnacle, how He must have smarted at the horrible proposal? When the tempter hissed into His ear that abominable offer, "All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me," it must have grieved the holy heart of Jesus most intensely. He could not yield to temptation, but He did suffer from it. He did not suffer from it morally, He was too pure for that; but He did suffer mentally because of His purity.

Now, then, you poor creatures who can scarcely lift up your heads because of shame as you tremble at the memory of your own thoughts, come hither, and meet with One who suffered being tempted! He knows how you are hunted by hell-dogs, go where you may. He knows that you cannot escape the presence of the tempter, and from His own experience He enters into your feelings to the full. He gives you a flood of sympathy in these deep distresses of your spirit, as you fight against Apollyon and agonize against temptation, for He suffered being tempted.

Our Lord was tempted by His circumstances, just as you are; yea, more than many of you are: for He felt the woes of poverty, and poverty at times carried to the extreme. "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head." You are sometimes tempted with the thought that you will be before long. Where will you find a nightly shelter? Jesus can sympathize with you. He also was weary with incessant labors. "Being wearied, He sat thus on the well." Weariness has its temptations. He that is weary is hardly in the condition to judge rightly of things. When we are weary, we are apt to be impatient, complaining, hasty. If you are weary and can scarcely keep your eyelids from dropping down, remember, before you quite yield to fatigue, that your Lord was weary too. Once "they took Him even as He was into the ship;" and I think it must mean that He was too weary to go into the ship Himself, so that they took Him in His absolute exhaustion, and gently laid Him down, in the hinder part of the ship, placing His head upon a pillow. So you see that the Lord knows from His own circumstances what are the temptations of poverty and of weariness. He Himself was an hungered. He Himself said, "I thirst." Everything round about Him contributed to fulfill the tale of His trials. He Himself was, above us all, "a Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief."

Out of House and Home

And then He suffered from temptations arising from men. It would seem that even

His Mother tried Him.

His mother was with His brethren when we read that they were without, desiring to speak with Him. Was it not at that time they desired to take Him, for they said, "He is beside Himself?" The men of His own kindred thought that surely He was a man distraught, who ought to be put under restraint. "Neither did His brethren believe in Him."

His disciples, though He loved them so intensely, yet each one tried Him. Even John, the dearest of them all, must needs ask for places at the right and the left hand of His throne for himself and his brother James. Even Peter "took Him and rebuked Him." And you know how, worst of all, He had to complain in utmost bitterness of spirit, "He that eateth bread with Me hath lifted up his heel against Me." So that from the circle of His own favored ones He gathered more thorns than roses. He received wounds in the house of His friends, even as you may have done. Herein you see His power to exhibit sympathy with us. He suffered just as we do.

As for His enemies, need I speak about them? Did they not all tempt Him? Herodians and Sadducees—the openly skeptical; Pharisees and Scribes—the professedly religious, were equally His fierce foes. Those to whom He was a benefactor took up stones again to stone Him; and Jerusalem, over which He had wept, cried, "Crucify Him, crucify Him," and would not rest till He was slain. So you see how He was tempted, and how He suffered.

Moreover, it is a very wonderful fact—one could scarcely have imagined it—but the record is most clear—He was tempted of the devil: He was tempted of the devil. He in whom all evil is personified dared to stand foot to foot with Him in whom all goodness is concentrated. The fiend infernal dared to face the God incarnate. God in our mortal flesh encountered the devil in the wilderness of temptation. How could the fiend have ventured to assail our Lord? Truly Lucifer was lifted up to the extreme of pride when he dared thus to confront his Lord. You that are tempted of the devil; you that are troubled by mysterious whisperings in your ear; you that, when you sing or pray, have a blasphemy suggested to you; you that even in your dreams start with horror at the thoughts that cross your minds, be comforted, for your Lord knows all about temptation!

In Single Duel

Once again; our Lord knew those temptations which arise out of being deserted by God. There come times to certain of us when our soul is cast down within us, when faith becomes feeble, and joy languishes, because the light of the Divine countenance is withdrawn. We cannot find our God. In this great temptation our Lord has suffered His full share. He cried, "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani." There was condensed into that dying cry an infinity of anguish such as we cannot conceive of. He has suffered being tempted even by that heaviest of all the trials which ever fall upon the sons of God. There is the fact.

I desire to go a step further, to comfort you upon the fruit of all this; for though our Lord thus suffered being tempted, He suffered not in vain; for He was made perfect through His sufferings, and fitted for His solemn office of High Priest to His people. From that fact I want you to gather fruit, because our heavenly Father means to bless you also. We cannot comfort others if we have never been comforted ourselves. I have heard—and I am sure that it is so—that there is no comforter for a widow like one who has lost her husband. Our Lord obtained a blessing from suffering temptation: and you may do the same. Wherefore be content to suffer being tempted, and look for the comfortable fruit which all this shall produce in you. I want you that are tempted to draw the following inferences from the suffering and temptation of the Lord Jesus:—First, that temptation to sin is no sin. It is for in Him was no sin, and yet He was tempted. If you yield to the temptation, therein is sin; but the mere fact that you are tempted, however horrible the temptation, is no sin of yours. And, in the next place, temptation does not show any displeasure on God's part. He permitted his Only-Begotten Son to be tempted: He was always the Son of His love, and yet He was tried. And again, temptation really implies no doubt of your being a son of God: for the Son of God was tempted, even the unquestioned Son of the Highest. The prime model and paragon of sonship, Christ Himself, was tempted. Then why not you? Temptation is a mark of sonship rather than any reflection thereupon. Note, next, that temptation need not lead to any evil consequences in any case. It did not in your Lord's case lead up to sin. The Lord Jesus was as innocent in temptation and after temptation as before it, and so may we be through His grace. It is written by the beloved John concerning the man that is born of God, that "He keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth Him not. Moreover, do not make it any cause of complaint that you are tempted.

No Sin to be Tempted;

If your Lord was tempted, shall the disciple be above his Master, or the servant above his Lord?" If the Perfect One must endure temptation, why not you? Accept it, therefore, at the Lord's hands, and do not think it to be a disgrace or a dishonor. Far from your hearts be the idea that any temptation should lead you to despair. Jesus did not despair. Jesus triumphed, and so shall you; and therefore He cries, "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Wherefore comfort one another with these words, "He Himself hath suffered being tempted;" for you who have His life in you shall first suffer with Him, and then reign with Him.

II. But now I come, briefly, to notice

Jesus Succoring.

Jesus suffering is preparatory to Jesus succoring. Observe, then, "He is able to succor them that are tempted." In this we note His pity, that He should give Himself up to this business of succouring them that are tempted. Have you a tempted friend living in your house? If so, you have a daily cross to carry; for when we try to comfort mourners we often become cast down ourselves; and the temptation is for us to get rid of them, or keep out of their way. Has it never occurred to any friend here to say, "That good brother, who sits in the pew near me, is rather a burden to me. I have spoken to him several times, but he is so unhappy that he drags me down. I go out of another door now to get out of his way." So might your Lord have done to the unhappy, and to you, if He had not been your Lord; but He is such a pitiful One that He seeks out those that are cast down: He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds. He lays himself out to succor them that are tempted, and therefore He does not hide himself from them, nor pass them by on the other side. What an example for us!

He devotes himself to this divine business of comforting all such as mourn. He is Lord of all, yet makes Himself the servant of the weakest. Whatever He may do with the strongest, He succors "them that are tempted." He does not throw up the business in disgust: He does not grow cross or angry with them because they are so foolish as to give way to idle fears. He does not tell them that it is all their nerves, and that they are stupid and silly, and ought to shake themselves out of such nonsense. I have often heard people talk in that fashion, and I have half wished that they had felt a twinge of depression themselves, just to put them into a more tender humor. The Lord Jesus never overdrives a lame sheep, but He sets the bone, and carries the sheep on His shoulders, so tenderly compassionate is He. Here is His pity.

But He has also the disposition to succor them. He obtained that tender temper through suffering, by being Himself tempted. The man that has seen affliction, when he is blessed of God, has the disposition to cheer those that are afflicted. I have heard speak of one night, and who was so very cold that she cried out, "Oh, those poor people that have such a little money, how little firing they have, and how pinched they must be! I will send a hundredweight of coals to twenty families, at the least." But I have heard say that, when she reached her own parlor, there was a fine fire burning, and she sat there with her feet on the fender, and enjoyed an excellent tea, and she said to herself, "Well, it is not very cold, after all. I do not think that I shall send those coals; at any rate not for the present." The sufferer thinks of the sufferer, even as the poor help the poor. The divine wonder is that this Lord of ours, "though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor," and now takes a delight in succoring the poor. Having been tempted, He helps the tempted; His own trials make Him desire to bless those who are tried.

A Lady Out in the Snow

And then He has the special ability. "He is able to succor them that are tempted." I know certain good brethren whom I am very pleased to see, and I am very happy in their company, when I am perfectly well; but I do not enjoy their presence when I am ill. Thank you; no, I would rather not have their visits multiplied when I am unwell. They walk heavily across the room; they have a way of leaving doors open, or banging them; and when they talk, they talk so loudly and roughly that the poor head aches, and the sick man is worried. The things they say, though they are meant to be kind, are the sort of remarks that pour vinegar into your wounds. They do not understand the condition of a sufferer, and so they say all their words the wrong way upwards. If Christians are to be comforters, they must learn the art of comforting by being themselves tried. They cannot learn it else. Our Blessed Master, having lived a life of suffering, understands the condition of a sufferer. He has a fitness for dealing with tempted ones.

Let me spend a minute or two in telling you

His Methods of Succoring

them that are tempted. He does it in many ways, and perhaps there may be many here who know more about those ways than I do. Usually He succors the tempted by giving them a sense of His sympathy. They say, "Yes, my Lord is here. He feels for me." That is in itself a succor of no mean order. Sometimes He succors them by suggesting to them precious truths which are the sweet antidote for the poison of sorrow. There is in the Bible a remedy exactly fitted for your grief, if you could only find it. The point is to find out the right promise; and the Spirit of God often helps us in that matter by bringing the words of the Lord Jesus to our remembrance. Sometimes the Lord succors His people by inwardly strengthening them. "Oh," one has said, "I am under a heavy trouble, but I do not know how it is I can bear it much better than I thought I should." Yes, through grace, a secret divine energy is poured into the soul. I have known the Lord bless His people by making them very weak. The next best thing to being strong in the Lord is to be extremely weak in yourself. They go together, but sometimes they are divided in experience. It is grand to feel, "I will not struggle any more. I will give all up, and lie passive in the Lord's hand." Oh, it is the sweetest feeling, I think, outside heaven! In these ways He Himself succors those who are tempted.

III. I will close by thinking of Jesus Sought After.

Let us seek Him. Come, ye weary, heavy-laden, come to Him who is able to succor you. Do not stay away until you are a little comforted, but come in your despair.

First, where else can you go? Who can help a soul like you? Come to Him, then. Men are nothing; miserable comforters are they all. The cisterns are all broken: come to the fountain. Come to my Lord. Every other door is shut, but yet you may not despair, for He says, "Behold I set before you an open door."

Where better can you go? Do you want to find a friend able to help you? Do you really want a comrade that can be a brother to you? To whom should you go but unto your own Lord, the sympathizing Son of Man? To whom better can you go? Do you say that you are downcast? Do you tell me you are afraid you are no child of God? Never mind about that. Come as a sinner if you cannot come as a saint. Do you mourn that you have no good thoughts? Come and confess your bad ones. Do you lament that you are not broken-hearted for sin, as you ought to be? Come, then, to be broken-hearted. Do you mourn that you are unspeakably bad? Then, come at your worst. It is never a good thing if you want a surgeon, to say, "My bone is broken, but I shall not have it set until it begins to mend." Poor foolish thing! go while it is broken. O perishing sinner! cry to the Saviour. Ask Him now to save you.

"I am lost," said Mr. Whitefield's brother to the Countess of Huntington. "I am delighted to hear it," said the Countess. "Oh," cried he "what a dreadful thing to say!" "Nay," said she, "for the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost; therefore I know He has come to save you." O sinner, it would be unreasonable to despair. The more broken thou art, the more ruined thou art, the more vile thou art in thine own esteem, so much the more room is there for the display of infinite mercy and power. The Lord, who succoreth the tempted, Himself bless and comfort you!

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

MR. D. L. MOODY'S ANECDOTES.*

I REMEMBER, when I was in St. Louis the last time, there was an old man who had been away off on the mountains of an ungodly life; but in his early manhood he had known Christ. There he was in the inquiry-room, literally broken down. About midnight that old man came trembling before God, and was saved. He wiped away his tears and started home. Next night I saw him in the audience with a terrible look in his face. As soon as I'd done preaching, I went to him and said, "My good friend, you haven't gone back into darkness again?" Said he, 'Oh, Mr. Moody, it has been the most wretched day in my life." "Why so?" "Well, you know, this morning, as soon as I got my breakfast, I started out. I have got a number of children, married, in this city, and they have got families; and I have spent the day in going around and telling them what God has done for me. I told them how I had tasted salvation, with tears trickling down my face; and, Mr. Moody, I hadn't a child that didn't mock me." That made me think of Lot, down in Sodom. It is an awful thing for a man who has been a backslider to have his children mock him. But it is written, "Thy backslidings shall reprove thee; know, therefore, and see that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord."

Traveling the Wrong Road.

Sometimes we go right against our feelings. I remember once when I went to Cleveland—I had been eighteen years in Chicago—and when I got to Cleveland I found Lake Erie was on the west side of the city. I was completely turned around. The sun rose in the West and set in the East all the time I was there. If I had gone according to my feelings, I would have gone right into Lake Erie and been drowned for it; but I didn't go according to my feelings, I went according to knowledge; knowledge is better than feelings. One time I went across the corner of this county, and I was driving along some roads where I had never been before. When I had got, as I thought, within about five miles of Conway, I began to think, "Now, you are going according to your feelings; hadn't you better have a little knowledge about this thing?" so I reined up at the first house and called, "Hello, there!" A man came out; and when I asked him about the road, I found that, instead of going to Conway, I was going right away from it. First I thought the man was wrong, then I thought, "This man has lived here for years, he knows the way better than I do;" so I turned around and drove my horse right against my feelings. Don't mind your feelings, let feelings take care of themselves; what you want is, to obey. When people begin talking about their feelings, bring them right to Scripture.

A Boy who Beat his Father.

Sometimes you have got to answer a boy according to his folly. I remember that one time a teacher came to me and said, "Here is a boy—I can't do anything with him." I went down and took the class; it was perfectly still for a while. I had occasion to say that it was a very dangerous thing for a man to go into saloons and think he could come off without harm; the devil will beat him every time. Said this boy, "Will he beat him with a stick? I said, "Did you ever play a game of checkers?" "Yes." "Who with?" "With my father." "Did you ever beat your father?" "Yes." "Did you

* From "D. L. Moody at Home: His Home and Home-Work." Pp. 288; price, $1.00. Published by Fleming H. Revell, 148 Madison Street, Chicago.

Our Royal Siamese Guest.

Travelling by Wheelbarrow in China.

beat him with a stick?" It took the starch right out of him. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

A Seventy-five Dollar Pew.

A great many people hire a pew, and then they think they own it as much as they own their house. If a stranger comes into the pew, they think he is just as much out of place as if he had gone into their house. Did any of you ever go into a church in some strange place and have the sexton put you in some one's pew? The people that own the pew take a look at you, as much as to say, you are in some one else's place, and it gives you a very awkward feeling. I have been there myself; I know just how you feel. I never go into a church in my life that I don't feel very awkward till the services get going. I tell you, this is all wrong. The pews should be free. If you can't have free pews, then let us come to a compromise—let us have them free every Sunday night. Let it be known that the seats are perfectly free on Sunday night; let the strangers have the best seats that night; let it be well advertised, and make the people welcome when they come. If you do this you will soon have all the non-church-goers you can do with. "Oh, but," says some one, "that will wear the carpets." What if it does? Did you ever see a church worn out? I would travel over the world to see a church worn out. You get the people to come, if you want to; but they won't come and sit in rented pews. I remember hearing a story of a man that owned a pew, and didn't seem to like it when a stranger took his seat there. He wrote on a slip of paper, "This is my pew," and handed it to the stranger, who wrote back, "What do you pay for it?" the man wrote, "I pay seventy-five dollars; and the stranger wrote back, "It's a good pew—it's worth it." Now the idea that men have—"I hire this pew; it belongs to me"—stands right in the way of all our efforts to reach non-church-goers.

THE SIAMESE PRINCE.

(See Illustration.)

Much interest has been manifested in the young Siamese Prince who recently arrived in New York on his way home from England, where he went to attend the Jubilee celebrations of Queen Victoria. The favor now being shown to the Christian missionaries in Siam by the king and his statesmen, renders the welcome tendered to him all the more timely.

Prince Krom Mun Devawongse Varopraker is the eighth of the nineteen brothers of Chulalonkorn I., reigning King of Siam. He was born in 1858, and is, therefore, now twenty-nine years old. He speaks English fluently, and his remarks show that he is very intelligent, and has read extensively the books and newspapers of America and Europe. He had heard all about the Statue of Liberty and the Brooklyn Bridge, and examined both with much interest. Accompanying the prince are four little princes, sons of the King of Siam, and consequently, nephews of Devawongse. Their ages range from nine to fifteen years, and they are known to their father's subjects as Kitiya, Rabi, Pravit, and Chira.

The country of Siam is situated to the south of Burmah and southwest of China. Its area is about 259,000 square miles, and its population is estimated at six millions. It may be hoped that what the Prince has seen in his journey around the world will lead him not only to favor the introduction of Western civilization into his country, but to encourage the people to seek the knowledge of the true God, and to listen to the missionaries.

TRAVELLING IN CHINA.

(See Illustration.)

The modes of conveyance used by the Chinese in different parts of the country vary very much. In the south of Kiang-su and the north of Cheh-kiang boats are everywhere available for long journeys, as rivers and canals are numerous. In the south of Cheh-kiang, among the hills, goods are carried by porters, passengers travel by sedan-chairs, and asses or mules are rarely if ever seen. Horses are only used by officials and soldiers.

In Shanghai wheelbarrows are much used, both for the conveyance of goods and passengers; and north of the Yang-tsi-kiang, asses, mules, wheelbarrows and carts of various descriptions abound. The larger wheelbarrows have often one or two men pulling them, or an ass, mule, pony or ox harnessed on in front, while the coolie behind does a full share of the heavy work, making often a journey of thirty miles a day in fine weather. The picture on this page shows one of these wheelbarrows, on which a sail is used to assist the humble toilers when the wind is fair, and a glance at it will show its peculiar construction and the mode in which it is propelled.

The Rev. Dr. Williamson, in his valuable work, "Journeys in North China," refers to these wheelbarrows as follows: "We met many of their extraordinary wheelbarrows, moving along on dry ground with a sail set, each barrow having a great wheel in the centre, finely balanced. Those we saw were laden heavily, and had a large sheet of cloth set on a framework in front; many of these were so rigged as to be raised or reefed at pleasure, the ropes or braces being attached to a hook close to the driver. We have never seen these wheelbarrows without pity. The strain to the men who manage them is very great; indeed, we have never before witnessed human beings under such heavy labor."

THE MENTOR'S REMORSE.

(See Illustration on page 525.)

"We must go and see what my tailor can do for you, David; Job is a very worthy man and a good Sunday-school teacher, but when he made your coat he did you a great wrong. I suppose they still wear such things in the village. I remember they did so ten years ago."

"Oh, yes; the coat was admired there; but I notice people staring at me, and perhaps it is the coat; I did not know what made them look so."

"Yes, it is the general effect—gives you a Rip Van Winkle appearance, you know."

David Willoughby certainly did attract attention, and more than one person who knew his fashionably attired companion, Fred Shaw, wondered why Fred was walking around with that countrified lad. The fact was, that Fred liked the young man whom he had known in the quiet New England village where both of them were born, but which Fred had quitted ten years ago to study law in the city. David had stayed on in the village, working on his father's farm until, yielding to Fred's persuasions, he, too, had come to the city, and was employed in the same office with his friend. A generous, merry, warm-hearted fellow David was, and an ardent admirer of his mentor, Fred Shaw. Fred thought he knew him thoroughly, and he did know his good qualities; perhaps had he also known his weakness he would not have urged him to venture among the temptations of the city.

It was astonishing how quickly David shed his country appearance and manners under his friend's guidance. As Fred said, after he had been with him a few months, no one could tell that he was a country boy. He became a favorite with society, and his quick wit and light-hearted gaiety made him popular wherever he went. Indeed, he had distanced his friend in knowledge of the city, and adaptation to its ways. It had been difficult at first to get him to go to places which he had been taught to regard as wicked; but having been once initiated, he had shaken off the restraints of his early training, and was a regular frequenter of the theatre, and shady resorts where a good deal of money was lost and won over the gaming table.

"David, my boy, you are going the pace; mind you don't go too fast," Fred remarked one day, as the young man's red eyes and listless manner indicated the occupation of the previous night.

"Oh, I am all right," David said. "It is the worst thing in the world to pull up your horse when he is leaping. I am having a splendid time. I can never thank you enough for bringing me out of that lifeless village."

"All right, so long as you do not overdo it. That is possible, you know, even for a millionaire, and you are a long way from that."

"Don't croak, Fred; I've got a beastly headache this morning, I'll hear your sermon another time; I am only following your advice in going around and seeing life."

"I know; but I did not expect you would go into it with such zest. Besides, as I brought you here and introduced you, I feel some responsibility."

"It is a little late for that, old fellow; your advice was all the other way some time ago. I have lost my appetite for a milk diet now."

The Past Can Never Be Undone.

This conversation increased Fred's uneasiness, which had been growing for some weeks as he saw that David was mixing with the very fastest set about town. He attempted to restrain him now, but David laughed at his fears and quoted against him some of the very maxims that Fred himself had instilled into his mind. Fred shook his head sadly, and said he wished he had never disturbed him from the farm.

"But you did, you see, old fellow," David said, "and you must admit I have got on. It is the life I was made for. You did me a service, and anyhow, what is done cannot be undone."

"No; I see that," Fred said, "I wish I could undo it. You are so reckless; you cannot do anything in moderation."

It was of no use; David was not to be held back, and with deep sorrow Fred saw him becoming more and more dissipated. At last the culmination came. David, to meet "a debt of honor," used some securities belonging to his employers, and was in momentary danger of detection. His anxiety was noticed by Fred, who with difficulty wrung from him a confession of the crime.

"Tell me who has the deeds and I will try to get them back," Fred said.

David told him, and Fred set out at once to visit the country residence of a notorious gambler on his almost hopeless errand. As he passed through the fields near his destination, he encountered the very man whom he sought. A very few words sufficed to show Fred that there was no hope of saving his friend. He offered the man all he had in the world to give up the deeds, but his offer was scoffed at, and as to David being ruined and his father's heart being broken by this disgrace—why, that was David's own affair.

Fred turned away, and as soon as he was alone flung himself on the grass in a fit of uncontrollable weeping. His remorse was more than he could bear. The man to whom his piteous appeal had been made saw him fall, turned and looked at him for a minute as at some curious exhibition, and passed on heedless of his misery.

Several years after that night Fred Shaw and David Willoughby were sitting together in a poor boarding-house in a distant city.

"Well," said Fred, "we are going to begin life afresh now."

"But we cannot wipe out the past," David said. "I cannot get rid of the prison stain, nor ever recompense you for the sacrifice you have made in coming here with me."

"Don't speak of that now, David. We have both made our peace with God through Christ, and if He will help us, as we pray He will, we may use our bitter experience to save other young men from going the same sad road."

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 510.)

Happiness in Sickness—Slow Recovery—Convalescence in the Country—New Religious Light—Work in the Seminary—A Six O'clock Prayer-Meeting—An Application for Work—Commences Labor among Jews—Proposes to Go Out without Salary—A Question of Conscience—Influenced by Expectation of Christ's Speedy Coming.

I CAME to England weak in body, and in consequence of much study, as I suppose, I was taken ill on May 15, and was soon, at least in my own estimation, apparently beyond recovery. The weaker I became in body, the happier I was in spirit. Never in my whole life had I seen myself so vile, so guilty, so altogether what I ought not to have been, as at this time. It was as if every sin of which I had been guilty was brought to my remembrance; but at the same time I could realize that all my sins were completely forgiven—that I was washed and made clean, completely clean, in the blood of Jesus. The result of this was great peace. I longed exceedingly to depart and to be with Christ. When my medical attendant came to see me my prayer was something like this; "Lord, Thou knowest that he does not know what is for my real welfare, therefore do Thou direct him." When I took my medicine, my hearty prayer each time was something like this: "Lord, Thou knowest that this medicine is in itself nothing—no more than as if I were to take a little water. Now please, O Lord, to let it produce the effect which is for my real welfare, and for Thy glory."

After I had been ill about a fortnight my medical attendant unexpectedly pronounced me better. This, instead of giving me joy, bowed me down, so great was my desire to be with the Lord: though almost immediately afterwards grace was given me to submit myself to the will of God. After some days I was able to leave my room. Whilst recovering, I still continued in a spiritual state of heart, desiring to depart and to be with Christ. As I recovered but slowly, my friends entreated me to go into the country for a change of air; but my heart was in such a happy and spiritual frame, that I did not like the thought of travelling and seeing places—so far was I changed, who once had been so passionately fond of travelling. But as my friends continued to advise me to go into the country, I thought at last that it might be the will of God that I should do so, and I prayed therefore thus to the Lord: "Lord, I will gladly submit myself to Thy will, and go, if Thou wilt have me to go. And now let me know Thy will by the answer of my medical attendant. If, in reply to my question, he says it will be very good for me, I will go; but if he says it is of no great importance, then I will stay." When I asked him, he said that it was the best thing I could do.

I was then enabled willingly to submit, and accordingly went to Teignmouth. It was there that I became acquainted with my beloved brother, friend, and fellow-labourer, Henry Craik. A few days after my arrival, the chapel, called Ebenezer, was reopened, and I attended the opening. I was much impressed by one of those who preached on the occasion. For though I did not like all he said, yet I saw a gravity and solemnity in him different from the rest. After he had preached, I had a great desire to know more of him; and being invited by two brethren of Exmouth, in whose house he was staying, to spend some time with them, I had an opportunity of living ten days with him under the same roof. Through the instrumentality of this brother the Lord bestowed a great blessing upon me, for which I shall have cause to thank Him throughout eternity. I will mention some points which God then began to show me.

1. That the Word of God alone is our standard of judgment in spiritual things; that it can be explained only by the Holy Spirit; and that in our day as well as in former times, He is the teacher of His people. The office of the Holy Spirit I had not experimentally understood before that time. Indeed, of the office of each of the blessed persons, in what is commonly called the Trinity, I had no experimental apprehension. I had not before seen from the Scriptures that the Father chose us before the foundation of the world; that in Him that wonderful plan of our redemption originated, and that He also appointed all the means by which it was to be brought about. Further, that the Son, to save us, had fulfilled the law, to satisfy its demands, and with it also the holiness of God; that He had borne the punishment due to our sins, and had thus satisfied the justice of God. And further, that the Holy Spirit alone can teach us about our state by nature, show us the need of a Saviour, enable us to believe in Christ, explain to us the Scriptures, help us in preaching, etc. It was my beginning to understand this latter point in particular, which had a great effect on me; for the Lord enabled me to put it to the test of experience by laying aside commentaries, and almost every other book, and simply reading the Word of God and studying it. The result of this was, that the first evening that I shut myself into my room, to give myself to prayer and meditation over the Scriptures, I learned more in a few hours than I had done during a period of several months previously. But the particular difference was, that I received real strength for my soul in doing so. I now began to try, by the test of the Scriptures, the things which I had learned and seen, and found that only those principles which stood the test were really of value.

3. Another truth into which, in a measure, I was led during my stay in Devonshire, respected the doctrine of the Lord's second coming. My views concerning this point up to that time had been completely vague and unscriptural. I had believed what others told me, without trying it by the Word. I thought that things were getting better and better, and that soon the whole world would be converted. But now I found in the Word that we have not the least Scriptural warrant to look for the conversion of the world before the return of our Lord. I found in the Scriptures, that that which will usher in the glory of the Church and uninterrupted joy to the saints, is the return of the Lord Jesus, and that, till then, things will be more or less in confusion. I found in the Word that the return of Jesus, and not death, was the hope of the apostolic Christians, and that it became me, therefore, to look for His appearing. And this truth entered so into my heart, that, though I went into Devonshire exceedingly weak, scarcely expecting that I should return again to London, yet I was immediately, on seeing this truth, brought off from looking for death, and was made to look for the return of the Lord. Having seen this truth, the Lord also graciously enabled me to apply it, in some measure at least, to my own heart, and to put the solemn question to myself—What may I do for the Lord, before He returns, as He may soon come?

4. In addition to these truths, it pleased the Lord to lead me to see a higher standard of devotedness than I had seen before. He led me, in a measure, to see what is my true glory in this world, even to be despised, and to be poor and mean with Christ. I saw then in a measure though I have seen it more fully since, that it ill becomes the servant to seek to be rich and great and honored in that world where his Lord was poor and mean and despised.

I do not mean to say that all that which I believe at present concerning these truths, and those which, in connection with them, the Lord has shown me since August, 1829, were apprehended all at once; and much less did I see them all at once with the same clearness as, by the grace of God, I do now; yet my stay in Devonshire was a most profitable time to my soul. My prayer had been, before I left London, that the Lord would be pleased to bless my journey to the benefit of my body and soul. This prayer was answered in both respects; for in the beginning of September I returned to London much better in body, and as to my soul, the change was so great that it was like a second conversion.

After my return to London, I sought to benefit my brethren in the seminary, and the means which I used were these: I proposed to them to meet together every morning from six to eight for prayer and reading the Scriptures, and that then each of us should give out what he might consider the Lord had shown him to be the meaning of the portion read. One brother, in particular, was brought into the same state as myself; and others, I trust, were more or less benefited. Several times, when I went to my room after family prayer in the evening, I found communion with God so sweet that I continued in prayer till after twelve, and then, being full of joy, went into the room of the brother just referred to; and, finding him also in a similar frame of heart, we continued praying until one or two; and even then I was a few times so full of joy that I could scarcely sleep, and at six in the morning again called the brethren together for prayer.

All this, moreover, did not leave me idle, as regards actual engagements in the Lord's work, as I will now show. After I had been for about ten days in London, and had been confined to the house on account of my studies, my health began again to decline; and I saw that it would not be well, my poor body being only like a wreck or brand brought out of the devil's service, to spend my little remaining strength in study, but that I now ought to set about actual engagements in the Lord's work, particularly as He had now given me more light about His truth, and also a heart to serve Him. I consequently wrote to the Committee of the Society, requesting them to send me out at once, as they had now had an opportunity of knowing me; and that they might do so with more confidence, to send me as a fellow-laborer to an experienced brother. However I received no answer.

After having waited about five or six weeks, in the meantime seeking in one way or another to labor for the Lord, it struck me that I was wrong and acting unscripturally, in waiting for the appointment to missionary work from my fellow-men; but that, considering myself called by the Lord to preach the Gospel, I ought to begin at once to labor among the Jews in London, whether I had the title of missionary or not. In consequence of this I distributed tracts among the Jews, with my name and residence written on them, thus inviting them to conversation about the things of God; preached to them in those places where they most numerously collect together; read the Scriptures regularly to about fifty Jewish boys, and became a teacher in a Sunday-school. In this work I had much enjoyment, and the honor of being reproached and ill-treated for the name of Jesus. But the Lord gave me grace never to be kept from the work by any danger, or the prospect of any suffering."

The conviction having grown upon him that he ought to dissolve his connection with the Society, he says: "The question that next occurred to me was, how I ought to act if not sent out by the Society? With my views I could not return to Prussia; for I must either refrain from preaching, or imprisonment would be the result. The only plan that presented itself to me was, that I should go from place to place throughout England, as the Lord might direct me, and give me opportunity, preaching wherever I went, both among Jews and nominal Christians. To this mode of service I was especially stirred up through the recently received truth of the Lord's second coming, having it impressed upon my heart to seek to warn sinners, and to stir up the saints; as He might soon come.

At the same time it appeared to me well that I should do this in connection with the Society for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews, serving them without any salary, provided they would accept me on these conditions. An objection which came to my mind against taking any step which might lead to the dissolution of my connection with the Society—namely, that I had been some expense to it, and that thus I should appear ungrateful, and the money would seem to have been thrown away, was easily removed in this way: 1. When I engaged with the Society, I did it according to the light I then had. 2. I have but one Master; His is the money, and to Him I have to give an account. 3. Though I have nothing to boast of, but much reason to be ashamed before God on account of my lack of service, yet, speaking after the manner of men, in some measure I did work, not only in the Lord's service, but even in that particular line for which the money had been put into the hands of the Committee.

There remained now only one point more to be settled: how I should do for the future as it regarded the supply of my temporal wants, which naturally would have been a great obstacle, especially as I was not merely a foreigner, but spoke so little English that, whilst I was greatly assisted in expounding the Scriptures, it was with difficulty that I could converse about common things. On this point, however, I had no anxiety; for I considered that, as long as I really sought to serve the Lord, that is, as long as I sought the kingdom of God and His righteousness, these my temporal supplies would be added to me. The Lord most mercifully enabled me to take the promises of His word, and rest upon them, and such as Matthew 7: 7, 8, John 14: 13, 14, Matthew 6: 25-30, were the stay of my soul concerning this point. In addition to this, the example of brother Groves, the dentist before alluded to, who gave up his profession, and went out as a missionary, was a great encouragement to me. For the news, which by this time had arrived, of how the Lord had aided him on his way to St. Petersburg, and at St. Petersburg, strengthened my faith.

At last, on December 12, 1829, I came to the conclusion to dissolve my connection with the Society, if they would not accept my services under the above conditions, and to go throughout the country preaching (being particularly constrained to do so from a desire to serve the Lord as much as in me lay, before His return), and to trust to Him for the supply of my temporal wants. Yet at the same time it appeared well to me to wait a month longer, and to consider the matter still further, before I wrote to the committee, that I might be sure I had weighed it fully.

On December 24 I went to the Church Missionary Institution at Islington, in the hope of benefiting the students there, if it were the Lord's will. I returned very happy, as I was almost invariably at that time, and went to bed full of joy. Next morning (being that of Christmas day) I awoke in a very different state of heart from what I had experienced for many weeks past. I had no enjoyment, and felt cold and lifeless in prayer. At our usual morning meeting, however, one of the brethren exhorted me to continue to pray, saying that the Lord surely would again smile on me, though now for a season, for wise purposes, He seemed to have withdrawn Himself. I did so. At the Lord's table, in the morning, a measure of enjoyment returned. Afterwards I dined in a family, in company with the brother just referred to. My former enjoyment gradually returned. Towards evening the Lord gave me an opportunity of speaking about His return, and I had great enjoyment in doing so.

At eight o'clock I was asked to expound at family-prayer, and was much assisted by the Lord. About half an hour after the exposition was over, I was requested to come out of the room to see one of the servants, and the mother of another of the servants, who had been present at family-prayer. I found them in tears, and both deeply impressed and under concern about their souls. I then went home, at least as happy as on the previous evening. I have related this circumstance, because I am aware that it is a common temptation of Satan to make us give up the reading of the Word and prayer when our enjoyment is gone; as if it were of no use to read the Scriptures when we do not enjoy them, and as if it were of no use to pray when we have no spirit of prayer; whilst the truth is, in order to enjoy the Word, we ought to continue to read it, and the way to obtain a spirit of prayer is to continue praying; for the less we read the Word of God, the less we desire to read it, and the less we pray, the less we desire to pray.

(To be continued.)

PIETY WITHOUT DISPLAY.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for August 28: Matt. 6: 1-18, Golden Text 1 Sam. 16: 7.

Ver. 1-4, Doing Alms Means Doing Righteousness. See Revised Version—When Thou Doest; Then it is to be a Habit—Christ's Favorite Principle—The Act Appraised by the Motive—The Desire to be Seen, Still Common—Two Rewards Obtainable—Those who Choose the Lower Miss the Higher—Christ's Assurance That God Seeth in Secret—A Warning and an Encouragement—Ver. 5-8, Right Things May be Done in a Wrong Way—Christ's Principle Applied to Prayer—Mechanical Piety in Vain Repetition—Your Father Knoweth—Better Than You Do—Ver. 9-13, The Model Prayer—Simple and Comprehensive—The Best Blessings for the Individual and the World—What the Answer to the Prayer Would Mean—Ver. 14, An Authoritative Warning.

SOME men's religion is all outside; it is for the eye of man, and not for the eye of God. They want to make on others an impression of their own zeal and devotion, and they will do anything to ascertain what impression they make. It is of the utmost importance to them that they should be known as religious people, and spoken of as such. If they have said a word at a meeting, they search diligently in the newspaper reports to see if their name is mentioned, and what is said about them. If they give a donation or subscription to any good work, they examine the subscription-list to see whether others around them give more or less than they, that they may get some idea whether or not they are counted generous. If they do any good thing which costs them self-denial, they find so many opportunities of mentioning it, that one is forced to the conclusion that it must have been a most unusual thing. Alas! alas! self, and not God, has been the mainspring of their life, and the words of Jesus come with withering severity, "Take heed that ye do not our righteousness before men, to be seen of them; else ye have no reward with your Father which is in heaven, (R. V.)" The object sought has been obtained—they have been seen of men,—"Verily I say unto you,

They Have Received their Reward."

(R. V.) These are the men "who have their portion in this life" (Ps. 17: 14). In their lifetime they have received their good things (Luke 16: 25). Their aim has been no higher than earth; they are in their religion as in all else, "of the earth, earthy" (1 Cor. 15: 47). They have not sought God's glory, but their own, and have "loved the praise of man more than the praise of God" (John 12: 23). Thus, although they profess to belong to the Christian religion, their principles are the same as those of Mohammedans or Buddhists—they seek to acquire merit, and to get credit among men for all they do. Jesus warns His people not to be like them, "When thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth, that thine alms may be in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall recompense thee" (R. V).

Again, our blessed Lord teaches the difference between reality and unreality in prayer. He condemns the prayer which is calculated to attract the eye of man. God would not have any man revered by other men, and looked upon as a marvel of sanctity. This is the very thing which has led to the worship of saints. The holiest man on earth is so only by the undeserved grace of God; he is no object for worship, but is only an instance of God's wondrous grace—his business is to attract others to Him also. Therefore, God would have our communion with Him to be in secret, with closed doors. The man who can pray better in a prayer-meeting than quite alone with God, is living more in the atmosphere of fellowship than in communion with God; man is more to him than God.

The Prayer of the Heathen.

"But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathens do; for they think they shall be heard for their much speaking." Are there not many Christians who think, like the heathen, that the answer to prayer depends, in great measure, on their own earnestness? Are there not many who think that if they pray all night about a thing they are more likely to obtain the answer than if they pray for it a shorter time? is there not some idea that there is some power in the prayer itself? some thought that it can overcome God if it is earnest enough? But is not this just the idea of the heathen? Did not the prophets of Baal cry aloud six long hours, and cut themselves with knives, and manifest the most extreme earnestness in their prayer? If earnestness could command an answer, would it not have done so on Mount Carmel? Why were they not heard? Because there was no power in their god. The secret of success in prayer is to believe in the power and in the faithfulness of God. What things soever ye desire, when ye pray believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them (Mark 11: 24); that is, believe that, there and then, God has undertaken the matter and made it His business. The prophets of Baal credited their prayers with all the power, and were unheard. Elijah credited his God with all the power, and was answered by fire from heaven (1 Kings 18: 25-39). The prophets of Baal counted on themselves; Elijah counted on his God. When a child of God places anything by faith in the hands of his God, what becomes of it? Is it a chance whether God undertakes it? Are we to believe that He requires a great deal of pressure to be put upon Him by the number of those who pray, or the number of times the prayer is repeated? No; "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and His ears are open unto their cry" (Ps. 34: 15). Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask Him." There are some who, when they pray, put on the most doleful tone of voice, a tone which resembles the key of the professional beggar, and would certainly give a stranger the idea that the petitioner stood a very poor chance of getting what he asked, or he would change from the minor key.

Our Lord applies the same principles to Fasting.

The general idea of Christians is that fasting joined with prayer brings some compulsion to bear on God, and that He will answer prayer thus offered, when He could not be persuaded to do so otherwise. What an idea to have of God! Is He then so miserly, and does He so grudge His gifts of love and grace, that it takes such immense pressure to induce Him to act in any way in accordance with the name of Father? No; He has given us His ideas of fasting (Isa. 58: 6-14), and they are, that it consists in unselfishness and care for others; there may indeed be times when God calls us to abstain from food because He would have us free from distraction in listening to Him; but this is quite a different thing from fasting in order to obtain something from Him, or fasting to impress others with our holiness.

Our Lord, having thus shown the relationship of God to us as a Father, gives us a model of of prayer, "After this manner, therefore, pray ye: Our Father, which art in heaven." We start with our acknowledgment of God's relationship to us; we are coming to a Father, "Our Father," we do not come for ourselves only. God teaches us to pray "for all men" (1 Tim. 2: 1-2). But this Father is not an earthly father; our relationship to him introduces us into another kingdom, the Kingdom of Heaven, "Our Father which art in heaven," or our heavenly Father; Father of all that is of heaven in our hearts and lives, "Hallowed be Thy name." We are led to pray, first, for the interests of God. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God." This prayer is a profession that we really do desire God to be glorified, even though it be at our expense. When God threw down the walls of Jericho, there was nothing to glorify Joshua; God's name was exalted, not his. When he directed Gideon to fight against the Midianites with trumpets, torches and pitchers, there was nothing in all that was done to magnify Gideon as a warrior; the Lord gained the victory. Are we willing that in all we do we should be as little and foolish in the eyes of others as Joshua and Gideon undoubtedly were? If not, we do not really mean what we say when we pray, "Hallowed be Thy name." How many there are who seek their own glory! There are some Christians who get puzzled about things which they consider doubtful. Let them apply this divine test, "Can I say 'Hallowed be Thy name' in this thing, 'Thy Kingdom come' in this thing, 'Thy will be done' in these things"? Try worldly things by this test, amusements, dress, novels, the love of money, the thirst for standing well with man; try the flesh by this test, gluttony, drunkenness, the use of tobacco, laziness, procrastination, the love of gossip. It is a crucial test. If the name of God is dearer to us than our own, we cease to be easily provoked, or what is usually called "touchy;" we are sensitive to that which touches God, rather than to that which touches us.

God First

is a good motto, and where we really mean these first petitions in the Lord's Prayer, then of necessity, our life is regulated accordingly—our house is furnished and used for the Kingdom of God, and not for the world; our children are educated and our servants encouraged to live and to serve the kingdom of God; our reading, our writing, our dress, our expenditure, is for the Kingdom of the Living God. And this is no slavery, it is second nature; if our heart is full of Christ, it could not be otherwise. But there are some who, in their intense zeal for the Kingdom, wear out their bodies, involve themselves in monetary perplexities, and do the most unwise things; all with the idea of seeking the Kingdom of God. But He would have us pray: "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." The question is not, what I think is God's will, not what I should think would please Him, but what He says will please Him. Naaman thought that Elisha should come out to him and make a great display before he was healed; God's thought was to bring Naaman in contact with Himself in the act of simply washing in Jordan (2 Kings 5). If we are zealous in praying, "Thy will be done," we shall want to bow unquestioningly to God, as the angels do in heaven. Reasoning about the will of God is not the way to know it, but willingness to accept it, whatever it is, throws light on the situation. "If any man willeth to do His will, he shall know of the teaching." (John 7: 17, R. V). Having thus prayed in faith for that which touches God, His child who knows that his own interests are safe with such a Father, proceeds to pray for his own need: our daily bread." O, how merciful is our God. He does not teach us to pray for a store of necessities for soul or body, but for the day's provision, for the day's need, leaving past and future trustfully in His hands. It is a blessed thing to live a day at a time. Some people live three months at a time, and carry the burden of all the sicknesses, anxieties, temptations and sorrows which may or may not come upon them in that space of time. "O, I am in such trouble," said a young wife to me. "What about?" "Why, I am always in a state of apprehension lest my husband should die." If this poor woman had lived by the day, and spent her time in praising God for each day that her husband was spared to her, she would have saved herself all this self-made misery. If God is in the future and is doing a good part by us this hour, why fear that He will change to-morrow? God is to be trusted that every day, "the portion of a day in His day," He will supply all our need (Phil. 4: 19). "And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive." Who can pray this prayer except his heart is filled with love to all men? We all have from time to time in our lives done that which needs forgiveness, and we ask God to deal with us as we deal with others. "And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," i. e. "Lord, fight and win all my battles." "For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory"—no credit to me, from first to last, but all praise belongeth unto Thee. Thou reignest, Thou workest, for ever and ever. Amen.

"Give us this Day

THE ETERNAL HOME.

No sickness there—
No weary wast ng of the frame away;
No fearful sinking from the midnight air—
No dread of summer's bright and fervid ray.

No hidden grief!
No wild and cheerless visions of despair;
No vain petition for a swift relief—
No tearful eyes, no broken hearts are there

Care has no home
Within the happy realms of ceaseless song;
Its billows break away and melt in foam,
Far from the mansions of the holy throng!

The storm's black wing
Is never spread athwart celestial skies,
Its wailings blend not with the voice of spring,
As some too tender floweret fades and dies.

No night distills
Its chilling dews upon the tender frame;
Nor moon is needed there. The light which fills
That land of glory from its Maker came.

No parted friends
O'er mournful recollections have to weep;
No bed of death enduring love attends
To watch the coming of a pulseless sleep.

No blasted bower
Or withered bed celestial gardens know;
No scorching or swift descending shower
Scatters destruction like a ruthless foe.

No battle word
Startles the sacred host with fear or dread;
The song of peace creation's morning heard
Is sung wherever angel minstrels tread.

With faith our guide,
White-robed and innocent to lead the way,
Why should we fear to plunge in Jordan's tide,
And find the ocean of eternal day.

—Selected.

J E JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form for general distribution at twenty-five cents per hundred.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of
J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

SPAIN
AND SPANISH AMERICA.
ILLUSTRATED.

A most beautifully illustrated new work on Spain and Spanish America, edited by Bishop Riley—sold in parts—each part complete in itself and sold separately. The proceeds dedicated to aiding christian work in Mexico Part I. now ready. Sent to any address on the receipt of price, fifty cents. In asking for it mail your requests to J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York, inclosing fifty cents and the words, "Send Spain and Spanish America, illustrated, to"—and then give your address.

WOOD-CARPET

Parquetry or Ornamental Wood-Floors,
For Rooms of all kinds in Private Houses, Hotels, Stores, etc Also Borders for Rugs. Send stamp for Book of Designs

BOUGHTON & TERWILLIGER,
23d Street, under Fifth Avenue Hotel.
NEW YORK CITY.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner S t, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE

A new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents, by J. S. OGILVIE & CO., 31 Rose Street, New York.

WANTED. A situation in a private family is desired by a graduate; will teach English, Higher Mathematics, French, Latin, Vocal, and Instrumental Music on Piano Best references Address Miss Moffett, Brownsberg, Rockbridge Co., Va

BOOK AGENTS WANTED. SEND for particulars and liberal terms W. B. KETCHAM, 71 Bible House, New York

CRYING BABIES
are made
GOOD NATURED, HEALTHY, HEARTY,
by the use of
Lactated Food

Babies do not cry if they are satisfied, and they cannot be satisfied if they are not properly nourished by their food, or if it produces irritation of stomach or bowels.

Very many mothers cannot properly nourish their children, and the milk of many mothers produces bad effects in the child because of constitutional disease or weakness.

For all such cases there is a remedy in

LACTATED FOOD.

Hundreds of physicians testify to its great value. It will be retained when even lime water and milk is rejected by the stomach, hence it is of great value to all invalids, in either chronic or acute cases.

150 MEALS for an infant for $1.00.

Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.
A valuable pamphlet sent on application.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

SEDGWICK STEEL WIRE FENCE.

The best Farm, Garden, Poultry Yard, Lawn, School Lot, Park and Cemetery Fences and Gates. Perfect Automatic Gate. Cheapest and Neatest Iron Fences. Iron and wire Summer Houses, Lawn Furniture, and other wire work. Best Wire Stretcher and Plier. Ask dealers in hardware, or address, SEDGWICK BROS., RICHMOND, IND.

Oh! Dear! Well, why don't the old Fogy buy his own sulphur, saltpetre and charcoal instead of purchasing gunpowder might he as well as to buy the constituent parts of paint, instead of buying the paint ready for use See our circulars on this fact. The F. J Nash M'f'g. Co., Nyack, Rockland Co., N. Y., manufacturers of Ready Mixed Paints, in addition to the usual color card free, send an exceedingly interesting, plain, common sense exposition of paint free.

Getting A New Song-Book.

Don't be in such a hurry to get a new song-book that you'll not examine Glad Hallelujahs, Sweney and Kirkpatrick's newest book. They say their best. We give their opinion because, they are better judges. We've listened, and we've sung. Such singing! Grand! expresses it exactly. It's suitable for Church or School. Have it.

By mail, 35 cents. By express (not prepaid), $3.60 per dozen; $30 per 100. One sample copy 25 cents.
Further inducements to Schools, Churches and Evangelists. Write us.

T. T. TASKER, SR., PUBLISHER,
921 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

This Magazine portrays American thought and life from ocean to ocean, is filled with pure high-class literature, and can be safely welcomed in any family circle.

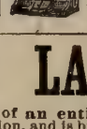
PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MAIL.

Sample Copy of current number mailed upon receipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 cts.

Premium List with either.

Address:
R. T. BUSH & SON, Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N. Y.

GET UP CLUBS.



UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World,—$35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves Double Coupler. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35 NOW $35
MARCHAL & SMITH,
285 East 21st Street, New York.

$1000 WORTH OF LAW FOR $1.50.

How to be Your Own Lawyer is the title of an entirely new book of over 500 pages, adapted for use in every State and Territory in the Union, and is by far the best and most complete work of the kind ever published. It gives instruction on all the most important law points which a Farmer, Mechanic, Merchant, or anybody else would want to know about, and if carefully studied and kept at hand for consultation when needed will save any man, in the course of an ordinary business career, hundreds, if not thousands of dollars. It is a lawyer whose retaining fee (the price of the book, $1.50) has to be paid but once in a life-time. Plain and concise directions are given and forms furnished for the transaction of all kinds of business, and the preparation of every description of legal document in common use, such as Agreements, Bonds, Deeds, Leases, Notes, Mortgages, Wills, Etc. It takes up and treats in alphabetical order over 70 different subjects as follows: Acknowledgemnt and Proof of Deed, Administrators, Affidavits, Agents, Agreements, Apprentices, Arbitration, Assignments, Auctions, Bankruptcy, Bills of Sale, Bonds, Bills of Exchange, Cattle and Dog Laws, Collection of Debts, Common Carriers, Consideration, Contracts, Copyright, Corporate Associations, Custom House, Deeds, Divorce, Dower, Drafts, Executors, Exemption Laws, Farmers, Fences, Guaranty, Guardian and Ward, Highways, Hotels and Boarding-Houses, Husband and Wife, Insolvency, Insurance (Life, Fire, and Marine), Interest, Internal Revenue, Landlord and Tenant, Law of Place, Leases, Letters of Credit, Letter-Writing, Libel, Slander, Licenses, Lien Laws, Limitation of Actions, Marriage, Master and Servant, Mining Laws, Minor, Mortgages, Naturalization, Pensions, Parent and Child, Parliamentary Rules, Partnership, Patents, Payment and Tender, Personal Property, Partition, Power of Attorney, Promissory Notes, Real Estate, Receipts and Releases, Rights of Married Women, Schools, Shipping, Subscription Papers (How to Draw), Trade-Marks, Trespass, Trusts and Trustees, Vessels, Voters, Wills, Warranty of Horses.

There is also a very complete Dictionary of Legal Terms; Tables for the Computation of Interest; Measurement of LAND, LUMBER, LOGS, GRAIN; Legal Weight of a Bushel of Grain, Seed, and Roots; Quantity of Seed required to plant an Acre, Table showing Paper Required to make a Book of any size; U. S. Land Measure; Number of Bricks Required to Construct any building; Presidential Vote from 1824 to 1885; Time for holding Elections in different States; Population of the U. S.; Prices of various Commodities for fifty-three years; Valuable Rules for the use of Farmers and Mechanics; and much other important information. A copy of this valuable work, handsomely bound in extra cloth, with ink side-stamp, will be mailed to any address, postpaid, on receipt of $1.50; or bound in sheep, legal style, for $2.00. Address

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

James McCreery & C

PREVIOUS TO OPENING THEIR NEW STO OF FALL DRESS GOODS OFFER THE FOLLO
ING BARGAINS:

ONE LINE OF MIXED SUITINGS, 44 INCH
WIDE, AT 75 CTS., FORMER PRICE, $1.
PER YARD.

ONE LINE OF FRENCH CANVAS CLOT
50 CTS., FORMER PRICE $1 PER YARD, BO OF THE ABOVE LINES ARE ALL WOOL A VERY DESIRABLE.

ORDERS BY MAIL WILL RECEIVE PROM AND CAREFUL ATTENTION.

Broadway and Eleventh St
New York.

Bridal Trousseaux

Ladies who are unable to exam our stock of these goods persona would find it to their advantage correspond with us. The most co plete information furnished, and ca ful attention given to special orde

Lord & Taylo
Broadway & 20th Street, N. Y.

JUST ISSUED.
HYMNS for MISSION.
Compiled by Rev. Drs. Rainsford, Van Water and Shackelford.
CONTAINS 123 HYMNS AND TUNE.
With Tunes, in Board Covers, at $25 per 100 Cop
Sent post paid on receipt of 30 cents.
Words Only, Paper Covers, $5 per 100; in Cloth,
BIGLOW & MAIN, PUBLISHERS,
76 East Ninth Street, New York.

FOR Biliousness, Sick Headac, Constipatio Dyspepsi

It cools the Blood; it gives delight;
It sharpens up the appetite.
It cools the Liver do its part
And stimulates the feeble heart
All Bilious agonies endured.
By TARRANT'S SELTZER can be cur

This Knife FREE with our new 48 Page Catalog of New Goods for Agents if you send 6 cents in St to help pay postage, etc. World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St.,

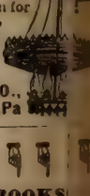
BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa



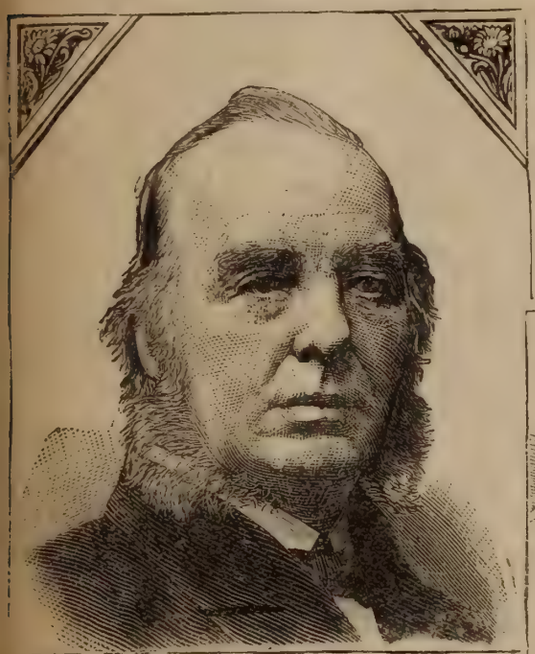
IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS
it makes no difference where you see them adv ed, or by whom or where they are published or ld, send your orders to me and I will attend to em promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamps received for fractional parts of a dollar.
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at 63 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. X., No. 34. THURSDAY, AUGUST 25, 1887. Subscription, $1.50.



CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE REV. W. E. BOARDMAN.

THE WITNESS STAND. Dr. Talmage's Vacation Sermon.

THE THREE CENTRAL NATIONS OF THE MILLENNIUM. By Rev. E. J. Hytche.

CURRENT EVENTS:—The Burning of the Inman Steamship—Secretary Lamar's Decision—The Cholera in India—A Marriage by Proxy, etc.

THE COVENANTER. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

A Hairbreadth Escape from a Mine—A Lady Saved from Insanity—The Jesuit's Boomerang—Aunt Amanda's Heroism, etc.

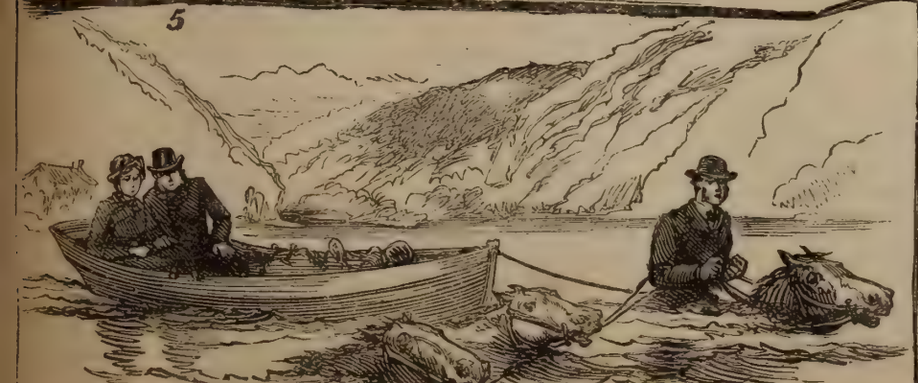
PORTRAIT OF PRINCE FERDINAND.

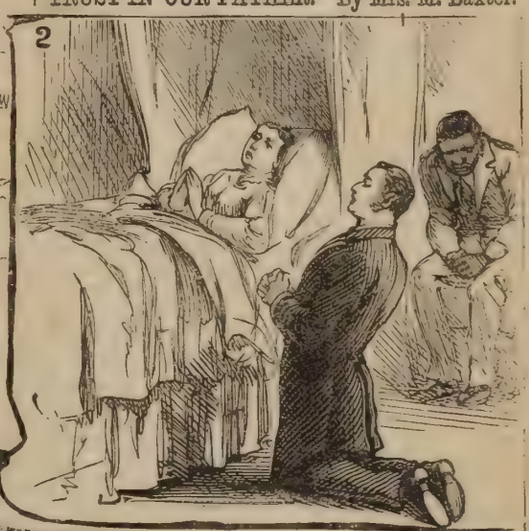
PICTURE OF THE ISLAND OF LOANDA.

GRANDMAMMA'S VERSE. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. (Continued.)

TRUST IN OUR FATHER. By Mrs. M. Baxter.





THE LATE REV. W. E. BOARDMAN, Secretary of the Christian Commission—Scenes in his Life.

THE LATE REV. W. E. BOARDMAN.

Secretary of the Christian Commission.

Birth in New York in 1810—Spurious Conversion—Brought into the Light—Business Reverses—Begins a Life of Prayer—Removal West—Labors at Potosi—A Revelation—Wonderful Work at Lane Seminary—Mission Work at Greenfield, Ind.—Nearly Killed in Fording a River—Studies at Yale—The Organization of Sunday-schools in the West—Secretary of the Christian Commission—The Last Twenty Years.

THE eminent servant of God whose portrait appears this week on the first page, was well known personally to many of our readers, and through his works to a still larger number. The brief notices of his death which appeared last year in the religious and secular press must have been very unsatisfying to them. Now, however, a very beautiful biography, written by Mrs. Boardman, has been published by Messrs. D. Appleton & Company, of New York, which will fully meet the general desire to know all that it is necessary to know of the grand man and his work. From this book we compile a brief sketch of his life, which, being necessarily imperfect, may lead our readers to read Mrs. Boardman's book for themselves.

William Edwin Boardman was born at Smithfield, N. Y., on October 11, 1810, and died in London, England, on February 4, 1886, in the seventy-sixth year of his age.

Until he attained the age of twelve years young Boardman was a slow, plodding boy taking little interest in any kind of study; but then he had the happiness to fall into the hands of a skillful teacher, who, by tact and a manifestation of interest, awakened his latent mental energies and stirred him up to earnest work. At this time he had received less religious instruction than most boys of his age now have. While at school, however, he was brought into association with a remarkable religious work. The result was what Mr. Boardman described with some hesitation, as A Spurious Conversion.

"When I was about thirteen years old," he wrote, "a beloved schoolmate, somewhat older than myself, whilst away from home, became a very joyous Christian convert, and returned to relate the story of his happiness to all his schoolfellows and friends. One after another gave evidence that his experience had deeply impressed them. The interest grew and extended, and meetings were held amongst the boys, but leadership was in hands without experience. Some semblance of order was observed during the first half hour of our gatherings, but after that came a general confusion, for, notice having been given by the leader, a space was cleared in the centre of the room into which all who desired the prayers of Christians were urged. Those who were to be prayed for were surrounded by a circle of those who were to pray for them. When the ring was formed a verse of a hymn was sung: then all knelt down, and began to cry aloud, many voices at once—some for mercy, others for the power of God; one in mere ejaculation, another in continuous supplications; some in distress, others in triumphant joy; making altogether a Babel of noise quite overpowering. By and by, one of those enclosed in the circle would rise to his feet and shout, when all would respond in loud Amens and Glory Hallelujahs; rise as if by simultaneous impulse, throw their arms over each other's shoulders, strike up some lively chorus or familiar hymn, and sing, swaying back and forth all together, to the time of their music.

"In one of these meetings, although I had not the first ray of intelligent conviction of sin or need of salvation, I allowed myself to be dragged into the circle by the kindly violence of over-urgency and the warm grasp of a friendly hand, and there by the side of another lad I knelt down. Carried along by blind impulse, following his lead, I cried in a loud voice for mercy: then when a few moments later he rose and shouted and everybody else followed suit I sprang up and shouted too."

Of course this was not conversion, though he was assured that it was, and, believing the assurance, he not unnaturally drew the inference that conversion was mere excitment and imagination, and when, after a few struggles, he relapsed into his old way of life, contempt for religion took the place of his former indifference. Indeed he went farther and abandoned his belief in God and the Bible. This result of hasty and indiscreet effort is more common than evangelists, who labor among children, are aware of. When they boast of the number of children who have been converted at some special services they have no idea how many of that number have, instead of being converted, been prejudiced for life against real religion by their "spurious conversion."

Real Conversion.

Happily for him, however, personal testimony effaced the evil impression. Some eight years later, speaking with his brother, who went through the same excitement with him, about this school revival, he declared his opinion that "religion was all superstitious nonsense" when to his amazement his brother declared from his own experience that true conversion was not the product of sympathy and imagination, but was the work of God. This declaration coming from one whose sincerity he could not doubt, deeply impressed him and led him to seek for the real blessing. There were some services then going on in the neighborhood and he lost no time in going to them. There he found that what his brother had said was quite true, and he experienced for himself the work of the Holy Spirit. He vividly describes his unspeakable thankfulness as on the next morning he went out to a solitary place and looking over a bridge (See Illustration No. 1 on first page) he thought over the spiritual danger from which God had delivered him.

Mr. Boardman was twenty-one years old when this transformation occurred; he was in business for himself, and was full of ambition to become wealthy, but after his conversion his mind turned to the ministry with intense desire to preach the glorious salvation of which he had become a partaker, He sold his business and stock, invested the money, "and began a course of study, which he kept up for two years, when he was drawn aside by an offer from one of his cousins to invest what he had in a business, by which he could make a fortune in a year's time. 'And,' said his cousin, by way of inducement, 'you can educate a dozen ministers by what you can make in a year.' 'Sure enough,' thought Mr. Boardman, and that settled the whole thing. Once more he was in the vortex of business life. And he did make money enough the first year to educate a dozen for the ministry, had he chosen to use it for that purpose. But by that time he had formed other plans of investing the money, for in gaining it God had left him to himself, and he had drifted back into the world.

A Sharp Discipline

was mercifully used by God to bring the wanderer back to Himself. The fortune which he had accumulated at the cost of his religious backsliding, took to itself wings, and he was threatened with financial ruin. First, a large hotel, of which he was the principal owner, had been just finished and not yet insured, when it was burnt to the ground; then came the failure of a bank in which he was largely interested; and next, the bankruptcy of one for whom he had become security for a large amount. The hand of God was evident in these losses, coming as they did with such startling rapidity, one after the other. During a brief absence of Mr. Boardman from home, on a journey undertaken in hope of saving some threatened property, his wife was taken ill, and then Mr. Boardman recognized the hand of God in his troubles. When informed, on his return, that his wife was in bed very sick indeed, he said, "Yes, that is just what I feared; the Lord is going to take away my wife; just what I deserve." He went up to her room and confessing how he had been unfaithful to Christ, he knelt down by the bedside (See illustration No. 2), and made a new consecration of himself and all he had to God, beginning anew there "a life of prayer that was never to cease while life should last."

A Removal to the West followed this change of circumstances. Mr. Boardman thought that there he might begin business with a smaller capital than would be required in New York. Accordingly, in 1840, he went to Sterling, Ill., and after residing there two years, went farther, settling at Potosi, Wis. It was there that having read the memoir of Brainerd Taylor, Mr. Boardman began most earnestly to seek the entire consecration which is described in that work, and to urge others to seek it too.

This Higher Life

became clear to his soul at a prayer-meeting in the house of a Christian lady at Potosi. "He had been looking to be made holy in himself, instead of which his eyes were opened to see, and his heart to accept, his own utter bankruptcy in himself, and his solvency in Christ alone. He now saw where had been his great mistake. He had been toiling, and trying to believe for a completed work wrought in himself, a state of sanctification, in which all would be completed, so that he might take satisfaction in his own holiness, instead of in Jesus, his sanctification. He rose from his knees in the little meeting, to tell others what had been revealed to him" (See illustration No. 3). Henceforward he was able to teach others, and to lead them to Jesus, to find every need of the soul fully met.

Potosi was the resort of rough miners, who might one day be without a cent and the next day, if they "struck a lead," immensely rich. Many of these were young men, the sons of praying mothers, and Mr. Boardman worked unceasingly to gather in these souls for the Master. A good work began which spread through the community. Two ministers hearing of it came to help, and a series of public meetings were held which were much blessed. The ministers could not remain, and while souls were being brought into the light, the meetings could not be given up. Mr. Boardman was therefore urged to take charge of them. He was very reluctant to do so, but eventually, his own conscience joining the appeals of the friends, yielded. God blessed his efforts, the meetings increased, a church was built. Mr. Boardman gave up his business, was of the United Congregational and Presbyterian churches, and became the pastor. Under his ministry there, many desperate and lawless men and women were converted, and the church became a blessing to the neighborhood. After about two years' labor in the ministry at Potosi, Mr. Boardman was led to see that it was his duty to seek a new sphere of labor. The experience of the past few years so filled his heart with joy that he longed for other Christians to enter into it, and that it might reach the largest number, he desired to reach the young men who were being trained for the ministry, that they might carry it far and wide among the churches to which they might be called. Accordingly, as soon as a successor could be found to carry on the work at Potosi, he went to Lane Seminary, Ohio, where he entered himself as a student, desiring to obtain for himself the preparation which the institution afforded for the work of the ministry, to which he had now devoted himself, while imparting to his fellow-students the light he had received. There he was made a means of much blessing.

Ordained by the Presbytery

A Visit to Mr. Beecher, at the close of Mr. Boardman's course at Lane Seminary, led to the next settlement in Christian labor. Mr. Boardman felt a great desire for missionary work, and the harder the field of labor and the greater the difficulties to be overcome, the better pleased he would be. Central Indiana seemed such a sphere, and having some acquaintance with Henry Ward Beecher, who at that time was living in Indianapolis, he and Mrs. Boardman called upon him (See Illustration No.

4) and told him what they were seeking. In his peculiarly jocose way, Mr. Beecher replied (without thinking for a moment that Mr. Boardman would really go to such a spot), "There's a place called Greenfield, about twenty miles from here, so sickly no one can stay there; everyone suffers from the miasma, and even the cattle die of liver complaint. Don't you think you had better go there? It would be a good field for hardships, and you seem to think that important." "Yes," said Mr. Boardman, "that is just the place; the Lord will take care of our health."

Arrangements were at once made with brethren anxious to build up a work at Greenfield, and it was agreed that Mr. Boardman should devote a part of his time to mission work in other spiritual deserts in the vicinity. He went there, and toiled indefatigably. The roads were impassable for vehicles in winter, and he and Mrs. Boardman traveled on horseback on their expeditions from Greenfield into the surrounding country. In one year they traveled so over five hundred miles through mud and ice. Not infrequently they had to ford swollen rivers, and on one occasion, on attempting to do so at night, they had a narrow escape of their lives. Finding that the water came up to the girths, they turned back, found accommodation for the night, and the next morning, on being ferried across in a boat (See Illustration No. 5), they saw how near they had been to death when they tried to ford the current on the previous night.

The next year Mr. Boardman was enabled to carry out his cherished desire of taking a six months' course at Yale, where he hoped, also, that a blessing, such as he had experienced at Lane, might be granted. In that, however, he was disappointed; but he was much blessed while preaching in the churches in the neighborhood during his residence at Yale. Before leaving the institution an offer was made to Mr. Boardman by the Sunday-school Union to engage in the work of supplying the West with Mission Sunday-schools.

He accepted it, and for three years gave it his undivided attention. He traveled extensively, and wherever he found a mill or any attraction for settlers, he searched among them for some Christian person who would assist him in organizing a Sunday-school. He also organized conventions in which teachers should be taught to teach and officers learn the best method of conducting Sunday-schools. More than 5,000 Sunday-schools were organized during the three years of his service, and as many more were supplied with workers. At the close of this period, Mr. Boardman wrote, and published in Boston, his work on "The Higher Christian Life," a work which has been read with profit and delight by thousands in all parts of the world.

The year 1859 found Mr. Boardman and his wife at Los Angeles, in California, where Gospel services on Sunday were arranged for in the Court-house, and eventually efforts were made to build a place of worship; but Mrs. Boardman's health having utterly failed, California was abandoned for the East. In the year 1861 came that great convulsion which disturbed not only the ordinary course of life, but all the course of Christian work: men were dying in the hospitals and on the battle-field, and but slight efforts were being made to give them religious instruction and consolation. From the first the Young Men's Christian Associations had felt the necessity of ministering, spiritually and materially, to those engaged on the battle-field. A demand for unexpectedly extensive measures of relief, however, led to the summoning of a General Convention, which was held in New York, November 14, 1861. The outcome of this gathering was the organization of

The Christian Commission,

with Mr. G. H. Stuart as its President. On July 4, 1862, "a large assembly was called to confer upon the extension of the work of the Commission. When Mr. Stuart appealed for men to go as Agents to the army, Mr. Boardman responded from the other side of the assembly-room, 'Here am I; send me.' Mr. Stuart—who had known Mr. Boardman years before—answered, 'I will send you to-morrow.' He started forthwith, and spent several weeks in visiting the military hospitals and posts in Maryland and Virginia, and shortly afterwards he was unanimously elected Secretary of the Commission.

In that capacity Mr. Boardman labored with his accustomed energy, organizing at headquarters, and ministering in the hospitals on the field. (See Illustration No. 6). Not the least interesting part of Mrs. Boardman's life of her husband is the chapter of incidents which came under his notice during his labors for the alleviation of suffering, physical and spiritual, in that gigantic conflict. He worked all through the war, gladdened by the efficient, self-sacrificing aid cheerfully rendered to the work by Christian men and women of all denominations. At the end of the war, he was quite worn out, and gladly availed himself of an opportunity placed at his disposal of paying a brief visit to Europe.

The Last Twenty Years

of Mr. Boardman's life, if less full of striking incidents, were years of marvellous labor and extraordinary blessing. It is impossible even to summarize them here. They are, however, fully described in Mrs. Boardman's deeply interesting work, which may be procured from Messrs. D. Appleton & Company, Bond Street, New York, for $1.25. In it Mrs. Boardman describes the visit she and her husband made to Europe in 1868; his second visit in 1869, when it appeared to him that he had a definite call to a definite work—the proclamation to Christians of the Gospel of full rest in Christ as an indwelling Saviour; his return home, and inauguration of Conventions for Holiness, in 1870; the publication of his second and third volumes, the one entitled, 'A Conquering Gospel,' and the other, 'Gladness in Jesus;' his entrance in 1870 upon a life of full trust in God for all temporal needs; the appearance in 1872, of a fourth volume, 'In the Power of the Spirit;' his third trip to Europe in the spring of 1873; Holiness Meetings and Conferences held in London and elsewhere, terminating with a Conference at the Agricultural Hall, which continued during the whole of January, 1875; the harvest of blessing reaped early in the same year in Edinburgh and Glasgow; return to America, and his final farewell to the land of his birth; his going again to England; the commencement in 1877 of weekly meetings at his residence in Rochester Square—which have continued almost without intermission until the present time; visit to Sweden in 1880, and a grand work done there: and the "New Departure" in the matter of "Faith-Healing," with the establishment of Bethshan and the work done there, which is described in a separate chapter by Mrs. M. Baxter. To this is added a beautiful and touching history of "his last days," full of the spirit with which God enabled the bereaved wife to bear the separation from the husband whose companion she had been for nearly fifty years.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Stuck Fast in a Rut.—Mr. Douglas Relates: "An aged farmer and a young man who had recently given himself to Christ, were driving along a country road. The young man was talking about his newly found Saviour with all the joyous enthusiasm of a young convert, when his old and somewhat cynical companion interrupted him, saying, 'Oh, yes, you know you are just in your first love; but wait a little, and then you'll—you'll—,' and he meant, though he did not say it, that he would get cold, like himself. 'And what are you?' inquired the young man. 'I am an established Christian,' was the answer. They drove on for some time in silence, until they were somewhat roughly brought up by the cart-wheel sticking fast in a deep rut. They got out to try and liberate it; the old man whipped the horse and spoke rather forcibly, but all to no purpose; the wheel remained immovable. After one of their fruitless efforts, the young man looked at the farmer and remarked, 'I guess, my friend, it's got established.' Similarly, there are some Christians who get into a deep rut, and stick there, and mistake their inactivity for established Christianity."

The Soldier in the Kitchen.— A Devoted evangelist in Scotland remarks: "One Lord's Day I was speaking at a kitchen meeting held in the house of a poor workingman. One of the regular attendants brought with him another man who had been a soldier, who had served in all parts of the world. And there in that humble Christian's house the Lord met him, and showed him the way of salvation. The Holy Spirit so blessed what He gave me to say, that that soldier was broken down, and came weeping as a little child to the Saviour's feet, and there gave himself up to Christ. As I bade him 'Good-night' he said, 'I came into this place a miserable sinner, but I go away rejoicing, and I thank God, who led me to this kitchen.' Yes, the Lord can work in the humblest dwelling as well as in the stateliest cathedral or the finest hall. He can use the humblest disciple as well as the most eloquent minister. If He makes us "wise to win souls," happy are we, and we shall shine as the stars forever, while Christ shall have all the glory."

Slamming the Carriage Door.—Mr. Minto observes: "I remember a gentleman of my acquaintance once traveling by rail. Shortly before the train started, another gentleman hurriedly entered the compartment and seated himself opposite to him. As the signal was about to be given to depart, the conductor came along, shutting all the carriage doors, and as the door of their compartment banged, the second traveler said quietly, but distinctly, 'And the door was shut.' All the time of the journey not another word was exchanged, but the first gentleman was thinking over those few words which his fellow-traveler had uttered, but could find no peace; those words continually recurred to him, and at last he determined to find the rest of the passage. He searched his Bible, and found that the door was shut on the foolish virgins who had no oil in their lamps, and that he belonged to the class which these represented. He soon found, however, that by going to the Lord Jesus he could get his lamp filled with oil, and now he thanks God that, should the Bridegroom come at once, he is prepared to receive Him with his lamp trimmed and ready."

A Tap on the Shoulder.—Captain Hatfield Remarks: "A few nights ago, at an evangelistic meeting, a minister of the Gospel said to me, 'When I came into the committee-room to-night a man touched me on the shoulder. I looked round, but did not recognize him until he brought an old scene to my recollection. About forty years ago I was a young lad, newly converted, willing and anxious to preach the Gospel. I was in Edinburgh at the time, and what astonished me was the great coolness of the people regarding religious matters. On one occasion I took out my Bible and read aloud on the street, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Presently a crowd began to gather around me, but when they heard what I was saying, they quickly went their way. A man, when he saw that all my audience was gone, approached me, and gave me this comfort. He said: "That is not the way we do in Scotland; we go regularly to church, but we do not preach in the street." I turned away much disheartened, and thought that there was not likely to be any good result from what I had done. But the man who to-night touched me on the shoulder, and spoke to me, said, "On that occasion, sir, having passed along the street and heard you preach, I became so troubled that I found no rest until I came to Jesus." Let us not think that our labor for the Lord is ever in vain. It cannot be. If we sow the seed it will not die; God will send the increase."

THE WITNESS-STAND.

A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

"We are witnesses." Acts 3 : 15.

Scientists Confuted by Facts—Steam Locomotion Declared Impossible—Scientific Proofs Unreliable—Faith Based on Testimony—The Powe of the Gospel—Three Propositions Proved by Testimony—I. It is Able to Convert a Soul—The Heathen Witnesses—Reformed Drunkards—A Profane Sea-Captain—II. Its Power to Comfort—The World a Clumsy Comforter—The Medicine for the Bereaved—III. Its Power in the Death Hour—The First Sight of a Funeral—Difference in Two Death-beds—Father and Mother Both Tranquil—Why a Christian Brother Triumphed—Witnesses who Have Tried It—A Bright Light Beaming—Madame Sontag's Magnanimity to a Blind Rival.

IN the days of George Stephenson, the perfector of the locomotive engine, the scientists proved conclusively that a railway train could never be driven by steam-power successfully without peril; but the rushing express trains from Liverpool to Edinburgh, and from Edinburgh to London, have made of the splendid achievement. Machinists and navigators proved conclusively that a steamer could never cross the Atlantic Ocean; but no sooner had they successfully proved the impossibility of such an undertaking than the work was done, and the passengers on the Cunard and the Inman and the National and the White Star lines are witnesses. There went up a guffaw of wise laughter at Professor Morse's proposition to make the lightning of heaven his errand boy, and it was proved conclusively that the thing could never be done; but now all the news of the wide world, by Associated Press, put in your hands every morning and night, has made all nations witnesses.

All the Nation Witnesses

So in the time of Christ it was proved conclusively that it was impossible for Him to rise from the dead. It was shown logically that when a man was dead, he was dead, and the heart and the liver and the lungs having ceased to perform their offices, the limbs would be rigid beyond all power of friction or arousal. They showed it to be an absolute absurdity that the dead Christ should ever get up alive; but no sooner had they proved this than the dead Christ arose, and the disciples beheld Him, heard His voice, and talked with Him, and to prove that to be true which the wiseacres of the day had proved to be impossible; the record of the experiment and of the testimony is in the text: "Him hath God raised from the dead, whereof we are witnesses."

They Took the Witness Stand,

Now, let me play the sceptic for a moment. "There is no God," says the skeptic, "for I have never seen Him with my physical eyesight. Your Bible is a pack of contradictions. There never was a miracle. Lazarus was not raised from the dead, and the water was never turned into wine. Your religion is an imposition on the credulity of the ages." There is an aged man moving in that pew as though he would like to respond. Here are hundreds of people with faces a little flushed at these announcements, and all through this house there is a suppressed feeling which would like to speak out in behalf of the truth of our glorious Christianity, as in the days of the text, crying out, "We are witnesses!"

The fact is, that if this world is ever brought to God, it will not be through argument, but Through Testimony.

You might cover the whole earth with apologies for Christianity, and learned treatises in defense of religion—you would not convert a soul. Lectures on the harmony between science and religion are beautiful mental discipline, but have never saved a soul, and never will save a soul. Put a man of the world and a man of the Church against each other, and the man of the world will, in all probability, get the triumph. There are a thousand things in our religion that seem illogical to the world, and always will seem illogical.

Our weapon in this conflict is faith, not logic; faith, not metaphysics; faith, not profundity; faith, not scholastic exploration. But then, in order to have faith, we must have testimony, and if five hundred men, or one thousand men, or five hundred thousand men, or five million men get up and tell me that they have felt the religion of Jesus Christ a joy, a comfort, a help, an inspiration, I am bound as a fair-minded man to accept their testimony. I want just now to put before you

Three Prospositions,

the truth of which I think this audience will attest with overwhelming unanimity. The first proposition is: We are witnesses that the religion of Christ is able to convert a soul. The Gospel may have had a hard time to conquer us, we may have fought it back, but we were vanquished. You say conversion is only an imaginary thing. We know better. "We are witnesses." There never was so great a change in our heart and life on any other subject as on this. People laughed at the missionaries in Madagascar because they preached ten years without one convert; but there are thirty-three thousand converts in Madagascar to-day. People laughed at Dr. Judson, the Baptist missionary, because he kept on preaching in Burmah five years without a single convert; but there are twenty thousand Baptists in Burmah to-day. People laughed at Doctor Morrison, in China, for preaching there seven years without a single conversion; but there are fifteen thousand Christians in China to-day. People laughed at the missionaries for preaching at Tahiti for fifteen years without a single conversion, and at the missionaries for preaching in Bengal seventeen years without a single conversion; yet in all those lands there are multitudes of Christians to-day. But why go so far to find to save a soul? "We are witnesses." We were so proud that no man could have humbled us; we were so hard that no earthly power could have melted us; angels of God were all around about us; they could not overcome us; but one day, perhaps at a Methodist anxious seat, or at a Presbyterian catechetical lecture, or at a burial, or on horseback, a power seized us, and made us get down, and made us tremble, and made us kneel, and made us cry for mercy, and we tried to wrench ourselves away from the grasp, but we could not. It flung us flat, and when we arose we were as much changed as Gourgis, the heathen, who went into a prayer-meeting with a dagger and a gun, to disturb the meeting and destroy it, but the next day was found crying: "Oh! my great sins! Oh! my great Saviour!" and for eleven years preached the Gospel of Christ to his fellow mountaineers, the last words on his dying lips being "Free grace!" Oh, it was free grace!

Evidences of the Gospel's Power

There is a man who was for ten years a hard drinker. The dreadful appetite had sent down its roots around the palate and the tongue, and on down until they were interlinked with the vitals of body, mind and soul; but he has not taken any stimulants for two years. What did that? Not temperance societies. Not prohibition laws. Not moral suasion.

Conversion did it.

"Why," said one upon whom the great change had come, "sir, I feel just as though I were somebody else." There is a sea-captain who swore all the way from New York to Havana, and from Havana to San Francisco, and when he was in port he was worse than when he was on sea. What power was it that washed his tongue clean of profanities, and made him a psalm-singer? Conversion by the Holy Spirit. There are thousands of people in this house to-day who are no more what they once were than a water-lily is nightshade, or a morning lark is a vulture, or day is night.

Now, if I should demand that all those people in this house who have felt the converting power of religion should rise, so far from being ashamed, they would spring to their feet with more alacrity than they ever sprang to the dance, the tears mingling with their exhilaration as they cried, "We are witnesses!" And if they tried to sing the old Gospel hymn, they would break down with emotion by the time they got to the second line:

"Ashamed of Jesus, that dear friend
On whom my hopes of heaven depend?
No! When I blush, be this my shame:
That I no more revere His name."

Again, I remark that "we are witnesses" of the Gospel's

Power to Comfort.

When a man has trouble the world comes in and says: "Now get your mind off this; go out and breathe the fresh air; plunge deeper into business." What poor advice. Get your mind off of it! when everything is upturned with the bereavement, and everything reminds you of what you have lost. Get your mind off of it! They might as well advise you to stop thinking, and you cannot stop thinking in that direction. Take a walk in the fresh air! Why, along that very street, or that very road, she once accompanied you. Out of that grass-plot she plucked flowers, or into that show-window she looked, fascinated, saying, "Come see the pictures." Go deeper into business! Why, she was associated with all your business ambition, and since she has gone you have no ambition left. Oh, this is when it tries to comfort a broken heart! I can build a Corliss engine, I can paint a Raphael's "Madonna," I can play a Beethoven's "Symphony" as easily as this world can comfort a broken heart. And yet you have been comforted. How was it done? Did Christ come to you and say, "Get your mind off this; go out and breathe the fresh air; plunge deeper into business?" No: There was a minute when He came to you—perhaps in the watches of the night, perhaps in your place of business, perhaps along the street—and He breathed something into your soul that gave peace, rest, infinite quiet, so that you could take out the photograph of the departed one and look into the eyes and the face of the dear one, and say: "It is all right; she is better off; I would not call her back. Lord, I thank Thee that Thou has comforted my poor heart."

A Clumsy World

There are Christian parents here who are willing to testify to the power of this Gospel to comfort. Your son had just graduated from school or college and was going into business, and the Lord took him. Or your daughter had just graduated from the young ladies' seminary, and you thought she was going to be a useful woman, and of long life; but the Lord took her, and you were tempted to say, All this culture of twenty years for nothing!" Or the little child came home from school with the hot fever that stopped not for the agonized prayer or for the skillful physician, and the little child was taken. Or the babe was lifted out of your arms by some quick epidemic, and you stood wondering why God ever gave you that child at all, if so soon He was to take it away. And yet you are not repining, you are not fretful, you are not fighting against God.

What Enabled You to Stand

all the trial? "Oh," you say, "I took the medicine that God gave my sick soul. In my distress I threw myself at the feet of a sympathizing God; and when I was too weak to pray, or to look up, He breathed into me a peace that I think must be the foretaste of that heaven where there is neither a tear nor a farewell nor a grave." Come, all ye who have been out to the grave to weep there—come, all ye comforted souls, get up off your knees. Is there no power in this Gospel to soothe the heart? Is there no power in this religion to quiet the worst paroxysm of grief? There comes up an answer from comforted widowhood, and orphanage, and childlessness, saying, "Aye, aye, we are witnesses!"

Again, I remark that we are witnesses of the fact that religion has power to give composure in the last moment. I shall never forget the first time I confronted death. We went across the corn-fields in the country. I was led by my father's hand, and we came to the farm-house where the

Bereavement Had Come

and we saw the crowd of wagons and carriages; but there was one carriage that especially attracted my boyish attention, and it had black plumes. I said: "What's that? what's that? Why those black tassels at the top? And after it was explained to me, I was lifted up to look upon the bright face of an aged Christian woman, who three days before had departed in triumph. The whole scene made an impression I never forgot.

In our sermons and in our lay exhortations we are very apt, when we want to bring illustrations of dying triumph, to go back to some distinguished personage—to a John Knox or a Harriet Newell. But I want you for witnesses. I want to know if you have ever seen anything to make you believe that the religion of Christ can give composure in the final hour. Now, in the courts, attorney, jury and judge will never admit mere hearsay. They demand that the witness must have seen with his own eyes, or heard with his own ears, and so I am critical in my examination of you now; and I want to know whether you have seen or heard anything that makes you believe that the religion of Christ gives composure in the final hour.

"Oh, yes," you say, "I saw my father and mother depart. There was a great Difference in their Death-Beds.

Standing by the one we felt more veneration. By the other, there was more tenderness." Before the one, you bowed, perhaps, in awe. In the other case, you felt as if you would like to go along with her. How did they feel in that last hour? How did they seem to act? Were they very much frightened? Did they take hold of this world with both hands as though they did not want to give it up? "Oh, no," you say; "no; I remember as though it were yesterday; she had a kind word for us all, and there were a few mementoes distributed among the children, and then she told us how kind we must be to our father in his loneliness, and then she kissed us good-by and went asleep as a child in a cradle."

What made her so composed? Natural courage? "No," you say; "mother was very nervous; when the carriage inclined to the side of the road, she would cry out; she was always rather weakly."

What Gave Her Composure?

Was it because she did not care much for you and the pang of parting was not great? "Oh," you say, "she showered upon us a wealth of affection; no mother ever loved her children more than mother loved us; she showed it by the way she nursed us when we were sick, and she toiled for us until her strength gave out." What, then, was it that gave her composure in the last hour? Do not hide it. Be frank, and letme know? "Oh," you say, "it was because she was so good; she made the Lord her portion, and she had faith that she would go straight to glory, and that we should all meet her at last at the foot of the throne."

Here are people who say, "I saw a Christian brother die, and he triumphed." And some one else, "I saw a Christian sister die, and she triumphed." Some one else will say, "I saw a Christian daughter die, and she triumphed." Come, all ye who have seen the last moments of a Christian, and give testimony in this cause on trial. Uncover your heads, put your hand on the old family Bible, from which they used to read the promises, and promise in the presence of high heaven that you will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. With what you have seen with your own eyes, and from what you have heard with your own ears, is there power in this Gospel to give calmness and triumph in the last exigency? The response comes from all sides, from young and old and middle-aged, "We are witnesses!"

You see, my friends, I have not put before you an abstraction or a chimera, or anything like guess-work. I present you affidavits of the best men and women, living and dead. Two witnesses in court will establish a fact. Here are not two witnesses, but thousands of witnesses—and in heaven a great multitude of witnesses that no man can number, testifying that there is power in this religion to convert the soul, to give comfort in trouble, and to afford composure in the last hour.

Millions of Witnesses,

If ten men should come to you when you are sick with appalling sickness, and say they had the same sickness, and took a certain medicine, and it cured them, you would probably take it. Now, suppose ten other men should come up and say, "We don't believe that there is anything in that medicine." "Well," I say, "have you tried it?"

"No. I never tried it, but I don't believe there is anything in it." Of course you discredit their testimony. The sceptic may come and say. "There is no power in your religion." "Have you ever tried it?" "No, no." "Then avaunt!" Let me take the testimony of the millions of souls that have been converted to God, and comforted in trial, and solaced in the last hour. We will take their testimony as they cry, "We are witnesses!"

Some time ago Professor Henry, of Washington, discovered a new star, and the tidings sped by submarine telegraph, and all the observatories of Europe were watching for that new star. Oh, hearer, looking out through the darkness of thy soul, canst thou see on thee? "Where?" you say, "where? How can I find it?" Look along by the line of the Cross of the Son of God. Do you not see it trembling with all tendeness and beaming with all hope? It is the Star of Bethlehem.

A Bright Light Beaming

"Deep horror then my vitals froze,
Death-struck I ceased the tide to stem,
When suddenly a star arose—
It was the Star of Bethlehem."

Oh, hearers, get your eye on it. It is easier for you now to become Christians than it is to stay away from Christ and heaven. When began her musical career she was hissed off the stage at Vienna by the friends of her rival, Amelia Steininger, who had already begun to decline through her dissipation. Years passed on, and one day Madame Sontag, in her glory, was riding through the streets of Berlin, when she saw a little child leading a blind woman, and she said: "Come here, my little child, come here. Who is that you are leading by the hand?" And the little child replied, "That's my mother; that's Amelia Steininger. She used to be a great singer, but she lost her voice, and she cried so much about it that she lost her eyesight." "Give my love to her," said Madame Sontag, "and tell her an old acquaintance will call on her this afternoon."

Madame Sontag

The next week in Berlin a vast assemblage gathered at a benefit for that poor blind woman, and it was said that Madame Sontag sang that night as she had never sung before. And she took a skilled oculist, who in vain tried to give eyesight to the poor blind woman. Until the day of Amelia Steininger's death, Madame Sontag took care of her, and her daughter after her. That was what the queen of song did for her enemy.

But oh, hear a more thrilling story still. Blind, immortal, poor and lost, thou who, when the world and Christ were rivals for thy heart, didst hiss thy Lord away—Christ comes now to give thee sight, to give thee a home, to give thee heaven. With more than a Sontag's generosity. He comes now to meet your need. With more than a Sontag's music He comes to plead for thy deliverance.

A Report of the Addresses Delivered at the Recent Prophetic Conference, at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers, may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers.

PRINCE FERDINAND OF BULGARIA.

See Portrait on page 540.

WHETHER the young man whom the Bulgarian Sobranje has elected to the throne vacant by the abdication of Alexander of Battenberg will be permitted to occupy it, is still an undecided question. According to the treaty of Berlin, by which the independence of Bulgaria was established, the election of a prince must be confirmed by the Sultan of Turkey with the consent of the governments which were parties to the treaty. The Prince, on being informed of his election, accepted conditionally on his receiving the approval of the Powers; but he now appears to have dispensed with that condition and has gone to Bulgaria and assumed command. The Sultan has sent a circular to the Powers asking their advice, and pending their replies remains passive. England, Austria and Italy are reported favorable, but Russia, backed by France, has lodged an indignant protest at Constantinople, which renders the Prince's position precarious.

Prince Ferdinand is twenty-six years old, having been born in Vienna, in February, 1861. His full name is Ferdinand Maximilian Charles Leopold Marie. On his mother's side he is a grandson of Louis Philippe, the citizen king of France. His eldest brother is married to the Princess Louise, daughter of the King of Belgium. His other brother, Prince Auguste, was married to a daughter of Dom Pedro II., of Brazil, the Princess Leopoldina, who died in 1871. One sister, the Princess Clotilde, is the wife of the Archduke Joseph, of Austria.

THE ISLAND OF LOANDA.

(See Illustration on page 540.)

ON the western coast of Africa, about two hundred miles south of the mouth of the Congo, is the small island of Loanda, opposite to the town now known as St. Paul de Loanda, in Angola. This island is distinguished by its having been the site of the first Portuguese settlement in West Africa. Duarte Lopez, a Portuguese historian, states that in the year 1484 a naval expedition under the command of Diego Cam sailed on a voyage of discovery along the coast of Africa. At various points along the coast he set up stone pillars, which he had brought with him for the purpose of marking the points touched at, and implying that King Joas II. of Portugal claimed dominion there by right of discovery. A few years later a settlement was made on Loanda island, and in 1534 the settlers had extended their operations northward to the Congo, had converted the King of Congo to the Roman Catholic faith, and had erected several churches in his territory, and a structure which they denominated a cathedral. This was at the capital, then known as Ambassi, or Ambezé, but which was changed to San Salvador.

The Portugese claim to the Congo, which has been so embarrassing to Stanley, had its origin thirty-six years later. The king of the Congo was attacked by the savage tribe of Jaggas, who overran his country, burnt San Salvador and its cathedral, and killed nearly half his people. The king and such of the people as could escape, fled with the Portuguese priests to an island in the Congo near Boma; from thence an appeal was sent to the king of Portugal, who responded with an expedition of six hundred men. They attacked the Jaggas with fire-arms which terrified all they did not kill, and the invaders speedily evacuated the country. A document is still in existence at St. Paul de Loanda, dated 1570, in which the king of the Congo covenants in return for this service to give the king of Portugal all the territory between the mouth of the River Congo and the mouth of the River Coanza, two hundred and fifty miles to the south. This, however, according to a Dutch geographer, was declined by the king of Portugal. The Portuguese were expelled from San Salvador about 1634, but still maintained their ascendancy at Loanda and actively engaged in the slave trade, which they continued to carry on even after 1810, when every other European nation had abandoned it.

THE THREE CENTRAL NATIONS OF THE MILLENNIUM.

By Rev. E. J. Hytche.

Prominence of Asia in Prophecy—Tarshish the only European Nation Noticed—England Probably Meant—Growing Interest in the Three Nations—Their Present Condition—Egypt's Ancient Boundaries—Will be Allied with Abyssinia—Assyria to Contain Antichrist's Eastern Capital—Palestine's Boundaries Defined—The Lesson they will Teach Europe.

It is remarkable how much of the Old Testament is devoted to the future of Asia; more especially as respects the Israelites in the millennial age. Not only is the future position of these countries indicated in unmistakable language, but their connection with restored and converted Israel is also fully revealed. Hence, it is only needful to collect and combine the dispersed passages of Scripture, where their future is foretold, to learn what their relation will be as respects our Lord and His viceroys, the risen Saints—the Bride of Christ—whose members will become (Ps. 45 : 16) "princes in all the earth" during the millennial age.

Among the events of the millennial dispensation many are pre-reported which respect those regions which either abut on or have the river

Euphrates and the Mediterranean for their boundaries. Until recently these countries have so fallen into the background as to be regarded scarcely as factors in current history. One European or Western nation is alone indicated as being powerful when every other European nation has collapsed—namely, Tarshish. As to what country Isaiah referred to admits of doubt; but most prophetical students think that England is indicated. Its position, westward as it is of that Joppa, or Jaffa, to which Jonah tried to flee, its great mineral wealth, and the magnitude of its shipping, compared with other nations, seems to indicate that

Great Britain will be the Agent

(Isa. 40 : 9) in "bringing God's sons from far, their silver and gold with them," when the Jews are restored to their God-given inheritance. If so, then England, which, with all its national sins, is the only Western people who strive to win the Jews for Christ, will thus realize the truth of the divine promise (Ps. 122 ; 6), "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem—they shall prosper who love thee!"

Current events would almost suggest that Asia—especially Assyria, Egypt and the Holy Land—holds the keys of the future of this world; even if Scripture had not revealed this fact in unmistakable terms. A bird's-eye view may be here given of these three Bible nations, which, however much they are now depressed, will, during the millennium, become the centres of Gospel light and Gospel living:

Egypt.

From its connection with the Jews during Bible times, this country has always been interesting to Bible students. Narrow in breadth, it occupies the Valley of the Nile. It had for its boundaries in ancient times, Palestine and Idumea on the east, and Lybia on the west. At present its area is about 11,000 square miles, and from its geographical position it is divided into Upper and Lower Egypt. But there is every reason to infer that in the latter day it will attain the aim of its Khedives, and so will include Abyssinia. For we read in connection with the last invasion of the Holy Land by Antichrist (Dan. 11 : 43) that "he shall have power over the precious things of Egypt; and the Libyans and Ethiopians [or Abyssinians] shall be at his steps." From this prediction we are warranted in concluding that these two countries will either be so allied, if not united, as to fulfill the avowed aim of Egypt as it is. But there is another prophecy, which leads not only to this conclusion as to the post-millennial

Union of Egypt and Abyssinia, but what is better, of their unity in the Christian faith. Hence we read (Ps. 68 : 31) "Princes shall come out of Egypt—Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God."

But before this happy era, Egypt will have to go through a terrible crisis, for it will first succumb unto the prowess of Antichrist and his confederate kings. For God, speaking through Isaiah, says (19 : 4 and 20), "I will give over Egypt unto a cruel lord, and a fierce king shall rule over them, saith Elohim." And

Who This Autocrat Is

we learn from Daniel, who predicts that the wilful king shall (Dan. 11 : 42, 43) "Stretch forth his hand over the [eastern] countries, and the land of Egypt shall not escape, but he shall have power over the treasures of gold and silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt." But in this national extremity when they are not only impoverished, but enslaved (Isa. 19 : 20), "They will cry unto Jehovah because of the oppressors—and He shall send them a Saviour and a great one." For though God for their national sins will smite, He will heal it—"and they shall do sacrifice and oblation—yea, they shall vow a vow unto Jehovah and perform it." Then with both profession and practice in harmony, Egypt will become fitted to be one of the three millennial model nations; and God shall say of it, "Blessed be Egypt My people."

Assyria.

Although there is no direct statement as to the boundaries of Assyria during the Millennium, we may conclude that its area will not be less than that of primitive times. It had then Armenia—that cradle of the human race—for its northeastern boundary—the ancient city of Baghdad for its southern limit, and the river Euphrates on the west, so that its area approximated to that of Great Britain. That it will be revived, not only nationally, but become another of God's model people during the Millennium, we learn from Isa. 19 : 23, 24. For we read that Assyria shall so serve our Lord that He will be able to say, "Blessed be Assyria, My people," and as a result of this spiritual as well as temporal benediction, the Assyrians will, for the first time, become "a blessing in the midst of the earth." One portion, however, of its territory will not participate in its millennial glory, although it will be resuscitated and become the capital of the world for a time, namely Babylon. We learn from Zechariah (5 : 11) that city will be "established and set upon her own base"—most probably from the emblem employed, namely, the "Ephah," through that spread of commerce which has already discerned from its geographical position that the "land of Shinar" is peculiarly fitted to convey the riches of the East to the West, and so to become the world's emporium (see Rev. 17 : 11–19). And when the projected railway in the valley of the Euphrates is constructed—and that is only a question of time—the revived city of Babylon will speedily fulfil the prophecy of Zechariah to the letter: for its central station will doubtless become the nucleus of a great commercial city. But its resurrection, especially as

The Eastern Capital of Antichrist

(see Isa. 14 : 4) will only be the prelude to a more utter destruction than when it fell before Cyrus. In connection with its final ruin Isaiah says that (13 : 19–22) "Babylon shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah: it shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation; neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there." Jeremiah also intimates that (50 : 37) "Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling place of dragons—an astonishment and a hissing without an inhabitant." That these prophecies have been only partially fulfilled is evidenced by two facts for which we are indebted to recent Eastern travelers, namely, that there is already built on its site a city called Hillah, with a population estimated at from 30,000 to 40,000, and the Bedouins do still encamp among the ruins of ancient Babylon, although they believe that God's curse rests upon it. But the future and lasting destruction of this approaching emporium of the world's wealth and its godless grandeur is certain; and instead of Babylon remaining as the culmination of the world's God-defying power (Jer. 51 : 39), the "wild beasts of the desert, with the wild beasts of the islands, shall dwell therein, and it shall be no more inhabited for ever."

The Holy Land.

The boundaries of the land given by God to Abraham and his posterity were thus definitely stated (Exod. 23 : 21). "I will set thy bounds from the Red Sea, even unto the Sea of the Philistines (or Mediterranean), and from the desert unto the river" (Euphrates).

In the days of our Lord, besides being only a province of Rome, it did not include a moiety of this territory, and even during the reign of Solomon, when the kingdom of Judah had its widest extent (1 Kings 4 : 21), the largest portion eastward and southward of Jordan was semi-independent, their kings only paying tribute to him as their suzerain. But we know from the allotments which will be given to the reunited twelve Israelitish tribes, as described by Ezekiel (48 : 17) that they will possess the whole of their God-given territory. For though the Jews are a nation without a country, and are powerful in every country but their own, they will, as a restored and godly nationality, become a model people to the Gentiles at large, and God will again be able to say, "Blessed be Israel, Mine inheritance."

May we not conclude from the benediction thus pronounced on Egypt, Assyria, and Palestine, that these three countries will not only become the metropoles of the world, but the centre of Gospel light? Nor need this cause any surprise, for they will only resume as the fount of all true religion. From these countries, even from the most ancient, Assyria, have emanated all we know of the religious history of mankind; and the recently deciphered cuneiform cylinders of Nineveh tell how the primitive faith had all the elemental truths as well as the knowledge of the historical facts of Revelation.

Their Ancient Position,

Nor can we conceive of any countries apart from the Divine blessing, so fitted to become metropoles of the world For a cursory glance at the map on Mercator's projection, will show that they are planted near the centre of Europe, Asia, and Africa; and are so eminently fitted to become the centres of that true commerce, whose motto will not be the popular godless one of "buying cheap and selling dear," but the unselfish interchange of the material products of the varying climes of this world.

Again, it seems not too much to infer that these primitive nations are destined in the Divine purpose to teach which is dying of pseudo-civilization, and which not only ignores God but teaches that in the accumulation of wealth, or in the popularizing of science and art, or what is styled "culture," is to be found the secret of moralizing the masses, and so of securing human happiness. Christendom has yet to learn, with all its professed acceptance of the teachings of our Lord, that a "man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesses!" And I cannot but think that these primitive nations are destined by the Holy Spirit to recall the Western world to the period when, if there were few, if any, millionaires, there were none degraded by that pauper spirit which is so rampant in Europe.

A Lesson to Europe,

But whether this social outcome be a mere poetic dream or not, we are warranted in concluding, that, as regards their spiritual relations at least, they will become models to the world at large. For when God, by His servant Isaiah, declares that during the millennium they will be a "blessing in the midst of the earth," we may be quite sure that it is not mere material wealth that is referred to, but rather that spiritual weal which will enter into and color eternity. Thus will that East from which we have derived both our descent and our religion, assume its original position as a teacher of mankind, for God has put this seal on its future. "Blessed be Egypt, My people; and Assyria, the work of My hands; and Israel, Mine inheritance."

A LADY SAVED FROM INSANITY.

SOME seven years ago, Miss Carrie Webb, a daughter of one of the deacons of the Bedford Avenue Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., was taken ill with bronchitis and had a painful cough. She never fully recovered from her sickness, and, at length, became a confirmed invalid. Finally, she was obliged to give up all kinds of work. Her mind suffered along with her body, and, though not insane, she had strange and uncontrollable fancies. Her friends feared that, yielding to some fatal disease. she was going fast. Last winter she had neuralgia, which reduced still more her general health and aggravated her other troubles. She often prayed that she might die, believing that she was no use. About two months ago she went on a visit to Northport, L. I., to try if change of scene would do good. Her father and sister saw her off at the depot with gloomy forebodings of her future.

At Northport, as she continued to grow worse, an eminent physician was called in, but he could do her no good. She was then staying with her cousin, but she afterward removed to the house of her brother, a minister and a man of strong faith. There she read a book on Divine Healing, and was so deeply impressed that she begged her brother to anoint her and pray for her recovery. He complied, and he and the Presbyterian minister prayed with the girl. There was no immediate change, but about a week afterward the sufferer was seized with acute pains, and as she was about to pray, as she had done before, for release by death, the thought came to her mind that she should pray for recovery, believing that God would answer her prayer. When she rose from her knees she felt a strength and buoyancy she had not felt for years, her pains were gone and her mind was clear. She has now returned to her home in perfect health, and full of joy and thankfulness.

A HAIRBREADTH ESCAPE FROM A MINE.

ONE of the most extraordinary escapes from death, in the records of mining operations, is described in a Philadelphia journal, as it was given to the reporter, by one of the escaped men. It shows that in some cases of peril, as it is in every case where men recognize that they are in danger of eternal death, the only way of escape is not to give way to despair, but to earnestly seek deliverance from above (Ps. 116: 3, 4).

Two miners, named respectively Richards and Lewis, were descending a pit which had been for some time idle, to search for some tools which had been left in one of the lower workings. No men were at work in the pit, and the journey was therefore one of the gloomiest imaginable. The two men entered the car and were lowered to within thirty-five feet of the bottom of the shaft. Then water appeared upon the floor of the carriage, and Lewis remarked that their feet would get wet, but not thinking there was any danger. Richards, who had more experience, understood the significance of that damp floor, and knew that the shaft was flooded. His inference was only too true, the water having overflowed a dam at the Rock vein above, and filled the mine to the depth of thirty-five feet. When Richards saw the water, with a spring from the side of the carriage he reached the side of the shaft, and clung to a water-pipe that passed down the shaft. He called to Lewis to do the same, but the latter, realizing the danger now, was too excited to jump, and failed to follow. The engineer at the top of the shaft was not aware of the danger below, and kept letting the car containing Lewis down into the water. Presently, however, Lewis got free of the carriage, and, recovering his presence of mind, he rose to the surface and grasped the rope which was attached to the roof of the carriage, and floundered about. In the meantime, Richards, who had jumped from the car, was undergoing a very severe struggle. One hundred and fifty feet separated him from the only place now left to signal the engineer. Hand over hand he clambered up the pipe. At last he gained the signalling place, but it was slow and difficult work, in which to relax the the hold would have been certain death. It took him three-quarters of an hour to reach the signalling place, and all that time Lewis was clinging for life to the rope. Richards quickly gave the signal, and the engineer hoisted the carriage from the water. When it gained the top of the water, Lewis slid down the rope to the car, and Richards jumped in when it reached him, so both were saved by Richards's desperate exertions.

THE JESUITS' BOOMERANG.

IN a letter to the Church the Rev. H. H. Jessup D. D. of Beirut, Syria, mentions a remarkable instance of good effected through an effort of the Jesuits to do evil. He says: A young man, a Lebanon Maronite, called on me three days ago, and said that he was converted to the Protestant faith by reading the Jesuit translation of the Bible. You will remember that they published a translation of the Vulgate Bible into Arabic some years ago, to supplant, if possible, the Bible published at our press. We rejoiced at this enterprise, and do still rejoice. This young man said that on first seeing the difference between Romish doctrine and the Jesuit Bible he abandoned all religion, thinking there could be no true Church. Then he bought more books and read, until he embraced the evangelical faith. His father and the priest then burned up his whole library, Arabic lexicons, grammars, the Bible and all. He was sent to the Maronite college in Beriut to be cured of his heresy, but his faith grew stronger in Christ as the only Saviour. His father at length became enlightened, and is now in hearty sympathy with him, and as he is a man of wealth they have no fear of persecution.

A JAPANESE PROFLIGATE.

IN a letter to the Missionary Herald, Dr. Davis, of Kyoto, in Japan, announces the conversion of a whole Japanese family under remarkable circumstances. From his letter it appears that a young farmer whose father was dead, fell into a depraved way of life and became a terror to his mother and sisters. He is about thirty years old and has a young family. So distressed about him was one of his sisters, that she resolved to sacrifice herself to reform him. She knew no religion save Buddhism, and she began to practice various austerities to try to get the gods to help her, Among other things, she fasted again and again during two years, sometimes going without food for forty days together. About a year ago her profligate brother heard of Christianity; but, as it conflicted with his life, he would not embrace it. But six months afterward he was converted, and united with the church. The change was so great in him that it astonished all the members of his family and his friends, and it made a great impression all over the province. It was so great that it led the mother and the sister to examine Christianity, and the result is that the mother was received into the church at the communion before the last, and Dr. Davis has now baptized his wife and his younger sister and two other members of the family, with his child. The sister who in her blindness sought help for her brother from her gods, has also learned the way of salvation and been baptized.

A HEROIC CHINESE CONVERT.

THE Rev. H. F. Noyes, of Canton, China, reports a remarkable case of a convert's heroism in sacrificing what is a large fortune in China, rather than abjure his Christian faith. He says: Ng-Hin-ki, a young man of more than usual ability and energy, joined the Third Presbyterian Church, Canton, some time ago. His foster-mother was bitterly enraged at him for so doing, and all his brothers were greatly displeased. Their persecution—especially that of his foster-mother—became so bitter that we gave him a place as doorkeeper in one of our chapels, one hundred and thirty miles from Canton, receiving for his services $2.50 a month. Six months afterwards he received a letter from an elder of the Third Church, advising him not to return to Canton, as his foster-mother and brothers had brought a charge against him of being unfilial, which in China is a very serious crime. Instead, however, of remaining away from Canton, he at once returned, saying that he would go himself and meet the charge. He found, on arriving, that all his property—one shop and three dwelling-houses—had been sold for $1,400. He was brought before a military officer and ordered to light three sticks of incense and place them before an idol. He was told that if he obeyed, the draft for $1,400, lying on the table, would be restored to him; if he refused, he would not only lose that, but also his monthly allowance, which, capitalized, was worth $840; and his betrothal, which had cost him $300, would be made null and void: forfeiting in all, $2,240 and his betrothal. That is, for a Chinaman, a comfortable and permanent livelihood. Sign and save, refuse and lose! He refused, and was cast out penniless. He entered the training-school, and after three years of faithful study, was appointed to preach. He is now doing a useful and encouraging work at Sam Kong, three hundred miles from Canton. He has lately received overtures from his family for reconciliation. A great change has come over them; they are not only willing to give him a cordial welcome, but to hear the Gospel.

AUNT AMANDA'S HEROISM.

THE remarkable preservation of a lightning express train from destruction through the heroism of an old colored woman is reported by the Louisville Courier-Journal. It states that on August 11, the very day on which the awful accident at Chatsworth, Ill., occurred, Amanda Barker was walking along the track of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Indianapolis road, near Glenwood, Ind., on her way to a farmhouse, where she was to work during the day. She had just passed the small station at Glenwood, when, on turning a sharp curve in the road, she was horrified to see some distance ahead the smouldering remains of what had a short while before been a stout, substantial bridge connecting embankments 650 feet apart, and spanning a chasm ninety-five feet deep. The old woman turned her steps backward, but had gone scarcely a hundred yards, when she heard the shrill scream of the whistle, directly ahead of her. It was the east-bound lightning express, due at Glenwood at 5:45 o'clock. She loosed an old brown apron she wore, to use as a signal flag, and ran around a bend in the road, when she saw the train thundering down upon her, only a few hundred feet ahead. The burning bridge was about the same distance behind her, and she knew that to let the train pass meant certain death to many of the souls on board. She raised the improvized flag high above her head, and waved it frantically, standing in the centre of the track, where her presence could not go unnoticed. For a while it seemed to her that no one saw her, but she kept her position, determined to stop the train or die on the track.

At last the engineer saw her and reversed his engine, bringing it to a standstill a few yards in front of the old woman. Leaning out of the cab window, and thinking the negress drunk or crazy, he called out: "Well, well, what is it?"

"For mercy's sake, mister," she answered, "don't go any further. The bridge is burned down, right in front of you; indeed it is."

The trainmen had by this time been attracted by the stoppage at this out of the way place, to the front of the train, and, from the sincerity of the old woman, believed her story. A number of them followed her around the bend and there verified the truth of her statements. A large purse was made up for their benefactress, but she positively refused to take any money.

Christian people who think they are too insignificant to do anything in the Lord's service may learn a lesson from Aunt Amanda. Weak and old as she was, she was able to give warning of danger and save many lives. How many souls going headlong to destruction might be saved if they were so warned! (James, 5 20)

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Burning of the Inman Steamship City of Montreal, reported by cable on Friday last, adds another disaster to this year's long list. The news was carried to Queenstown by the steamship York City, of Baltimore, Md., which providentially rescued most of the shipwrecked passengers and crew. The City of Montreal left New York on Saturday, August 6, for Liverpool with 136 passengers and a crew of about eighty. She carried a miscellaneous cargo, valued at $350,000. On the following Wednesday (August 10), when about four hundred miles from Newfoundland, the ship was found to be on fire. The discovery was made after eleven o'clock at night, when nearly all the passengers had retired. They were speedily aroused and hurried on deck. The smoke quickly spread through the ship, filled all the passages and poured up through the ventilating shafts. When it was certain that every one was on deck, the hatches were battened down in the hope of stifling the fire, and nine hoses flooded the hold with water. The captain still believed he could save the ship, but before dawn the steel deck became almost too hot to stand upon, and the roar of the fire below was terrific. At length the flames burst through the hatches and shot up a hundred feet high. Then hope was abandoned. The captain ordered the boats lowered and all on board were distributed among them. One of them—the first lowered—pushed off from the ship contrary to the captain's orders, before she had taken off her full share of passengers. That boat, on which there were thirteen men, was not seen afterward. The occupants of the other boats were picked up by the York City, were hospitably treated and carried to Queenstown.

The Pennsylvania Republican Convention at Harrisburg, on August 17, was at issue with the Ohio section of the party on more than one subject. The most noticeable difference was in its candidate for the Presidency. It did not indorse Ohio's nomination of Senator Sherman, but proclaimed its steadfast adherence to the candidate of 1884. The platform adopted states that "the Republicans of Pennsylvania, the native State of the Hon. James G. Blaine, will view with high pleasure his nomination for the Presidency in the campaign of 1888. Accident cannot abate the love of a great party nor the admiration of a great people for a statesman true alike to his convictions and to his country." As was expected, the platform was strongly protectionist. The plank on this subject says: "We favor a tariff for the sake of nurturing American manufactures until the industries and resources of this country furnish our people with every item of consumption they can naturally produce, and for the purpose of protecting home labor against foreign labor, as well as its products." It demands an increase of the pension list, and declares that "The surplus in the Treasury cannot better be distributed than in the enlargement of the general pension list, so as to include all honorably discharged soldiers of the Union army who may be in absolute need of public aid." The Convention pronounced itself in favor of "submitting to the vote of the people the prohibitory constitutional amendment," which, doubtless, would be more easily defeated if submitted now than in a few years' time. The platform also denounces the President and his administration in strong terms, and protests against color discrimination in the South.

The Serious Consideration Given by the Knights of Labor to the subject of taxation is only another indication of the general public inclination to make the financial issue the most prominent of the coming elections. This is outside party lines, and in the discussion parties are becoming somewhat mixed. Though the Knights did not pledge the Order to any policy, either of Protection or Free Trade, they and the workingmen generally appear to be resolved to insist on some reduction of taxation, either in Internal taxation or the tariff. The fact that the Treasury is full, and the revenue is far greater than the Government needs, while men find it increasingly difficult to support their families, is spoken of everywhere as an anomaly that demands immediate rectification. Discontent is growing extensively and rapidly, and the complaint is loud and bitter that the taxation on commodities involves the poorer classes bearing the largest share of the public burdens, while the wealthy practically escape. This opinion, which is based on necessarily imperfect knowledge, is increasing the hostility of the poor to the rich, which is our great social danger.

The Decision of the Secretary of the Interior as to the Indemnity Lands was published last week. In a letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office he states that he has examined the showing of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company in response to the rule, and apparently rejects the claim of the Company. He goes on to say: On a full consideration of the whole subject, I conclude that the withdrawal for indemnity purposes, if permissible under the law, was solely by virtue of Executive authority, and may be revoked by the same authority; that such revocation would not be a violation of either law or equity; and that said lands having been so long withheld for the benefit of the company, the time has arrived when public policy and justice demand the withdrawal should be revoked, and some regard had for the rights of those seeking and needing homes on the public domain. I therefore direct that all lands under withdrawals heretofore made and held for indemnity purposes, under the grant to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, be restored to the public domain, and opened to settlement under the general land laws, except such lands as may be covered by approved selections; provided the restoration shall not affect rights acquired within the primary or granted limits of any other Congressional grant." This will be good news for settlers, and the Railroad Company cannot complain that they have been unjustly hurried in making their choice of land.

The Coroner's Jury in the Chatsworth Disaster of August 10, has shown its anxiety to shield the Railroad Company rather than to promote the safety of the public by an exhaustive and effective verdict. It finds that the foreman in charge of the section which included the burned bridge, disobeyed positive orders, which required him to examine the culvert at the close of the day's work, and that he was guilty of gross and criminal carelessness in leaving fires burning near the woodwork. The evidence seems to prove that Coughlin deserves condemnation, although he denies this charge. It is matter for regret that the jury did not condemn the Railroad Company for sending a double-headed train heavily laden across such a bridge at a high rate of speed, and that it did not endorse the public demand for a law prohibiting the building of wooden bridges and requiring the companies to replace all existing bridges with structures of iron or stone with all fair speed. Possibly some good in this direction may come from the further investigation, which the Railroad Commissioners of Illinois are instituting.

Unusual Mortality from Cholera has Occurred in India. A despatch from Simla states that the medical returns show that 70,000 persons died from cholera in the Northwest Provinces during June and July. This district has heretofore escaped the most fatal visitations of the plague. Cholera is always to be found in India, where the mortality from this cause in 1885 was about 500,000, but the disease usually does its work for the most part in the district extending two hundred miles on each side of Calcutta and northward to the slopes of the Himalayas. This year the disease has made greatest havoc at Peshawur, on the Afghan frontier, and has shown itself in the interior of Afghanistan.

A Renewal of the Rumor that Mr. H. M. Stanley is dead was reported last week. The news came from Paris and was said to be based on a despatch from Zanzibar which stated that Stanley had been "massacred after being deserted by his escort." The persistency of the rumor causes some uneasiness, but its truth is not credited anywhere but in Paris, where Stanley is unpopular. At the Congo administration offices in Brussels the rumor is considered a pure fabrication. The Herald's correspondent says it is admitted that Stanley may have been abandoned by his escort since the last authentic advices. In fact, late private letters assert that he has had some difficulties with his escort, These may have taken a tragic turn; but it is not thought that they have. The last letter received from Stanley himself was dated June 17. In it he states that he arrived that very day at Aruwimi Falls in good order and in good condition, and thanks the Free State for assistance lent him during his voyage on the Congo. If Stanley had been killed since, the news might have come from the western coast, but could only have reached Zanzibar five months afterwards—namely, next November—even by the shortest route—Tanganyika Lake.

The British Liberals Were Elated Last Week by another victory at the polls. The Member of Parliament for one of the districts of Cheshire, who was a follower of Lord Hartington, died recently, and an election was held on August 13, to fill his place. At the last election he was opposed, in the Liberal interest, by Mr. Brunner, a local employer, but was elected by a majority of 458, in a total vote of 8,374. The new contest was between Mr. Brunner and Lord Henry Grosvenor, a Liberal Unionist. Mr. Brunner, the Gladstone candidate, has now been elected by a majority of 1,129, in a total vote of 9,095. The result has a personal piquancy apart from its public significance. Lord Henry Grosvenor, the defeated candidate, is a son of the Duke of Westminster, who owes his title of "Duke" to Mr. Gladstone. When he received that favor at Mr. Gladstone's hands, he commissioned an eminent artist to paint Mr. Gladstone's portrait to adorn the walls of the ducal palace; but when he quarreled with the statesman on the Irish question he took the portrait down, and sent it to be sold by auction. That exhibition of personal feeling was condemned at the time, and this humiliation of him and his son by the Gladstone candidate, is regarded as retribution.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Death of Rev. Daniel Curry, D. D., LL. D., the eminent Methodist clergyman, took place on August 17. Dr. Curry was well and widely known throughout the country, both on account of his pulpit efforts and its literary ability. He was seventy-nine years old, having been born in New York State in 1808. He commenced his ministry in Georgia, but came North a few years before the war, and joined the New York East Conference. He was editor-in-chief of the Christian Aavocate for twelve years, and since he quitted that office he has successively edited The Methodist, The National Repository, and the Methodist Magazine. He also prepared an American edition of Southey's Life of Wesley, wrote a life of Bishop Clark, and other well-known works. It is remarkable that during the past twelve months four members of this family have died. They were two of Dr. Curry's brothers and his only sister.

Fifteen Women and Girls on a Falling Elevator in Mercer Street, New York, on Thursday last passed a moment of frightful peril. They are employed by a firm engaged in the manufacture of shirts and collars, and the firm permits all employees, who arrive punctually, to ride on the elevator from the basement to the workroom on the sixth floor. Those who are late, have to walk up. On Thursday morning fifteen of them were crowded in on one trip of the elevator, which is simply an iron frame with wire screen enclosures. When the elevator reached the third story, the man in charge stopped it sharply to allow some one to get off. Instantly, something snapped, and the elevator plunged down the shaft like a pile-driver. The girls gave a terrific shriek as the car fell, and when it reached the bottom most of them had sprained ancles, and all were terrible shaken. One woman and the man in charge were killed. The woman had fallen out headlong during the descent, and the elevator-man had been pressed outward by the surging crowd of girls, the floors striking his back as he passed them and breaking it. Every one will ask how he could have been pressed outward when the elevator was protected by the wire-screens. The explanation is simple. He had omitted to close the screens, or neither he nor the woman would have been killed. It is marvellous that with the means of safety provided ready to his hand, he should have neglected to use them. It is still more astonishing that when the safety of the soul is at stake, and the means of salvation are provided, men persist in neglecting them, and perish everlastingly (Heb. 2 : 3).

Jubilee Pardons for Deserters are Being issued in large numbers by Mr. William R. Hoare, the British acting Consul, in New York. It appears that connected with Queen Victoria's Jubilee celebration, in June last, was the issue of a proclamation offering a pardon to all who had deserted from the British army, prior to June 21. Deserters desiring to take advantage of the offer, were required to apply to the British consul, in any foreign city, and state their case, when they would be supplied with a certificate, permitting them to come and go in any of her Majesty's dominions, without molestation. The New York Consul has had most of this work to do, this city having apparently been a favorite refuge for deserters. Mr. Hoare says that most of those applying for certificates are young men who enlisted under peculiar circumstances and quickly repented of it. Some had quarreled with their parents; others had been distressed by an unhappy love affair, and in hasty desperation rushed into the service, only to wish themselves out again. Hundreds had thus deserted in the past five years, and the majority of them had come to America, established themselves in life, and never expected to return to British territory. Now, drawn by property and family ties, they are eager to accept the pardon and return to the positions from which they had fled. Many, the Consul says, have already returned, and scarcely a steamer has left the harbor since July 1, without bearing away some of these pardoned deserters. One cannot but wish that the same eagerness to take advantage of a proclamation of pardon was manifested by those who have deserted the service of the King of kings (Isa. 55 : 7).

A Railroad Agent's Fight with a Bear is described in the San Francisco Examiner of August 5. It states that while Hoyt Sherman, the tourist agent of the Union Pacific, was conducting a party from Beaver Cañon to the Yellowstone Park, a distance of 125 miles through a beautiful country, they camped out for the night on their way. Before lying down to sleep the agent walked around the camp to see that all was right. As he passed under the trees he saw in the moonlight a black object crawling toward the camp. Thinking it was a man plotting robbery he drew his pistol and waited. As the object advanced, he found himself face to face with a black bear. Taking deliberate aim with his pistol he pulled the trigger, but it did not go off. He had forgotten to reload it that night. It was too late to run away, and the agent drew his knife and prepared for a struggle, It soon came, and it was a fight for life. The bear hugged and the agent used his knife, until at last, just as the man was almost at his last gasp, the beast's hold relaxed and he fell back dead. It is wonderful that the man should have been the victor in a close encounter with an antagonist so much more powerful than himself; but the sharpness of his weapon made up for the disproportion of strength. That is the case of the Christian in his conflicts with the Evil One. He is sure to conquer if he is armed with the weapons provided for him (Eph. 6 : 13-17).

A Marriage by Proxy Will Shortly be Celebrated at Corunna, Spain. The necessary papers were prepared in Galveston, Texas, on August 9, by a local justice. It appears that some years ago a young Spaniard emigrated from Corunna and settled in Galveston. Before leaving, he promised the young lady to whom he was engaged, that as soon as his circumstances would admit of his keeping a wife, he would return and marry her. He has prospered here, but his business would suffer seriously by his leaving it to take the promised journey to be married. He, therefore, asked the justice to prepare a document similiar to a power of attorney, authorizing a gentleman at Corunna to represent him at the wedding. The justice demurred to this novel method, but the young Spaniard assured him that the wedding by proxy would be quite legal under Spanish law, and that his representative's promises on his behalf would be accepted. The justice, having made inquiries, found that his client's statement was correct, and he, therefore, drew out the papers which have now been forwarded to Spain. The ceremony will be a curious one, and, American ladies will think, a somewhat unsatisfactory one, but if the Spanish bride has faith that her distant lover will fulfill in the New World the promises made in his name in the Old World, she will come out to him with confidence. It is such faith that should inspire the Church, the Bride of Christ. The promises made in His name by His inspired Apostles will surely be fulfilled (Eph. 5 : 25-27).

A Fire on a Gunpowder-Laden Schooner in New York Bay frightened her crew out of her a few days ago. The schooner was getting ready to sail for Porto Rico with a cargo among which were a hundred and fifty kegs of gunpowder and a carboy of oil of vitriol. On the night before the ship was to sail the vitriol exploded. Some of it leaked down into the hold and instantly set fire to a bale of hay. The explosion and the fire frightened the crew, and nearly all of them made a rush for the boat, which they pushed away from the schooner. The colored cook did not have time to jump into the boat, but he flung overboard the main hatch and jumped after it. In their anxiety to get away from the schooner and her cargo of powder the men upset the small boat and were thrown into the water. The captain and mate had been left on board with no means of escape. They set to work with a will and speedily checked the fire. In the meantime the half-drowned men were rescued by a passing boat, but they refused to go back on the schooner from which they had escaped, declaring that they would not sail on a vessel carrying such a dangerous cargo. Their decision is not surprising; men having any regard for their lives would feel uncomfortable with those destructive explosives beneath them. There is not the same prudence manifested in regard to spiritual peril, though there is infinitely more cause. The doom of this world is certain, yet all men cling to it (II Peter 3 : 7).

Seventy-five Thousand Dollars are Lying unclaimed in the savings banks of Connecticut. A law of that State requires the banks to publish annually a report giving the names and amounts due to depositors who have not been heard of for twenty years. This year's report shows that $75,000 is due such depositors. An examination of the names of the depositors suggests the belief that many of them were soldiers in the war, and that they were killed, either leaving no heirs, or heirs ignorant of the deposits in the banks. It may be safely inferred that all the depositors are dead, or that they have not been in need, as they have not drawn on the banks for their money. Men do not act toward banks as Christians often act in respect to the treasures which God is willing to supply to His children. Those treasures are boundless, but though God invites His people to call upon Him in their need they fail to take Him at His word (Mal. 3 : 10).

BRIEF NOTES.

The evangelistic services in Cooper Union will commence in November. We are glad to learn that they are to be conducted by Mr. Charles Herald, who is a most efficient and successful worker.

Mr. Cyrus Sturdivant, the well-known gospel temperance advocate, is working in the Province of Nova Scotia, and is having good meetings.

Mr. Charles Herald is assisting in the tent work in Chicago. At the close of his engagement there, he goes to Hartford, Conn., and will come to New York at the end of October.

The New York Young Men's Christian Association is to build a new headquarters, and the Twenty-third Street building will be operated as a branch. The library will be in the new building.

The cottage at Mt. McGregor, in which General Grant died, is to be devoted by its owner, Joseph W. Drexel, the New York banker, to the use, free of expense, of surviving Union soldiers of the war.

Dr. Fairbairn, the famous Congregationalist minister, who is now a Professor at Oxford University, England, preached at Chatauqua recently. He surprised his hearers by declaring himself a believer in evolution.

Mr. George W. Cable, the author of Dr. Sevier and other famous works, has been giving a series of Bible studies at Northampton. He has now undertaken to conduct Dr. Meredith's Saturday afternoon class in Tremont Temple, Boston.

Returns from 146 counties in Texas are published by the Voice. Their net anti Prohibition majority is 88,412. The other forty counties are small. All the Republican counties but three gave large liquor majorities. Fifteen of them added 20,000 majority to the liquor vote.

Between fifty and sixty members of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, which held its sessions recently in New York, met for prayer on Sunday afternoon. The Rev. Dr. Peet, editor of the American Antiquarian, presided, and an address was given by Professor Henry Drummond, of Glasgow, author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World."

A Seaman's Manual of Worship has been issued by the American Seamen's Friend Society, which will be found very useful on board ships where there is no chaplain. It contains one hundred and seventy hymns, appropriate for services at sea and regular forms for use on the Lord's day, daily morning and evening worship with prayers for various occasions and forms of service for the burial of the dead. The forms for the Lord's day have been chiefly taken from the Book of Common Prayer, the others have been composed expressly for the Manual.

An Excellent Opportunity for Boys and Girls now on their vacation to earn pocket money, now offers itself by canvassing for "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" and selling it weekly from house to house in their own neighborhood. A number of boys have commenced this since the holidays, in preference to doing anything else. Send postal card at once, for terms.

THE COVENANTER.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"All the paths of the Lord are mercy, and truth unto such as keep His covenant and His testimonies."—Psalm 25 : 10.

David in Affliction—Under a Sense of Sin—Looking Godward — God's Children Going Home When it Grows Dark—I. The Covenanters—A Picture of a Scottish Covenanter—The True Covenanter — A Noble Being—The Covenant Written in His Heart — Is Zealous—Walks by Faith—Is a Custodian of Truth till Christ Comes. —II. His Experience — God Approaches Him—Mercy in His Paths — Flowers Growing in Ruts—Personal Testimony—Large Gifts After a Night's Suffering—Boys Fishing in a Brook.

THIS psalm is intensely earnest. "Unto Thee, Oh Lord, do I lift up my soul." The sentences are ingots of gold. Every word is exceeding weighty with sense and sincerity. I take it that one reason for this weight is the fact that David was in affliction. He says, "I am desolate and afflicted. Look on mine affliction and my pain." Pain is a great disenchanter. Flowery speeches suit the summer-tide of our health, but we find them not in the winter of our grief. Pain kills fine phrases as a mighty frost kills butterflies and moths. You can play with religion until you are laid low, and then it becomes serious work. The romance of religion is one thing; the reality of it is another. May our meditations this morning be solid, and leave on our minds no savor of unreality!

Mixed also with David's suffering there was a sense of sin. Read verse eleven, "For thy Name's sake, O Lord, pardon mine iniquity; for it is great." And again, in verse eighteen, "Forgive all my sins." No man need have a worse trouble than conviction of sin. A thorn in the flesh is nothing to

A Thorn in the Conscience.

A sense of sin is another great disenchanter. When sin is truly felt we come before the great Father, not with mimic sorrow, but with downright soul-weeping and heart-breaking, we cry to Him, "God be merciful to me a sinner." If we feel either of these two things, pain or sin—and who among us can hope to be without them at all times?—then shall we see the solemn side of life, and look for those sure consolations by which we may be sustained. I hope that our subject to-day may help in that direction.

One other thing is notable about David in writing this psalm: whatever his trouble might be, and however deep his sense of sin, he looked Godward always. He cries, "Unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul." "Remember thou me for thy goodness' sake, O Lord." In our text his mind dwells upon "the paths of the Lord." The ungodly fly away from God when He chastens them, but the saints kiss the chastening rod. The child of God goes home when it grows dark. We seek our healing from the hand which has wounded us. With your eyes looking right on, and your eyelids straight before you, come with me to the rallying-place of the Lord.

In my text I see two things worth talking about. The first is, the spiritual Covenanter—"such as keep His covenant and His testimonies;" and, secondly, here is his notable experience—"all the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep His covenant."

I. Observe in the text the footprint of the spiritual Covenanter. You have all heard of their decision of mind and force of character. Their theory of government for the kingdom of Scotland was quaintly unpractical, but it grew out of true and deep fear of the Lord. The Old Testament spirit in them was not enough tinctured with the meekness of the Lord Jesus, or they would not have touched the weapon of steel; but in this mistake they were very far from being alone. In my bedroom I have hung up the picture of an old Covenanter. He sits in a wild glen with his Bible open before him on a huge stone. He leans on his great broadsword, and his horse stands quietly at his side. Evidently he smelleth the battle afar off, and is preparing for it by drinking in some mighty promise. As you look into the old man's face you can almost hear him saying to himself, "For the crown of Christ and the Covenant, I would gladly lay down my life this day." They did lay down their lives, too, right gloriously, and Scotland owes to her covenanting fathers far more than she knows.

The Old Covenanters of Scotland,

It was a grand day that in which they spread the Solemn League and the Covenant upon the tombstones of the old kirkyard in Edinburgh, and all sorts of men came forward to set their names to it. Glorious was That Roll of Worthies.

There were the lords of the Covenant and the common men of the Covenant; and some pricked a vein and dipped the pen into their blood, that they might write their names with the very fluid of their hearts. All over England, also, there were men who entered into a like solemn league and covenant, and met together to worship God according to their light, and not according to human order-books. They were resolved upon this one thing—that Rome should not come back to place and power while they could lift a hand against her; neither should any other power in throne or Parliament prevent the free exercise of their consciences for Christ's cause and covenant. These stern old men, with their stiff notions, have gone. And what have we in their places? Indifference and frivolity. We have no Roundheads and Puritans; but then we have scientific dress-making, and we play lawn-tennis! We have no contentions for the faith; but then our amusements occupy all our time. This wonderful nineteenth century has become a child, and put away manly things. Self-contained men, men in whom is the true grit, are now few and far between, as compared with the covenanting days.

But I want to speak this morning, not of the old Covenanters, but of those who at this day keep the covenant of the Lord. Would to God we had among us great companies of "such as keep His covenant, and remember His commandments to do them!"

The True Covenanter

is one who has found out God, and therein has made the greatest discovery that was ever made. He is determined to be right with God; for he feels that if he were right with all his fellow-creatures and everything about him, yet if he were wrong with God he would be out of order in the main point. He has settled in his own soul that he will know the Lord, be right with Him, at peace with Him, yea, and in league with Him. It is not natural to men thus to cling to God, and seek after Him; but it has become natural to this man, so that he hungers and thirsts for the living God. By this very fact the man is ennobled: he is lifted up above the brutes that perish. There must be a divine nature within him, or he would not be drawn towards the divine One above him. It is even so: the Spirit of God has been working here.

Where Written.

The spiritual Covenanter has the covenant with God written on the tablets of his heart. I have known believers when first converted, follow a hint given them by Dr. Doddridge, in his "Rise and Progress of Religion," where he draws up a covenant which he invites the reader to sign. Some have executed a deed with great solemnity, and have also observed the day of its signature from year to year. Very proper, no doubt, to some natures, but I fear to the more timid and conscientious such covenants are apt to cause bondage. When they find that they have not in all things lived up to their own pledges, they are apt to cut themselves off from all part and lot in the matter: this is the covenant of works, and not of grace; a covenant on paper, and not the covenant written upon the heart and mind. The true Covenanter wills the will of God. It is not merely that God commands him to do right, but he longs to do it. O happy man whose covenant with God is the covenant of his own desire, who wills and wishes and longs and labors to yield himself fully and wholly unto the law of his God!

There are three or four things I would say briefly about this true Covenanter: The Lord make each one of us to be of his stamp!

You May Know Him

by his attachment to the Lord Jesus, who is the sum, substance, surety, and seal of the covenant; as also by his zeal for the gospel through which the covenant is revealed to the sons of men. He will not hear anything which is not according to the old gospel, for he counts another gospel to be a pestilent evil. I feel, in casting my eye over many modern writings, as if I had breathed poisonous gas, and was like to die. Others may feed on philosophical morality, but nothing but the grace of God will do for us. Cats and dogs may feed on any rubbish, but men of God must live on the grace of God, and nothing else. He who is indeed in Covenant with God is known by his continual regard to the life, walk, and triumph of faith. He has faith, and by that faith he lives and grows. He is, and has, and does all things by faith; and you cannot tempt him away from that faith wherein he stands. Carnal sense and fleshly feeling are not able to tempt him from believing. The highest enjoyment proffered by a fancied perfection cannot charm him from standing by faith. "No," he says, "I must trust, or else all is over with me." Though all men should live by sight and feeling, yet will not the true Covenanter quit the hallowed way of faith in the Lord.

This covenanting man will also be known by his stern resolve to preserve the gospel in its purity, and hand it on to others. When the truth of God was made known to Abraham, it was committed to him and to his descendants to keep that lamp burning by which the rest of the world would, in due time, be saved from darkness. At this hour the eternal truths of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ are given over to certain chosen men and women, to be preserved by them till the coming of the Lord. This keeping is to be accompanied with a constant proclamation, so that the truth may spread as well as live, and may go on conquering and to conquer. O ye who are the covenanted ones of God, let not His gospel suffer damage..

II. Under our second head let us now study

The Covenanter's Experience.

The text says: "All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep His covenant and His testimonies." Observe, first, that the Lord makes many approaches to covenanting men. He does not leave them alone, but He comes to them, and manifests Himself to them. By the expression, "All the paths of the Lord," I learn that the Lord has many ways of drawing near His chosen. Not in the public highways of grace only doth He meet those with whom He is on terms of peace, but in many private and secret paths. In a grass-field a path is made by constant treading, and God makes paths to His people by continually drawing nigh unto their souls, and communing with them. The Lord has many paths, for He comes to them from different points of the compass, according as their experience requires. He uses, sometimes this way and sometimes another, that He may commune with us. Young man, I invite you to the grand destiny of one that shall henceforth live with God, to whom God shall manifest Himself. Will not this be a distinguished honor? Do not think it unattainable. God may be reached, if thou wilt consecrate thyself to Him this day by a covenant through Jesus Christ the ever-blessed sacrifice, thou shalt know the visitations of the Almighty; thou shalt, like Enoch, walk with God. Believe me, I speak truth and soberness.

Note, next, that all the dealings of God with His people are in a way of mercy. "All the paths of the Lord are mercy." This is well, for the best of the saints will always need mercy. Those who keep His covenant are still kept by His mercy. When they grow in grace and come to be fully developed Christians, they still need mercy for their sins, their weaknesses, their necessities. The Lord exercises mercy to the most highly instructed believer, as well as to the babe in grace, mercy to the most useful worker as much as to the most weary sufferer. Thank God that His mercy towards us is for ever.

In the Hebrew I find the word here used is "wheel tracks," such ruts as wagons make when they go down our green roads in wet weather, and sink in up to the axles. God's ways are at times like heavy wagon-tracks, and into our souls; yet they are all of them mercy. Whether our days trip along like the angels mounting on Jacob's ladder to heaven, or grind along like the wagons which Joseph sent to Jacob, they are in each case ordered in mercy. I stand by the happy memories of a tried past, as in summer weather I walk down a green lane, and as I look at the deep ruts which God's providence made long ago, I see flowers of mercies growing in them. All the crushing and the crashing was in goodness. Surely, goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life. Yes, "all the days of my life," the dark and cloudy, the stormy and the wintry, as surely as in "the days of heaven upon the earth."

They Cut Deep

The Psalmist says, "All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth." That is to say, God has always shown the truth of His word. He has never been false to His pledges. He has done according to His word. How I wish I could persuade you of this! but, alas, the carnal mind will not receive spiritual things: I may bear witness of that which I taste and handle, but you will not believe me. Divine Spirit, come and open blinded eyes! To this rule there is no exception—"All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep His covenant." They say there is no rule but there is no exception to that rule. All God's dealings with His people are gracious and faithful. Sometimes the ways of God are full of truth and mercy manifestly—they have been so to me in many a notable instance. I hope I do not trouble you too often with personal experiences. I do not narrate them out of egotism, but because it seems to me that every Christian should add his own personal testimony to the heap of evidence which proves the truth of our God. If I tell you about John Newton, you answer, "He is dead;" but if I tell you of Charles Haddon Spurgeon, he stands before you. Some ten days ago I was called to bear a baptism of pain.

Without an Exception,

I had a Night of Anguish, and the pangs ceased not in the morning. How gladly would I escape from these acute attacks, but it seems I may not hope it! I felt worn down and spent. Far on in the morning my ever-thoughtful secretary came by my bedside, and cheered me greatly by the news that the letters brought tidings of considerable help to the various enterprises; in fact, there was far more coming in than is at all usual at this season. A legacy was reported of £500 for the Orphanage, and £500 for the College. Another will was mentioned in which the Orphanage was made a residuary legatee. Living friends had also sent large sums as by a kind of concert of liberality. They did not know that their poor friend was going to be very ill that morning, but their Lord knew, and He moved them to take away every care from His servant. It seemed to me as if my Lord said to me, "Now, you are not going to fret and worry while you are ill. You shall have no temptation to do so; for I will send you in so much help for all My work that you shall not dare to be cast down." Truly, in this the paths of the Lord to me were mercy and truth.

Many and many a time have I been lost in wonder at the Lord's mercy to His unworthy servant. I bow my head and bless the name of the Lord, and cry, "Whence is this to me? Ah, brethren! one can bear rheumatism or gout when mercy flows in as a flood. I have often found His consolations abound in proportion to my tribulations, insomuch that I am on the lookout for the mercy when I begin to feel the smart, even as a child looks for the sweet when he finds himself called upon to take physic.

I Serve a Good Master:

I can speak well of Him at all times, and specially do I find Him kind when the weather is rough around His pilgrim child! Have you not found it so in your way? Come, dear friends, you cannot speak this morning, for one at a time is enough for a public assembly; but you can speak when you have had your dinners and your children are round about you. Tell them how gracious God has been to you in your times of trouble. Exceedingly utter the memory of His great goodness.

Mark you, when we cannot see it, the Lord is just as merciful in His ways to us. We may not expect to be indulged and pampered by being made to see the mercy of God, like silly children that will be in a pet and a fume unless their father stuffs their mouths with sweetmeats and their hands with toys. God is as good when He denies as when He grants; and though we often see the marvelous tenderness of our God, it is not necessary that we should see it to make it true. Our God is wise as a father, and tender as a mother, and when we cannot comprehend His methods, we still believe in His love.

I hear some say, "These things do not happen to me. I find myself struggling alone, and full of sorrow." Do you keep the covenant? Some of you professing Christian and not by covenant rule. You do not live to God, you do not keep His covenant, you do not observe his testimonies, you are not living consecrated lives; therefore, if you do not enjoy His mercy and His truth, do not blame the Lord. The text says that all His paths are mercy and truth "unto such as keep His covenant:" remember the character, and do not expect the blessing apart from it.

People Live Anyhow,

I hear worldlings mutter—"What is the man at? We know nothing and care nothing about being in covenant with God." Truly you despise the life I set before you; but it is your own way of life which most deserves scorn, O you who live for gain of pleasure! I will sketch you with the pencil of truth. It is and it passed under my own eye but a few hours ago. I sat by the rivulet, at a point where abundant springs poured forth new streams. It was a brook, wide but shallow, and the pure water glided along refreshingly under the overhanging boughs. Little children were there wading into the stream, and enjoying its cool waters. One of them was a true representative of your wealthy merchants. He went a-fishing with a bright green-glass bottle, and his ventures were successful. Again and again I heard his voice ring out most joyously, "Look! Look! Here! Here! Such a big 'un! I have caught such a big 'un!" It was by no means a whale which he had taken, but a fish which might be half an inch long. How he exulted! "Such a big 'un!" To him the affairs of nations were as nothing compared with the great spoil which he had taken. That is the gentleman upon the Exchange who has made that successful speculation. For the next few days he will astonish everybody as they hear it was "such a big 'un!" Earth and heaven and hell, time and eternity, may all accept the go-by now that the glass bottle contains its prey. I confess I was not carried away with admiration for

A Country Scene,

The Child's Fortune,

neither did I envy him his satisfaction.

His brother, not far off, varied my picture for me: he was less richly endowed, and yet he had a very serviceable tin can, with which he fished most diligently. Soon I heard his voice pitched in another key: "Nasty little things! They won't come here! I can't catch 'em! They're good for nothing! I won't try any more." Then the impetuous genius threw his can with a splash into the water, and his enterprise was ended. That is the gentleman whose company has been wound up, or whose goods will not command a market. Things will not come his way. He cannot get on. He has made a fail of it, and is in the Gazette. All society is out of order or he would have been sure to suceeed. He is sick of it all for the present. You smile at my boys! O worldlings, these are yourselves! You are those children, and your ambitions are their tittlebats. Without God you are paddling in the brooklet of life, fishing for minnows. If you get a grip of God, because He has laid hold on you, O man there is then a soul in you; then have you come to be allied with angels and akin to seraphim. Apart from God you subside into shameful littleness. O Lord Jesus, pity those who forget thee! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

RECOLLECTIONS OF SUMNER.*

Mr. Sumner stood six feet two inches high without his shoes, and he was so well built that his height was only noticeable when he was near a person of ordinary size. But there was a manner about him, a free swing of the arm, a stride, a pose of his shaggy head, a sway of his shoulders, that gave to those who knew him best the idea that he was of heroic size. Then too, there was something in the intent look of his deep-set eye, his corrugated brow, the frown born of intense thought, and his large head, made to seem yet larger by its crown of thick, heavy, longish gray hair, all of which gave the idea of physical greatness; but with his frequent smile the set frown passed, his whole appearance changed, and his face beamed like a dark-lantern suddenly lighted. His smile effected a wonderful transformation in his whole appearance, and it set up a peculiar sympathy between himself and its recipient.

He was hardly aware of his enormous strength, it was so seldom called into exercise. His books were packed in large boxes at the end of each session and sent from his rooms to the Capitol, only to be returned at the beginning of the next session. These boxes weighed nearly five hundred pounds each, and were difficult to handle in passages and stairways, and so were accompanied by four men. Once when he was living at the Rev. Dr. Sampson's, one of these heavy boxes got stuck in the stairway. It could be extricated without damage to the walls only by lifting it over the banister. The four men failed to apply their strength to the most advantage, for they got in each other's way, and thus failed to move the box. The Senator, hatted and gloved, ready to go out, came to the stairs.

"Why don't you lift it over the rail?" said he.

"How can we?" answered one. "You have no idea of its weight."

"Let me try," said the Senator, and leaning over the rail he seized the rope becket at the end of the box and lifted the latter clear of its entanglements by one sure pull, splitting his glove, however, across the back. The men were amazed; and he, a little embarrassed, said, "I didn't mean to lift it, only to try its weight."

The Senator at a Fire.

When he lived at Mr. Cammack's on F. Street, the adjourning frame building caught fire, and after a time there was danger to the house where he lived and kept his books and papers. He came to the front door in dressing-gown and slippers, and watched the efforts of the firemen. The hook and ladder company were trying to fix a huge hook at the end of a heavy pole into the shanty to pull down the structure. Three times they thrust this heavy spar into the flames without result.

"Why don't you hook on to that beam?" asked the Senator.

"I'd like to see you do it," was the retort.

"Here, give me your stick," he cried, and placing the spar on his shoulder; he thrust it so vigorously and with so good an aim that the hook caught in the kingbeam, the firemen tailed on to the hauling line, and in an instant the whole structure was leveled to the ground

*From the Cosmopolitan Magazine (Illustrated). Price 20c. Published by Schlecht, Field & Co., 29 Park Row, New York.

Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria. (See page 533.)

The Island of Loanda, on the West Coast of Africa. (See page 533.)

and the fire was soon extinguished. The Senator meantime was stepping around daintily on the toes of his slippers, to save his feet from the wet, holding the skirts of his long dressing-gown as a lady might her train, assuring himself that the work was well done. The firemen gave him three cheers, and it was even proposed to make him an honorary member of their company

Purity of Speech.

It should go without saying that Charles Sumner was never guilty of profanity. The Senator abhorred swearing as "neither brave, polite, nor wise."

He was absolutely of a clean, pure mind. Emerson said, "He has the whitest soul I ever knew." So far as I am aware, no one ventured to tell a risqué story in his presence. It is said of him that at a dinner-table he quenched a raconteur who began something by saying, "I will venture to tell you a good story, as there are no ladies present," by saying, "But, sir, there are gentleman present."

Bunyan's Bible.

Senator Sumner had gathered many rare and valuable books, not merely Elzevirs and Aldines, but highly illuminated missals, Books of Hours with beautiful illustrations in colors, on vellum, coming down from the Middle, Ages; MSS. in heavy carved oak covers, with the chains still hanging to them by which they have been attached to reading-desks in the times when the title-papers of an estate were left as security for the return of a borrowed MSS.; and old maps made in the time of Christopher Columbus, on which new continents were postulated. Among these rarities, interesting to visitors, was Bunyan's Bible, the one he had with him in prison while writing the "Pilgrim's Progress." It is bound in old calf, and is rebacked with brass corners, center pieces, and bands down the back, and has the old dreamer's autograph on the title-page of the New Testament. A portrait of Bunyan is also inserted, together with a wood-cut showing the cottage in which the second part of the "Pilgrim's Progress" was written.

"AFTER MANY DAYS."

THE following incident which occurred last month is related by Mrs. M. Baxter: a poor man entered the Gospel Union Hall, in the Holloway Road, London, with the sole object of finding a place where he could sit down. He was the son of a praying mother, but had gone from God into sin and shame. Unable to find occupation in London, and being in need of food, he bethought himself of an uncle in Bayswater who was a minister of the Gospel. He found his address and went to see him. His uncle turned his back upon him and would have nothing at all to do with him. Embittered and hardened, he walked as far as the Thames Embankment, thinking to put an end to his miserable life. Then he reasoned: "If religion has made my uncle so hard-hearted that he will not so much as give me food when I am starving, I have a right to think there is no God and all religion is just rubbish and humbug." He spent some time in trying to convince hinself that there was no God, and he was accountable to no one. Just then the Spirit of God, in answer to his mother's prayers, spoke to him, and as clearly a voice sounded the words through his soul, "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God." He could not end his life if he must needs meet with God, and again he resumed his weary wandering, picking up food how best he might by hook or by crook. Passing the Gospel Union Hall, he went in aimlessly and sat down. A text upon the wall spoke again to him just as he had been spoken to on the Embankment, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." The weary broken heart could not resist the love which took him in. He remained to the meeting, was pointed to the Saviour, and is now on his way, tramping it, to Scotland in search of work, but in company with the Saviour whom he has found, and who never faileth them who put their trust in Him.

Thank God, the work in Holloway Road Gospel Union Hall is progressing well, several have found the Lord of late, and the workers have been stirred to prayerfulness and diligence.

[This is one of nearly 100 Mission Halls of the "Gospel Union"—an evangelistic organization presided over by the Rev. and Mrs. M. Baxter, which costs more than $250 to maintain every week. From its Training Home two missionaries are just being sent forth to India and Jamaica, Contributions should be addressed to the REV. M. BAXTER, Care of Manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.]

GRANDMAMMA'S VERSE.

(See Illustration on page 541).

"THAT is grandmamma's verse," said one of a group of children who were listening to the reading of the Bible by their father, while a venerable lady, sitting in the most comfortable easy-chair in the room, was looking on.

"Yes, my dear," said the father," "it is. How do you know?"

"Oh! I know; her old Bible is almost worn out at that page, and she has the verse in large letters on the wall in her room. She made me learn it before I could read, and she showed me all the letters. 'The blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin.' That 's it; is it not, grandma?"

"Quite right, my dear," said the old lady; never forget it. The more you learn of yourself, the more you will love that text."

"You should get grandmamma to tell you how it was she first noticed it," said the father.

"Yes, do tell us, grandma," said all the children.

"Well, the verse is enough in itself to be remembered, for it is one of the most precious in the Bible, but I would like you to know about the circumstance your father refers to, so I will tell you. Many years ago—long before your father was born, and before grandmamma came to America—there was an old man in England who was quite blind. When he was younger he was a shepherd and used to look after the flocks, distributed over the wild moorland hills. But through infirmity and old age, and the constant exposure to changeable weather, his sight entirely failed him, so that he could do no more work, but would sit in his son's house all day, except in the afternoon, when his chair was set out in the sunlight, which seemed to cheer the old man, though he could not see it. The time would have been very dull for the old man, his son being busy out of doors all day, and his daughter-in-law having the house and children to occupy her time, if it had not been for his eldest granddaughter, who used to read to him, and was his constant companion.

One day, the little girl was reading the Bible to him at the first chapter of the First Epistle of John. She had the book on his knee, which, as she was a very little girl, made a table just the right height for her. Her grandfather was very still, and once or twice she stopped reading, to look up at him, thinking he might be asleep; but his quiet 'Go on, my child, I 'm listening,' reassured her. When she reached the seventh verse, 'And the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son cleanseth us from all sin,' the old man raised himself and stopped the little girl, saying, with all earnestness, 'Is that there, my dear?' 'Yes, grandpa,' 'Then read it to me again;' I don't remember ever seeing just those very words.'

"The little girl read again: 'And the blood of Jesus Christ His son cleanseth us from all sin.' 'You are quite sure that it is there?' he inquired. 'Yes, quite sure.' 'Then take my hand and lay my finger on the passage, for I should like to feel it.'

"She took the old blind man's hand, and placed his bony finger on the verse, when he said, 'Now read it to me, again.' The little girl read, with her soft, childish voice, 'And the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin.' 'Are you quite sure that is there?' 'Yes, quite sure.' 'Then if any one should ask, when I am dead, what makes you think your grandfather has gone to Heaven, tell them because he had God's promise that the blood of Jesus would cleanse him from all sin, and he believed God meant what He said. I am a very old man now, my child, and I should not dare to think of all the time I have lived, if it was not for that. I've done a many wrong things in my day, and there's been a many things as I ought to have done and never did. I don't know how many. But it's all sin that is washed out. There ain't any half-and-half business with the Lord. Now, run away, and play, my dear; I've plenty to think about, but leave the book here; I'd like to keep my hand on that comfort.'

"The little girl did run away, and when she came back after a long run on the hills there was quite a stir in the old house. A horse, which she knew belonged to the country doctor, was tied to the fence, and the doctor himself was at the door. 'What is the matter?' the little girl asked of her father. He said, 'Your grandfather's dead, my child. When I came in from work he was sitting in his chair, with his hand on the Bible. I thought he was asleep, but when I looked close I was afraid he was dead, and when the doctor came he said he was dead. He had been gone more than an hour when I found him.'

"'I know where he is gone,' the little girl said. 'He told me, himself.' Her father said, 'What do you mean, my child?' 'He's gone to heaven; that is what he told me, and he asked me to put his hand on the place where the words are that made him sure, and I did.'

"That little girl has grown old now, and she has seen many things, and traveled a long way, and will soon die under different skies and in another land, but she is trusting in the same promise as her grandfather, and is not afraid.'

"'Do you know her, then, grandma?' asked the children.

"'Oh, yes, I know her; it is I.'"

A Precious Verse.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 526.)

A Vacation in the Country—His Address Benefits a Christian Lady—Preaching in a Dark Village—Offers to Serve the Society Without Salary—His Proposal Rejected—Ministers Disapprove a Sermon—More Unpopular Sermons—Conversation with Domestic Servants—Urged to Stay at Teignmouth—Opposition Attracts Him—Decides to Settle There—How he Prepared his Sermons.

About the beginning of the next year my fellow-students had a fortnight's vacation, and as with them I had conformed myself to the order of the Institution, I felt that I might also partake of their privileges; not indeed to please the flesh, but to serve the Lord. On December 30, I therefore left London for Exmouth, where I intended to spend my vacation, in the house of my Christian friends, who had kindly lodged me the summer before, that I might preach there during this fortnight, and still more fully weigh the matter respecting my proposal to the Society. I arrived at Exmouth on December 31, at six in the evening, an hour before the commencement of a prayer-meeting at Ebenezer Chapel. In the morning I spoke on the difference between a Christian and a happy Christian, and showed whence it generally comes that we rejoice so little in the Lord. This, my first testimony, was blessed to many believers, that God, as it appears, might show me that He was with me. Among others, it proved a blessing to a Christian female.

At the request of several believers I spoke again in the afternoon, and also proposed a meeting in the chapel every morning at ten, to expound the Epistle to the Romans. I had also, most days, a meeting in a room with several ladies, for reading the Scriptures with them. This I did that I might make the best of my fortnight. The second day after my arrival a brother said to me: "I have been praying for this month past that the Lord would do something for Lympstone, a large parish where there is little spiritual light. There is a Wesleyan chapel, and I doubt not you would be allowed to preach there." Being ready to speak of Jesus wherever the Lord might open a door, yet so that I could be faithful to the truths which He had been pleased to teach me, I went, and easily obtained liberty to preach on the next day.

During the first days of January, 1830, whilst at Exmouth, it became more and more clear to me, that I could not be connected with the Society under the usual conditions; and as I had an abundance of work where I was, and little money to spend in travelling (for all I possessed was about five pounds), it appeared best to me to write at once to the committee that, whilst they were coming to a decision respecting me, I might continue to preach. I therefore wrote to them, stating what had been my views before I became acquainted with them, and what they were now. I also stated my difficulty in remaining connected with them on the usual terms, as stated in substance above; and then concluded, that as, however, I owed them much, as having been instrumental in bringing me to England, where the Lord had blessed me so abundantly—and as I, also, should like to obtain from them the Hebrew Scriptures and tracts for the Jews—I would gladly serve them without any salary, if they would allow me to labor, in regard to time and place, as the Lord might direct me. Some time after I received a very kind private letter from one of the secretaries, who always had been very kind to me, together with the following official communication from the committee:

"Resolved, That Mr. Müller be informed, that while the committee cordially rejoice in any real progress in knowledge and grace which he may have made under the teaching of the Holy Spirit, they, nevertheless, consider it inexpedient for any society to employ those who are unwilling to submit themselves to their guidance with respect to missionary operations; and that while, therefore, Mr. Müller holds his present opinions on that point, the committee cannot consider him as a missionary student; but should more mature reflection cause him to alter that opinion, they will readily enter into further communication with him."

After I had preached about three weeks at Exmouth and its neighborhood, I went to Teignmouth with the intention of staying there ten days, to preach the Word among the brethren with whom I had become acquainted during the previous summer, and thus to tell them of the Lord's goodness to me. One of the brethren said, almost immediately on my arrival at Teignmouth, I wish you would become our minister, as the present one is going to leave us. My answer was, I do not intend to be stationary in any place, but go through the country, preaching the Word as the Lord may direct me.

One evening I preached a sermon for Brother Craik, at Shaldon, in the presence of three ministers, none of whom liked the discourse: yet it pleased God, through it, to bring to the knowledge of His dear Son, a young woman who had been a servant to one of these ministers, and who had heard her master preach many times. How differently does the Lord judge from men! Here was a particular opportunity for the Lord to get glory to Himself. A foreigner was the preacher, with great natural obstacles in the way, for he was not able to speak English with fluency; but he had a desire to serve God, and was by this time also brought into such a state of heart as to desire that God alone should have the glory, if any good were done through his instrumentality. How often has it struck me, both at that time and since, that His strength was made perfect in my weakness.

On Tuesday evening I preached at Ebenezer Chapel, Teignmouth, the same chapel at the opening of which I became acquainted with the brother whom the Lord had afterwards used as an instrument of benefiting me so much. My preaching was also disliked there by many of the hearers; but the Lord opened the hearts of a few to receive the truth, and another young woman was brought to the Lord through the instrumentality of the Word then preached. On Wednesday I preached again in the same chapel, and the Word was disliked still, perhaps more, though the few who received the truth in the love of it, increased in number. On Thursday I preached again at Shaldon, and on Friday at Teignmouth. The effect was the same; dislike on the one side, and joy and delight in the truth on the other. By this time I began to reflect about the cause of this opposition; for the same brethren who had treated me with much kindness the summer previous, when I was less spiritually minded, and understood much less of the truth, now seemed to oppose me, and I could not explain it in any other way than this, that the Lord intended to work through my instrumentality at Teignmouth, and that therefore, Satan, fearing this, sought to raise opposition against me.

On the Lord's Day I dined with a brother whose heart the Lord had opened to receive me as a servant of Christ. After dinner I talked to a young woman, his servant, at the request of her sister, who, on the Tuesday previous, had been convinced of sin, and on the Friday brought to enjoy peace in the Lord. This young woman also was, through the instrumentality of this conversation, brought to see her sinful state, though she could not rejoice in the Lord until about seven months after. How differently the Lord dealt with her sister, and yet the work of grace was as real in the one as in the other, as I had full opportunity of seeing afterwards!

On the same Lord's Day I preached twice at Teignmouth, and once at Shaldon; for so precious did every opportunity seem to me, and so powerfully did I feel the importance of those precious truths, which I had so recently been led to see, that I longed to be instrumental in communicating them to others.

By this time the request, that I might stay at Teignmouth, and be the minister of the above chapel, had been repeatedly expressed by an increasing number of the brethren; but others were decidedly against my remaining there. This opposition was instrumental in settling in my mind that I should stay for awhile, at least until I was formally rejected. In consequence of this conclusion, I took the following step, which, it may be, I should not repeat under similar circumstances, but which was certainly taken in love to those who were concerned in the matter, and for the glory of God, as far as I then had light.

On the Tuesday following, after preaching, I told the brethren how, in the providence of God, I had been brought to them, without the least intention of staying among them, but that, on finding them without a minister, I had been led to see it to be the will of God to remain with them. I also told them, as far as I remember, that I was aware of the opposition of some, but that I nevertheless intended to preach to them till they rejected me; and if they should say I might preach, but they would give me no salary, that would make no difference on my part, as I did not preach for the sake of money; but I told them, at the same time, that it was an honor to be allowed to supply the temporal wants of any of the servants of Christ. The latter point I added, as it seemed right to me, to give out the whole counsel of God, as far as I knew it. On the next day, Wednesday, I left, and, having preached in two or three places near Exmouth, and taken leave of my friends there, I returned to Teignmouth.

Here I preached again three times on the Lord's Day, none saying, we wish you not to preach, though many of the hearers did not hear with enjoyment. Some of them left and never returned; some left, but returned after awhile. Others came to the chapel, who had not been in the habit of attending there previous to my coming. There was sufficient proof that the work of God was going on, for there were those who were glad to hear what I preached, overlooking the infirmities of the foreigner, delighting in the food for their souls without caring much about the form in which the truth was set before them; and these were not less spiritual than the rest; and there were those who objected decidedly; some, however, manifesting merely the weakness of brethren, and others the bitterness of the opposers of the Cross. There was, in addition to this, a great stir, a spirit of inquiry, and a searching of the Scriptures, whether these things were so. And, what is more than all, God set His seal upon the work, in converting sinners. Twelve weeks I stood in this same position, whilst the Lord graciously supplied my temporal wants, through brethren, unasked for.

After this time, the whole little church, eighteen in number, unanimously gave me an invitation to become their pastor. My answer to them was that their invitation did not show me more than I had seen before, that it was the will of God that I should remain with them, yet for their sakes I could not but rejoice in this invitation, as it was a proof to me that God had blessed them through my instrumentality in making them thus of one mind. I also expressly stated to the brethren that I should only stay so long with them as I saw it clearly to be the will of the Lord; for I had not given up my intention of going from place to place, if the Lord would allow me to do so. The brethren, at the same time, now offered to supply my temporal wants by giving me £55 a year, which sum was afterwards somewhat increased, on account of the increase of the church.

I now had Teignmouth for my residence, but I did not confine my labors to this place; for I preached regularly once a week in Exeter, once a fortnight at Topsham, sometimes at Shaldon, often at Exmouth, sometimes in the above-mentioned villages near Exmouth, regularly once a week at Bishopsteignton, where a part of the church lived, and afterwards repeatedly at Chudleigh, Collumpton, Newton and elsewhere.

That which I consider the best mode of preparation for the public ministry of the Word, no longer adopted, from necessity, on account of want of time, but from deep conviction, and from the experience of God's blessing upon it, both as regards my own enjoynent, the benefit of the saints, and the conversion of sinners, is as follows:—1. I do not presume to know, myself, what is best for the hearers, and I, therefore, ask the Lord in the first place, that He would graciously be pleased to teach me on what subject I should speak, or what portion of His Word I shall expound. Now, sometimes it happens, that previous to my asking Him, a subject or passage has been in mind, on which it has appeared well for me to speak. In that case I ask the Lord whether I should speak on this subject or passage. If, after prayer, I feel persuaded that I should, I fix upon it, yet so, that I would desire to leave myself open to the Lord to change it, if He please. Frequently, however, it occurs that I have no text or subject in my mind before I give myself to prayer, for the sake of ascertaining the Lord's will concerning it. In this case, I wait some time on my knees for an answer, trying to listen to the voice of the Spirit to direct me. If then a passage or subject, whilst I am on my knees, or after I have finished praying for a text, is brought to my mind, I again ask the Lord, and that sometimes repeatedly, especially if, humanly speaking, the subject or text should be a peculiar one, whether it be His will that I should speak on such a subject or passage. If, after prayer, my mind is peaceful about it, I take this to be the text, but still desire to leave myself open to the Lord for direction, should He please to alter it, or should I have been mistaken. Frequently, also, in the third place, it happens that I not only have no text nor subject on my mind previous to my praying for guidance in this matter, but also I do not obtain one after once or twice or more times praying about it. I used formerly at times to be much perplexed when this was the case, but for more than thirty years it has pleased the Lord, in general at least, to keep me in peace about it. What I do is, to go on with my regular reading of the Scriptures, where I left off the last time, praying (whilst I read) for a text, now and then also laying aside my Bible for prayer, till I get one. Thus it has happened that I have had to read five, ten, yea, twenty chapters, before it has pleased the Lord to give me a text: yea, many times I have even had to go to the place of meeting without one, and obtained it perhaps only a few minutes before I was going to speak: but I have never lacked the Lord's assistance at the time of preaching, provided I had earnestly sought it in private. The preacher cannot know the particular state of the various individuals who compose the congregation, nor what they require, but the Lord knows it; and if the preacher renounces his own wisdom he will be assisted by the Lord; but if he will choose in his own wisdom, then let him not be surprised if he should see little benefit result from his labors.

Before I leave this part of the subject, I would just observe one temptation concerning the choice of a text. We may see a subject to be so very full that it may strike us it would do for some other occasion. For instance, sometimes a text, brought to one's mind for a week-evening meeting, may appear more suitable for the Lord's Day, because then there would be a greater number of hearers present. Now, in the first place, we do not know whether the Lord ever will allow us to preach on another Lord's Day; and, in the second place, we know not whether that very subject may not be especially suitable for some or many individuals present just that week-evening. Thus I was once tempted, after I had been a short time at Teignmouth, to reserve a subject, which had been just opened to me, for the next Lord's Day. But being able, by the grace of God, to overcome the temptation by the above reasons, and preaching about it at once, it pleased the Lord to bless it to the conversion of a sinner, and that, too, an individual who meant to come but that once more to the chapel, and to whose case the subject was most remarkably suited.

(To be Continued.)

MRS. M. BAXTER'S WORKS.

The following works by Mrs. M. Baxter, and others, may behad from the office of The Christian Herald, 63 Bible House, New York:

"Words for Daily Life," "Practical Lessons," "Life Lessons," "Leaves from Genesis," "Trials and Teachings of Paul." By Mrs. M. Baxter. Each, paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 35 cts. "Record of International Conference on Divine Healing. London, 15." Paper, 25 cts. "Living Word in the Gospel of St. John." Paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts "God's Prophets." Paper 35 cts.; cloth 50 cts. "Lessons from St. Matthew's Gospel." Paper, 35 cts.; cloth 50 cts. "Teachings from St. Mark's Gospel." Paper, 35 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. "Sunday-School Lessons, 1877 and 78." By Mrs. Baxter. Each, cloth, 50 cts.

Any of Mrs. M. Baxter's tracts in the following list may also be had at one cent each or ten cents the dozen: "If it be Thy Will," "Does Sickness Sanctify?" "Casting All Your Care," two cents each or twenty cents the dozen. "God's Purpose in Sickness," "The Great Physician," "Job's Sickness," "God's Side of Prayer," "Pastor Rein," "The Body for the Lord." Also the following tracts at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen, by the late Rev. W. E. Boardman: "He Careth for You," "A Perfected Self," "Paul's Thorn," "The Father's Rod," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "The Law of Liberty," at three cents each, or thirty cents the dozen. "Bethshan, a House for Healing," and "Enduement with Power," Miss C. C. Murray's tracts, at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen. "Repeating Prayer," "Thou Art Loosed," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Redeemed from all Evil," "Anointing Him with Oil," at three cents each or, thirty cents the dozen. "Pastor Blumhardt," by Miss Sisson, at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen. "What About the Use of Means," and "The Apostolic Attitude," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Asking and Receiving," by Mrs. Boardman, at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Simple Truths about Faith." By T. Kirkman, "Health by Grace," and by H. W. S., "The Lord Hath Done It."

TRUST IN OUR HEAVENLY FATHER.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for September 4: Matt. 6 : 24 34, Golden Text, 1 Peter, 5: 7.

Ver. 24, A Warning—The Attempt Often Made—Failure Inevitable—Christ Would Save us from Making the Futile Effort—The Master Must be Chosen—Mammon Includes Fame and Power—What is the Supreme Object in Life—Successful Men not Necessarily Mammon Servers—God Sometimes Gives the World's Prizes to His Servants—Ver. 25, Misdirected Concern—The Place Which Appetite and Pride Have in the Thoughts of a Day—Christ's Argument of Subordination—Ver. 26, A Lesson of Childlike Faith—Ver. 27-30, Anxiety is Wasted Energy— No Practical Result From It—God's Feeding and Clothing Better than Man's Best—Ver. 31-33, All Our Needs Known to God—He Supplies Them When the Man is Seeking Higher Things—Ver. 34, The Practical Lesson — Do the Duty of the Hour—No Strength Given for Anticipated Burdens.

THE life of the Christian may, and should, be in every respect a contrast to that of the heathen and the worldling; in fact, to that of every man who is "without God in the world." Jesus assures us, "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask Him." The supply is ready before the need arises, and God permits the need that His child may learn to trust Him. The man who is "without God" sees his needs arising, and strains every effort to provide for himself; it belongs to his ignorance of God to lay up "treasures upon earth, where moth and dust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal." His horizon is bounded by earth and time. The blessed truth known to the man of God is

The Lord Will Provide.

Therefore, our Lord says, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth. Ye are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." "(your) citizenship is in heaven;" do, then, as becomes a heavenly people; "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." Jesus does not condemn forethought, but He would have the children of the kingdom live for the kingdom, and make their calculations not for time but for eternity, not for earth, but for Heaven.

"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." What is it that keeps a child of God awake at night, and meets him in his waking thoughts? Is it praise to the living God? Or is it some matter of business, in which he fears to lose a large sum of money? Can this so move an heir of heaven as to disturb his peace? If so, where is this man's heart? On earth or in Heaven? Is it some unkind remark of a fellow-Christian? Is it something of mortified pride which galls the spirit—some bitter sense of injustice? If so, where is the heart? Is it not on earth, occupied with man, rather than in Heaven, occupied with Jesus, and far above all these heart-burnings about little things? Is not this a proof that such an one is laying up for himself the treasure of his own reputation on earth, and loving the praise of men more than the praise of God? But is it the thwarting of his plans for Christian work which worries and agitates a Christian man? He sees that which he had labored with the greatest devotion to accomplish, that over which he had spent thought and time and money, that over which he had prayed, that which had been the very object of his life—he sees it become a failure! He is fretted, disappointed. Perhaps his own health has failed, and the souls he has been the means of winning are scattered; some seem to go back into the world, others are lost sight of, and it is a crushing burden to him.

What Was His Treasure?

Was it not this world rather than his God? And surely, his loving Heavenly Father has broken it all up, not because He does not love the souls His servant cared for, but because He saw His instrument in danger; He saw him absorbed with his work as a treasure upon earth; that was why He smashed the idol. As far as self enters into our life, into our work for God, there is an element of corruption in it. Moth and rust corrupt, and thieves break through and steal. When we work as Christ worked, having no will but God's, no plans but those He makes for us, and those He changes as He sees best—everything endures, for all has the elements of eternity in it.

"The light of the body is the eye; if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light; but if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness." We talk of men having "an eye to business," "an eye to gain," "an eye to the glory of God," i. e., their whole bent and aim is that way. A single eye or aim means being all for God, or all for the world."

"A Whole Man For One Thing."

"This one thing I do," said Paul; all other things were subsidiary, "So, I come to do Thy will," said our blessed Lord, and all details, even to eating, drinking and sleeping, were a part of that will, as much as His dying upon the cross. If a man wants to be a foreign missionary, but, at the same time, to become a gentleman by entering a college, this latter ingredient in his motives makes his eye cease to be single. If an eloquent man speaks to any audience with the real desire to win souls, and yet, at the same time, looks out for some credit for his eloquence, his eye is not single. If a man gives himself to fasting and prayer because the state of the lost at home and abroad presses upon his heart and conscience, and if, while he lays their case before God, he counts in any degree whatsoever on his devotion in fasting and praying, his eye is not single. O, how little there is amongst us of this singleness of eye! O, how many of us seek our own, while we attempt at the same time to seek the things which are Jesus Christ's! And this we cannot do. Some evangelical believers try to do it: they seek and obtain a sense of pardon of their sins past, but, instead of asking God like Paul, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" (Acts 9 : 6) they think, "What do I choose to do?" and so it comes that worldly bazaars and concerts are made a part of church work, and there is the miserable attempt to "serve God and mammon." How like the heathen, who flatter their gods when all goes well with them, but beat and sometimes burn them when things go ill. Self is, here, the real god; so far as God serves the purposes of self, will these have to do with Him, but let Him touch self, and all their devotion dies.

"Ye cannot serve God and mammon." To serve God means death to the world, death to the flesh, death to the devil. To serve mammon means that "friendship with the world" which is "enmity with God." There are many who consecrate themselves to God with a selfish motive, they have seen others who are consecrated so happy that they go in for consecration as a means of getting happiness, and not because God has a right to them. But they cannot thus serve themselves of consecration to God. Some want to receive the Holy Ghost for their own purposes, that they may be great and powerful, and remarkable; but we cannot serve ourselves, of the Holy Ghost in this way; it would be really serving mammon after all. Real consecration is a yielding ourselves up to God without Peter's question, "What shall we have therefor?" The real filling with the Holy Ghost makes us know ourselves very small.

"Therefore I say unto you, Be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than the food, and the body than the raiment?" (R. V.)

"Not Anxious?"

says many a laboring man; "why, if I don't work for my family, I don't know who will, and there is nothing but the workhouse before us." God does not tell him not to work, for He says, "If any will not work, neither let him eat," and it is a patent fact that most of the people who do not work have very poor appetites and often impaired digestions. But God would say, "Work, but not with an anxious mind." Work as one who, if trouble comes, knows how to cast all his care on a real Father close at hand, who careth for him. A man who really believes that his interests are safe with God will not, while he is still in work, live over in anticipation the days he may be out of work, but he will praise God that He careth for him, and that, in any case, "the Lord will provide." "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the years of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit" (Jer. 17 : 7, 8). The very fowls teach us a lesson, and so do the very lilies of the field. If God cannot create the birds without providing their food, how much less will he create the life of beings which shall be immortal as Himself without providing food for their temporal necessities? "Are ye not much better than they?" Made in the image of God, created to reciprocate God's love throughout an endless eternity, will God forget us? Never. The man who fears it does not know God. Then Jesus asks what is the fruit of anxiety, "Which of you by being anxious can add one cubit unto his stature?" All the anxiety of children to grow big does not make them so. All the mortification which dwarfs often suffer, and which is full of the most painful anxiety, does not change their appearance, nor add to their stature. Some of them have indeed trusted the great Physician, and have been made straight, but this was, not by being anxious, but by handing over anxiety to Jesus.

Anxiety Only Hinders God,

and makes us miserable. Trust enables God to act, because when we trust we are out of His way. "And why take ye thought for raiment?" If we could sum up the amount of thought given in one day in one city to raiment, we should perhaps find that about ten per cent. of all the thoughts which pass through the minds of the inhabitants would be thoughts about raiment. Take the aristocratic belle, and her maids, and her dressmakers, and her friends; take the common factory girl; take the poor lost ones on the streets; take all who belong to dry goods and millinery stores and second-hand clothing stores; and then take the tailors and their patrons; and I doubt if I have exaggerated in saying that perhaps ten per cent. of the thoughts in a great city are given to raiment. "Why take ye thought for raiment?" God's "lilies of the field" are more lovely than all the productions of man, and any truly artistic eye will allow that "beauty unadorned 's adorned the most." "If God doth clothe the grass of the field, shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?"

Be Not, Therefore, Anxious, saying, "What shall we eat?" or, "What shall we drink?" or, "Wherewith shall we be clothed?" "For after all these things do the Gentiles seek; for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things" (R. V.). But a great many, even of Christians, create needs out of their likes and their dislikes. Now we have no promise of God that He will minister to selfish whims, but He has pledged Himself, that, if we seek, "first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness," all our real needs shall be added unto us. The world and the heathen put self-care first. God says, "My children, be not heathen; the heathen know not a father's care; shew them that I am to be trusted." Be not, therefore, anxious for the morrow, for the morrow will be anxious for itself;" i. e., it will have its own anxieties. Insanity generally comes from a mind taking the burden of more than one day at a time. God knows it is too much for His children to have more than one, and He would have us cast each day's and each hour's burden on Him as it arises, so that, while we meet with trials all the way along, we may walk free from them all, through trust in our living, loving Father.

LIFT ME UP.

OUT of myself, dear Lord
O, lift me up!
No more I trust myself in life's dim maze,
Sufficient to myself in all its devious ways.
I trust no more, but humbly at Thy throne
Pray, "Lead me, for I cannot go alone."

Out of my weary self
O, lift me up!
I faint, the road winds upward all the way,
Each night but ends another weary day.
Give me Thy strength, and may I be so blest
As "on the heights" I find the longed for rest.

Out of my selfish self
O, lift me up!
To live for others, and in living so
To be a blessing wherese'er I go,
To give the sunshine, and the clouds conceal,
Or let them but the silver clouds reveal.

Out of my lonely self
O, lift me up!
Tho' other hearts with love are running o'er,
Tho' dear ones fill my lonely home no more,
Tho' every day I miss the fond caress,
Help me to join in others' happiness.

Out of my doubting self
O, lift me up!
Help me to feel that Thou art always near,
That tho' 'tis night and all around seems drear,
Help me to know that tho' I cannot see,
It is my Father's hand that leadeth me.

—C. F. Parker.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form for general distribution at twenty-five cents per hundred.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of
J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

This Knife FREE with our new 48 Page Catalogue of New Goods for Agents if you send 6 cents in Stamps to help pay postage, etc. World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., N. Y.

WOOD-CARPET

Parquetry or Ornamental Wood-Floors,
For Rooms of all kinds in Private Houses, Hotels, Stores, etc. Also Borders for Rugs. Send stamp for Book of Designs.
BOUCHTON & TERWILLIGER,
23d Street, under Fifth Avenue Hotel.
NEW YORK CITY.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE

A new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents, by J. S. OGILVIE & CO., 31 Rose Street, New York.

AGENTS WANTED (Samples Free) for DR. SCOTT'S beautiful Electric Corsets, Brushes, Belts, Etc. No risk, quick sales. Territory given. Satisfaction guaranteed.
DR. SCOTT, 843 Broadway, New York.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED. SEND for particulars and liberal terms W. B. KETCHAM, 71 Bible House, New York

Lactated Food

The Mother's Favorite.

Send for our Circular entitled
"LETTERS from MOTHERS,"
which contains a large number of letters, many of which say the life of their baby was saved by the use of LACTATED FOOD.

Read these letters and, if you wish, write to the mothers and get their opinion—every one will gladly answer.

If your baby is not hearty and robust try it.

LACTATED FOOD
Is also a Perfect Nutrient for INVALIDS,

in either chronic or acute cases. Weak stomachs always retain and relish it. Thousands of Physicians recommend it as the best of all prepared foods. Unequalled in DYSPEPSIA.

150 MEALS for an INFANT for $1.00.
Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

THIS most useful and beautiful Paper and Magazine Cutter will be sent to any address on receipt of 3 two-cent stamps.

A sample letter:—"I am much pleased with paper cutter just arrived. Enclosed you will find one dollar, kindly send me paper cutters for amount. I wish to present them to my friends." Address

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE,
743 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUST ISSUED.
HYMNS for MISSIONS.

Compiled by Rev. Drs. Rainsford, Van De Water and Shackelford.
CONTAINS 123 HYMNS AND TUNES.
With Tunes, in Board Covers, at $25 per 100 Copies. Sent post paid on receipt of 30 cents.
Words Only, Paper Covers, $5 per 100; in Cloth, $10.
BIGLOW & MAIN, PUBLISHERS,
76 East Ninth Street, New York.

The way of the transgressor is hard and the way of the man who paints his house with acid white lead alone is soft, nasty and poison. The F. J. Nash M'f'g. Co., Nyack, Rockland Co., N. Y., manufacturers of Ready Mixed Paints, in addition to the usual color card free, send an exceedingly interesting, plain common-sense exposition of paint free.

"Demonology or Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern."—"An effective weapon."—"A sword of fire."—"Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Startling disclosures.—History facts and data.—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

Inspiring Songs.

Such are the songs, that compose Glad Hallelujahs. As you sing you can't help feeling them. Before you know it, you are completely wrapped up in them—heart and soul. They act like a charm. How effective, in Church or School, must such songs be! Sweney and Kirkpatrick say they've not produced its equal. Glad Hallelujahs then, is both their newest and best.

By mail, 35 cents. By express (not prepaid), $3.60 per dozen; $30 per 100. One sample copy 25 cents. Further inducements to Schools, Churches and Evangelists. Write us.

T. T. TASKER, SR., PUBLISHER,
921 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

NOW READY!
THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.
ILLUSTRATED.

PARTIAL CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER:
ALONG THE CARIBBEAN, II. Illustrated. —Dr. W. F. Hutchinson.
OLIVIA DELAPLAINE, IX., X. Illustrated. —Edgar Fawcett.
OUR NEW NAVY. Illustrated. —Lieut. W. S. Hughes, U.S.N.
THE MILITARY SYSTEM OF CANADA. Illustrated. —J. Macdonald Oxley.
JEWISH PROGRESS IN THE UNITED STATES. —Dr. A. S. Isaacs.
IN AND OUT OF A CANOE. —A. E. Dumble.
DENHAM ON THE VAUFLARS. —Rose Hawthorne Lathrop.
SOME CURIOUS SEA-WORDS. Lieut. F. S. Bassett, U.S.N.
BISHOP SIMPSON. THE PORTFOLIO.

FOR SALE BY ALL NEWSDEALERS.
PRICE 25c.
THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE CO., Publishers,
132 Pearl St., NEW YORK.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.
THIS NEW
ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES—(avoid Agents and Dealers whose profits and expenses double the cost on every Piano they sell) and send this First-Class UPRIGHT Cabinet GEM 7¼ Octave Rosewood Piano, Warranted 6 years, for $193! We send it—with Beautiful Cover and Stool—for Trial in your own Home before you buy. Send for circulars to Marchal & Smith, 235 East 21st St., N. Y.

James McCreery &

PREVIOUS TO OPENING THEIR NEW S[TORE] OF FALL DRESS GOODS OFFER THE FOLLOWING BARGAINS:

ONE LINE OF MIXED SUITINGS, 44 IN[CHES] WIDE, AT 75 CTS., FORMER PRICE, [$1] PER YARD.

ONE LINE OE FRENCH CANVAS CL[OTH] 50 CTS., FORMER PRICE $1 PER YARD, OF THE ABOVE LINES ARE ALL WOOL AND VERY DESIRABLE.

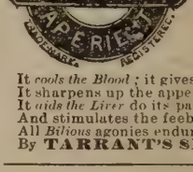
ORDERS BY MAIL WILL RECEIVE PR[OMPT] AND CAREFUL ATTENTION.

Broadway and Eleventh S[t]
New York.

Ladies' Suits

Ladies who are unable to exam[ine] our stock of these goods person[ally] would find it to their advantag[e] correspond with us. The most c[om]plete information furnished, and c[are]ful attention given to special ord[ers]

Lord & Taylo[r]
Broadway & 20th Street, N. Y[ork]



FOR
Biliousness, Sick Headac[he] Constipati[on] Dyspeps[ia]

It cools the Blood; it gives delight;
It sharpens up the appetite.
It aids the Liver do its part
And stimulates the feeble heart.
All Bilious agonies endured.
By TARRANT'S SELTZER can be c[ured]

Notes and Suggestion[s]
FOR
BIBLE READING[S]

S. R. Briggs and J. H. Elliott

Acknowledged to be the very best help for Readings in print. Introductory chapters
L. W. Whittle,
Rev. Lyman Abbott,
Rev. J. H. Brookes, D.D.,
Rev. Stewart Robinson, D.D.,
Rev. J. Erdman,
Rev. A. Somerville,
Rev. J. H. Vincent, D.D.
And OVER SIX HUNDRED BIBLE READING BIBLE STUDIES by some of the most eminent students of the day.

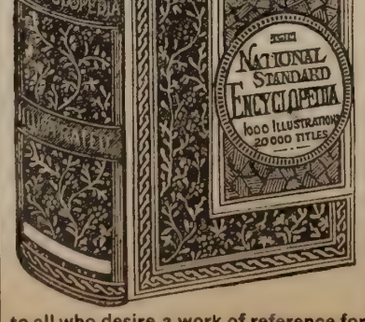
This volume is without doubt the most co[m]plete and satisfactory as well as the largest and ch[eap]est book of Bible Readings published.

One very valuable feature of this work and wh[ich] it differs from other books of a somewhat s[im]ilar character, is in the line of thought being given very nearly every scripture reference quoted, [by] which a book of Bible Readings is of little [or no] help than an ordinary concordance in prepa[ring] this useful branch of Christian instruction

282 pages, large 12mo, with complete I[ndex]. Bound in cloth, Library Edition, $1 00; cheap [paper] cover edition, 50 cents.
Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New Y[ork]

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,
it makes no difference where you see them adver[tised] or by whom or where they are published or [sold], send your orders to me and I will attend to them promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and enter that they reach you safely. Postage st[amps] received for fractional parts of a dollar.
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New Y[ork]

THE NATIONAL STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA.
A Volume for Universal Reference!



THE NATIONAL STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA is a new and valuable book for popular use, compiled by competent editors, after consultation of the best authorities, printed from new, large, clear type, and handsomely bound in cloth. It contains information on every conceivable subject, and its reliability has been assured by the most careful preparation. It is of the greatest use in answering the ten thousand questions that constantly arise in regard to dates, places, persons, incidents, statistics, etc., etc. It contains

700 Pages and 20,000 Articles Pertaining to questions of—Agriculture, Astronomy, Architecture, Biography, Botany, Chemistry, Engineering, Geography, Geology, History, Horticulture, Literature, Mechanics, Medicine, Mythology, Natural History, Physiology, and the various Arts and Sciences.

Complete in One Volume, With Over 1,000 Illustrations

This is an entirely new work, unlike any other, and the only ENCYCLOPEDIA ever published and sold for less than five dollars: it is indispensable to all who desire a work of reference for every department of human knowledge.

This ENCYCLOPEDIA will be sent, postpaid, for $1.00. Five Books for $4.00. Get four friends to buy one each, and you will get your book free.
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at 63 [Bible] House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 35. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, SEPT. 1, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT and LIFE of REV. JAMES CHALMERS, Pioneer Missionary in New Guinea.

WOMAN'S OPPORTUNITY. A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

OUR COMING ASCENT INTO THE HEAVENS. By Rev. M. Baxter.

A Visit from the Mikado—A Hunter Entrapped in a Tree—A Missionary on the Pope—Female Idolaters Eating Dust—Five Years of Suffering—Remarkable Conversions in Mexico.

PORTRAIT OF A MEXICAN INDIAN GIRL.

THE CHRIST OF PATMOS. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

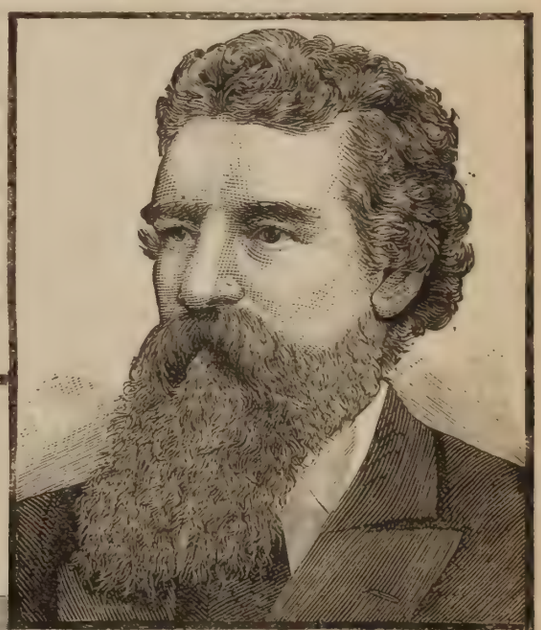
CURRENT EVENTS: The Conventions in Maryland and Iowa—Prohibitionists in Council—The Montreal's Missing Boat—The Changes in the Postal Service—Mr. H. M. Stanley's Letter—The Land League Debate—A Curious Blunder in a Hospital—A Boy's Escape from an Alligator—A Maniac in Brooklyn, etc.

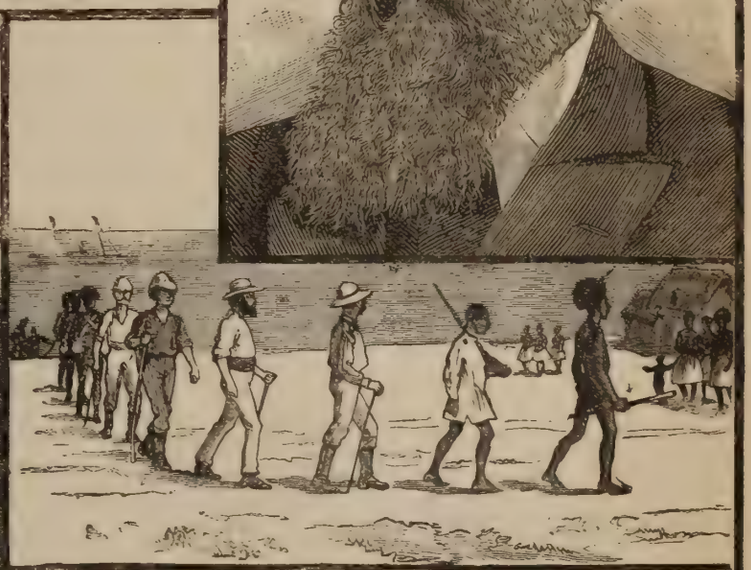
PICTURE OF THE CITY OF VERA CRUZ.

THE FOREMAN'S ORDEAL. (With Illustration)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. By George Muller. (Continued.)

GOLDEN PRECEPTS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.





The REV. JAMES CHALMERS, Pioneer Missionary in New Guinea—Scenes in his Life.

THE REV. JAMES CHALMERS.

A Pioneer Missionary in New Guinea.

The Island and People of New Guinea—Mr. Chalmers Born in 1841—Early Conversion—Call to the Ministry and to Foreign Mission Work—Accepted by the London Missionary Society—Sets Sail in 1866 for Rarotonga—Ocean Perils Escaped—Arrival at Rarotonga—Appointed to New Guinea in 1878—Mrs. Chalmer's Heroism—A Sorcerer's "Revelations"—Influence of the Missionary among the Chiefs—Exploring Journeys—A Serious Native Fray—The Annexation in 1885—The Tree Houses.

ONE of the most remarkable missionary efforts of recent times is that of the introduction of Christianity to Papua, or New Guinea, which has been conducted by the Rev. James Chalmers (whose portrait appears on the first page), aided by Rev. Wyatt Gill and other devoted laborers. New Guinea is a large island in the South Pacific, close to the Equator, and to the north of Australia. Its area is about 250,000 square miles—a little smaller than the State of Texas. The natives have always been regarded as a wild, intractable race, fierce and savage, addicted to cannibalism, and sunk in hopeless barbarism. The idea of going to such a people to preach the gospel was regarded as rash in the extreme, and certain to result in massacre. But in 1871 the attempt was made. The Rev. Wyatt Gill and Rev. S. McFarlane, two missionaries who had been laboring at Mangaia, a South Pacific island in the Hervey group, set out with a band of native teachers for New Guinea. Like the first missionaries of the Cross, they counted not their lives dear unto them, but went in the name of the Prince of Peace, trusting in His power to protect them, or, if need be, ready to give up their lives in the work. They were unexpectedly successful in their work on the coast, and six years later—in 1877 Mr. Gill being needed in another field—Mr. Chalmers took hold of the work and pushed on into the interior. Like Livingstone in Africa, he has opened up the comparatively unknown land, and has, in addition to his labors in the cause of Christ, contributed to the geographical and scientific knowledge of the world.

Early Life.

Mr. Chalmers was born at Ardrishaig, Argyleshire, Scotland, in 1841, so that he is now forty-six years of age. Converted to God in early life, he formally identified himself with the United Presbyterian Church in 1860, and began to work in various ways for the good of men and the glory of Christ. After a time he believed that God would have him devote himself to the ministry of the Gospel in the foreign mission field, and he at once solemnly consecrated himself to the service. He became a student at Cheshunt College and at Highgate, and having showed much aptitude for missionary enterprise, he was accepted by the committee of the London Missionary Society at the close of his academical curriculum, and appointed to Rarotonga, formerly one of the most savage of the islands of the South Seas, but many of whose inhabitants had been won to Christianity. He sailed from London in January, 1866, in the missionary ship John Williams. At Aneitum his life was in peril, for the ship struck with violence upon a hidden reef, which necessitated an immediate return to Sydney for repairs. Having been again got ready for sea, the John Williams visited several stations where the Gospel had gained a footing, but was Wrecked on the Island of Niue, with some of the missionary party on board. God, however watched over the lives of His servants, and at length, in the month of May, 1867, they arrived at Rarotonga. Two months later the mission was left in the sole charge of Mr. Chalmers, through the return to England of Rev. E. R. W. Krause, who had previously done most successful service there. The younger missionary, with characteristic devotion and hopefulness, took up pastoral work among the native churches, and conducted the management of the Theological Institution for the training of native evangelists, and the various schools on the island, the blessing of God resting abundantly on his labors.

In May, 1878, Mr. Chalmers left Rarotonga, the London Missionary Society having appointed him where he now is. After some preliminary labors and early difficulties on Suan, or Stacey Island, and the mainland, he began his long and perilous journeys, accompanied only by his brave wife, among tribes believed to be hostile, travelling unarmed, preferring to leave themselves wholly to the care of their Master. He says: "Only once in New Guinea have I carried a weapon, and then we had spears thrown at us." Mrs. Chalmers had the happy art of drawing the savages to her, and of inspiring them with confidence in her and her husband. She seemed absolutely fearless, and made the wild children of nature who surrounded her, greatly respect and, later on, love her. Resolute in character, with strong faith in God, no circumstances of a seemingly inauspicious nature could avail to turn aside from the path of duty. When her friends in Australia tried to pursuade her to remain there for a year or two, while Mr. Chalmers selected a position and prepared a home, her undaunted reply was, "No! my place and my duty are with my husband." A description of the journeys taken by this brave couple is contained in a volume entitled "Work and Adventure in New Guinea," the joint product of the pens of Mr. Chalmers and Mr. Gill, from which we extract the following Incidents of the Campaign.

Missionary in New Guinea,

While the missionary party was detained on one occasion at Uakinumu, one night after all in the village had retired to rest, a peculiar noise was heard, as of some one in great distress; then loud speaking, in a falsetto voice, and all knew at once that a spiritist, or sorcerer, was near by, and revelations were about to be made. The travelling party were all named, and the places they were to visit. Mr Chalmers felt anxious, for if the "revelation" should be in the least gloomy, such was the faith that the sorcerers have inspired in the people, that no native would accompany them, However, it turned out all right. The "spirit" gave the missionaries an excellent character, eulogized them as good and kind, and predicted that all the villages would willingly receive them. Of course the "spiritist" was only a sorcerer, who was well acquainted with the intentions of Mr. Chalmers, and being favorably impressed by him, had spoken in his favor.

The influence of the tribal chiefs has been quite undermined by these sorcerers, until scarcely any remain who are able to wield authority. Now, however, the real power along the coast of New Guinea is symbolized by the numerous mission stations which have been planted by Mr. Chalmers, who has obtained

The Name of "Tamate,"

(teacher), and is beloved by all. Everywhere "maino" (peace), follows the footsteps of Tamate. He settles the quarrels which arise: often he is sent for from very long distances to act as arbitrator among tribes which may be at war. As an English naval officer testified a few months ago, "Everywhere Tamate's influence is supreme," he soothes the excitable minds of the natives, calms and drives away their fears with a power which to these simple people seems wonderful, so that the very name "Tamate" has come to signify "peace."

At the close of 1880 reports were brought to Mr. Chalmers that the Elema natives purposed making a raid to kill him and Ruatoka, the native teacher, and then attack the native Christians right and left. Under these threatening circumstances he resolved to and made arrangements for visiting Motu-motu, the hostile chief. On January 10, 1881, he started. The leader of his party ran away, but one of the first three New Guinea converts of Port Moresby, named Huakonis, was willing to go. The boat's crew were regarded by the people as simply rushing into the arms of death. Wives, children and friends gathered around weeping. Huakonis told Mr. Chalmers afterwards that everything short of physical force was used to prevent their accompanying him, and added, "We know it is all right; the Spirit that has watched over you in the past—naming the various journeys—will do so now, and if we return safe, won't the people be ashamed?" The visit proved completely successful; both chief and people were charmed, quite willing to make peace, and agreed to pay a return visit. Soon after his return Mr. Chalmers baptized Kohn and Rahela, the first two women of New Guinea converted to Christianity.

Beard the Lion in His Den,

Building a Mission.

In May, 1881, Mr. Chalmers left Port Moresby, the chief mission station in New Guinea, and took a westerly course. He anchored in Hall Sound next day, opposite Delena. The chiefs, Kone and Lavao, came off, and said it was useless to go on to Maiva, it being impossible to land there. He went ashore at Delena, and, in a survey of the country, was astonished to find a beautiful tract of land, forming a splendid position for a mission house. Kone offered as much land as he wanted, and, after thinking it over, Mr. Chalmers decided to build, then landed his tents, and pitched them on the rising ground above the village.

When telling the people that there would be no work for them on Sunday, Kone said, "Oh, we know! and we are going to be healka (sacred) to-morrow." On being asked how he had come to know about Sunday, he replied, "From Boera." Thus the teaching given at one place reaches and influences many villages, and sometimes those are at a great distance. Mr. Chalmers found heathens repeating the Lord's Prayer, asking a blessing and giving thanks before and after meals, telling Bible stories and preaching Christian doctrines, in very out-of-the-way places. The trading instincts of the people lead them to the villages, where the teachers are located, and they carry away more than the price of their produce.

A Peacemaker.

On the Sunday following they had service, Kone being the interpreter. But the wary missionary was not deceived by outward appearances. About a week after occurred a serious fray at Delena. When the fight began in the village there was a shout for the missionary to go out and fight with his gun. He went, but unarmed. Rushing into the melee, he shouted, "Maino!" (peace) and soon there was a hush in the terrible storm. Walking through the village, he disarmed some of the combatants, Then Kone pointed out "Arua," the chief, or sorcerer, of the attacking party. He recognized in him a man who, on a former visit, had left his presence in great wrath. Taking his weapons from him, Mr. Chalmers linked his arm, and walked him up the hill, talking kindly; he showed him the Mission flag, and said that was "Maino," at the same time warning him that on no account must he ascend the hill, All right; Arua would stop fighting.

Soon afterwards Mr. Chalmers was again brought out by the report that Kone was about to be killed. More warriors had arrived. The attacking chiefs assured him they would not come near the Mission premises, but he replied, "Right, friends, but you must stop fighting, and on no account injure my friend Kone." Then he called a meeting, and they all agreed to peace. After the fray was over the Delena natives said, "Well, Tamate, had you not been here, many of us would have been killed, and the remainder gone to Naara, never to return."

Death of a Chief.

After an absence of a few months Mr. Chalmers returned to Delena to get his boat for further aggresive work, and to take Kone with him. As he approached, all was hushed. Lavao stepped on board, and was asked, "Where is Kone?" After a time the reply came, "O Tamate, Kone, your friend, is dead, and we buried him on your ground, near the house of his one great friend." When Mr. Chalmers's feelings subsided, so that he could again speak, he asked, "Did Kone die of sickness?" "No, he was speared at a feast by your friend Laoma, who wished to kill a Naara man, and when about to throw a spear, Kone caught the Naara man and placed him behind him, the spear entering his own breast. On the second moon he died."

In 1879 the intrepid missionary was called to bear a heavy trial. His brave and faithful wife who had come with him to Raratonga in 1867, and had been his constant companion and helper, sharing his dangers and labors ever since, after twelve years' faithful service had to leave New Guinea in ill health, and died at Sydney, New South Wales, on Feb. 20, 1879.

How largely God has owned and blessed the work in the Island may be inferred from the fact that now five hundred miles of the coast are occupied by the Mission stations of the London Missionary Society, and the light of the Gospel of Christ continues to penetrate further into the interior. Before leaving New Guinea for a brief visit to his home recently, Mr. Chalmers partook of the ordinance of the Lord's Supper with over seventy converts.

The Annexation

of about half of New Guinea by the British government, which amicably agreed with the German government for a partition of the island, was formally proclaimed by the late Major-General Sir Peter Scratchley, on October 30, 1885. The ceremony was striking. Dressed in dazzling white clothing, the sailors and marines of the British ships Diamond and Raven were drawn up in line at daybreak, at Maopa, the capital at Aroma, which is about four or five miles distant from the coast. Around the tall flagstaff which had been erected, stood Sir P. Scratchley, Captain Clayton, R. N., the General Staff, and the native chief. In one dense circle around sat some 3,000 natives. The quaintly peaked village houses formed the background, over which waved the towering palm-trees which rose from the luxuriant green forest behind. (See illustration on first page) After an impressive speech addressed to the chief and his people, delivered by Captain Clayton through the interpretation of Rev. J. Chalmers, the missionary, the Union Jack was hoisted.

The Dobos or Tree Houses, one of which is seen on our front page, are houses built high up among the branches of tall trees, like huge birds' nests. They are not used as residences, but for places of refuge and defence in case of attack by other tribes; and are sufficiently large to contain each a dozen persons.

Referring to the bright future of the country, Mr. Chalmers says, in his book, "The influence of the Gospel is already so marked, that it is working rapid changes in the thoughts and habits of the natives. Hence it is more than probable that no white man of this generation can possibly see New Guinea and her people under exactly the same conditions as the writer. Succeeding missionaries and observers can never see these people in the same state of savagery as when he acquired their friendship. New Guinea savages are men worth saving, they are worth the sacrifice of life which the Polynesian Church has already made on their behalf, and New Guinea for Christ is not only a dream, but will, at no distant time, become a reality."

THE GUIDE TO HOLINESS.

Edited by Mrs. Dr. W. C. Palmer and Rev. Geo. Hughes. It is the pioneer magazine, as an exponent of the higher forms of the Christian life. It is undenominational in character, and circulates among members of the several branches of the evangelical Church. It is published monthly, containing 32 pages of choice reading. Each number has: 1. An able sermon; 2. Bible Lessons on the great theme; 3. A report of "The Tuesday Meeting;" 4. Articles by able correspondents at home and abroad; 5. A choice selection of music and a variety of other matter. It is neatly printed on good paper, with illustrations. It has a world-wide circulation, and is everywhere received with favor. Annual subscriptions, $1.00; to ministers of all denominations, 75 cents. Sample Copies free on application to the publishers, PALMER & HUGHES, 62 and 64 Bible House, New York. Liberal terms to Agents.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Poisoned by Mistake.—A Christian Friend Observed: "A man went to bed one night in good health, but suddenly during the night he felt ill. He rose, and going to a cupboard he lifted a bottle which he thought contained medicine, but which in reality held poison. He took a quantity of it and went back to bed, and shortly afterwards died from the effects of it. He believed he had taken the right thing, but his belief did not save him. No matter how sincerely we believe an error, we can never by that means put ourselves right."

A Would-be Suicide Arrested.—"We have in our band of workers a young man who was converted in a country village three or four years back. He was then an infidel, a great reader of Tom Paine's works, doing all he could to hinder the work of God. He became so miserable that he determined to commit suicide, and was on his way to do so when, hearing the Evangelists, he was arrested. G. T. was preaching from John 3: 16. The poor, despairing young man received the Gospel as truly God's good tidings, and that day was to him the beginning of a new life. He has been with us here now more than two years, living most consistently. He is one of our most active workers too, and a good open-air preacher."

An Idol Shattered.—Mr. Scrymgour Relates: "I heard lately of a young wife who loved her husband with her whole heart. She looked up to him, trusted him, idolized him, in fact, she made him her god, giving him the foremost place in her heart. For some time all seemed to go well, but this could not continue. There came a time when she had to realize the loneliness of such as make men their confidence, and one day she stood breathlessly listening to the feet of them who brought home the dead body of her husband. Her idol had been shivered. The desire of her eyes had been removed at a stroke. Then she felt the aching void in her heart, and only then did she realize that the one safe place in which to repose is on the breast of Christ. She found that He would never leave her and never forsake her, and that He is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever.

An Unsafe Foundation.—Mr. Thomson says: "One day, speaking to a young friend, I asked him if he were saved. He replied, 'I hope so.' 'And what are your grounds for hoping so?' I inquired. 'Because God is a merciful God, and I do not believe He will send any one to eternal destruction,' was the reply. 'And is that your only ground of hope? Are you not sure?' I asked. 'No, I do not believe in that,' was the rejoinder. 'Are you yourself sure of salvation?' 'Yes,' I said, 'because God has said that Jesus has died and given his blood for me. I have put myself under that blood, and God has said, 'When I see the blood I will pass over you.' The young man looked surprised, and said he had never heard anything like that before, and he was not going to believe it now, and he would have none of it. There are many like him; but whether they believe it or not, 'Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin.'"

The Schoolmaster's "Little Flower."—Mr. Hamilton remarks: "I have heard of a little girl, a bright, clever child, who was a great favorite with her schoolmaster. He lovingly called her his little flower, as she showed her affection to him by often bringing him a present of a few flowers. The friendship continued between them for some time, but all too soon it was abruptly broken. The schoolmaster died, and no one missed him so much as his favorite scholar. Day after day she visited his grave. This continued throughout the winter, until it came to New Year's Day. As she prepared to go forth on her errand of love, she was very sad, for she had no fresh flowers to give him. With a few half-withered ones she went to the grave, and, standing there with tears in her eyes, she said, 'Oh, master, I have no fresh flowers this time, but you have often said I was your little flower, and I just bring myself,' and she threw herself, weeping, on the grave. Sinners should just come to the Lord Jesus as that little child came to her friend's grave, and throw themselves down before Him, saying with all her simplicity, 'I have nothing to give in exchange for Thy great love, but, oh, Lord, just take myself.' That is all that is wanted to make a sinner safe, the giving up of self to Christ."

A Walk in the Garden.—A Worker says: "I was one day having luncheon with a friend of mine. There were also present a lady and a gentleman, and while at table the conversation turned upon a great commercial failure that had recently occurred in the locality. After luncheon my friend asked me to take the lady a walk round the garden. This I knew was to give me an opportunity to speak to her about Christ and His salvation. We walked through the garden, and eventually I summoned up courage and spoke to her concerning the failure, and just as I was about to speak to her of the great subject that was uppermost, she turned abruptly and left me. When I returned to the house, my friend asked me how I got on, and when I told him, he said, 'I expected as much, and that was the reason I asked you to take her into the garden, and I think your failure in this case will do you good, for it does do Christians much good when they thoroughly realize by experience such as yours how utterly helpless they are in themselves, that they are unable to convert even one soul, and that it is only by being strong in the strength of the Lord that they can fight the good fight and come out victorious.'"

Hunters in Full Chase.—Mr. Forbes Relates: "I once stood and watched a hart being pursued by hunters, and a most painful sight it was. The poor creature staggered along, its eyes hot and blood-shot, while the great tears streamed down its face. Its flanks were torn by the prickly foliage through which it had rushed. It knew its only safety was in the hills, and laboriously it staggered upwards. By the time it had reached comparative safety it was thoroughly exhausted, and wildly sniffed the air for water. Soon it came to a stream, into which it plunged. There it stood, almost immersed and when it stepped from the water it looked quite fresh and strong, and began quietly to nibble the herbage on the bank. And I thought, this is just a picture of the sinner as he rushes through this life, pursued by the world, the flesh and the devil. He is torn by the briars and thorns of evil habits. With blood-shot eyes and gasping breath, on, on he goes, the pursuers close in upon him: his only safety is on the blessed hill of Calvary. There he will find security, and plunging into the living stream which flows from the Cross, he will emerge a new man, and his cry will be, 'As the hart desireth the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God.'"

A Husband's Threat Retracted.—The Rev. Mr. Peden says: "There were a husband and wife who got along very well together as long as they both remained worldly and indulged in the intoxicating cup. One night the wife was passing a gospel meeting in the open air, and heard words that showed her her lost condition, and that she was in danger of remaining lost forever. She chose Christ, and no sooner had she made the change known to her husband, than he said, with an angry frown, 'You have been to these gospel meetings, have you?' He commanded her with a threat never to go again, and watched her closely that she might not have the opportunity. She said nothing, but continued to pray, and one night she felt she must go and hear more of Jesus. She went, and when she returned home her husband, who had missed her, asked, 'Where have you been?' She told him, and said, 'I felt that I had to go.' Then what happened? Did the man fulfil his threat? No. He thought he was stronger than she, but she, in the strength of the Lord, was the stronger, and by His strength overpowered her husband, who also yielded himself to Christ, and both he and his wife are trusting in the Lord, and are happy in His salvation."

WOMAN'S OPPORTUNITY.

A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

"So God created man in His own image, in the image of God created He him; male and female created He them."—Gen. 1 : 27.

Two Dissimilar Empires—Comparisons Futile—Masculine Women and Effeminate Men—The Question of Suffrage—Undesirable Women—Woman's Throne—Her Influence on Great Men—Her Glorious Rights—To Make Home Happy—The Calm Harbor of a Stormy World—A Glorious Realm—Above the Ballot-Box—Superior to Fashion and Frivolity—How to Attain Eternal Dominion—A Dream of Heaven.

In other words, God, who can make no mistake, made man and woman for a specific work, and to move in particular spheres—man to be regnant in his realm, woman to be dominant in hers. The boundary line between Italy and Switzerland, between England and Scotland, is not more thoroughly marked than this distinction between the empire masculine and the Empire Feminine.

So entirely dissimilar are the fields to which God called them, that you can no more compare them than you can oxygen and hydrogen, water and grass, trees and stars. All this talk about the superiority of one sex to the other sex is an everlasting waste of ink and speech. A jeweler may have a scale so delicate that he can weigh the dust of diamonds, but where are the scales so delicate that you can weigh in them affection against affection, sentiment against sentiment, thought against thought, soul against soul, a man's word against a woman's word?

You come out with your stereotyped remark, the man is superior to woman in intellect, and then I open on my desk the swarthy, iron-typed, thunder-bolted writings of Harriet Martineau, and Elizabeth Browning, and George Eliot. You come on with your stereotyped remark about woman's superiority to man in the item of affection, but I ask you where was there more capacity to love than in John the disciple, and Robert McCheyne, the Scotchman, and John Summerfield, the Methodist, and Henry Martin, the missionary? The heart of those men was so large that after you had rolled into it two hemispheres, there was room still left to marshal the hosts of heaven, and set up the throne of the eternal Jehovah. I deny to man the throne intellectual. I deny to woman the throne affectional. No human phraseology will ever define the spheres, while there is an intuition by which we know when a man is in his realm, and when a woman is in her realm, and when either of them is out of it. No bungling legislature ought to attempt to make a definition, or to say, "This is the line, and that is the line."

My Theory

is, that if woman wants to vote, she ought to vote, and that if a man wants to embroider and keep house, he ought to be allowed to embroider and keep house. There are masculine women and there are effeminate men. My theory is, that you have no right to interfere with any one's doing anything that is righteous. Albany and Washington might as well decree by legislation how high a brown-thrasher should fly, or how deep a trout should plunge, as to try to seek out the height or the depth of woman's duty. The question of capacity will settle finally the whole question, the whole subject. When a woman is prepared to preach, she will preach, and neither Conference nor Presbytery can hinder her. When a woman is prepared to move in highest commercial spheres, she will have great influence on the Exchange, and no Boards of Trade can hinder her. I want woman to understand that heart and brain can overfly any barrier that politicians may set up, and that nothing can keep her back or keep her down but the question of capacity. I know there are

Women of Most Undesirable Nature, who wander up and down the country—having no homes of their own, or forsaking their own homes—talking about their rights; and we know very well that they themselves are fit neither to vote, nor fit to keep house. Their mission seems to be to humiliate the two sexes at the thought of what any one of us might become. No one would want to live under the laws that such women would enact, or to have cast upon society the children that such women would raise. But I shall show you this morning that the best rights that women can own, she already has in her possession; that in this country at this time is not one of commiseration, but one of congratulation; that the grandeur and power of her realm have never yet been appreciated; that she sits to-day on a throne so high that all the thrones of earth piled on top of each other would not make for her a footstool. Here is the platform on which she stands. Away down below it are the ballot-box and the Congressional assemblage and the Legislative hall.

Her Position

Woman always has voted and always will vote. Our great-grandfathers thought they were by their votes putting Washington into the presidential chair. No. His mother, by the principles she taught him, and by the habits she inculcated, made him President. It was a Christian mother's hand dropping the ballot when Lord Bacon wrote, and Newton philosophized, and Alfred the Great governed, and Jonathan Edwards thundered of judgment to come. How many men there have been in high political station, who would have been insufficient to stand the test to which their moral principle was put, had it not been for a wife's voice that encouraged them to do right, and a wife's prayer that sounded louder than the clamor of partisanship! Why, my friends, the right of suffrage, as we men exercise it, seems to be a feeble thing. You, a Christian man, come up to the ballot-box, and you drop your vote. Right after you comes a libertine or a sot—the offscouring of the street—and he drops his vote; and his vote counteracts yours. But if in the quiet of home life a daughter by her Christian demeanor, a wife by her industry, a mother by her faithfulness, casts a vote in the right direction, then nothing can resist it, and the influence of that vote will throb through the eternities.

My chief anxiety then is, not that woman have other rights accorded her; but that she, by the grace of God, rise up to the appreciation of the

Glorious Rights

she already possesses. This morning I shall only have time to speak of one grand and all-absorbing right that every woman has, and that is to make home happy. That realm no one has ever disputed with her. Men may come home at noon or at night, and they tarry a comparatively little while; but she, all day long, governs it, beautifies it, sanctifies it. It is within her power to make it the most attractive place on earth. It is the only calm harbor in this world. You know as well as I do, that this outside world and the business world is a long scene of jostle and contention. The man who has a dollar struggles to keep it; the man who has it not struggles to get it. Prices up. Prices down. Losses. Gains. Misrepresentations. Gougings. Underselling. Buyers depreciating; salesmen exaggerating. Tenants seeking less rent; landlords demanding more. Gold fidgety. Struggles about office. Men who are in trying to keep in; men out trying to get in. Slips, tumbles. Defalcations. Panics. Catastrophes. O woman! Thank God you have a home, and that in it. Better be there than wear Victoria's coronet. Better be there than carry the purse of a princess. Your abode may be humble, but you can by your faith in God, and your cheerfulness of demeanor, gild it with splendors such as an upholsterer's hand never yet kindled. There are abodes in the city—humble, two stories, four plain unpapered rooms; undesirable neighborhood; and yet there is a man here this morning who would die on the threshold rather than surrender it. Why? It is home. Whenever he thinks of it, he sees angels of God hovering around it. The ladders of heaven are let down to this house. Over the child's rough crib there are the chantings of angels, as those that broke over Bethlehem.

You May be Queen

It is Home.

These children may come up after awhile, and they may win high position, and they may have an affluent residence; but they will not until their dying day forget that humble roof, under which their father rested, and their mother sang, and their sisters played. Oh, if you would gather up all tender memories, all the lights and shades of the heart, all banquetings and reunions, all filial, fraternal, paternal, and conjugal affections, and you had only just four letters to spell out that height and depth and length and breadth and magnitude and eternity of meaning, you would, with streaming eyes, and trembling voice, and agitated hand, write it out in those four living capitals, H-O-M-E.

What right does woman want that is grander than to be queen in such a realm? Why, the eagles of heaven cannot fly across that dominion. Horses, panting and with lathered flanks, are not swift enough to run to the outpost of that realm. They say that the sun never sets upon the English empire; but I have to tell you that on this realm of woman's influence, eternity never marks any bound. Isabella fled from the Spanish throne, pursued by the nation's anathema; but she who is queen in a home will never lose her throne, and death itself will only be the annexation of heavenly principalities.

When you want to get your grandest

Idea of a Queen,

you do not think of Catharine of Russia, or of Anne of England, or Marie Theresa of Germany; but when you want to get your grandest idea of a queen, you think of the plain woman who sat opposite your father at the table, or walked with him arm-in-arm down life's pathway; sometimes to the thanksgiving banquet, sometimes to the grave, but always together—soothing your petty griefs, correcting your childish waywardness, joining in your infantile sports, listening to your evening prayers, toiling for you with needle, or at the spinning-wheel, and on cold nights wrapping you up snug and warm. And then at last on that day when she lay in the back room dying, and you saw her take those thin hands with which she toiled for you so long, and put them together in a dying prayer that commended you to God whom she had taught you to trust—O, she was the queen! The chariots of God came down to fetch her; and as she went in, all heaven rose up. You cannot think of her now without a rush of tenderness that stirs the deep foundations of your soul, and you feel as much a child again as when you cried on her lap; and if you could bring her back again to speak just once more your name as tenderly as she used to speak it, you would be willing to throw yourself on the ground and kiss the sod that covers her, crying: "Mother! mother!" Ah! she was the queen—

She Was The Queen.

Now, can you tell me how many thousand miles a woman like that would have to travel down before she got to the ballot-box? Compared with this work of training kings and queens for God and eternity, how insignificant seems all this work of voting for aldermen and common councilmen, and sheriffs, and constables, and mayors, and presidents. To make one such grand woman as I have described, how many thousand would you want of those people who go in the round of godlessness and fashion and dissipation, distorting their body until in their monstrosities they seem to outdo the dromedary and hippopotamus! going as far toward disgraceful apparel as they dare go, so as not to be arrested of the police—their behavior a sorrow to the good and a caricature of the vicious, and an insult to that God who made them women and not gorgons; and tramping on, down through a frivolous and dissipated life, to temporal and eternal damnation. O woman, with the lightning of your soul, strike dead at your feet all these allurements to dissipation and to fashion. Your immortal soul cannot be fed upon such garbage.

God calls you up to empire and dominion. Will you have it? O, give to God your heart; give to God your best energies; give to God all your culture; give to God all your refinement; give yourself to Him, for

This World and the Next.

Soon all these bright eyes will be quenched, and these voices will be hushed. For the last time you will look upon this fair earth, Father's hand, mother's hand, sister's hand, child's hand, will be no more in yours. It will be night, and there will come up a cold wind from the Jordan, and you must start. Will it be a lone woman on a trackless moor? Ah! no, Jesus will come up in that hour and offer His hand, and He will say: "You stood by Me when you were well; now I will not desert you when you are sick." One wave of His hand, and the storm will drop; and another wave of His hand, and midnight shall break into midnoon; and another wave of His hand, and the chamberlains of God will come down from the treasure-houses of heaven, with robes lustrous, blood-washed, and heaven-glinted, in which you will array yourself for the marriage-supper of the Lamb. And then with Miriam, who struck the timbrel by the Red Sea; and with Deborah, who led the Lord's host into the fight; and with Hannah, who gave her Samuel to the Lord; and with Mary, who rocked Jesus to sleep while there were angels singing in the air; and with Florence Nightingale, who bound up the battle-wounds of the Crimea, you will, from the chalice of God, drink to the soul's eternal rescue.

One twilight, after I had been playing with the children for some time, I laid down on the lounge to rest; and, half asleep and half awake, this dream: It seemed to me that I was in a far-distant land—not Persia, although more than Oriental luxuriance crowned the cities; nor the tropics, although more than tropical fruitfulness filled the gardens; nor Italy—although more than Italian softness filled the air. And I wandered around, looking for thorns and nettles, but I found none of them grew there. And I walked forth and I saw the sun rise, and I said: "When will it set again?" and the sun sank not. And I saw all the people in holiday apparel, and I said: "When will they put on workingman's garb again, and delve in the mine, and swelter at the forge?" But neither the garments nor the robes did they put off.

I Seemed to Dream

And I wandered in the suburbs, and I said: "Where do they bury the dead of this great city?" And I looked along by the hills where it would be most beautiful for the dead to sleep, and I saw castles, and towns, and battlements; but not a mausoleum, nor monument, nor white slab could I see. And I went into the great chapel of the town, and I said: "Where do the poor worship?" where are the benches on which they sit?" And a voice answered: "We have no poor in this great city." And I wandered out, seeking to find the place where were the hovels of the destitute; and I found mansions of amber and ivory and gold, but no tear did I see or sigh hear.

I was bewildered; and I sat under the shadow of a great tree, and I said, "What am I, and whence comes all this?" And at that moment there came from among the leaves, skipping up the flowery paths and across the sparkling waters, a very bright and sparkling group; and when I saw their step I knew, and when I heard their voices I thought I knew them; but their apparel was so different from anything I had ever seen, I bowed, a stranger to strangers. But after a while, when they clapped their hands, and shouted, the mystery was solved, and I saw that time had passed, and that eternity had come, and that God had gathered us up into a higher home; and I said, "Are all here?" and the voices of innumerable generations answered: "All here." And while tears of gladness were raining down our cheeks, and the branches of the Lebanon cedars were clapping their hands, and the towers of the great city were chiming their welcome, we began to laugh, and sing, and leap, and shout, "Home! Home! Home!"

"Welcome! Welcome!"

VERA CRUZ AND THE WORK IN MEXICO.

By Right Rev. H. C. Riley, D. D.

(See Illustrations on pages 556.)

VERA CRUZ, the principal seaport of Mexico, as seen from the deck of a steamer in its harbor, looks as if it had in its midst many large Roman Catholic stone churches. Of the nine stone churches, however, built within the city walls of Vera Cruz, I found, when I last visited that seaport, that only one was used by the Roman Catholic Church for its services. Of the others, one was used as a public library, another as a Freemason's Lodge, others as stores, or for other secular purposes The only church building opened for the Roman Catholic services in that crowded seaport town, was disfigured by cobwebs and by many wretched, tawdry images. The ecclesiastic in charge was a Spaniard, said to be excessively worldly, and to have no vocation for the ministry. The people of the city have fought the Roman Catholic Church until they have succeeded in closing all their church buildings against its services, with the exception of the one in charge of that Spaniard. The General Government of Mexico has now abolished all the orders of friars, nuns, sisters of charity and Jesuits throughout its territory. When these orders were abolished in Mexico, their former splendid church buildings reverted to the Government, and were largely sold for secular purposes.

Many persons misunderstand the Republic of Mexico. They look upon Mexico and see it as one sees the city of Vera Cruz, from the vessels in its harbor, apparently crowded with Roman Catholic churches, not realizing that in that nation vast multitudes, as in Vera Cruz, live utterly uncared for by the Roman Catholic Church, while these multitudes despise it for its idolatry, corruption and unpatriotic hostility to their general Government.

How to win souls to Christ and to His holy Gospel from among these masses of people who have discarded the Roman Catholic Church in Mexico, and who are to-day unconnected with any church is a problem which the Mexican branch of the Church of Christ—popularly called "the Church of Jesus"—is lovingly and faithfully grappling with. This church is wisely seeking not to alienate the Mexican patriotic sentiment, as the Roman Catholic Church has so sadly done in Mexico, and with this object it is earnestly trying to maintain a native patriotic, independent aspect in the interest of the Christian work it is doing. Its members have been gathered almost entirely from among the poor.

The Mexican branch of the Church of Christ has often cared for about forty congregations and various mission stations connected with its communion; has had over one hundred children frequently in its orphanages and church boarding-schools and over two hundred more in day schools; it has published and circulated many choice Christian publications in Spanish, and done much other Christian work. Two of the grand stone church buildings in the city of Mexico have been repaired by this Mexican branch of the Church of Christ, and the precious Gospel has been regularly preached within their walls for years past. To continue this precious Christian work in Mexico, it must be generously aided by Christians in other lands.

If one hundred persons will agree to contribute regularly one dollar a week, or if four hundred persons will agree to contribute one dollar a month, this Christian work in Mexico may be placed on a firm financial basis.

One generous reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has already offered to contribute one dollar a week, and mails his contribution to the address of J. P. Heath, 43 Bible House, New York. If ninety-nine others would agree to do the same, this Christian work in Mexico might, by God's blessing, be continued effectively. Who will help? Every little aids.

A Mexican Indian Girl.

Besides the Spaniards and their descendants who inhabit Mexico, there are about five millions of Indians in that land. The Church of Jesus has some congregations gathered from among those Indians, and has educated many of their children. On page 556 is the likeness of one of these Indian children who has been educated by the Church of Jesus, at the request of one of our evangelists, whose life she was instrumental in saving, by protecting him at the risk of her own life, at a time that a fanatical Roman Catholic mob was trying to stone the evangelist to death for having circulated the Bible and preached the pure gospel in their town. In some other number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD I may again speak of that brave little Mexican Indian girl and the evangelist whose life she was instrumental in saving. There are many facts of great interest connected with Christian work in Mexico, which I hope, from time to time, to publish in these columns.

A CRYING BABY.

The following incident is related by Mr. D. L. Moody: When Mr. Sankey and I were in Liverpool, Great Britain, we saw a poor woman in the place where the meetings were held, an hour before the time, and she stayed right through the meeting. She was all worn out, looked like a poor woman, and I suppose she had carried that baby two hours. During the meeting the baby got restless and began to cry. Some of the people looked cross, and I saw the woman was very uneasy and nervous; she didn't want to disturb the meeting, and yet didn't want to go. She did her best to quiet the baby, but it would cry, and at last she started to go out. I said: "Let that baby cry if it wants to. I can speak as loud as the baby can cry. Now, don't look at the mother, but just pray that the Lord will bless her. Remember, she hasn't any one to take care of that baby, and perhaps she hasn't been in church for years." By and by the baby got to sleep. How she listened to the preaching! with tears coming down on her dress. At the close of the sermon I asked those who had any desire for salvation to arise, and the first one was that woman. With her baby in her arms she presented herself for prayer. It touched my very soul. I asked those who wanted to become Christians to go into the inquiry-room while we were singing. The baby woke up and began to cry again, and the mother got very nervous. Then a great, manly six-footer came up and said to her: "Let me take the baby while you go into the inquiry-meeting." Perhaps he had never had a baby in his arms in his life, but he took it, and walked up and down before 8,000 people. That man was a hero. The mother went into the inquiry-room, and found peace for her soul. Then she took her baby and out into the dark city she went. I will never forget that scene, and I don't suppose she will ever forget it—8,000 people praying for that mother that wet night. You can reach the masses by just laying yourself out for it, and God will bless you.

Price, Five Cents, Post Free—160th Thousand
Enlarged Edition—64 Pages—
COMING WARS AND GREAT EVENTS,
and Ten Signs of the Approaching Final Crisis,
by Rev. M. Baxter—Dissolution of the Turkish Empire into the Five Ancient Kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, Thracian Turkey and Bulgaria, which with Britain (separated from Ireland), France, Spain, Italy and Austria, will be formed into an Allied Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms—Subsequent Rise of Napoleon as King of Syria—His Seven Years' Covenant with the Jews—Resurrection and Translation of Saints—3½ Years' Great Tribulation and world-wide Persecution of Christians—Descent of Christ at Armageddon—Ensuing Millennium of 1000 Years after the Year 1900. Address Manager "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

FEMALE IDOLATERS EATING DUST.

At the festival of Juggernaut, which is held in India in June, Mr. Heberlet and several missionaries went to Poree to witness the celebration, and to speak to the large number of persons who gather to watch the idol pass in his gigantic car. Mr. Heberlet says: The great day of the festival brought a vast crowd together, in the very midst of which we were permitted to pursue our work unhindered by active opposition. Very disparaging but strictly truthful remarks about Jagannath, uttered very near to his "sacred" presence as he sat on his car, were received with good-humored smiles by those who heard. They could not fail to feel the justice of the strictures when the proof was visible to all. The women, however, could not be reached by us. Only a stray word or sentence could reach them as one or another passed by, and I longed for some way of conveying to these poor creatures in crowds the glad tidings of a crucified Saviour. There could be no doubt as to their faith in and devotion to the idol. The fervor of their faith found expression in their very faces, and strove to find adequate expression in their acts of devotion. They went down with their foreheads to the dust, saluting the tracks made by the empty car, which had been drawn up to the gate of the temple. Then, picking up the dust crushed by those "holy" wheels, they put some to their foreheads and arms; and then, as a crowning act of devotion, more than one put a pinch into her mouth and ate it! Observing these things, I realized how strong an obstacle to the progress of the Gospel is presented by the pitiable ignorance of these poor creatures; and knowing how hopeless it is to expect to reach them by the agency of men, I longed for the time when Zenana teachers and Bible-women, fired with love to Christ, might carry to them the good news we could not cause them to hear. The preacher in Poree must be possessed of strong faith and much patience; but those who have engaged in labor there know that their labor is not in vain.

REMARKABLE CONVERSIONS IN MEXICO.

In a letter to the Missionary Herald Mr. Wright, of Chihuahua, relates what he justly calls "a remarkable story." It is that of a whole town awakened and eleven souls converted through the simple testimony of a Christian family, who were forced by their profession of faith to go out among strangers. The head of the family in question is named Juan de Dios Loya. He resided in Chihuahua, and gained a livelihood by making artificial flowers to adorn shrines, altars, &c. In April, 1886, this family heard of the Bible for the first time, and began to study it diligently. A few months later, under the teachings of the missionary, they were converted, and made a public profession of faith. This meant a surrender of their income in Chihuahua, and they, therefore, after a brief struggle, concluded to move to Zaragoza, a town distant 120 miles from Chihuahua and 40 miles distant from the railroad. There they immediately began to read the Bible to their neighbors and friends, though it deprived them of many opportunities to gain money. This was the first preaching ever heard in Zaragoza.

Eight months afterwards Mr. Wright, in the course of a journey, visited Zaragoza and called on the Juan de Dios family. No sooner was his presence known than the people began to gather, anxious to hear the gospel and ask questions. Mr. Wright says: "Here is the wonderful part to me. Everyone of these men and women had a good, substantial knowledge of the Bible, and not one of them had read it for more than eight months, most of them not more than six, and some of them only two. I noticed that their Bibles were full of little papers to mark especial passages. On examining them I found these passages to be just such as ought to be marked in every Christian's Bible, and such as you would use in the United States in a revival of religion. I noticed that whenever I read a passage that seemed helpful to them, they would hunt up another bit of paper to put in there. I noticed that these passages were scattered through the whole Bible, showing extended and intelligent study. Eleven persons—seven men, two women and two girls—are trusting in Christ for salvation and many others, including one of the judges of the town, are anxiously inquiring. . . . . "Note the work: In April a family hear the gospel, they are baptized; they move to a town were the gospel has never been preached; and now this little band is asking for baptism and regular preaching."

A HUNTER ENTRAPPED IN A TREE.

An Alabama journal, in publishing the reminiscences of a hunter describes an adventure which is amusing now after the lapse of a year or two, but was sufficiently serious at the time. It appears that the hunter, who lived near Wolf Creek, chased a ground hog which finally took refuge in a log that was hollow nearly all through. He tried to reach the hog with a pole but it was too short, so he crawled into the log to get at him. In the struggle that ensued he lost the hold he had with his feet on the end of the log, and it being on the side of the mountain with the entrance highest, he slid down head foremost upon the beast. Then there was a fierce fight, but the man, though in a cramped position, succeeded in killing the animal. The next difficulty was to get out of the log, and he found himself unable to crawl out backward, his course being up hill. He would have remained there till he died had not his family become alarmed by his absence, and guided by his dog, found him in his strange trap and extricated him. A position more completely helpless it would be difficult to imagine and the hunter must have heartily wished, while he lay there awaiting succor, that he had not been so determined to secure his prize. If it were to cost him his life success would be very dearly purchased. There are many men who spend their lives in an eager, all-absorbing struggle for wealth who in the end will come to that conclusion. If in their struggle they lose their souls no fortune, however large, will compensate them (Matt. 16: 26).

FIVE YEARS OF SUFFERING.

The following remarkable testimony has been sent to Words of Faith by E. J. Pennell, of Saccarappa, Me.: The 12th of June last, the Lord saw best to permit my being laid aside upon a bed of sickness, which I now see was for my good. I had a disease from which I had been suffering severely for five years, although I said but little about it, and kept at my business most of the time. After being under treatment of two of the best physicians for about one month, and learning from them they knew of no case on record, similar to mine, that was ever cured, my wife, who had taken the Lord as her Physician for years, began praying for me, and urging me to take the Lord as my Healer, without the use of medicine. I believed she and the children had been healed many times through faith and prayer, but I could not claim it for myself. One morning she said to me, "I have faith enough to take you right out of the bed, and stand you on your feet, and call you 'well' in the name of the Lord." I replied, "When the Lord makes it plain to me, I will lay aside my medicine, but I cannot as I feel now." On Sunday afternoon, July 11, while my wife was reading the Bible to me, suddenly God spoke to me, telling me that I did not believe His Word. I said, "Lord, I thought I believed every word in the Bible." But my conscience told me that in this thing I was not believing. It was as if God said, "But you do not trust Me to heal you." I rose up in bed, and said to my wife, "The Lord has revealed it to me, and charged me with not believing His Word." I said, "I will have this settled at once; Lord, I do believe." Medicine of all kinds was thrown aside. The next morning I said, "I have got a quit claim deed, and as soon as I do my part I shall have a warranty deed, so I will call the elders of the church and be anointed." I sent for a brother, but he was not at home, so I said to my wife, "I have done my part, now you can anoint me just as well." We prayed together, she anointing me with oil in the name of the Lord, and the power of God came upon me, and I was instantly healed. I have never had but one pain since I took Christ at His word, and then I said that it did not belong to me, and Satan might take it to where it belonged. I have had a trial of faith since, in an attack of chills, but I went immediately to the Lord, and obtained the victory through faith in Him. I have no pain and no chills now, praise the name of the Lord.

A MISSIONARY ON THE POPE.

One of the earnest Christian missionaries who are laboring in Rome—Mr. Nathaniel H. Shaw—in the course of a letter to friends in England urges them to increased energy in sending men and money to Rome, where he perceives that the Pope is making vigorous and insidious efforts to revive the power of the Papacy. He says: Rome, while it has even increased interest for the historian and the antiquary, by reason of new discoveries and excavations ever going on, is fast becoming one of the great centres of the modern world. The Italians seem bent on making it second to no other European capital, and it is certain to exert yet a most important influence, for weal or woe, on the destinies of Europe and the world. It is, moreover, the seat of the astutest, wiliest Pontiff that the Roman Church has had for centuries, who, with the counsel and aid of the great, satanic, and omnipresent Jesuit forces, is conspiring and intriguing only too successfully to increase his political power and prestige, which means the moral and spiritual degradation of the people. The citizens of Protestant countries do not know what Romanism is; only those of them who have been in the west of Ireland can have some faint idea of it. If the Apostle Paul were to return, and again take up his missionary work, there is reason to believe that he would desire, above all things, "to preach the Gospel to them that are at Rome also," and that he would fix on this city as more important for this purpose than even London itself. One blow struck here in the cause of evangelical truth is worth twenty elsewhere. It is better to crush the serpent's head than his tail. The Protestants of Germany are beginning to feel this, and are resolving to carry the sacred war into the enemy's headquarters. Will not other Christians show themselves as zealous and as wise?

A VISIT FROM THE MIKADO.

An answer to prayer in connection with the recent visit of the Mikado, of Japan, to Osaka, is reported by Miss Daughaday, in Life and Light for Woman, who also relates her experience as an amateur court dressmaker. She says: "We have recently had a visit from the Mikado, and his coming made quite a ripple in the current of our lives. The Empress wore foreign dress, and in a proclamation to the women of the country, advised them also to adopt it. This caused quite a panic, as all ladies of the official class wanted a foreign suit at once, that their clothing might meet her approval while she was here. Almost every hour of the day, for several weeks, Japanese ladies called to inspect my wardrobe, and ask advice or assistance; and some of my garments went to receptions where I could not have entered. At one government school the imperial party was to visit, I was solicited to go on the previous day and dress all the lady teachers, that nothing odd or laughable in their appearance should annoy her on that occasion. As a return for this, an extremely favorable place for viewing the grand procession and review was given me.

At first the Emperor's intention was to come to Osaka on Sunday, and all schools under native management, were to go to the station to meet him. Our committee are all Christian men, but are intensely patriotic, and have a large measure of the reverence which all Japanese have for rank, especially for the person of the Mikado. This is not strange when we remember only a few years ago he was considered a sacred being descended from the gods. Our school had been honored by having a very fine place assigned to them, as well as being invited to send specimens of school-work and knitting for the inspection of the imperial party. But what should we do? Should we we permit our girls to go on Sunday, spending the greater part of the day in honoring the Emperor, when they should be at church, worshipping and glorifying the Creator of the universe? I deeply sympathized with the committee, yet, of course, could not give my consent to the going of the school. At last all were relieved from their embarrassment by a telegram, reporting a slight indisposition on the part of the Emperor, postponing his coming. When he did come it was on a week-day, and I shall always believe it was a direct answer to our prayers.

OUR COMING ASCENT INTO THE HEAVENS.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

THE Apostle Paul, describing the rapture of saints which will take place when Christ descends into the air, says briefly, "We shall all be changed" (1 Cor. 15:51). How radical that change will be, how complete must be the alteration in the physiological conditions of human bodies that must take place at the moment of our translation alive, without dying, at Christ's Second Advent, to meet Him in the atmospheric heavens, is strikingly shown by the undermentioned experience of some aeronauts who ascended in a balloon to a height of seven miles—the greatest ever attained. They barely escaped with their lives—being rendered more or less insensible. In another case died of suffocation at the height of five miles, through the rarefication of the air. Yet far higher than five miles will the translated saints ascend.

Two French Aeronauts

St. Paul says, "The Lord Himself shall descend from (the highest) heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God; the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we, which are alive and remain, shall be caught up to meet Christ in the air, and so we shall ever be with the Lord"—"We shall not all sleep (die), but we must all be changed: in a moment: in the twinkling of an eye, at the sound of the trump," etc. 1 Thess. 4:16, 17; 1 Cor. 15:51).

In Revelation 14: 1–5, we are told that 144,000 watchful living Christians—of the Parable in Matthew 25, will thus be caught up alive, without dying, into the air, at Christ's Second Advent, before the 3½ years of the Napoleonic Antichrist's final persecution of the Christian Church. The date of this First Stage of Christ's Advent is stated in Daniel 9:25, to be exactly 69 weeks of literal days after "the going forth of a future commandment to rebuild Jerusalem"—which 69 weeks are also stated to be "determined" or "cut off" (9:24) from the commencing part of 2,300 literal days or evening-mornings in Daniel 8:14. Now, as the 2,300 days are to commence on Thursday, November 8, 1894, 2,345 days before the End of this Age which is on Thursday, April 11, 1901—the last day of Passover Week—therefore the 69 weeks of days will reach from Nov. 8, 1894, "unto Messiah the Prince's" Second Advent about Thursday, March 5, 1896.

The Wise Virgins

It is a solemn and awe-inspiring reflection that within so few years' time 144,000 living Christians will be caught up alive into the heavens; and in this connection it is interesting to read the following account of the experience of

The Adventurous Aeronauts:

The two French aeronauts who are to attempt to eclipse everything that has yet been done in reaching the highest altitudes of the air are Jovis and Mallet. The highest balloon ascent ever made, namely, to a height of seven miles, was accomplished five-and-twenty years ago by two Englishmen, Mr. James Glaisher, F. R. S., the meteorologist, and Mr. Henry Coxwell, the balloonist. De Fonvielle, Tissandier, Flammarion and Guillemin, among others, have declared that never was worthier heroism than was shown by these two Englishmen. More than once French aeronauts and savants have tried to rival this famous ascent, but hitherto in vain, and in one instance with distressing results.

Twelve years ago M. Tissandier, M. Sivel and M. Croce Spinelli rose in a balloon from La Villette on the 15th of April, 1875, to a height of 8,000 metres, or five miles, then all three becoming unconscious, fell to the bottom of the car—fortunately after they had opened the valve and begun to descend; but M. Tissandier, thanks to a strong constitution, alone survived; his two comrades lay dead at the bottom of the car. Sivel's face was black, his eyes glassy, and mouth open. Croce Spinelli had his eyes shut, and the mouth of each was full of blood." But these two daring explorers were not near the height attained by their English forerunners, for Glaisher and Coxwell rose, it is believed, two miles higher, and now Captain Paul Jovis and M. Mallet in their balloon the Horla, will endeavor, nothing daunted by the fate of some of their compatriots, at least to equal—if possible, surpass—that achievement. The unparalleled high by James Glaisher and Henry Coxwell was made on September 5. 1862, from Wolverhampton. Their balloon or aerostat was charged with specially prepared and very light gas, approaching pure hydrogen. They left the earth at 1:3 P. M.—the temperature of the air being 59. In ten minutes they had risen nearly a mile, and were rushing through a dense cloud 1,100 feet thick. Ten minutes later they were looking down upon that cloud, which seemed like a sea with huge billowy waves, or like a Switzerland with endless hills, hillocks and mountain chains. Their car was a physical laboratory filled with a score of different sets of scientific instruments, hypometers, barometers, thermometers (wet and dry), a photographer's camera, chemicals, compasses, and what not, to test the weight, the heat, and the moisture of the various strata of the atmosphere. At 1:40 they were four miles high; the barometer sank to below fifteen inches, which means that the air was now only half the weight of that on terra firma, and two breaths were now only equal to one, and the thermometer recorded eight degrees. What followed is told in the scientist's own words:

Ascent of Seven Miles

"Discharging sand, we in ten minutes attained the altitude of five miles; the temperature had passed below zero, and then read minus 2 degrees. Up to this time I had taken observations with comfort, and experienced no difficulty in breathing; while Mr. Coxwell, in consequence of the exertions he had to make, for some time. Having discharged more sand, we ascended still higher. The aspirator became troublesome to work, and I also found a difficulty in seeing clearly. At 1:51 the barometer read 10. 8 in.; about 1:52, or later, I read the dry bulb thermometer as minus 5 deg.; after this I could not see the column of mercury in the wet bulb thermometer nor the hands of the watch, nor the fine divisions of any instrument. I asked Mr. Coxwell to help me to read the instruments. In consequence, however, of the rotating motion of the balloon, which had continued without ceasing since leaving the earth, the valve-line had become entangled, and he had to leave the car and mount into the ring to readjust it. I then looked at the barometer and found its reading to be 9¾ in., still decreasing fast, implying a height exceeding 29,000 feet.

Breathed With Difficulty

Shortly after I laid my arm upon the table possessed of its full vigor; but on being desirous of using it, I found it powerless—it must have lost its power momentarily. Trying to move the other arm, I found it powerless also. Then I tried to shake myself, and succeeded; but I seemed to have no limbs. In looking at the barometer my head fell over my left shoulder. I struggled and shook my body again, but could not move my arms. Getting my head upright for an instant only, it fell on my right shoulder. Then I fell backwards, my back resting against the side of the car and my head on its edge. In this position my eyes were directed to Mr. Coxwell in the ring. When I shook my body I seemed to have full power over the muscles of the back, and considerably so over those of the neck, but none over either my arms or my legs. I dimly saw Mr. Coxwell, and endeavored to speak, but could not. In an instant intense darkness overcame me, so that the optic nerve lost power suddenly, but I was still conscious. I thought I had been and believed I should experience nothing more, as death would come unless we speedily descended. Other thoughts were entering my mind when I suddenly became unconscious, as on going to sleep. I cannot tell anything of the sense of hearing, as no sound reaches the ear to break the perfect stillness and silence of the regions between six and seven miles above the earth. My last observation was made at 1:54, above 29,000 feet. Whilst powerless I heard the word 'temperature' and 'observation,' and I knew Mr. Coxwell was in the car, speaking to and endeavoring to rouse me; therefore, consciousness and hearing had returned. I then heard him speak more emphatically, but could not see, speak or move. I heard him again say, 'Do try; now do.' Then the instruments became dimly visible, then Mr. Coxwell, and very shortly I saw clearly. I said to Mr. Coxwell, 'I have been insensible.' He said, 'You have, and I too, very nearly.'

Seized With Asphyxia,

"Mr. Coxwell told me that he had lost the use of his hands, which were black, and I poured brandy over them. He informed me that while in the ring he felt it piercingly cold; that hoar frost was all around the neck of the balloon, and that on attempting to leave the ring he found his hands frozen. He had therefore to place his arms on the ring and drop down. When he saw me he thought for a moment that I had lain back to rest myself, he then noticed that my legs projected, and my arms hung down by my side. He wished to approach me but could not, and when he found insensibility coming over himself too, he became anxious to open the valve, but in consequence of having lost the use of his hands he could not do this. Ultimately he succeeded by seizing the cord with his teeth, and dipping his head two or three times, the balloon took a decided turn downwards.

Mr Coxwell says he saw the aneroid stand at 7 in.; a delicate thermometer recorded 11.9 deg. below zero—all which indications pointed to an elevation of 36,000 feet or 37,000, or about seven miles. Such is the record which our French friends have to surpass. It is an altitude where air is so thin and tenuous as to be only one-fourth its weight at the sea level—an air that Few Men can Respire and Live.

It is far above the region where birds can fly. At a height of three miles a pigeon was sent out, and it extended its wings and dropped like a piece of paper; another at four miles flew vigorously round and round, but took a dip each time; while between four and five miles high a third pigeon fell like a stone. The French aeronauts will have an advantage in taking up with them a supply of oxygen, which inhaled judiciously, is very useful. They have been submitted to a number of scientific tests. One of these is said to be that the aeronaut is placed in an iron chamber, from which the air is gradually pumped until by an exhaustive process the pressure is brought down to the lowest he can bear. If he can continue breathing and conscious when the mercury stands at seven inches he may perchance rise to a height of seven miles and live to tell the tale. Benumbing cold and acute pain is felt between three and five miles high. The voyager in these high regions must be sound in heart and lungs. or death is certain.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements. etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Number of Changes in the Postal Service during the past two years can be ascertained from a voluminous report issued last week by the Associated Press. The matter is important because the party organs are at issue on the subject of removals and appointments. Democratic journals denounce the President for ingratitude to his party, and declare that he has utterly failed in his duty by being slow to make changes. On the other hand, Republican journals state that he has been unfaithful to the pledges he gave before his election by wholesale discharge of Republican office-holders, many of them Union soldiers, and filling their places with democrats on partisan grounds only. So far as the Postal Service is concerned, the facts are now known. During the two Fiscal years commencing July 1, 1885, and ending June 30 1887, there were 35,826 new appointments in a total of 51,252 post offices, or seventy in every hundred. In the two previous years under President Arthur, there were 24,845 new appointments, in a total of 44,512 offices, or fifty-five in the hundred.

The Prohibition Convention at Syracuse, N. Y. was of a different order from the ordinary political gatherings. A significant feature of it was the large prayer-meeting held two hours before the hour appointed for the meeting of the convention. When the question was asked how many of the delegates were members of the Church of Christ, every one stood up; that, too, is not a common feature of conventions. Both the old parties came in for a share of the denunciation of the speakers but the Republican party seemed to have much the larger share. This was doubtless due to the fact that most of the Prohibitionists formerly belonged to that party, and not only know most about it but have received most abuse from it. The Democrats in New York State have not been sorry to see the Prohibitionist party organized, as it did them little harm while it weakened their antagonists. The platform adopted contains a female suffrage plank, and endorses some of the planks of the labor party. The utmost enthusiasm prevailed, and $5,616 was raised toward a campaign fund.

Republican Conventions Held in Iowa and Maryland on August 24, were characterized by considerable enthusiasm. In Iowa there was an evident desire to nominate Senator Allison for the Presidency. The Senator had foreseen this, and had instructed the chairman, who is his personal friend, to prevent it, which he did; but the feeling of the convention was unmistakable. The platform adopted was of the usual pattern, denouncing the federal Administration, endorsing protection and protesting against color discrimination in the South. The convention, however, redeemed itself from the conventional type by emphatically endorsing prohibition and pledging the party to its maintenance and enforcement. Governor Larabee was renominated. In Maryland the platform embodied a demand for "the measure known as the Blair Educational bill or some equivalent provision for aiding the States in removing the illiteracy which now exists in so many of them." A sensational incident at the convention was the appearance of the leader of the Independent Democrats of the State, who pledged the support of his friends to the Republican ticket. He arraigned the regular Democracy for gross frauds in the late primary elections, and said that decent democrats were sick and tired of being deluded by promises of reform within the party, and had finally concluded to try and get it from their old enemies, the republicans. The candidate nominated for Governor was Walter B. Brooks, of Baltimore.

The Stay of Proceedings in the Case of Jacob Sharp, granted by Judge Potter last week, has caused surprise, not unmixed with indignation. There was general satisfaction, which was not vindictive, in learning that a criminal so wealthy and so crafty as the man who had bribed the Board of Aldermen in New York could not escape the just punishment of his crime. That satisfaction was, it appears, somewhat premature. Judge Potter, who is a rural judge, while not passing on the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, considers that the able and learned judge who tried the case erred in admitting as evidence statements which the prisoner voluntarily made before another court, and which conclusively proved his guilt. Whether he or Judge Barrett is right, will have to be determined by the Supreme Court, which the Governor has summoned in special session, but to the public it will seem a curious anomaly if a conviction should be set aside, because in an exceptionally difficult case the wily criminal's own admissions were used against him. Judge Potter's act will confirm the suspicion of the masses, that wealth and influence may be so used in the courts as to aid their possessor in escaping the punishment due to his evil deeds.

A Startling Confession has Been Made by Scott, the fugitive paying teller, who robbed the Manhattan Bank in New York of $160,000 and is now in London. He states that he was short in his accounts to a small amount through speculation. Fearing detection he went for advice to a lawyer, named Dunn, a relative of his wife's. Dunn advised him to take a larger sum and abscond, and asked him how much of the Bank funds he could take. Scott said he could take two or three millions any day. One day he took half a million, but repented and went to the Bank and put it back in the safe. Afterwards he stole $160,000 and fled to Canada. He states that he left the bulk of the money with Dunn for safe keeping, and a part of the remainder with a woman in the city, and has never been able to get any of it from either of them. Both Dunn and the woman have been arrested. Scott seems now to bitterly regret his wrong-doing, which has turned out very little to his profit.

The Discovery of the Missing Boat of the burned steamship City of Montreal was reported on Thursday last. All the thirteen men on board were alive and well. The boat had drifted from the time of its leaving the burning steamer on August 11 until Monday August 15, when it was seen and picked up by the German brigantine Mathilde. The men say that they had only half a keg of water in the boat, and that was bad. As a consequence they suffered badly from thirst. The weather was hot, and this greatly contributed to their discomfort. There was no sail aboard and no means of signalling passing vessels. The boat was nearly swamped twice, and the men had a hard struggle to keep her afloat by bailing. On Thursday they sighted a steamer and pulled toward her, signalling with a jacket and a handkerchief, but the steamer passed on without seeing them. On Friday they sighted another steamer at a great distance. On Saturday they sighted another vessel and pulled toward it, and found that it was the City of Montreal, still burning. They tried to board her to obtain more water, but her plates were too hot. After drifting forty-eight hours longer they were rescued. The superstition about the number thirteen was not fulfilled in this case.

A Part of Mr. Stanley's Letter of June 1 was published last week. In it the explorer says the natives evacuated Gambuya, near the Aruwimi rapids, upon the arrival of the expedition, owing to fright produced by a vigorous blowing of the steamboats' whistles. They returned afterward, evincing a very amicable disposition and promised to supply the expedition with provisions. They informed Mr. Stanley that there were other rapids higher up more difficult of navigation, and that further progress by river would be impossible. Sir Francis de Winton, president of the Emin Bey Relief Committee, commenting on the letters, says he calculates that by this time Stanley and Emin have met.

The Bulgarian Trouble Continues Unsettled. Prince Ferdinand made his public entry into Sofia on August 23, and was received with enthusiasm. Crowds of citizens lined the streets, cheering the young prince, and salutes of artillery were fired in his honor. The prince, however, would have been glad to barter some of the noise for the quiet recognition of one or more of the great Powers; as his entry into the capital is a violation of the Treaty of Berlin, none of them has moved in his favor. Russia is clearly hostile to him, and in its reply to the Sultan's letter asking advice, completely ignores Ferdinand, and proposes that a Turkish commission and a Russian general should go to Sofia to secure conjointly, and in a legal manner, the election of a new Sobranjé, which should elect a new prince. This proposal being submitted to the Powers, was sanctioned by France and Germany, but disapproved of by the other Powers, who advised the Porte to adopt a policy of moderation and to await events. Prince Ferdinand, on his side, has written to the Sultan, expressing his devotion, and asking permission to come to Constantinople to pay his homage in person, but the Sultan refuses to receive him.

The Proclamation of the Irish Land League by the British Government has led to an exciting struggle in Parliament. The Crimes Act, passed at this session to give greater power to the executive to maintain order in Ireland among other provisions authorized them to declare any association "dangerous" which appeared to them inimical to order. This clause was evidently aimed at the League, but as Lord Hartington and other Unionists were opposed to its being enforced it was thought that the government would be content with having the power in their hands to use in case of emergency. They, however, deemed it right to place the League under the ban, and by proclaiming it dangerous, to suppress it in any part of Ireland that they decided upon. Mr. Gladstone has appeared as the champion of the League, and moved that the House of Commons present an address to the Queen praying her to revoke the proclamation. The reasons he alleged are that no facts justifying the proclamation had been communicated to Parliament, and that the League was not a dangerous association within the meaning of the Act. Mr. Balfour, the Irish Secretary, declared that if the people knew the true nature and working of the League they would without distinction of party demand its suppression, but he declined to make public the facts known to himself. The debate commenced on Thursday last and ended on Friday in the rejection of Mr. Gladstone's motion by a majority of 78.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

A Remarkable Attempt at Murder is Reported from Russia. A plot to assassinate a Grand Duchess has been discovered. The lady is the wife of the Czar's cousin, the Grand Duke Constantine. It appears that the motive for the crime was not political but religious. The Grand Duchess is a Lutheran, and she has resisted pressure brought to bear upon her to enter the Greek Church. The wife of the Czar's brother, the Grand Duke Vladimir, is also a Protestant, and she, too, is being persecuted. It is stated that a previous attempt was also made to kill another Protestant lady, the Grand Duchess Elizabeth, wife of the Grand Duke Serge.

A Valuable Work Among the Indians, of a deeply interesting character, has been commenced by Miss Grace Howard, the eldest daughter of Joseph Howard, Jr., who went out recently as a missionary to the Crow Creek Agency. She expects to remain there for two years. Two years ago Miss Howard was sent as an invalid to Hampton, Va. While there she became greatly interested in Gen. Armstrong's school for Indian boys and girls. Her sympathy was aroused by the helpless condition of the Indian girls upon their return to their Indian homes, and she conceived the idea of establishing a school in Dakota Territory. Through letters of introduction Miss Howard secured the consent of the War Department and made a personal inspection of the several agencies in Dakota. This visit confirmed her belief that something should be done by Christian women to aid the Indian girls. With the indorsement of her father, she set to work to carry out her plan, which included the locating of 160 acres of land near the Crow Creek Agency, and the erection of a schoolhouse, in which the Indian girls may be qualified to act as instructors of their less favored sisters.

A Boy's Escape from an Alligator is Described in a New Orleans journal. It states that while a boy, twelve years old, was shrimping in the river at Bruly Landing, in the lower portion of West Baton Rouge Parish, a large alligator suddenly appeared near him and made an effort to throw him into the river, using its tail as a weapon. Providentially the blow, struck with terrible force, missed its mark and the boy turned to run for his life. As he did so the monster made a savage rush at him. Coming out of the water he seized the lad by the leg, inflicting a slight flesh wound and tearing off a great portion of his trousers. Before the alligator could get a second hold, the boy had scrambled up the battue and was out of danger. The alligator's attack on the boy was witnessed by several persons, who, however, had no time to intervene, so suddenly did the affair take place. Parents in that neighborhood will doubtless be careful after this to warn their children against going fishing in those waters. It is much to be wished that similar care were taken as to other places where danger lurks and where many young people have been lost forever. The Christian in a great city is often concerned to see youthful faces intent on getting gain or amusement unaware that the great enemy of souls is waiting to make them his prey (1 Peter 5 : 8).

A Curious Blunder in a Hospital is Reported by the Paris correspondent of a daily journal. He states that a short time ago the little son of a man named Molera was taken sick with an infectious disease and removed to one of the large hospitals of the city. The parents were not allowed to visit him, but reports of his condition were sent to them daily. At first his progress was said to be favorable, but afterwards it grew worse, and in twelve days the parents were notified that he was dead. The body was placed in a coffin and the parents buried it. About a week afterwards M. Molera received a letter from the hospital, asking if there were any marks on his son by which he could identify him. He replied that the child had a mole on the back of his neck. He was then requested to come to the hospital, and on going his son sprang into his arms. There was no need to look for the mole; for recognition was mutual. It appeared that a child of the same age, and suffering from the same disease, the son of a concierge, was received into the hospital at the same time as M. Molera's child. After being there a day or two the two children were removed to another ward, and in moving them the child of the concierge had been placed in the bed on which was hung the card bearing the name of M. Molera's son. They were so much alike in appearance that the mistake was not discovered, but when M. Molera's child recovered and was sent to the concierge, she knew at once that he was not her child and refused to receive him, and M. Molera was notified. Though the resemblance between the two children was so close as to deceive the hospital people the parents make no mistake. Similarly in this life, the world and even the church is mistaken sometimes as to who are and who are not children of God, but, it is a very consoling thought that such mistakes will surely be rectified at the last (II Tim. 2 : 19).

A Maniac in the Streets of Brooklyn, N. Y., caused some excitement on Thursday last. Pedestrians in Broadway, in the busy part of the day, were astonished to see a lady about thirty years of age, walking rapidly along the sidewalk, suddenly fling up her arms wildly and utter heart-rending shrieks. Several persons went to her, supposing that she was suffering physical pain, but she broke away and continued her course down Broadway, screaming and waving her arms. Eventually she was seized by a policeman, and conducted to the station-house of the precinct. There it was found that she was demented. From her incoherent ravings it was learned that she had been deserted by her husband, and her family was broken up in consequence. Her three children were in different parts of the country, and a letter from one of them, a boy, who is at Fall River, Ill., was found in her pocket. The lady had apparently brooded over her trouble until her reason forsook her; One can but wish that the poor wronged creature had been led in her happier days to put her trust in Christ. Then, when she was deserted of her husband and separated from her children, she would have been kept from despair by the love of that "Friend who sticketh closer than a brother" (Prov. 18 : 24).

A Thief Made a Losing Investment in Albany, N. Y., a few days ago. In the course of his excursions about the city to discover opportunities for the exercise of his occupation, he noticed that a firm of grocers who do a large business in tea and coffee were somewhat careless about the safety of the bags of coffee which lay on the sidewalk in front of their store. He, therefore, hired a horse and wagon, paying two dollars for the use of it, and about dusk drove up to the corner near the store. The bags were still there and he quietly took one, carried it to the wagon and drove off. Having taken it to a place of safety and returned the wagon, he returned to examine his plunder. Then, to his dismay, he found that though the bag had contained coffee-berries, it was now filled with sand. The grocers had been using bags of that worthless material to impress passers-by with the extent of their dealings in coffee. The facts were learned through the effrontery of the thief, who wrote a black-mailing letter to the firm, threatening to expose them if they did not reimburse him with the two dollars he had paid for the hire of the horse and wagon. He had forgotten, as do many other dishonest men whose knavish tricks are not so open a violation of the law, that fraudulent schemes often prove worthless in this world besides surely bringing a curse in the next (Jer. 17 : 11).

A Drowning Man was Rescued by a Little boy at Marblehead, Mass., on August 24. The afternoon was stormy, and Mrs. Russell, of Salem, with her little thireen year old son was sitting on the piazza of her cottage, near Point Neck Light, watching the storm, when she saw a dory with a man in it capsize, about a mile and a half off shore. Her boy immediately ran to a boat, in which he was in the habit of taking short excursions in fair weather. Passing the lighthouse he saw the lightkeeper, a veteran of seventy years of age, and notified him of the accident. The lightkeeper joined him, and together they pulled out to the half-buried dory. It was a tough battle. Young Russell pulled one oar and the old man the other. When the drowning man was reached he was lying on the bottom of the boat clinging to the centreboard, which was down when the boat capsized. The sea broke clear over him, putting boat and man entirely out of sight. The half-drowned occupant was with great difficulty pulled into the rescuing boat. Then for forty minutes the rescuers battled to gain the shore, which they finally reached in safety. The man would have been drowned after all if he had needed as much persuasion to induce him to enter the boat so heroically brought to his rescue, as perishing souls often need before they will avail themselves of the salvation which the Son of God gave His life to offer them (Heb. 2 : 10).

BRIEF NOTES.

There are now over four thousand Chinamen in the Sunday-schools of the New York Chinese Mission.

The four hundred prisoners in the jail at Nashville have spontaneously issued an earnest appeal to the people to vote for the Prohibition Amendment. They know whereof they speak.

A colporteur in the land of Moab recently offered to sell Bibles, taking flour in exchange. In one day he sold out his entire stock, and every receptacle in his house was filled with flour.

Rev. Philip Schaff is appointed Professor of Church History in the Union Theological Seminary in succession to the late Professor Hitchcock. The Rev. Marvin R. Vincent succeeds Dr. Schaff as Professor of Sacred Literature.

Wilford Woodruff, the new head of the Mormon Church, is eighty years of age, and has always been a man of mediocre ability. He has been in hiding two years, and his residence is kept secret from all but trustworthy Mormons.

The new Bishop of Jerusalem has made an appeal in the press for funds for aggressive work, in the course of which he says that the Jewish population of Palestine has increased from 15,000 to 42,000. The Bishop adds that they are very friendly to him and his church.

A Baptist church in Philadelphia came to the conclusion, on conscientious grounds, to discontinue church fairs. After one year's experience, the church reports that it has gained in tone, harmony and spiritual power, the pastor's salary has been raised, and the contributions to benevolent work trebled.

The revision of the Malagasy Bible has just been completed by Mr. Cousins. At a thanksgiving service in celebration of the accomplishment of the work, Andrianony, a native pastor, said: "It is this Bible that has caused all the progress that we see, and has rooted up much of the evil that used to be." Work was commenced upon it in 1873.

The report of the death of Father Chiniquy, the converted Roman Catholic priest, which has been extensively circulated, is denied on the authority of Dr. Chiniquy himself. The report added that he had recanted on his death-bed. This is not true, either. Father Chiniquy reports himself in good health, and never more Protestant than now.

Mrs. Langridge, the Principal of the Female Normal School at Montgomery, Ala., asks us to contradict the report that money and land have been given by that city toward the State Colored University. It has given neither, and there is, on the other hand, a very strenuous and bitter opposition on the part of the white population to the location of the University there.

The eleventh Church Congress of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, will be held in Louisville, Ky., October 18, 19, 20 and 21. The topics for discussion are: "The Function and Power of the Christian Preacher of To-day," "Higher Education of Women," "Proposal to Change the Name of the Church," "Lay Co-operation in Church Work," etc.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

THE CHRIST OF PATMOS.

A New Sermon, by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And He had in His right hand seven stars: and out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword: and His countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength."—Revelation 1 : 16.

A Spiritual Picture—The Material Image Unimaginable—Idolatry in Protestant Churches—A Reversion to Paganism—John's Description not to be Understood Literally—Its Spiritual Meaning—I. The Seven Stars in His Hand—Ministers of the Gospel—Useful in the Night of Christ's Absence—Like the Star the Wise Men Saw—Stars Needed More than Fireworks—II. The Two-Edged Sword—The Power in Christ's Mouth—Not in Preachers—Nor in the Church—III. The Luminous Countenance—The Perfume on Doves' Wings.

WE have read John's description of the manner in which his Lord and Master revealed His glory to him. The figure is colossal, and I had almost said inconceivable. It would be quite impossible to draw a picture from the apostle's words. If any artist were to try to set it forth with his pencil, the figure would be singularly grotesque, and strangely unlike the idea which John intended to convey.

The vision is spiritual, and you can take each point in detail and learn from it; but it presents to us no resemblance such as can be drawn upon canvas: it is, as a whole, beyond the grasp of imagination. John might almost have said, after all he had seen, "I saw no similitude;" for, what he did see, albeit it was a gathering up of rich and rare similitudes, could not be made into a single image which could be represented to the eye, or to the mind. In this I greatly rejoice; for in it I perceive the prudence of the only wise God our Saviour.

The tendency of the human mind is to idolatry. When we do not seek after another god we are still tempted to worship the true God under some visible, tangible form; and this is directly opposed to the Divine will. I know the common excuse, that men do not worship the image, but that by its means they are helped to worship God; but this is exactly what the second commandment forbids. Carnal objects are not helps to spiritual worship; they are and lead the heart away from God. I feel my soul horrified, and my blood boiling with indignation, when I see in what are called Protestant churches, not only a material altar, which is treated with honor, but upon it a cross to which idolatrous reverence is evidently paid by those who bow as they pass before it. It is very usual nowadays to see also the Agnus Dei, or a small figure of a lamb; and this, like the figure of a calf among the Israelites, is viewed with devotion. Why we are not only going back to popery, we are reverting to paganism! I do not care what shape your image takes, whether it be a cross, a crucifix, or an Agnus Dei: if it is anything to be seen or handled, it is strictly forbidden in the worship of God.

Snares to the Mind,

Had the portrait of our Lord been a suitable subject for reverence—and I can conceive of nothing for which greater claim can be put in—we should have had His likeness preserved to us by the special care of the good Spirit, who is ever mindful of the edification of saints; but we have neither painting nor statuary of any authority, nor, indeed, any which can be supposed to depict His matchless form. If this best of images is denied us, let us not tolerate the idols of human invention. Take these things hence; they are not becoming in the house of God.

Do not imagine that the Jews in the wilderness, when they made what Moses calls a calf, really intended to pay divine honors to the image of a bull. They had learned in Egypt that the bull was the most venerable of all symbols of Deity; it is the embodiment of strength, and therefore it appeared fit to represent the power of God. Moses did not treat this ritualism with respect, but with indignation. I do not blame our Reforming and Puritan fathers that they used names of ridicule and contempt for those things which Romanism has degraded into idols; for even the most sacred things lose all sacredness when elevated into whatever may be the motive which leads to so great a crime. Did not Hezekiah break in pieces even the brazen serpent when it became an object of worship? He called it Nehushtan, that is, a mere bit of brass. If ever there was a piece of brass which deserved religious regard from men it was that brazen serpent, by which so many had been healed. When used aright it was God's channel of blessing, but when idolized it was broken in pieces as so much old metal. I feel glad, therefore, that even when the Lord Jesus Christ revealed himself so specially to the mind of John it was in a spiritual and symbolic manner, and the wonderful similitudes used were of such a character that it is not possible to construct from them a figure which could be set up for purposes of worship.

Objects of Adoration,

Having thus removed your minds from any gross and carnal notion that our lord is actually what this vision describes, I beg you to note that the spiritual teaching is all the more to be sought out and treasured up. I invite you to consider three of those similitudes by which the Lord Christ is set before us in this divine revelation. They stand in very significant relationship the one to the other. "He had in His right hand seven stars; and out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and His countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength." These are not only in one verse by the will of the translators, but they were intimately connected in the mind of John, and were intended to come to us together, blended and united.

The Seven Stars.

I. Learn from the first sentence the position of instrumentality in reference to our Lord Jesus: "He had in His right hand seven stars." The stars are said to be the angels, or messengers, or, as many conceive, the ministers whom God used as messengers to the churches, and from the churches to the outlying world. The word may mean the entire instructive and enlightening gift of the church, whether found in one person or in many. God has ordained that there shall be men anointed of His spirit, who shall, beyond others, be the means of conversion and edification, and these are as stars in the sky of the church.

Note well, that instrumentality is of temporary use, and is intended for the time of darkness. Churches themselves are "golden candlesticks," and candlesticks answer their purpose best at night. When the sun is up, and the full day has come, do we need lamps? No; the church militant has her reason for existence upon earth in the fact of the surrounding darkness. The ministers of the gospel, what are they? Necessary to Christ? By no means, for the sun does not need the stars. They are necessary to the present darkness, with which they are to struggle as burning and shining lights until the Lord Himself shall shine forth in His glory. The Lord will use instruments till He Himself appears, but even those whom He calls "stars," are only the transient apparatus of a passing night.

This should make us think very humbly of ourselves; for, dear brethren, this illustrates our weakness. Were we lights of the first magnitude, the darkness would no longer remain. O stars! you by whom God shines! O stars! with your sparkling and far-reaching light, making glad the eyes of the benighted! What poor things you are, after all! for with all your shining it still remains night. Lamps of God though you be, which you cannot remove. If ministers were all they might be, there would soon be an end of them; but the fact of their continued necessity proves their weakness. O ye that serve God best, remember that if you served Him better, the day would soon come when no man would say to his fellow, "Know the Lord," for they all should know him, from the least to the greatest. Consider, then, that instrumentality at its best, when used in blessed unity, as a church, is no more than a lamp or candle; and what can this do as compared with our Lord, who shines as the sun?

You Do But Relieve the Gloom

Still, instrumentality is honorably spoken of by Him whose judgment is supremely wise. The Lord Jesus does not despise the agency which He employs. Those whose testimony He blesses are compared to stars.

Stars Are Guides

and so are the Lord's true ministers. Some stars in yonder sky have done measureless service to wanderers over the trackless deep, and to those who have lost themselves in the labyrinths of the forest. That pole-star has conducted many a slave to liberty. Happy have been the influences of the stars upon the hopeless, who, being lost, have laid themselves down to die! Blessed are those men who, shining with the light of God, have turned many to righteousness; shall they not shine as the stars for ever and ever? Are there not preachers of the word who have stood like that famous star "over the place where the young child was"? They have first led strangers to Jesus, and then have remained in faithful love shining over the place where the Lord abides. We point to Jesus, saying ever, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." Ours is, indeed, an honorable office, to guide wandering feet into the way of peace. Honored is the least in all our ministry if He may do this.

See, also, how true instrumentality is graciously sustained. The chosen servants of the Lord are for they shine in Christ's right hand. This is where the ministers of Christ need to be; for they stand in the front of the battle and are in double danger. Their office has its temptations, and even their success has its perils. If you win souls for God the devil will have a grudge against you. If you preach the word with power, all the hosts of evil will sharpen their arrows, and point their shafts at you. The stars of the churches have need to be in Christ's hand, for all the fiends of hell will puff at them, If they could make a star fall, how greatly would they rejoice! Glory be to Him who keeps them. "For He is strong in power; not one faileth."

Under Special Protection,

See, then, beloved, the special security of true instrumentality; for who can extinguish a star whose sphere is the right hand of God? I see the devil puffing against these stars until his cheeks are fit to burst, but he does not even make them flicker; what can harm those whom Jesus keeps? You know how some fine preachers have gone out in darkness, smoldering like candlewicks, filling the whole chamber of the church with a nauseous smell; and if professed ministers become unholy or untruthful, their end is sad for themselves, and mischievous for all who are around them. May God save His church from the smoking flax of dying ministries. Blessed are they who, trusting in God, shine and shine on in His keeping.

Perhaps you think I am making too much of this subject, but I have no such desire. My design is very practical. The churches should pray that their risen Lord would give them more stars, and that He would uphold the stars that are already given, for there is unquestionably a very close connection between the prosperity of the churches and these stars. It is my solemn conviction that one great need of the church at present is a more faithful ministry.

We Need Fewer Fireworks, and more stars. One man whom God has given is worth a thousand that a college has made. When God takes a man, and says, "Go and preach in the power with which I have endowed you," that man will accomplish what a host of learned and well-trained men would not dare to attempt. Why have we not more mighty preachers of the Word? Because we do not pray for them. Some of our ministers are half afraid that such men should come, for fear they should find themselves outshone. We need men that will not yield to the current of the times, nor care one jot about it, but will hold their own and hold their Master's word against all comers, because the Lord of Hosts is with them, and the Spirit of God resteth upon them. I would have you at this time realize that Christ with the seven stars in His hand, and I would have you pray, "Lord, fill Thy hand with stars again. Light up the darkness of this period with flaming preachers of Thy Word to the praise of the glory of Thy grace." So much about the position of instrumentality; follow me now to kindred themes.

The Two-edged Sword.

II. And now, in the second place, I want you to notice with great care the place of real power. Note the second of the three sentences: "And out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword," The sword-power, the war-strength of the Church does not lie in her ministers. The battle and the victory are not with them, but with their Lord. I have put them in their proper place; I have told you that they are stars, and I have reminded you of their usefulness, but the next symbol prevents your regarding them as forces to be relied on. We read, "Out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword," Not out of the stars, but out of our Lord's mouth goes the strength which wins the day.

The true power of the church lies in Christ personally. You may have all the stars that ever made bright the milky way with their combined sheen; but there is no power in them to kill evil or conquer sin. But the power that overcomes evil, wounds the hard heart, pierces the conscience and kills reigning sin, is the Lord alone. "Out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword." Glory not, therefore, in men; for power belongeth unto God. Boast not in the talent nor in the experience of the man of God, for he can neither kill nor make alive.

The power lies in Christ's word: "Out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword. And notice, that it is not only His word, but it is His word as He Himself speaks it. Does Christ then still speak the word in the church? Yes! It is not the truth in the Bible alone which saves; it is that truth taken by the Holy Ghost, and vivified and laid home to the heart. It is which Jesus spake eighteen hundred years ago which works wonders; but it is that same word as He now delivers it into our ear and heart by His own living, loving, heart-subduing voice. I may speak Christ's words in vain; but He speaks to purpose. I have no faith in my own preaching; but I have all faith in my Lord's speaking. His word shall not return unto Him void. Out of His mouth no syllable shall come in vain. I charge you look away from us, the twinkling stars, to our Lord, whose mouth is the conqueror-force of His church.

Not the Letter of the Word

The word is in itself adapted to the divine end, for it is sharp and two-edged; and when it is spoken by the Lord, its adaptation is seen. The gospel is very sharp when the Spirit of God lays it home. No doctrine of men has such piercing power. Take care, O preacher, that you do not blunt the word, or try to cover over its edge; for that would be treason to the Lord, who made it to be sharp and cutting, The gospel has two edges, so that none may play with it. When they think to run their fingers along the back of it they will find themselves cut to the bone. Whether we regard its threats or its promises, it cuts at sin. Whether we move it up or down, it makes great gashes in that which ought to be wounded and killed. Let us, therefore, know that the power of the church does not lie anywhere but in the word as Jesus Himself speaks it. Let us keep to His own pure, unadulterated, unblunted word, and let us pray Him to send it forth with power out of His own mouth into the hearts and consciences of men.

The Luminous Face.

III. May the Holy Spirit fasten this on your memories! I must now conduct you to the third point. which is a very wonderful matter—the source of true Glory. The source of true glory in a church lies in her enjoying the countenance of her Lord. "His countenance was as the sun shineth in His strength." When Jesus is pleased with the church, she enjoys prosperity.

Brethren, endeavor to realize the idea of Christ's countenance shining as the sun. Let me then remind you of our former themes. Where are the seven stars? They are still in His hand, but I defy you to see them; for when the sun is once up, where are the stars? Ah, dear young people! when you first hear a minister preach with divine power he is everything to you; God enables him to bring light to your darkness, and for a season you rejoice in his light. When you get further on in the road, and come to see the Lord Jesus Christ Himself in the divine glory of His blessed person, then you will not glory either in Paul or Apollos or Cephas; but you will glory in Jesus Only.

The stars are twinkling still, but you cannot see them when the sun shines in noontide splendor; and so the human instrument is as useful as ever, but when Christ Himself is fully seen, the instrument takes a place far lower down. We are grateful for the stars, they have had blessed uses for our good; but we cannot mention them in the same day with the sun.

If you catch the idea of our Lord's countenance being "as the sun shineth in his strength," let me ask you where is the sharp two-edged sword which came forth out of His mouth? You have not forgotten it, but at the same time it would be hard to discern it upon the face of the sun. When we enjoy Christ Himself, we do not think the less of His word, but it seems to be absorbed in Himself. He Himself becomes to us the Logos, the word. Even the gospel itself, glorious as it is, bears no other glory than that which we behold in the face of Jesus Christ.

I must hurry over places where I am tempted to linger. To the saints the glory of Christ lies in Himself: His own countenance is the centre of glory. Notice that the favor of Christ, if it be enjoyed, is effectual for all purposes.

Why Do We Crave For Stars

when the sun shines? In the absence of human instrumentality, the Lord Jesus will more than suffice. Even for those purposes for which the sword goes out of His mouth the Lord's countenance is enough. A sunstroke is as effectual for overcoming as the stroke of a sword. Let Christ shine in the church, and He will destroy His enemies with the brightness of His glory. Yet note well that the brightness of our Lord cannot be measured, neither could His glory be endured of mortal men, if once it were fully revealed. "His countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength." John, therefore, could not gaze upon that countenance, but fell at his Lord's feet as dead. It would be a dangerous thing for you to stand still and attempt to gaze upon the sun. To turn a telescope full upon the sun, and place your eye to the glass, would be the extreme of folly. Our eye must be shielded, or it cannot look on the sun. And, beloved, if the Lord Jesus were to manifest Himself to us as He really is, in all His unveiled majesty, we should die with excess of joy. One said he would like to die of that disease, and I am very much of his mind. They say, "See Naples and die;" but to improve on it, another said, "See Naples and live;" and truly this is the better sight of the two. I would fain see my Lord so as to live to His praise. Oh, for such a vision as should shape my life, my whole being, till I became like my Lord!

Rejoice also, you that behold His face and live in communion with Him; for Your Faces Will Shine.

You may look at yonder seven stars very long ere you are made to reflect their light; but, dear friends, if you see Jesus, and abide in the light of His countenance habitually, your faces, your characters, your lives, will grow resplendent, even without your knowing it. We read that Moses wist not that his face shone; all saw it but himself. The sons of men will wonder where you have been to have gathered such brightness. I know some few men and women who seem to carry about with them the fragrance of the ivory palaces; there is a perfume about their words, their actions, and their very selves. All nostrils do not enjoy the aroma of holiness, but the heart of the spiritual man is refreshed thereby. One cries: "Whence came this perfume?" Oh, that I had it! Oh, that such fragrance were shed abroad in my life!" I have heard that in the old times, when they would attract doves to a certain pigeon-house, they took certain birds and smeared their wings with a costly perfume, and sent them forth. Other pigeons were so delighted with their sweetness that they followed them to the dove-cotes. Oh, that you and I may be so sweetened by dwelling near to Christ that others may come with us to see Jesus and His love! Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A MOTHER'S GOOD NEWS.*

"And now, children, I came to tell you something else."

"Something real good?" asked Cherry.

"Not real good, but real best. This is something about me. I have found the best thing in the world, and the best thing in heaven—our dear Father in heaven."

No one replied; what could she mean?

"I have never thought about Him, or loved Him, or taught my children anything about Him, or prayed for myself or for you, but He has found me and shown me how He loves me, and how He forgives me, and how He will keep me loved and forgiven. He has shown it all to me by teaching me about Jesus Christ, His Son, and our Saviour."

Rob remembered that he had suddenly opened his mother's chamber door and found her weeping upon her knees; Cherry thought of the many times of late she had seen her at work, with the open Bible on the chair beside her.

Anise touched her mother's cheek with her lips; it was easier just then than speaking.

"Mother, I am glad; but I do not understand," said Hetta. "You have been so good to us always."

"It is my joy that I can help you understand; that is all I know—yet. I am the smallest child, so far as knowledge of God's will goes. I have never read the Bible until lately. I have heard so few sermons, I have had so little teaching. Now, we can all begin together. Shall we, my darlings?"

Every one responded "Yes," out of a full heart.

A Short Prayer.

"Mrs. Huntly, you do believe in short prayers?"

"Sometimes my only prayer in the morning is, 'Yea, Lord,' my assent to what He would have me do; a 'Yea, Lord,' at night—my assent to all He will throughout the day."

"If you could frame all you want to in one petition, what would it be?" questioned another.

"Thy will be done," was the quick reply.

"And yet you do ask for your will to be done."

"Because He lovingly permits me to. My will does not change His will, but His will changes mine. After He has changed our hearts He can give us our will. If His Word abide in us, we can ask what we will. What we ask in Christ's name must not be contrary to Christ's spirit. I often ask myself, 'If Jesus were in my place, living my life, would He ask this?' Remember that we are in the world for exactly the same reason that Christ was."

* From "That Quisset House," by Mrs. Nathaniel Conklin (Jennie M. Drinkwater), a story, conveying religious teaching in a most attractive and interesting form, pp 518; price $1.50. Published by Robert Carter & Brothers, 530 Broadway, New York.

A Mexican Indian Heroine. (See page 549.)

Vera Cruz, the Chief Seaport of Mexico. (See page 541.)

"I don't know what that was," said Anise.

"He said He came to do the will of God."

"Have people always prayed?" Anise asked.

"Very early in the history of the world it is written, 'Then began men to call upon the Name of the Lord.'"

"As soon as they found out they couldn't do all they wanted to themselves," said another.

"If He knows what we need why doesn't He give it to us without any asking," asked Anise, with a spice of her old rebellion.

"Because He must know what we want. I never feel so needy as when upon my knees. He wants us to want enough to ask for it, beseech for it, wait for it. How else can we feel our dependence upon Him—how else could we learn what 'Our Father' means to Him? The feeling our need and our dependence is one great part of the blessing of prayer."

A timid voice asked: "What do we pray for, when we pray for the will of God?"

"I am glad you have asked that. In one place it is written: 'This is the will of God; even your sanctification.'"

First Steps.

"Do you want to live your father's life?"

"No," with sincere conviction; "I do not."

"You are in the way to do it. The former part of his life was busy. Money interfered and spoiled it. It gave him leisure to follow his tastes, with no motive but enjoying them to the full. Rob, you must begin to-morrow morning—you must begin this afternoon — to live the life he wished in vain that he could live over again."

"I don't know how."

"You have begun."

"How?"

"By asking forgiveness for the past."

"Yes," he assented.

"Now, you must ask Him what to do next."

"Perhaps I do not want to do it."

"Probably not."

"It may not be a pleasant thing to do."

"Very strangely, we have some unpleasant things to do."

"But it may not be easy," he persisted.

"More strangely, we have some hard things to do," she said. Do you believe that God made you—that you would not have existed but for Him?"

"Why, yes," in a hesitating voice.

"That He has redeemed you?"

After a thoughtful five minutes, "Yes, I do," with emphasis. Dean Hosmer made that plain to me this morning. If I am saved from sin, it is because of the love of God."

"Do you owe Him anything?"

"What can I give—what have I to give?"

"Think."

"I cannot answer that to-day," he said.

"I do not wish you to. That is the next thing for you to do. Answer that question. Do not do anything until you have answered it. Do nothing that will interfere with answering it."

THE FOREMAN'S ORDEAL.

(See Illustration on page 557).

"I AM afraid we 'll have to work all day Sunday," said a contractor to his foreman, Walter Crane, who had gone to the rough shanty which served as an office, to discuss plans of work with his employer. The contractor was a burly Englishman, who had once used the pick and shovel himself, but having saved a little money, had come to America and begun business on his own account. The men liked him, though they laughed at his old-country ways and his old-fashioned dress, to which he clung tenaciously. "I am sorry," he continued, noticing the dismay on Crane's face. "There is nothing I hate like Sunday work, but I am under a heavy penalty to get the job through, and this wet weather has kept us back. There is nothing for it but to put in an extra day's work while we can."

A year or two ago Crane would not have demurred. He would not have liked losing his day of rest, but his conscience would not have troubled him. But one summer day he had been persuaded to go to a camp-meeting, and there he had been converted, and since that he had lived a very different life, and his conscience, which before had been silent in such cases, now raised a vigorous protest.

"I should not like to work on Sunday, sir," Crane said, quietly but firmly.

"No, I don't like it either, but there are times when we all have to do what we don't like, and this is one. There 'll be double pay all around, you know."

"Double pay wouldn't tempt me, sir," said Crane. "I can't bring myself to do what ain't right, not for any money."

"Nonsense, Crane, you are not such an ass as to quarrel with me over such a trifle. You ought to stand by me in a difficulty instead of opposing me. I 've been a good friend to you. Look here"—and he opened the wages book which was lying on the table at his elbow—"see what you were getting at first, and what you are getting now, and constant work all the time. You are ungrateful, that 's what you are. I did not expect it of you."

"No, sir, I'm not ungrateful. This is a question of conscience. There 's nothing I would refuse to do to oblige you except offending God. I can't do that."

"You are a great deal too particular, Crane; I have no patience with you. Well, we'll say no more about it now. You go to the work, and when you go home to-night talk it over with your wife and sleep on it. You'll come to your senses in the morning. This is Friday; to-morrow night you can tell me what you'll do. But mind, if you don't oblige me in this, there'll be no more work for you, We part; don't make any mistake about that."

Crane passed a miserable day. He was not prepared to give up the position he had attained. His wife had been sick, and one of his children too. The little store of savings was exhausted, and if he lost his work, he did not see how he was to live. It was dreadful to think of being unemployed, for, as he well knew, there was little chance of getting work elsewhere. And then it was so easy to keep his position. Just this one time; it might never occur again, and he could give the double money he earned in the collection. So the devil tempted him, and remember, he was but young in the Christian life. But the contractor had made a mistake when he advised Crane to consult his wife. She—the brave little woman—was dead against him.

"Don't you do it Walter, not to oblige no man," she said. "You stick by your religion, and God will take care of us."

"You won't like it Mary, when Saturday nights come around, and there's no money. How are you going to pay rent, and keep bread on the leaf. I can't get in anywhere else."

"Never mind, we shall manage somehow. I'm ready to take the risk. I believe God will see to it. You do the right thing anyhow, and if we do suffer you'll have a clear conscience.

Crane went to bed feeling very anxious and troubled. Mary prayed that night, for Walter was too low spirited to conduct family worship as he generally did. And she prayed privately too, for Walter's conversion had been an event of great joy to Mary's soul, and she was determined that he should not do this sin if she could help it. In the morning he was still wavering, but Mary pressed him, and finally gained a promise from him that anyhow he would not promise to work.

"We've made good progress to-day" said the contractor as he came around in the afternoon. "To-morrow will put us all right. Have you told the men, Crane?"

"No, sir I've said nothing about it, but we've pushed it hard to-day, and if we were to begin an hour earlier on Monday, I guess we'd be through on time'

"Nonsense! it may be wet on Monday. We've got to work to-morrow, so go and tell the men. I will do it myself as I'm here. They might not like your way."

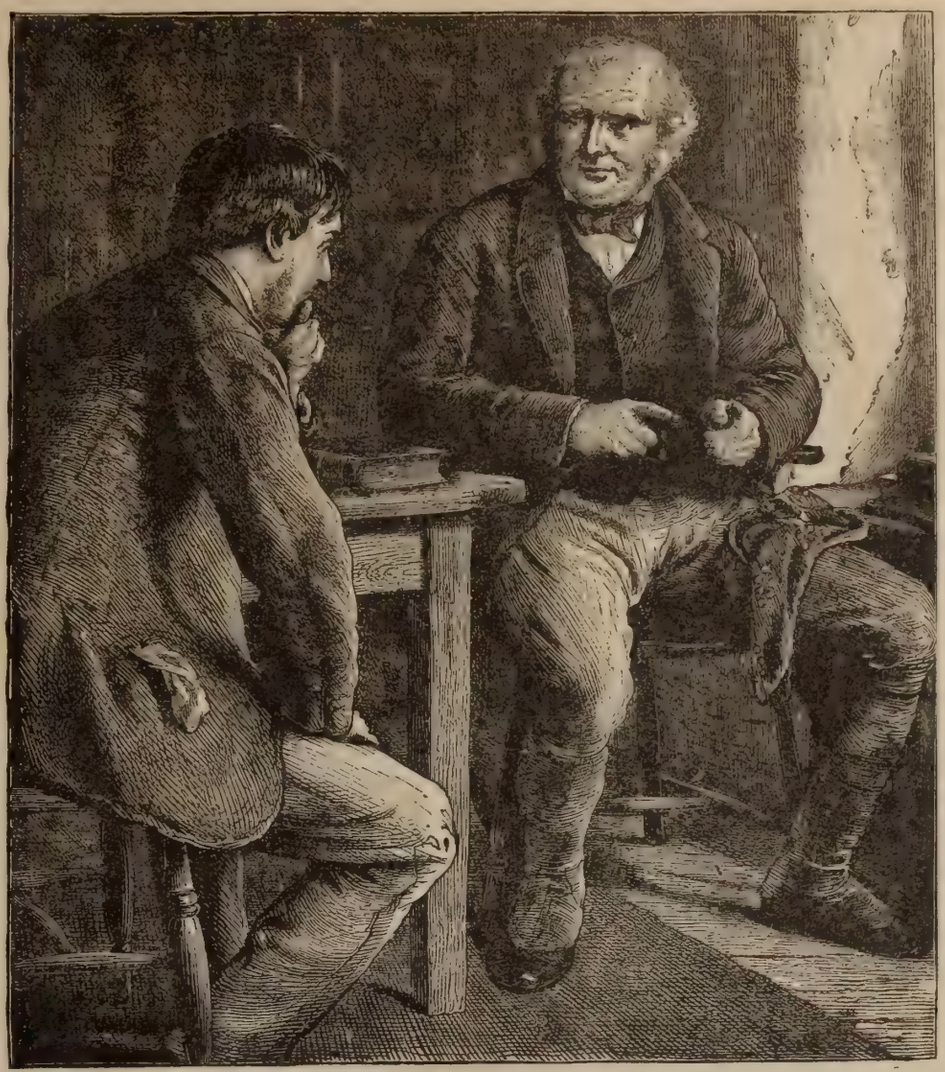
"Thank you, sir, I don't like the job of telling them, especially as I have made up my mind not to work myself."

"Oh! you have, have you? Well, you know the consequence; you leave to-night for good."

"Yes, sir, I know. I am sorry, but I can't help it."

"You are a fool," said the contractor bluntly.

He went around and told the men, and, as he expected, they were all ready to earn double pay by a Sunday at work. Crane was paid off, and the contractor looked around among the men and dotted down a name or two to think over before deciding on Crane's successor as foreman.



The Contractor Fails to Convince His Foreman.

"Well," said Walter, as he handed the money to Mary, "it's done. Make much of them bills; they're the last you'll have for many a day."

But Crane was a failure as a prophet, though strong in duty. He and Mary prayed earnestly that night for strength and guidance, and Mary put in a word of thanks that God had enabled Walter to withstand temptation. Her faith never wavered, but Walter's heart was very sore, and he lay awake worrying half the night. It was all very well for Mary to say the Lord would provide, but he could not see how he was going to get work. He fell asleep at last and slept heavily until he was awakened by Mary's voice.

"Walter, Walter, look here."

Mary was at the window, looking out, and Walter soon joined her. There he saw the rain coming down steadily, heavily, with that persistent look about the sky that betokened twenty-four hours of it. And it did rain all day, so that, as Walter said, he need not have lost his place after all, because he might have agreed to work, and yet the rain would have prevented him. But Mary looked at it in quite another light, and was not so sure that he had lost his place now.

Late on Sunday night there was a knock at the door, and Mary, opening it, admitted the contractor.

"What do you mean by this?" was his salutation to Crane; "couldn't you be content with refusing to work yourself without stopping the others?"

"It wasn't me; it was the rain; I'd nothing to do with that."

"Oh don't tell me. You must have been praying for rain. Anyhow it came, and we've lost another day. We'll have to put on extra steam to-morrow, so mind you're on hand early to keep 'em up to it." And with that he stalked out, leaving the joyful couple to understand that Crane was reinstated.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 542.)

A Confession to a Congregation—The Lord's Supper as a Weekly Observance—Marriage—Scruples about Remuneration—Gives up His Salary—Places a Box in the Church for Gifts—Gives Away All he Has—Instances of Helps in Time of Need—More Money Given.

In June of this year (1830), I went to preach at the opening of a chapel in a village near Barnstable, built by that blessed man of God, Thomas Pugsley, now with the Lord. It pleased God to bring two souls to Himself through this my visit, and one more was converted on another visit. It was so usual for me to preach with particular assistance, that once, when it was otherwise, it was much noticed by myself and others. The circumstance was this: One day, before preaching at Teignmouth, I had more time than usual, and therefore prayed and meditated about six hours, in preparation of the evening meeting, and I thought I saw many precious truths in the passage on which I had meditated. It was the first part of the first chapter of the Epistle to the Ephesians. After I had spoken a little time, I felt that I spoke in my own strength, and I, being a foreigner, felt particularly the want of words, which had not been the case before. I told the brethren that I felt I was left to myself, and asked their prayers. But after having continued a little longer, and feeling the same as before, I closed, and proposed that we should have a meeting for prayer, that the Lord still might be pleased to help me. We did so, and I was particularly assisted the next time.

During this summer (1830) it appeared to me scriptural, according to the example of the Apostles, Acts 20: 7, to break bread every Lord's day, though there is no commandment given to do so, either by the Lord, or by the Holy Ghost through the Apostles. And at the same time it appeared to me scriptural, according to Eph. 4, Rom. 12, &c., that there should be given room for the Holy Ghost to work through any of the brethren whom He pleased to use; that thus one member might benefit the other with the gift which the Lord has bestowed upon him. Accordingly, at certain meetings any of the brethren had an opportunity to exhort or teach the rest, if they considered that they had anything to say which might be beneficial to the hearers. I observe here, that, as the Lord gave me grace to endeavor at once to carry out the light which He had been pleased to give me on this point, and as the truth was but in part apprehended, there was much infirmity mixed with the manner of carrying it out. Nor was it until several years after that the Lord was pleased to teach me about this point more perfectly. That the disciples of Jesus should meet together, on the first day of the week, for the breaking of bread, and that that should be their principal meeting, and that those, whether one or several, who are truly gifted by the Holy Spirit for service, be it for exhortation or teaching or rule, &c., responsible to the Lord for the exercise of their gifts; these are to me no matters of uncertainty, but points on which my soul, by grace, is established, through the revealed will of God.

On October 7, 1830, I was united by marriage to Miss Mary Groves, sister of Mr. Groves, the dentist of Exeter who gave up an income of $7,500 a year to go as a missionary to Bagdad, in sole dependence on the Lord for support. This step was taken after prayer and deliberation, from a full conviction that it was better for me to be married: and I have never regretted it since, either the step itself or the choice, but desire to be truly grateful to God for having given me such a wife.

About this time I began to have conscientious objections against any longer receiving a stated salary. My reasons against it were these:

1. The salary was made up of pew-rents, but pew-rents are, according to James 2: 1-6, against the mind of the Lord, as, in general, the poor brother cannot have so good a seat as the rich. (All pew-rents were therefore given up, and all seats made free, which was stated at the entrance of the chapel.) 2. A brother may gladly do something towards my support if left to his own time; but when the quarter is up, he has perhaps other expenses, and I do not know whether he pays his money grudgingly and of necessity, or cheerfully; but God loveth a cheerful giver. Nay, I knew it to be a fact, that sometimes it had not been convenient to individuals to pay the money, when it had been asked for by the brethren who had collected it. 3. Though the Lord had been pleased to give me grace to be faithful, so that I had been enabled not to keep back the truth when He had shown it to me, still I felt that pew-rents were a snare to the servant of Christ. It was a temptation to me, at least for a few minutes, at the time when the Lord had stirred me up to pray and search the Word respecting the ordinance of Baptism, because $150 of my salary was at stake if I should be baptized.

For these reasons I stated to the brethren, at the end of October, 1830, that I should for the future give up having any regular salary. After I had given my reasons for doing so, I read Philippians 4, and told the saints that if they still had a desire to do something towards my support, by voluntary gifts, I had no objection to receive them, though ever so small, either in money or provisions.

A few days after, it appeared to me that there was a better way still; for if I received personally every single gift offered in money, both my own time and that of the donors would be much taken up; and in this way also the poor might, through temptation, be kept from offering their pence, a privilege of which they ought not to be deprived; and some also might in this way give more than if it were not known who was the giver; so that it would still be doubtful whether the gift were given grudgingly or cheerfully. For these reasons especially, there was a box put up in the chapel, over which was written that whoever had a desire to do something towards my support, might put his offering into the box.

At the same time it appeared to me right that henceforth I should ask no man, not even my beloved brethren and sisters, to help me, as I had done a few times according to their own request, as my expenses on account of travelling much in the Lord's service were too great to be met by my usual income. For unconsciously I had thus again been led, in some measure, to trust in an arm of flesh; going to man instead of going to the Lord at once. To come to this conclusion before God required more grace than to give up my salary.

About the same time also my wife and I had grace given to us to take the Lord's commandment, "Sell that ye have, and give alms (Luke 12: 33), literally, and to carry it out. Our staff and support in this matter were Matthew 6: 19-34; John 14: 13, 14. We leaned on the arm of the Lord Jesus. It is now thirty-eight years since we set out in this way, and we do not in the least regret the step we then took. Our God also has, in His tender mercy, given us grace to abide in the same mind concerning the above points, both as it regards principle and practice; and this has been the means of letting us see the tender love and care of our God over His children, even in the most minute things, in a way which we never experimentally knew them before; and it has, in particular, made the Lord known to us more fully than we knew Him before, as a prayer-hearing God. As I have written down how the Lord has been pleased to deal with us since, I shall be able to relate some facts concerning this matter, as far as they may tend to edification.

November 18, 1830.—Our money was reduced to about eight shillings. When I was praying with my wife in the morning, the Lord brought to my mind the state of our purse, and I was led to ask Him for some money. About four hours after, we were with a sister* at Bishopsteignton, and she said to me, "Do you want any money?" "I told the brethren," said I, "dear sister, when I gave up my salary, that I would for the future tell the Lord only about my wants." She replied, "But He has told me to give you some money. About a fortnight ago I asked Him what I should do for Him, and He told me to give you some money; and last Saturday it came again powerfully to my mind, and has not left me since, and I felt it so forcibly last night that I could not help speaking of it to Brother P." My heart rejoiced, seeing the Lord's faithfulness, but I thought it better not to tell her about our circumstances, lest she should be influenced to give accordingly; and I also was assured that if it were of the Lord she could not but give. I therefore turned the conversation to other subjects, but when I left she gave me two guineas ($10.50). We were full of joy on account of the goodness of the Lord. I would call upon the reader to admire the gentleness of the Lord, that He did not try our faith much at the commencement, but gave us first encouragement, and allowed us to see His willingness to help us, before He was pleased to try it more fully and more severely.

The next Wednesday I went to Exmouth, our money having been reduced to about nine shillings. I asked the Lord on Thursday, when at Exmouth, to be pleased to give me some money. On Friday morning, about eight o'clock, whilst in prayer, I was particularly led to ask again for money; and before I rose from my knees I had the fullest assurance that we should have the answer that very day. About nine o'clock I left the brother with whom I was staying, and he gave me half a sovereign ($2.50) saying, "Take this for the expenses connected with your coming to us." I did not expect to have my expenses paid, but I saw the Lord's fatherly hand in sending me this money within one hour after my asking Him for some. But even then I was so fully assured that the Lord would send more that very day, or had done so already, that, when I came home about twelve o'clock, I asked my wife whether she had received any letters. She told me she had received one the day before from a brother in Exeter, with three sovereigns ($15). Thus even my prayer on the preceding day had been answered. The next day one of the brethren came and brought me $20 which was due to me of my former salary, but which I could never have expected, as I did not even know that this sum was due to me. Thus I received, within thirty hours, in answer to prayer, £7, 10s. ($37.50.) In the commencement of December I went to Collumpton, where I preached several times, and likewise in a neighboring village. In driving home from the village late at night our driver lost his way. As soon as we found out our mistake, as we were then near a house, it struck me that the hand of God was in this matter; and having awakened the people of the house, I offered a man something if he would be kind enough to bring us into the right road. I now walked with the man before the gig, and conversed with him about the things of God, and soon found out that he was an awful backslider. May God, in mercy, bless the word spoken to him, and may we learn from this circumstance, that we have to ask, on such occasions, why the Lord has allowed such and such things to happen to us. Since the publication of the first edition, one day, about eight years after this circumstance had happened, the individual who drove me that night introduced himself to me as a believer, and told me that on that evening he received his first impressions under the preaching of the Word. The missing of the right road may have been connected with his state of mind. May I and my fellow-laborers in the gospel be encouraged, by this, patiently to continue to sow the seed, though only after eight years or more we should see the fruit of it. I only add that, up to that time, the individual had been a very dissipated young man, who caused his believing parents very much grief. Their love led them to convey me and my wife to this village and back again, and truly the Lord gave them a reward in doing so.

Between Christmas and the New Year, when our money was reduced to a few shillings, I asked the Lord for more; when a few hours after there was given to us a sovereign by a brother from Axminster. This brother had heard much against me, and was at last determined to hear for himself, and thus came to Teignmouth, a distance of forty miles; and having heard about our manner of living, gave us his money.

With this closes the year 1830. Throughout it the Lord richly supplied all my temporal wants, though at the commencement of it I had no certain human prospect for one single shilling; so that even as it regards temporal things, I had not been in the smallest degree a loser in acting according to the dictates of my conscience; and as it regards spiritual things, the Lord had indeed dealt bountifully with me.

On January 6, 7 and 8, 1831, I had repeatedly asked the Lord for money, but received none. On the evening of January 8, I left my room for a few minutes, and was then tempted to distrust the Lord, though He had been so gracious to us, in that He not only up to that day had supplied all our wants, but had given us also those answers of prayer, which have been in part just mentioned. I was so sinful, for about five minutes, as to think it would be of no use to trust in the Lord in this way. I also began to say to myself, that I had perhaps gone too far in living in this way. But thanks to the Lord! this trial lasted but a few minutes. He enabled me again to trust in Him, and Satan was immediately confounded; for when I returned to my room (out of which I had not been absent ten minutes), the Lord had sent deliverance. A sister in the Lord, who resided at Exeter, had come to Teignmouth, and brought us $11, so the Lord triumphed, and our faith was strengthened.

January 10. To-day, when we had again but a few shillings, $25 was given to us, which had been taken out of the box. I had, once for all, told the brethren, who had the care of those temporal things, to have the kindness to let me have the money every week; but as these beloved brethren either forgot to take it out weekly, or were ashamed to bring it in such small sums, it was generally taken out every three, four or five weeks. As I had stated to them, however, from the commencement, that I desired to look neither to man nor the box, but to the living God, I thought it not right on my part to remind them of my request to have the money weekly, lest it should hinder the testimony which I wished to give, of trusting in the living God alone. It was on this account that on January 28, when we had again but little money, though I had seen the brethren on January 24, open the box and take out the money, I would not ask the brother in whose hands it was to let me have it; but standing in need of it, as our coals were almost gone, I asked the Lord to incline his heart to bring it, and but a little time afterwards it was given to us, even $7.

I would here mention, that since the time I began living in this way, I have been kept from speaking, either directly or indirectly, about my wants at the time I was in need. But whilst I have refrained, and do still habitually refrain, from speaking to my fellow-creatures about my wants at the time, I desire to speak well of the Lord's goodness after He has delivered me, not only in order that He thus may get glory, but also that the children of God may be encouraged to trust in Him.

(To be continued.)

* My Journal gives the names of the individuals whom the Lord has used as instruments in supplying our wants, but it has appeared well to me, for several reasons, not to mention them in print.

Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a Monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to Mrs. M. Baxter, 10 Drayton Park, Highbury, London, England, or to the manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, N. Y.

GOLDEN PRECEPTS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S.S. Lesson for September 11, Matt. 7 : 1–12.

Golden Text, Matt. 7 : 12.

Ver. 1 and 2. Do not be Censorious or Uncharitable—The Unmerciful Man's Punishment—Distrusted and Suspected—His Own Conduct Criticised—Ver. 3–5. Imperfect Men Not to expect Perfection in Others—Beholding the Mote—Dwelling on Another's Faults and Overlooking his Good Qualities—A Censorious Spirit a Beam in the Eye—Disqualifies for Judgment—Arouses Resentment—The Self-Righteous Critic Generally a Hypocrite—Ver. 6. Spiritual Experiences Wasted on the Unspiritual—Ver. 7–8. The Human Side of Prayer—A Definite Assurance—Ver. 9–11. The Illustration Defines the Conditions—For Sons Only—Good Gifts Only—Good Fathers Do not Grant all Requests—Ver. 12. The Principle Which Could Reform Society.

"ALL things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." "Peerless morality," says the sceptical worldling, "but it is utterly unpractical. If we were to do to men just as they desire us to do, we should be robbed on all hands, and should be putting a premium upon rascality." But Jesus did not say, "Do to others whatsoever they would that ye should do to them," but, "whatsoever ye, God's children, would that men should do to you." A drunkard would like nothing better than to empty the pockets of every Christian man he comes across, to satisfy his own wicked, loathsome lust for that which is destroying him. God does not say, "Do to the drunkard as he would you should do to him," but "as you, if you were in his place, would that another should do to you." You would that one should show you how to be saved from the power of the drink by being led to the Saviour. Again, a wild, gambling young man will invent every kind of lie to extort money from other Christians he thinks are an easy prey, so he will sponge upon them, appeal to their Christian principles, and make use of every device to attain his object. God does not say, "Do to the gambler as he would you should do to him;" but "as you, who have been saved and redeemed, would that one should do to you, if you were in his case." We who are saved know the blessedness of Christ's salvation, we know that our own soul "is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowler; the snare is broken, and we are escaped" (Ps. 126 : 4). The teaching of Jesus is, "See to it that others are saved, even as ye."

Who See Things in His Light,

"But then," says one, "what are we to do with the many cases of imposture which we meet with? How are we to know, out of twenty who solicit our assistance, which are those really in need, and which are living the disgraceful life of parasites, gaining their bread by imposing upon hard-working people, while they themselves will do nothing?" Perhaps if, as a rule, we took more trouble to inquire into cases of need, there would be less possibility of imposture, and we should get to know the real state of the case. Often this is not possible, and then we need to get direction from God what to do. To give money to a beggar is, almost certainly, to send him to a liquor saloon, and so to encourage him in sin; to give a hearty meal cannot hurt him, nor yet to find him a night's lodging. The Word of God shows us that He would have us to give to every man that asketh of us—give prayer, counsel, sympathy, something. The temptation to be hard when we have been deceived, is very great.

"Judge Not, that Ye be Not Judged."

Perhaps few of Christ's commands are so almost universally broken as this one! God does not want us to go through the world with our eyes shut, and so to be blind to sin, but He would have us abstain from taking the place of judgment. Yet, how commonly is it taken! A Christian family goes to church on the Sunday morning. Dinner-time arrives, and during the meal some one asks, "Well, what did you think of the sermon?" "Well, I don't think it was good taste to speak so strongly about theatres, when Mr. So-and-so was there. Why, everyone knows how much he gives to the support of the church; it was really ungrateful." "Well, I should like Mr. So-and-so's preaching to be more comforting, he is so strong upon responsibility; besides, I do believe he was making personal allusions; you know that was quite a hit at you." And no one knew but God of the soul-travail of that man of God, who was sent of God into that pulpit. He delivered His message, and had "this testimony, that he pleased God," but from the Jews "going before to judgment," the law of Christ was broken, "Judge not, that ye be not judged." A few believers are talking together: the China Inland Mission, Mr. Guinness's Training Home, the Salvation Army and the Church Missionary Society are all under discussion. No good word is spoken of either. One is condemned for being too stiff, another for being too wild, another for being too doctrinal, another for having too much itinerating work; and those who thus judge are not missionaries, have no experience, deny themselves in nothing for the heathen, and only prejudice the minds of others, against those whom God is owning. Meanwhile the hearts of His children rejoice as He owns their labors, and those of many others; they are sending out hundreds to the field, and God accepts the offering of their yielded lives, while from the hearts and lips of those who sit in the seat of judgment, there goes forth what "the recording angel takes down as a breach of the law of Christ." "Judge not, that ye be not judged." When we know of sin in another child of God, or in one connected with us in any way, we are to go and tell him his faults between him and ourselves alone, but God has distinctly forbidden us to judge or suspect evil where we are not sure it exists. Even if we do not say it, yet if we suspect another in our hearts, it seems to get into the air, and that other feels it as much as though we said it. It is a terrible and yet a just retribution, "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

We are Ourselves the Jury in our own case; we reap what we sow. If we are given to fault-finding, then we invite God and man to find fault with us. If we find out and speak over with rejoicing all the good we can discover in others, we invite both God and man to do likewise by us. We pray, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that have trespassed against us." Just in the same measure, no more, and no less. It is so much more easy to our natural hearts to condemn another behind his back than to take him aside and kindly point out to him his fault! Do we really like others to deal thus with us? It is so much more easy to see the mote in our brother's eye than the beam in our own eye. We know all the extenuating circumstances in our own case, but because we do not know them in our brother's case, we believe there are none, and therefore that he must be guilty. While God can be merciful, we are "extreme to watch what is done amiss." Perhaps there is no sin which more tends to create spiritual death in churches and families than this sin of judging, with the evil speaking to which it leads.

Jesus give us one warning, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine." Surely, this warns us against speaking before those who cannot enter into it, of our deepest communion with God, and of His dealings with us. There are blessed manifest answers to prayer, which we may tell everybody, but there are communings of God with us which are meant for our own souls alone, and we do harm in making them public. When God opened His heart to Noah, Abraham and Moses, they did not tell out to others all which God had said to them, but only the message which He gave them for the people.

"Ask, and it shall be given to you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: For and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." This is God's will as to His children's relations to him in prayer! And yet many look upon answers to prayer as something extraordinary, instead of the invariable rule among those who trust Him. May not the very spirit of judgment of which we have just treated be the hindrance in the way of the answer to many prayers? "When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any; that your Father also which in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses" (Mark 11: 25, 26). While there is any wrong feeling in our heart towards any man, there is a cloud between us and God, our prayers are not free. But when we are standing in our right relations to God, saved by the precious blood of Christ, which continually, as we trust Him, "cleanses us from all sin," while we rely upon Him, counting Him "faithful that promised," faithful to fulfil all His words—to ask is to receive of Him. Every one that asketh receiveth. This is why we are so often taught thanksgiving in connection with prayer. "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." Now, if we believe we receive them, it is but just and right and courteous and natural to give thanks. (I Thess. 5: 17, 18). Let the prayer about everything which arises be so definite that you, as you ask, receive, and give thanks that you have received. Again, in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God (Phil. 4 : 6.) "Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving" (Col. 4 : 2). We cannot pray in faith without the spirit of thanksgiving that God does then and there take in hand what we commit to him. We which have believed

Every One That Asketh Receiveth;

Do Enter Into Rest.

We do not go on praying for that very same thing, but rest it over upon God. Some may mistake this, and be dreadfully deceived. If people think that by going through the form of asking God for everything, with the form of thanking God that He does grant it, they will prevail with Him, they will most surely be disappointed. If we give thanks by faith for the answer to a prayer which we receive now by faith, it is because we see in His word His mind about that which we are praying for, and we unite with it, and rejoice in His will, and though all the circumstances may seem to be against its accomplishment, we can glory that God will surely overcome them, This is not a got-up state of mind which we work ourselves into, but a steady

Union with the Mind of God.

"He that seeketh findeth." Why? Because he is in the will of God. "To him that knocketh it shall be opened." Therefore God would have us approach Him, if we are fully yielded to Him, without fear of a repulse, knowing that we are welcome, and that he delights to give us what we ask, and only wants us to come oftener. We are not coming to a God who needs compulsion, but to One who is longing for the moment when He can grant our request. He is a Father, and our beloved Lord is explaining what kind of father. He says, "What man is there of you, who, if his son shall ask him for a loaf, will give him a stone? and if he ask for a fish, will give him a serpent? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to those that ask him? (R. V.). O child of God, why then pray in mournful tones, as though to an unwilling God? Why pray with doubt and sadness in your heart? Why not pray with more of praise than of petition, and with the sunny joy at heart, "My Father bids me welcome?"

FOR The Christian Herald.]

CONFESSION.

"If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—1 JOHN i, ix.

I am so weary and so weak to-night, dear Saviour,
So tired of striving and so sick of sin,
That were I worthy of a place in Thy fair dwelling
I'd ask that I just now might enter in.

Here let me kneel in sorrowful contrition,
And lean my head against Thy wounded side,
And kiss Thy hands and feet all torn and bleeding,
And whisper to myself, "for me he died."

And I have grieved him since; Oh shame to say it!
Such base ingratitude it seemeth to me now;
How could I pierce again the heart that loved me,
And bind the thorns again upon that brow.

I did not mean it Lord! some sudden gust of passion,
Some snare the tempter laid with wily art,
Entrapped my thoughtless feet, and ere I knew it,
My path and Thine were lying wide apart.

And as I turned, my wayward steps retracing,
I met Thine eyes, so full of grief and love
It broke my heart; Oh careless soul how could'st thou,
So wrong His kindness and so faithless prove!

And falling at Thy feet I plead for pardon,
Amid such bitter tears of grief and shame;
While thou had'st only loving words of comfort for me.
Not one reproach, not one just word of blame.

Thou knowest I love thee, Lord! though in my weakness,
Tempted and tried, Thy love I often grieve,
Thou knowest I love Thee! stay Thou ever near me,
That from Thy heart my heart may strength receive.

Strength to o'ercome, to conquer every failing,
That mars my life, or makes it incomplete;
Power in that shall keep me safe from sin and wandering,
Pure and pure, forever at Thy feet.

LILLA M. ALEXANDER.

Greenville, Conn.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A sample packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

If you want the latest and best imperial photograph, taken of Dr. Talmage, you can obtain it by sending twenty-five cents in stamps to J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. The photograph was taken at a sitting especially given by Dr. Talmage, and he says it is excellent. A fac-simile of a recent autograph of the Dr. is affixed to every photograph.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of
J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa FOR OIL.

This KNIFE FREE

This Knife FREE! A brand new 48 Page Catalogue of New Goods sent free if you send 6 cents in Stamps to help pay postage, etc. World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., N. Y.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

CHOLERA INFANTUM

This most fatal disease of Infancy,
PREVENTED, CONTROLLED and CURED by

Lactated Food

It has been successful in hundreds of cases where other prepared foods failed.

FOR INFANTS,

of any age, it may be used with confidence, as a safe and complete substitute for mother's milk.

FOR INVALIDS,

it is a Perfect Nutrient in either chronic or acute cases. Weak stomachs always retain and relish it. Physicians and mothers concede its superiority. The most palatable, nourishing and economical of Foods.

150 MEALS for an INFANT for $1.00.

Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1. Valuable circulars and pamphlets, sent free.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World.—$35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35 MARCHAL & SMITH, 235 East 21st Street, New York.

SINGING TEACHERS AND CONDUCTORS OF MUSICAL SOCIETIES, SHOULD APPLY FOR COMPLETE CATALOGUES, SPECIMEN PAGES AND TERMS. Any Book desired for examination sent on receipt of price. Money refunded if unsatisfactory. BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth Street, New York. 81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

Make Haste Slowly

This is a trusted maxim. It should be prominent in the minds of appointees for selecting songs, for Church or School. Better make a thorough search and secure the best. Examine Sweney and Kirkpatrick's Glad Hallelujahs. It's their newest. They say, their best. Its music we know makes grand singing—everybody will sing it. Its pieces, so inspiring, they must chime in.

By mail, 35 cents. By express (not prepaid), $3 60 per dozen; $30 per 100. One sample copy 25 cents. Further inducements to Schools, Churches and Evangelists. Write us.

T. T. TASKER, SR., PUBLISHER,
921 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Ladies' Underwear.

Ladies who are unable to examine our stock of these goods personally would find it to their advantage to correspond with us. The most complete information furnished, and careful attention given to special orders.

Lord & Taylor
Broadway & 20th Street, N. Y.

James McCreery &

PREVIOUS TO OPENING THEIR NEW OF FALL DRESS GOODS OFFER THE F ING BARGAINS:

ONE LINE OF MIXED SUITINGS, 44 WIDE, AT 75 CTS., FORMER PRICE PER YARD.

ONE LINE OF FRENCH CANVAS 50 CTS., FORMER PRICE $1 PER YARD OF THE ABOVE LINES ARE ALL WO VERY DESIRABLE.

ORDERS BY MAIL WILL RECEIVE AND CAREFUL ATTENTION.

Broadway and Eleventh
New York.

INTERNATIONAL SONG SERVICE BY PHILIP PHILLIPS & HIS SON

WITH GEMS OF SONGS FR 50 AUTHORS

LATEST, CHEAPEST AND BES 160 Pages. Strong Board Co 30 cents each, postpaid. $25.(Send to The Phillips Publishing C BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

THE AMERICA MAGAZINE

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED

This Magazine portrays An can thought and life from ocea ocean, is filled with pure high- literature, and can be safely comed in any family circle.

PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MA

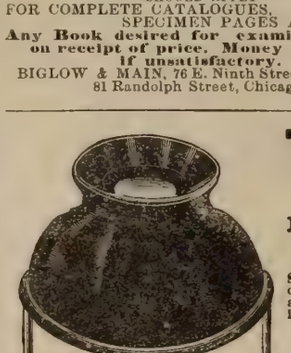
Sample Copy of current number mailed up ceipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 ct.

Premium List with either.

Address:
The American Magazine Co., Publis
130 & 132 Pearl St., N

GET UP CLUB

WANTED—Agents in every town and vi sell our New Christmas Books 5 from 50 cts. to $3.50. One woman with a fam that she averaged $7.00 a day last year, from ber until Christmas. One new agent made $1 weeks. One sold 55 the first week in a village 200. Try it in your school district if no more. make from $25 to $500.
CASSELL & CO. (Limited), 822 Broadway, 40 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.



THE TRIPOD MAGNIFIER.

PRICE 25 CENTS.

Does the Same Work as a Brass Mounted One That Sells For 75 Cents.

The Lens is accurately ground and well mounted for examining SILK, LINEN, SEED, INSECTS, BANK NOTES, and various other things. It is an article that should be in the hands of Children as well as Grown People, as they get more instruction and amusement from it in an hour, than they would without its aid in weeks.

Farmers, Mechanics, Merchants, Miners, Clerks, Students and Ladies, ALL HAVE USE FOR IT.

The smallest seed or insect, a drop of milk, the crawlers in a bit of cheese, the tiniest screw, the quality of Linen or Silk, the quality of stone or Ore, the genuineness of a Note or Coin, the Microscopic objects of nature, the quality of lace, etc., etc., all come within the scope of this instrument. A sample will be sent by mail postpaid on receipt of 25 Cents. For ONE DOLLAR we will send FIVE Magnifiers. Price to the Trade and to Agents, when sent by Express, $1.50 Per Doz. Send money by P. O. Money Order Registered Letter, or by Express. Postage Stamps taken. World M'f'g Co. 122 Nassau Street, N. Y.

This is the best Microscope we have ever seen for the money.

SEDGWICK WOVEN STEEL WIRE FENCE AND GATES.

The best Farm, Garden, Poultry Yard, Lawn, School Lot, Park and Cemetery Fences and Gates. Perfect Automatic Gate. Cheapest and Neatest Iron Fences. Iron and Wire Summer Houses, Lawn Furniture, and other wire work. Best Wire Stretcher and Pliers. Ask dealers in hardware, or address

SEDGWICK BROS., Richmond, Ind.

400 Choice Recitations and Readings,

bound in handsome lithograph paper cover, mailed to any address, postpaid, for only 30 cents. Satisfaction guaranteed. Address J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers, 57 Rose Street, New York.
Mention the CHRISTIAN HERALD in your letter when you write.

FOR

Indigestion, Sick Headache Constipation Inactive Liv

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

The merchant planning business schemes;
The preacher struggling through his themes
The statesman in assembly halls;
The broker wild with "puts and calls,"
To cool the Blood and brace the mind,
Will TARRANT'S SELTZER satisfy.

The Chinese town is but bare on the muddy banks of a stream and paintless. Scarce dreary word in our tongue and acid white lead lacks the brig perous, cheerful look we give less than half the price. Wh is better than no paint at a that's about all it is. The F M'f'g. Co., Nyack, Rockland C manufacturers of Reeds Mixed in addition to the usual co free, send an exceedingly inter plain, common sense exposi paint free.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. X., No. 37. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, SEPT 15, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF MR. R. T. BOOTH, the Gospel Temperance Orator, with Pictures of Gettysburg in 1863 and 1887.

HOW TO ENTERTAIN COMPANY. A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

PICTURE OF MOUNTAIN SCENES IN MEXICO.

PROPHETIC NOTES FROM THE NIAGARA CONFERENCE.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Massachusetts Prohibitionists—A new Political Party—The Ohio Tornado—A Theatre Holocaust in England—A Letter from Mr. Gladstone—The French Military Manœuvres—Intolerance in Mexico—Mrs. Cleveland Declining an Invitation—Miles of Rope for Hotels—A Life Saved by Bible Reading—A Defaulter Unearthed, etc.

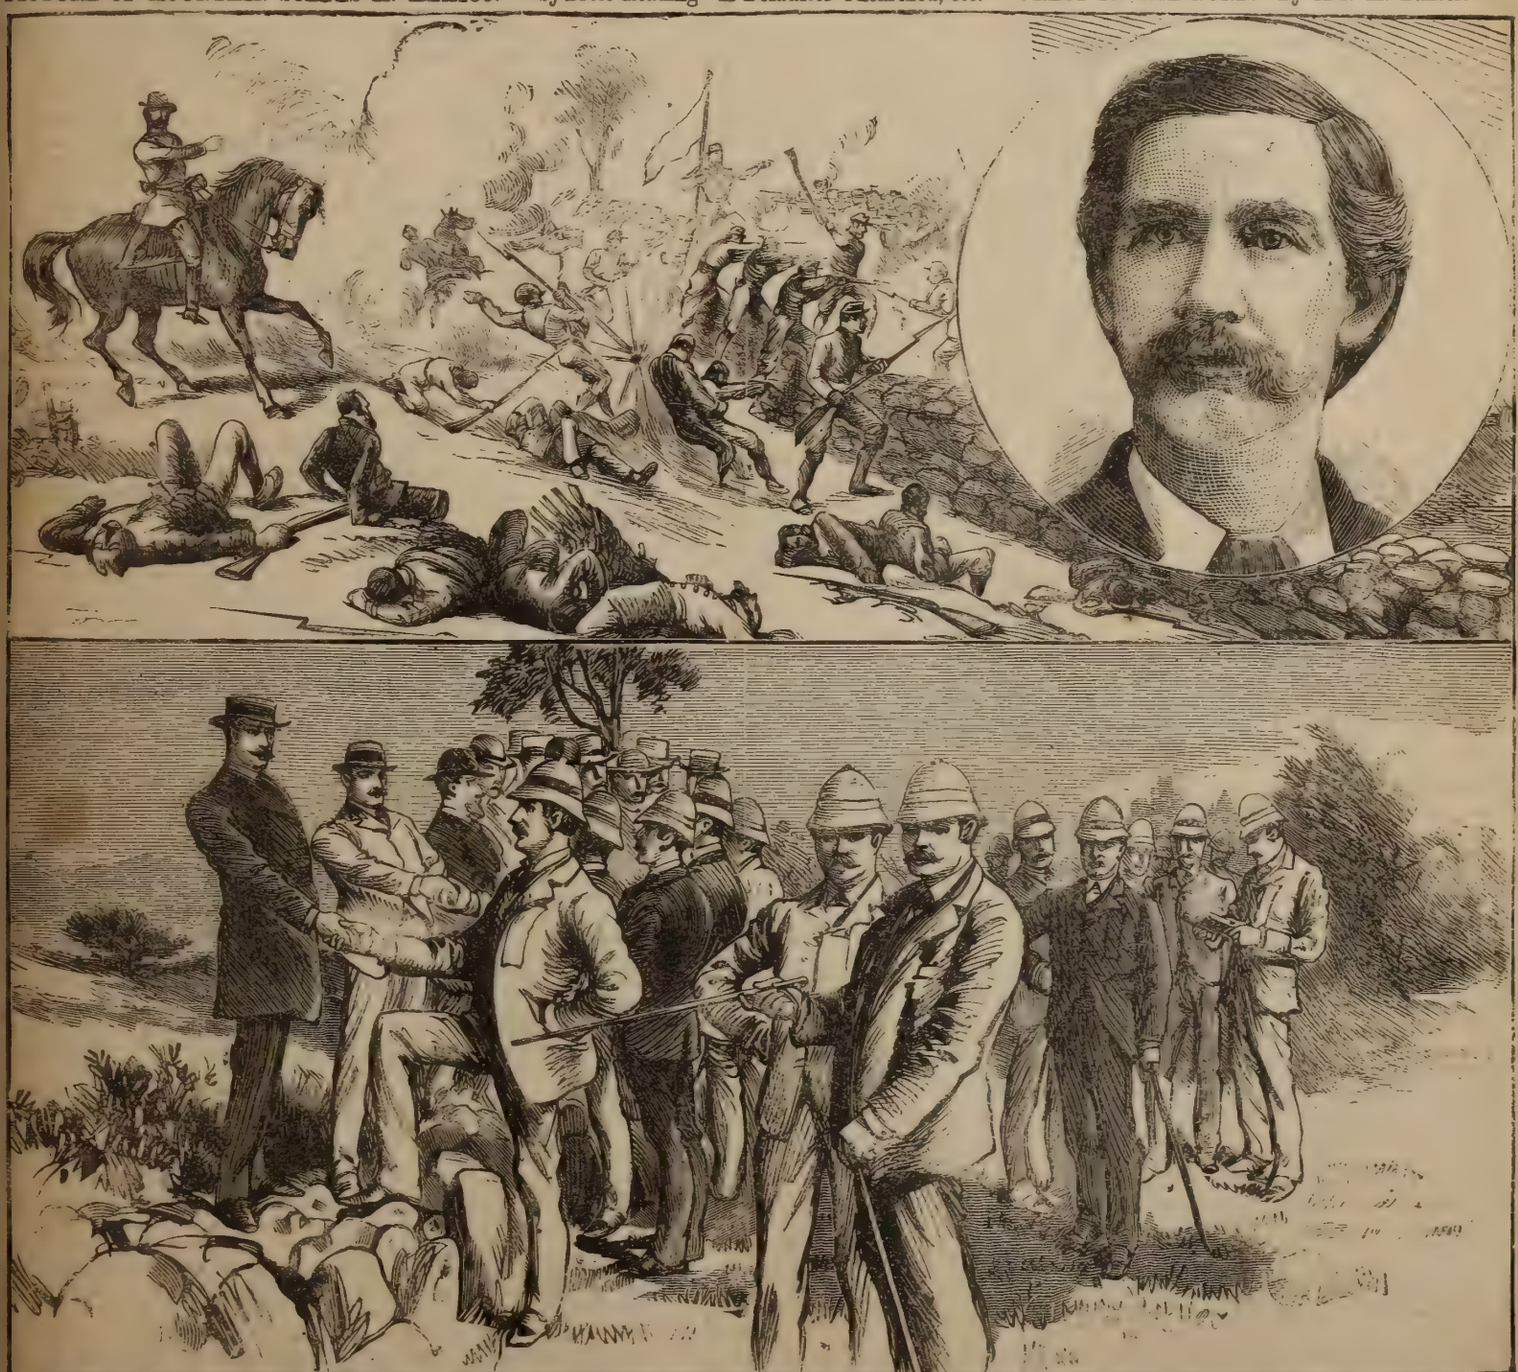
S. S., OR THE SINNER SAVED. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

Saved from Suicide—Five Parisian Trophies—A Fallen Girl's Testimony—A Converted Armenian Merchant—Mr. George Muller's Journeys—A Rainy Night in China—A Vigil on a Mountain.

THE ELEVENTH HOUR. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. (Continued.)

REST IN THE LORD. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



MR. RICHARD T. BOOTH, Temperance Missionary to Great Britain—Gettysburg in 1863 and 1887.

MR. R. T. BOOTH.

The American Temperance Missionary to Great Britain.

The Interchange in Public Teachers—Mutual International Obligations—Mr. Booth's Early Life—Rescue from Drunkenness—Engages in Temperance Work—Labors in New England and the Middle States—Voyage to Great Britain—In a Marine Collision—Work at Mr. Noble's Mission in London—Large Meetings in the Provincial Cities—Mission in Mr. Spurgeon's Church—Voyage to Australia—Effects of the Temperance Agitation on the Revenue—Labors in Hawaii—Visit to his Old Home—Return to Europe—Gettysburg in 1863 and 1887.

WHILE the question of the tariff is occupying the minds of statesmen and politicians, and some are urging that the country would benefit by a free interchange of the commodities of the various countries, whilst others contend that the productions of Europe ought not to be admitted into this country until a duty has been levied on them that will increase the price, we may congratulate ourselves that neither this country nor England has ever entertained a proposal to apply the principle of protection to public teachers. The many pulpits in America that are occupied by Englishmen, and the benefits we have derived from Englishmen eminent in literature and art, who have visited us, have laid us under an obligation which we have amply repaid by sending to England Moody and Sankey, Henry Ward Beecher and many others whose services to the public weal in England have been warmly acknowledged.

Among the Americans who have helped us to pay our debt of obligation to our Transatlantic cousins, and have been successful in arousing the English people to right thought and action, is the temperance speaker whose portrait appears on the first page—Mr. R. T. Booth. His speeches have suited the English taste, and he has been able to give valuable aid to the cause of total abstinence in England. It is now about seven years since Mr. Booth first visited that country, and the three years he then spent in speaking in the large cities there, were rich in results. In the midst of his usefulness his health broke down, and he was obliged to leave the country. He went to Australia and New Zealand, where he was also very successful, has paid a brief visit to his native land, and has now returned to England to resume his work there, much to the joy of his English friends.

A Reformed Drunkard.

Richard T. Booth was born at Ithaca, N. Y., in 1844. He is now therefore, forty-three years old. His parents were poor, and at the early age of ten years he was sent to work in a cotton factory. At the outbreak of the war he entered the army and served in the 111th Regiment, New York Volunteers. He was engaged early in the war, and was taken prisoner. After his exchange he rejoined the army, and was in the battles of the Wilderness and Gettysburg. At the close of the war he settled in Moravia, N. Y., where he fell into dissipated habits and became a confirmed drunkard. After some years of abject misery and vain efforts to reform, he was saved one night through his wife's prayers. Kneeling by her side he besought mercy and strength, and rose from his knees a saved and sober man. He at once gave himself to the work of rescue and took an active part in

The Temperance Campaign.

Early in the autumn of 1877 he was joined in his public work by Mr. J. Reed Smith, who, like himself, was a reformed man. They clasped hands, and engaged in the Blue Ribbon enterprise with enthusiasm, and with a deep-set determination born of experience. The young men went to the New England States, and began a mission in the city of Holyoke, Mass. They held successful meetings, and a large number of persons formerly addicted to drunkenness signed the pledge and donned the blue ribbon. A week was devoted to East Hampton, and then a campaign was begun in Greenfield, Conn., where they also had wonderful success. Among the places next visited, and in which similar beneficent results were experienced, were North Adams, Fitchburg, Clinton, West Brookfield, and Turner's Falls, closing their first year's New England campaign at West Somerville.

The second year of the joint labors of the temperance evangelists was inaugurated by a camp-meeting at Sterling Junction, Mass. It commenced on September 3, 1878, and lasted for eight days. Among the leading temperance workers and speakers who took part, were Colonel Luther Caldwell, Colonel Pearce and Miss Frances E. Willard. From this time onward to the month of October, 1879, Messrs. Booth and Reed visited about fifty different centres of population in the New England States, and, among others, the city of New Bedford, Mass., where much good was done.

After two years of service, Mr. Smith and Mr. Booth parted at the close of their work in the city of Keene, N. H., where they met with great success. Mr. Smith returned to the practice of his profession as a stenographer, while his companion in labor continued to devote himself to the work of Gospel temperance.

Work n England.

In the summer of 1880 Mr. Booth sailed for England in the Anchoria, of the Anchor Line, and was on board that vessel when she collided with The Queen on June 13, 1880. The two ships returned to New York, and on July 21 Mr. Booth again embarked for England, this time on the Scythia, of the Cunard Line. The voyage was safely accomplished, and Mr. Booth on landing proceeded to London, where, on August 7, he was formally welcomed by a number of earnest English workers at Hoxton Hall, and many kind and brotherly greetings were uttered. There, in the absence of Mr. Noble, he continued to labor for five or six weeks. Invitations were then responded to from the provinces, and he gave addresses at Newmarket, Tunbridge Wells, and other places in and near London. He afterwards proceeded to Scotland, speaking to large audiences in the cities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Greenock, and Peebles.

At Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle.

In the fall of the following year, at the request of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, Mr. Booth commenced a ten days' mission in the Metropolitan Tabernacle—Mr. Spurgeon presiding, and warmly commending the American speaker to his church. The success there was astonishing, and at the conclusion of the mission the gratitude of the people was manifested by the presentation of a testimonial at a meeting which filled the vast edifice to overflowing. Mr. Dunn, one of Mr. Spurgeon's elders, dwelt upon the marvellous work which had been accomplished in their midst. Up to that evening 21,695 persons had taken the blue ribbon, and no fewer than 11,325 had signed the pledge. They were also thankful for the spiritual blessing that had resulted from Mr. Booth's labors. He begged Mr. Booth's acceptance of a timepiece, suitably inscribed, as a farewell expression of esteem, and bearing the signature of Mr. Spurgeon and his brother. Mr. Smithers, secretary of the committee, presented Mrs. Booth with a flower-basket, while Mrs. Smithers, as representing the ladies' committee, handed Mr. Booth an inkstand. Mr. Spurgeon next presented a set of his sermons.

In Australia

marked success also attended Mr. Booth's labors. During his tour in the Southern hemisphere, his movements reported in the Australian papers were republished in these columns, so that our readers already know the most important of them. Everywhere the people were deeply moved by his impassioned appeals, and about 125,000 signatures to the pledge were secured. Whilst there he saw the Local Option Law enacted for the colony of Victoria, and a most complete parliamentary measure of a similar character for the younger colony of Queensland, with most of whose legislators he came into immediate contact. A significant fact which indicates that the mission conducted by Mr. Booth and his coadjutors was not without its influence, was that in the colony of New Zealand alone the consumption of liquor largely decreased. In one year the decrease in the money spent in it amounted to $900,000, and in the last four years there has been a total reduction of more than two millions; that is an average reduction of $500,000 per annum. Mr. Booth regards this as one of the indirect but most pleasing results of his work in the country, and is filled with gratitude to God on account of it. He visited also all the principal towns in New Zealand, conducting vigorous missions of two or three weeks' duration in each, having on every occasion large audiences, and a great impetus was consequently given to the Temperance cause. Mr. T. W. Glover and other esteemed workers continue the work with ever-widening success.

One very interesting episode of Mr. Booth's work in New Zealand was his Visit to the Maoris, or aborigines of the country, among whom he spent ten days in the world-famed Hot Lake District, which was devastated by a terrible eruption, on June 10, last year. For ten days Mr. Booth was the guest of the Hazard family at Wairoa, who, only a short time after he left their hospitable dwelling, lost their lives in the appalling catastrophe which visited the beautiful region. A picture of this catastrophe with full details appeared in this journal on September 9, last year. The Mr. Hazard with whom Mr. Booth stayed during his visit, was the most prominent temperance worker in the vicinity. His melancholy death is regarded as a public calamity.

Bidding farewell to New Zealand, Mr. Booth labored for five weeks in the Sandwich Islands. He spent two weeks among the European population, and during the remainder of the time held several enthusiastic meetings among the natives, securing no fewer than four hundred signatures, this being the first occasion on which any aboriginal Hawaiian took the total abstinence pledge.

His Visit Home

came with grateful pleasure after his labors and travels. His reception at San Francisco was described in these columns at the time, and it was paralleled with enthusiasm by his temperance friends at the various cities on his way to the scenes of his boyhood. Mr. Booth spent a restful, refreshing month with his venerable parents. His father's age is eighty-two, and that of his mother seventy-seven. He made excursions among his old friends and revisited the familiar places around, and was able also to participate in the reunion of the veterans at Gettysburg on July 3, the anniversary of the famous battle. He has now returned to Great Britain, where his talents and energies are so highly appreciated, and where he has received a most cordial and enthusiastic welcome from the various Temperance organizations, which know how to utilize his services.

GETTYSBURG IN 1863 AND 1887.

(See Illustrations on First Page.)

THE reunion on the famous battle-field, which Mr. Booth was privileged to attend last July, stirred many affecting memories in the breasts of him and many others who stood there again on that anniversary, and thanked God for the blessed changes which twenty-four years had wrought. Mr. Booth, in his descriptive lecture on "Three Years in the Ranks," gives a most thrilling outline of this terrible conflict. He was a member of General Alexander Hay's division, being the third of the Second Corps that on July 3, 1863, received and repulsed the fierce charge of General Pickett's division. He says: "Our brigade, which was commanded by Colonel Clinton MacDougall, was ordered to retake a battery captured by the enemy from another corps. This was my first experience of a bayonet charge. We succeeded in recapturing the position, but it was at a deadly cost. I left some of the noblest and bravest of my comrades dead upon the field. The following day there occurred the most sanguinary struggle of that terrible time. For more than an hour we were exposed to a furious cannonade, the enemy's guns being directed to the centre of our lines, where my regiment was posted. Our ranks were broken and shattered by the incessant torrent of solid shot and bursting shell that was rained upon us. When at last the cannonade had ceased, there emerged from the cover of the woods three lines of attack, and then came the most memorable charge of the war. My brother was severely wounded. We repulsed the dreadful onslaught, and the Confederate host was driven back with great loss to the shelter of the woods, and General Lee retreated across the Potomac."

The celebration of the anniversary last July, was a scene never to be forgotten. The survivors of that terrible battle, Northern and Southern, met on the field, and together went over the places which had been so fiercely contested. The widow of General Pickett and her son were present, and received from both sides the heartiest ovations and numerous valuable testimonials of affection and good-will. Monuments were dedicated upon spots which had borne the brunt of the sanguinary contest, and genial speeches were made by the men who had fought on both sides, which contrasted very significantly with those made at other places by politicians who had staid at home during the fight, attending to their fat contracts. The lower frontispiece picture illustrates one of the dramatic incidents of the day, which took place across the famous stone wall at "bloody angle," where, on the day of battle, twenty-four years previously, the most deadly struggle took place. It was preceded by a march of the survivors of the Pickett men over the ground where they made their famous charge on the third and last day of the battle. The Philadelphia Brigade was also drawn up in its original position behind the stone wall. With the original formation, though with wide gaps between the represented commands, the old division advanced, as it had done so long ago, out of the woods and into the open clover-field toward the distant Union position. No shot and shell rained upon them now. Round Top was silent, no smoke rolled about Cemetery Hill, and the flash of Cushing's guns did not meet their eyes. Only a vista of green and golden fields, gently rising to the old Union line, marked by the dark line of the old stone wall behind which the Philadelphia Brigade had awaited their approach, smiled upon them; and when the Southern men reached the line—

"Shake hands, boys!" cried General Lynch and Colonel Aylett, the leaders on each side, respectively. The "boys," nothing loth, immediately extended their arms, and Virginia and Pennsylvania shook hands with every demonstration of sincerest respect and affection over the once blood-stained land-mark.

None who witnessed that scene will ever forget it, and they will sympathize most cordially with every movement tending to bring the two sections into closer accord, and will be most earnest in resisting the efforts of the politicians who, to serve their own selfish purpose and to aid their own Presidential aspirations, are now endeavoring once more to inflame Northern passions and to antagonize the men who would be glad to be friends and brothers.

Price, Five Cents, Post Free—160th Thousand Enlarged Edition—64 Pages—

COMING WARS AND GREAT EVENTS,

and Ten Signs of the Approaching Final Crisis,

by Rev. M. Baxter—Dissolution of the Turkish Empire into the Five Ancient Kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, Thracian Turkey and Bulgaria, which with Britain (separated from Ireland), France, Spain, Italy and Austria, will be formed into an Allied Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms—Subsequent Rise of Napoleon as King of Syria—His Seven Years' Covenant with the Jews—Resurrection and Translation of Saints—3½ Years' Great Tribulation and world-wide Persecution of Christians—Descent of Christ at Armageddon—Ensuing Millennium of 1000 Years after the Year 1900. Address Manager "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Making a Fatal Choice.—Mr. Stewart Remarked at a meeting of inquirers: "I believe I saw the door of mercy shut upon a young girl a few nights ago. At the close of the meeting she was asked to give her heart to Jesus, but she shook her head, while the tears started to her eyes, as she said, 'No, I will not; my mind is made up.' Then turning to a companion who was sitting by her side she said, while her lip quivered, 'Trust you in Christ, take Jesus to-night. I choose the world.' She rose to her feet pale and trembling, as she uttered these words, and well she might, to deliberately trample under foot the precious blood of Christ so freely shed for her. She left the building, and I have not seen her since.

Saved in a Dancing Hall.—Mr. Simpson narrates: "In the dancing hall of a small village there was being held, by a number of earnest Christian men, a Gospel meeting. A young godless man, noticing that the hall was lighted, advanced towards it, expecting to spend his night there in frivolity, and just as he laid his hand on the latch he was startled to hear, sounding through the hall, these words: 'By Me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved.' He was awakened and brought to a knowledge of the truth, and became one of the most devoted Christians in the whole district. This is a striking example of how God can use mere coincidences for his purpose. The act of opening the door was a living illustration of the text.

A Startling Discovery Made.—Mr. Ford Observes: "Recently I visited a woman who was groping in spiritual darkness. Nothing that I could say seemed to have any effect; she could not see that there was any need of salvation. Before I left her I asked if she would pray this prayer every day until I should return: 'O God, show me my need.' She promised, and kept her word. On the third day after she had prayed this prayer the Lord was pleased to answer it, for in despair and deep agony she saw that her soul needed salvation. She cried aloud, 'God be merciful to me.' The true balm was there, and healed the wounds of the true and penitent heart, and she saw that without the shedding of blood there is no remission, no eternal life."

A Life-Saving Captain.—Mr. Robertson Observes: "I heard of a sea-captain who, during his professional experience had saved very many persons from a watery grave. When one inquired of him what means he had taken to rescue so many, he said, 'Every night when all things were put in order, I sent a man up to the topmast to look around and see if there were any who needed our help, and in the morning the same thing was repeated. In that way I learned who were in distress and required our help, and at once set out to rescue the perishing ones.' From this incident we Christians might draw a lesson. First, see that we ourselves are right before God, and then look carefully around on the world of sin, that we may discover perishing souls whom we may be the means, in God's hands, of saving from being drowned in the awful depths of eternal perdition."

A Consumptive's Despair Cured.—A Friend remarks: "I knew two young ladies and their mother who lived a quiet, retired life. The eldest daughter had the love of God in her heart, but the younger had not. The eldest girl began to fade, and before the winter was over she had sweetly fallen asleep in Jesus. Her sister was shortly afterwards laid upon a sick-bed with the same disease, that fatal malady consumption. But, oh, what a different sick-bed was hers! She had no sweet thoughts of Jesus to pass the weary hours, no communion with Him, for she knew not the exceeding richness of His grace. The mother ceased not to pray day and night for her daughter. One day the sick girl slowly opened her eyes, and turning them on her ever-watchful mother, she said, 'O, mother, I am lost, I am lost.' 'Thank God for that,' rejoined the mother, with the tears of gratitude glistening in her eyes. 'But, mother, there is nothing before me but utter destruction.' 'Yes, my child, there is a Saviour for the lost; the Lord can give you peace.' 'And will He give it to me now, mother?' 'Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.' Before she died these heavenly words were written on her heart, and I saw that weary one die in peace."

A Woman's Rebellion Quenched.—The Rev. Mr. Ross says: "A Christian mother was very angry and bitter against God, because He took from her, by death, her only daughter. Shortly afterwards tidings reached her that her husband was ill, and hard, rebellious thoughts rose in her heart. 'What?' she said, 'Is it not enough that He has taken my daughter? Is He going to take my husband also? What have I done that He should afflict me so grievously?' But softer thoughts of Him who ordereth all things aright eventually arose in her heart. He let her know that He must be Lord and Master, and humbly she confessed her sin, and willingly yielded up her will to His. And immediately her husband began to recover, and peace—that unspeakable peace—which passeth all understanding took possession of her soul for 'He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds.'"

A Great Vessel Wrecked.—Mr. Arthur Says: "A lighthouse-keeper, looking out one stormy night over the raging waters, saw one sudden flash of light cleave the dense darkness. Then followed a great noise. That was all; in vain he waited for some other manifestation to either his ear or eye; all through that night there was only the moaning of the wind, and the surging of the waves. Next morning the whole shore was strewn with wreckage; a great American vessel had been lost, and many people hurled into eternity, some of them, doubtless, unprepared. They were near home, they thought themselves in safety, but in the midst of their fancied security death overtook them. We should ever bear in mind that in the surging ocean of life around us unconverted sinners are never safe. The old and the young alike are liable to be suddenly called to die. The only place of safety, in life or in death, is the Rock of Ages, and it becomes a sublime reality to those who are saved from eternal shipwreck and find salvation and peace in Christ."

Another Heart Unlocked.—Mr. Clarke Relates: "On one occasion I was speaking in one of the lowest districts of Glasgow, and I was telling the people that all in this world changes, but Jesus is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. A poor drunken woman was at the back of the hall, and making a disturbance throughout the service. At the close a lady worker was sitting with her arm around this poor creature's neck, and, with tears in her eyes, she was pleading with her to come to Jesus. The lady beckoned me to come to her, and as I stood there I thought I had never seen such an outcast. At the lady's bidding I began to speak to the drunken woman. 'You believe in God?' 'No.' 'In heaven?' 'No.' 'You believe in a devil?' 'If men are devils, I do,' was the surly response. 'You believe in hell?' Laying her hand over her heart she said with a strange laugh, 'Well, I should think I do.' 'Does your child not often speak to you of heaven?' 'Who told you I had a child?' I don't know what made me say such a thing, for I knew nothing about her, but this was the key that unlocked her heart. With the tears streaming from her eyes she cried, 'I do believe in God, I do believe in heaven, but I am so miserable.' For the first time my heart went out to her, all my repugnance vanished, and taking her hand in mine, I told her the story of the Cross. We knelt in prayer, and she rose a changed creature. She has a comfortable home now, and there is no one more ready than she is to do a kind deed, to speak a sympathizing word, to comfort the poor in their distress, and telling others what the Lord had done for her. This is a proof that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth.

HOW TO TREAT COMPANY.

A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.*

"Given to Hospitality." Rom. 12: 13.

Hospitality an Imperilled Duty—Trials and Rewards Involved—The Eccentricity of Guests—A Philanthropist's Notice to Quit—The Toil and Expense—A Captain-General's Entertainment—A Fountain of Strong Drinks—Serving God in Serving Others—A Queen's Ten-Lipped Cup—How to Entertain Christ—God's Blessing on the Hospitable—Gratitude of Guests—George Whitefield's Inscription on Glass—A Legend of St. Sebald—Robbers Killed by a Guest—A Beautiful Greek Custom—Thomas Cromwell's Host—Gratitude of the Chancellor.

THERE is danger that the multiplication of large and commodious hotels in our towns and cities and villages will utterly exterminate that grace which Abraham exhibited when he entertained the angels, and which Lot showed when he watched for guests at the gate of the city, and which Christ recognized as a positive requisite for entering heaven, when he declared: "I was a stranger and ye took Me in."

I propose to speak this morning of the trials and rewards of Christian hospitality. The first trial often comes in the whim and

Eccentricity of the Guest himself. There are a great many excellent people who have protuberances of disposition, and sharp edges of temperament, and unpliability of character, which make them a positive nuisance in any house where they stay. On short acquaintance they will begin to command the household affairs, order the employes to unusual service, keep unseasonable hours, use narcotics in places offensive to sensitive nostrils, put their feet at unusual elevations, drop the ashes of their Havana on costly tapestry, open bureaus they ought never to touch, and pry into things they ought never to see, and become impervious to rousing bells, and have all the peculiarities of the gormandizer or the dyspeptic, and make excavations from poor dentistry with unusual implements, and in a thousand ways afflict the household which proposes to take care of them. Added to all,

They Stay Too Long.

They have no idea when their welcome is worn out, and they would be unmoved even by the blessing which my friend, Gerrit Smith, the philanthropist, asked one morning at his breakfast table, on the day when he hoped that the long protracted guests would depart, saying: "O Lord, bless this provision, and our friends who leave us to-day!"

But, my friends, there are alleviations to be put on their side of the scale. Perhaps they had not the same refining influences about them in early life that you have had. Perhaps they had inherited eccentricities that they cannot help. Perhaps it is your duty, by example, to show them a better way. Perhaps they are sent to be a trial for the development of your patience. Perhaps they were to be intended as an illustration of the opposite of what you are trying to inculcate in the minds of your children. Perhaps it is to make your home the brighter when they are gone. When our guests are cheery and fascinating and elegant, it is very easy to entertain them, but when we find in our guests that which is antagonistic to our taste and sentiment, it is a positive triumph when we can obey the words of my text and be "given to hospitality."

Another trial in the using of this grace is in

The Toil and Expense

of exercising it. In the well-regulated household things go smoothly, but now you have introduced a foreign element into the machinery, and though you may stoutly declare that they must take things as they find them, the Martha will break in. The ungovernable stove. The ruined dessert. The joint that proves unmasticable. The delayed marketing. The perplexities of a caterer. The difficulty of doing proper work, and yet always being presentable. Though you may say there shall be no care or anxiety, there will be care and there will be anxiety. In 1694, a captain-general provided a very grand entertainment; and among other things, he had a fountain in his garden—a fountain of strong drink. In it were four hogsheads of brandy, eight hogshead of water, twenty-five thousand lemons, thirteen hundredweight of Lisbon sugar, five pounds of grated nutmeg, three hundred toasted biscuits, and a boat built on purpose was placed in the fountain, and a boy rowed around it, and filled the cups of the people who came there to be supplied. Well, you say, that was a luxurious entertainment, and, of course, the man had no anxiety; but I have to tell you, that though you had, or propose, an entertainment like that, you have anxiety. In that very thing comes the Divine reward.

We Were Born to Serve;

and when we serve others, we serve God. The flush on that woman's cheek, as she bends over the hot stove, is as sacred in God's sight as the flush on the cheek of one who, on a hot day, preaches the gospel. We may serve God with plate and cutlery and broom as certainly as we can serve him with psalm-book and liturgy. Margaret, Queen of Norway and Sweden and Denmark, had a royal cup of ten lips, on which was recorded the names of the guests who had drunk from this cup. And every Christian woman has a royal cup, on which are written all the names of those who have ever been entertained by her in Christian style—names not cut by human ingenuity, but written by the hand of a Divine Jesus. But, my friends, you are Not to Toil Unnecessarily.

Though the fare be plain, cheerful presidency of the table, and cleanliness of appointments will be good enough for anybody that ever comes to your house. John Howard was invited to the house of a nobleman. He said: "I will come on one condition, and that is that you have nothing but potatoes on the table." The requisition was complied with. Cyrus, King of Persia, under the same circumstances, prescribed that on the table there must be nothing but bread. Of course, these were extremes, but they are illustrations of the fact that more depends upon the banqueters than upon the banquet.

I want to lift this idea of Christian entertainment out of a positive bondage into a glorious inducement. Every effort you put forth, and every dollar you give to the entertainment of friend or foe, you give directly to Christ. Suppose it were announced that the Lord Jesus Christ would come to this place this week, what woman in this house would not be glad to wash for Him, or spread for Him a bed, or bake bread for Him? There was one of old who washed for Him, drawing the water from the well of her own tears. He is coming. He will be here to-morrow. "Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it to Me." In picture-galleries we have often seen representations of Walter Scott and his friends, or Washington Irving with his associates, but all those engravings will fade out, while through everlasting ages, hanging luminous and conspicuous, will be the picture of you and your Christian guests.

You see we have passed out from the trials into

The Rewards

of Christian hospitality; grand, glorious and eternal. The first reward of Christian hospitality is the Divine benediction. When any one attends to this duty, God's blessing comes upon him, upon his companion, upon his children, upon his dining-hall, upon his parlor, upon his nursery. The blessing comes in at the front door, and the back door, and down through the skylights. God draws a long mark of credit for services received. Christ said to His disciples: "He that receiveth you, receiveth Me; and he that giveth a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple shall in nowise lose their reward." As we have had so many things recorded against us in heaven, it will be a satisfaction to have written on unfailing archives, the fact that in the month of May, or June, or September, or December, 1887, we made the blissful mistake of supposing that we were entertaining weak men like ourselves, when lo! they showed their pinions before they left, and we found out that they were angels unawares.

Another reward comes in the good wishes and Prayers of Our Guests.

I do not think one's house ever gets over having had a good man or woman abide there. George Whitefield used to scratch on the window of the room where he was entertained, a passage of Scripture, and in one case, after he left, the whole household was converted by the reading of that passage on the window pane. The woman of Shunem furnished a little room over the wall for Elisha, and all the ages have heard the glorious consequences. On a cold, stormy winter night, my father entertained Trueman Osborne, the evangelist, and through all eternity I will thank God that Trueman Osborne stopped at our house. How many of our guests have brought to us condolence and sympathy and help!

There is a legend told of St. Sebald, that in his Christian rounds he used to stop for entertainment at the house of

A Poor Cartwright.

Coming there one day, he found the cartwright and his family freezing for the lack of any fuel. St. Sebald ordered the man to go out and break the icicles from the side of the house and bring them in, and the icicles were brought into the house, and thrown on the hearth, and they began to blaze immediately, and the freezing family gathered around and were warmed by them. That was a legend; but how often have our guests come in to gather up the cold, freezing sorrows of our life, kindling them into illumination and warmth and good cheer.

He who opens his house to Christian hospitality, turns those who are strangers into friends. Years will go by, and there will be great changes in you, and there will be great changes in them. Some day you will be sitting in loneliness, watching a bereavement, and you will get a letter in a strange handwriting, and you will look at the post office mark, and say: "Why, I don't know anybody living in that city;" and you will break the envelope, and there you will read the story of thanks for your Christian generosity long years before, and how they have heard afar off of your trouble. And the letter will be so full of kindly reminiscences and Christian condolence, it will be a plaster large enough to cover up all the deep gashes of your soul. When we take people into our houses as Christian guests, we take them into our sympathies.

A Providential Guest.

In Dort, Holland, a soldier with a sword at his side, stopped at a house, desiring lodging and shelter. The woman of the house at first refused admittance, saying that the men of the house were not at home; but when he showed his credentials that he had been honorably discharged from the army, he was admitted and tarried during the night. In the night-time there was a knocking at the front door, and two ruffians broke in to despoil that household. No sooner had they come over the door-sill than the armed guest, who had primed his piece and charged it with slugs, met them, and telling the woman to stand back, I am happy to say, dropped the two assaulting desperadoes dead at his feet. Well, now there are no bandits prowling around to destroy our houses; but how often it is that we find those that have been our guests become our defenders? We gave them shelter first, and then, afterwards, in the great conflicts of life they fought for our reputation; they fought for our property; they fought for our soul.

Another reward that comes from Christian hospitality is in the assurance that we shall have hospitality shown to us and to ours. In the up-turnings of this life, who knows in what city or what land we may be thrown, and how

* It is expected that services in the Brooklyn Tabernacle will be resumed next Lord's Day much we may need an open door. There may come no such crisis to us, but our children may be thrown into some such straits. He, who is in a Christian manner hospitable, has a free pass through all Christendom. It may be that you will have been dead fifty years before any such stress shall come upon one of your descendants; but do you not suppose that God can remember fifty years? and the knuckle of the grandchild will be heard against the door of some stranger, and that door will open; and it will be talked over in heaven, and it will be said: "That man's grandfather, fifty years ago, gave shelter to a stranger, and now a stranger's door is open for a grandson."

A Quaint Custom.

Among the Greeks, after entertaining and being entertained, they take a piece of lead and cut it in two, and the host takes one half of the piece of lead and the guest takes the other half as they part. These two pieces of lead are handed down from generation to generation, and from family to family; and after a while, perhaps one of the families in want or in trouble go out with this one piece of lead and find the other family with the corresponding piece of lead, and no sooner is the tally completed than the old hospitality is aroused, and eternal friendship pledged. So the memory of Christian hospitality will go down from generation to generation, and from family to family, and the tally will never be lost, neither in this world nor the world to come.

Mark this: the day will come when we will all be turned out of doors, without any exception, bare-foot, bare-head, no water in the canteen, no bread in the haversack, and we will go in that way into the future world. And I wonder if eternal hospitalities will open before us, and we be received into everlasting habitations!

Alms to an Embryo Lord.

Francis Frescobald was a rich Italian, and he was very merciful and very hospitable. One day, an Englishman by the name of Thomas Cromwell appeard at his door asking for shelter and alms, which were cheerfully rendered. Frescobald afterward lost all his property, became very poor, and wandered up into England, and one day he saw a procession passing, and lo! it was the Lord Chancellor of England; and lo! the Lord Chancellor of England was Thomas Cromwell, the very man whom he had once befriended down in Italy. The Lord Chancellor, at the first glance of Frescobald, recognized him, and dismounted from his carriage, threw his arms around him, and embraced him, paid his debts, invited him to his house, and said: "Here are ten pieces of money to pay for the bread you gave me, and here are ten pieces of money to provide for the horse you loaned me, and here are four bags, in each of which are four hundred ducats. Take them and be well." So it will be at last with us.

If we Entertain Christ in the person of His disciples in this world, when we pass up into the next country, we will meet Christ in a regal procession, and He will pour all the wealth of heaven into our lap, and open before us everlasting hospitalities. And O, how tame are the richest entertainments we can give on earth compared with the regal munificence which Christ will display before our souls in heaven.

I was reading the account which Thomas Fuller gives of the entertainment provided by George Neville. Among other things, for that banquet, they had three hundred quarters of wheat, one hundred and four tuns of wine, eighty oxen, three thousand capons, two hundred cranes, two hundred kids, four thousand pigeons, four thousand rabbits, two hundred and four bitterns, two hundred pheasants, five hundred partridges, four hundred plover, one hundred quail, one hundred curlews, fifteen hundred hot pasties, four thousand cold venison pasties, four thousand custards—the Earl of Warwick acting as steward, and servitors one thousand. O, what a grand feast was that! but then compare it with the provision which God has made for us on high; that great banquet hour; the one hundred and forty and four thousand as guests; all the harps and trumpets of heaven as the orchestra; the vintage of the celestial hills poured into the tankards; all the fruits of the orchards of God piled on the golden platters; the angels of the Lord for cupbearers, and the once folded starry banner of the blue sky flung out over the scene, while seated at the head of the table shall be the One who eighteen centuries ago declared, "I was a stranger and ye took Me in." Our sins pardoned, may we all mingle in those hospitalities!

ROYAL SYMPATHY.

AMONG the characteristic anecdotes which have found their way into print, in connection with the jubilee of Queen Victoria, are the following:

It has been the Queen's habit to coincide with the arrangements made for the government and disposition of the army and navy by the administration of the day, but on one occasion she made an exception to the rule. It is noteworthy that this exception was prompted by a kind and sympathetic spirit. It was in 1857 that she thus wrote to Lord Palmerston: "The present position of the Queen's Army is a pitiable one. The Queen has just seen in the camp at Aldershot regiments which, after eighteen years, foreign service in most trying climates, had come back from India to be sent out after seven months to the Crimea. Having passed through this destructive campaign, they have not been home for a year before they are to go to India for perhaps twenty years! This is most cruel and unfair to the gallant men who devote their service to the country, and the Government is in humanity bound to alleviate their position."

An instance of the Queen's regard for little folks occurred during her visit to the London Hospital in 1876, when a little sick girl in the children's ward cried out to a nurse, "Please do let me see the Queen; I shall be quite better if I see the Queen. This request was communicated to the Rev. Mr. Roswell, Her Majesty's Chaplain, who told the Queen. Immediately Her Majesty did that which pleased her people not a little when the tale was told. She asked to be taken to the bedside of the child, and there spoke loving words of tenderness and sympathy, which were doubtless far more really healing in their effect than the "Royal touch" which her ancestors used to dispense.

BRAVING THE IDOLS.

THE pressure brought to bear on converts in China, and the struggle they have to make, are illustrated by an incident recently reported by the Rev. W. Cooper, of the China Inland Mission, who says: "I will tell you of a family who put away their idols and became inquirers at our class, in one of the villages of the Lai-gan district. Distress came upon them, their friends persecuted them, and the bread-winner of the family was taken very ill. The husband's friends and relatives came and said to the wife, 'You are just murdering your husband; you have put away those idols, and now you see what is coming upon you as the result. The idols are taking vengeance upon you, and you are just killing your husband. Be a sensible woman; cast away this foreign religion, and come back to the Buddhist religion, and you will perhaps save your husband's life. If you do not do it, and your husband dies, we will hold you responsible for his death!' Now that poor woman could not read the Bible, and she had no Christian missionary there to instruct her. Well, she became very anxious about her husband; she brought the idols back again, had them reinstated in her house and worshipped them, and she called a Buddhist priest to come and chant prayers with her. But her husband died. She had a Buddhist funeral. The Christians thought that she had given up Christianity altogether, as she had ceased to come among them; but about eighteen months after that I was in that district, and we had had a very happy day, and baptized twelve converts. One of the native Christians passing her house, she said, 'Come in' (he knew the woman). She said, 'I hear that there has been a baptism again.' He said, 'Yes. twelve have just been baptized.' She said, 'Oh, I wish that I had known: I should have liked to confess Christ, too.' He said, 'You confess Christ! Why, you know what you did: you went back to idolatry again. How can you talk like that? You cannot mock God.' She said, 'Ah! I do not believe in these idols now. I suffered much through my idolatry, and I wish to turn to the living God at any cost.' I was asked to go and see her. I went, with about five native Christians, to her house next morning. She said she was quite prepared to give up all for the sake of Christ. That woman was received into the Church five months afterwards by baptism, and has now passed away to glory."

A MORTGAGED MAN.

AN extraordinary security was offered in Georgia a few days ago. A wholesale merchant in Atlanta pressed a tradesman for a settlement of his account. The tradesman replied that he was unable to pay at the moment, but if the merchant would grant him an extension of time he would be able to pay at a time named, and in the meantime would deposit security for the debt. When the merchant asked for the security, the tradesman offered "a mortgage on one negro man," which had been given to him as security by one of his customers—"the owner" of the one negro man in question. The negro was minutely described in the mortgage. The description closes with these words: "He came to me by my father, and has been my property for twenty years." The maker of the mortgage was evidently under the impression that the negro was still his slave, and that he had the right to buy a loan on his head, as he did before the sixties. What is still more singular, the tradesman to whom the mortgage was given did not see anything wrong in the security. The Atlanta merchant, however, to whom he proposed to transfer the instrument, was not so ignorant, and declined to accept it as security. It is stated that the negro himself is also unaware that he is free, and that in that district there are many more in a like condition of ignorance. Satan holds many of his bond-slaves by the same tenure. Ignorance, or an abject indifference to the liberty which Christ has purchased for them, keeps them in servitude to a hard master (Gal. 4:5).

MRS. M. BAXTER'S WORKS.

THE following works by Mrs. M. Baxter, and others, may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York:

"Words for Daily Life," "Practical Lessons," "Life Lessons," "Leaves from Genesis," "Trials and Teachings of Paul." By Mrs. M. Baxter. Each, paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 35 cts. "Record of International Conference on Divine Healing. London, 15" Paper, 25 cts. "Living Word in the Gospel of St. John." Paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. "God's Prophets." Paper 35 cts.; cloth 50 cts. "Lessons from St. Matthew's Gospel." Paper, 35 cts.; cloth 50 cts. "Teachings from St. Mark's Gospel." Paper, 35 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. "Sunday-School Lessons, 1877 and 78." By Mrs. Baxter. Each, cloth, 50 cts.

Any of Mrs. M. Baxter's tracts in the following list may also be had at one cent each or ten cents the dozen: "If it be Thy Will," "Does Sickness Sanctify?" "Casting All Your Care," two cents each or twenty cents the dozen. "God's Purpose in Sickness," "The Great Physician," "Job's Sickness," "God's Side of Prayer," "Pastor Rein." "The Body for the Lord." Also the following tracts at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen, by the late Rev. W. E. Boardman: "He Careth for You," "A Perfected Self," "Paul's Thorn," "The Father's Rod," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "The Law of Liberty," at three cents each, or thirty cents the dozen. "Bethshan, a House for Healing," and "Enduement with Power," Miss C. C. Murray's tracts, at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen. "Repeating Prayer," "Thou Art Loosed," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Redeemed from all Evil," "Anointing Him with Oil," at three cents each or, thirty cents the dozen. "Pastor Blumhardt," by Miss Sisson, at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen. "What About the Use of Means," and "The Apostolic Attitude," at two cents each or twenty cents the dozen. "Asking and Receiving," by Mrs. Boardman, at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Simple Truths about Faith." By T. Kirkman, "Health by Grace," and by H. W. S. "The Lord Hath Done It."

PROPHETIC NOTES.

From Addresses at the Recent Niagara Conference.*

Rev. S. H. Kellogg, D. D., of Toronto, in the course of an address on "Our Inheritance," said: The word "inheritance" is used in the New Testament to denote that which believers are to receive in the life to come. So we are called "heirs." (See Matt. 25 : 34; Acts 20 : 32; 1 Pet. 1 : 4; Eph. 5 : 5; Col. 1 : 12; Col. 3 : 24.) The ideas contained in the word are possession and succession. What was the inheritance promised to Abraham? Not merely Canaan—but the world; Rom. 4 : 13, "the promise . . . that he should be heir of the world." And it is this promise which is said, v. 16, to be sure to all the seed.

This reference to Abraham sends us back to the Old Testament; wherein it is never promised that the good man shall inherit heaven, but Inherit the Earth.

This is said of the seed of the good man (Ps. 25 : 13); of the meek (Ps. 37 : 11); They that wait on the Lord (Ps. 37 : 9); They that are blessed of the Lord (Ps. 37 : 22). No wonder men with the preconceived notion that the inheritance is heaven, declare because they find nothing of this in the Old Testament, that there is no reference in the Old Testament to a future life. In truth it is full of reference to a future life; an inheritance of the earth to be attained in the resurrection.

In the New Testament also our Lord's argument from Exodus (Matt. 22 : 31, 32), to prove resurrection on the basis of the covenant with Abraham, implies that Abraham must be raised before he could inherit. See also Heb. 2 : 5, R. V marg., "the inhabited earth to come;" II. Pet. 3 : 13, "we look for a new heavens and a new earth;" Rev. 21 : 1, "I saw . . . a new earth." After a full description of its glory it is added (R. V.), "he that overcometh shall inherit these things." The inheritance as such comes

By Right of Succession.

The receiving of it necessarily involves resurrection; for out of the earth we are cast by death; and only by resurrection can we be reinstated in it. Hence the significance of Christ's resurrection; in connection with the inheritance see 1 Pet. 1 : 3. The receiving of the inheritance involves glorification of the earth, marred because of sin. This explains Paul's words, Rom. 8 : 17, et seq., following the previous reference to our heirship with Christ.

Learn from this, among many other things, that the common notion that death introduces the believer to his inheritance, is totally false; so long as death lasts, he is by that fact kept out of the inheritance. Learn also significance of the second coming. It will be the solemn, public, personal appearing of the Son of Man, as the first born from the dead; with His younger brethren, to take formal possession, as the Second Adam, of the original inheritance of the earth, forfeited by sin of the first Adam, redeemed by the death of the Second, and to enter then on the use and enjoyment of those high dignities or governmental powers with which God in the beginning endowed our first father in paradise.

The Second Coming.

The Rev. W. A. Parlane, of Collingwood, Ont., said: If there is one doctrine more clearly taught in the New Testament than another, it is that of the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; it is held out to Christians as an incentive to action, as an encouragement when depressed, as a consolation to the afflicted and the bereaved. It is the theme of the apostles' teaching, it was their hope and that of the primitive church, embodied in creeds and confessions of faith, and never questioned until the professing church became apostate and her so-called shepherds faithless.

At the present time its opponents cannot deny that it is taught in the New Testament—but they try and explain it away. One says, the coming of Christ means the destruction of Jerusalem; now a moment's reflection will show the fallacy of this idea. At the coming of our Lord (1) the dead saints are to be raised; (2) the living saints are to be translated—neither of which events took place at the destruction of Jerusalem. (3) St. John wrote after the destruction of Jerusalem and he spoke of the coming of the Lord as future.

But, says another, the coming of Christ means at our death. Now the Lord calls the death of the Christian sleep, and never in any instance confounds it with the coming of Christ, or speaks of it as the coming of Christ for us. Death is a curse, the dread penalty of sin, and though men and women may sing sentimental nonsense about the lovely appearance of death, a curse it will remain—the sting of it removed for the Christian, who is said to sleep not die—and the word never uses it as a synonym for the coming of the Lord.

A third class say, It is true that Christ is coming again, but many events have to happen before that time, the world has to be converted and the millennium has to take place; this is of professing Christendom. Now, the Scripture nowhere says that the gospel in the present age is going to convert the world, nor that all are to be converted. The purpose of God now is to take out of the Gentiles a people for His name. Acts 15 : 14. The gospel is to be preached for a witness. Matt. 24 : 14. It is true that the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth, &c., but this after He has smitten the earth with the rod of His mouth, &c. Isa. 11 : 4. There can be no reign of righteousness, until He, the King, the Lord, our righteousness, reigns, no reign of peace until the Prince of peace reigns, no millennium of blessedness until He, the fountain and source of all blessing, comes. Let us now see

The Common Belief

What the Bible Says

as to the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ:

1. He will come again. Rev. 1 : 7; 3 : 11; 22 : 12, 20—(these written after the destruction of Jerusalem).

2. He will come on the earth. Job 14 : 5; Micah 1 : 3; Joel 3 : 3, 12; Zech. 14 : 4.

3. He will come as a King. Isa. 9 : 6, 7; Jer. 23 : 5; Zech. 14 : 9; Luke 1 : 32; Acts 2 : 30.

4. His people shall reign and judge with Him. Ps. 49 : 14; Dan. 7 : 22; 1 Cor. 6 : 2; II Tim. 2 : 12; Rev. 5 : 10; 20 : 4.

5. He will come for His people. John 14 : 3; 1 Cor. 15 : 23; 1 Thess. 4 : 15, 17. The word to meet in 1 Thess. 4 : 17, means a going forth to return with; see Matt. 25 : 1, 6; Acts 28 : 15. He must come for His people before they can return with Him—and He comes in like manner. Acts 1 : 11, as He went; the world did not see Him go and does not expect Him; we do. Heb. 9 : 28.

6. He will come with His people. Jude 14 : 15; 1 Thess. 3 : 13; II Thess. 1 : 7, 10; Zech. 14 : 5; Rev. 19 : 14.

7. His people are to watch for his coming, Mark 13 : 35; 1 Thess. 1 : 10; 5 : 10. To watch not for the millennium but for Him—now of necessity we must watch for the first of two happening events, His coming therefore is pre-millennial.

8. His coming will be preceded by the earth growing worse. Luke 17 : 26; 18 : 8; II Tim. 3 : 1; II Pet. 3 : 3; Jude 18; and therefore must be pre-millennial.

9. His coming will destroy Antichrist, the man of sin, II Thess. 2 : 3–8, and therefore is pre-millennial.

10. His coming is synchronous with Jewish restoration, Isa. 11 : 11; Micah 4 : 1 (in the last days, Micah, 1 : 3); Zech 14 : 4, comp. with Zech. 12 : 10; 13 : 1; 14 : 9, and therefore pre-millennial.

11. His coming is accompanied by resurrection of believers who are dead. 1 Cor. 15 : 23; 1 Thess. 4 : 15, 16; Rev. 20 : 4–6, and therefore pre-millennial.

12. His coming will be accompanied by translation of living saints. 1 Cor. 15 : 52; Phil. 3 : 21; 1 John 3 : 2, and therefore pre-millennial.

13. His coming causes binding of Satan. Rev. 20 : 1, and therefore pre-millennial.

14. His coming is accompanied by separation of tares and wheat. Matt. 13 : 37; Joel 3 : 13, and therefore pre-millennial.

Hours might be spent in showing from parables, from direct statement of fact and from inference, that the coming of the Lord Jesus is pre-millennial, and is held out as the blessed hope of the church of God, but time will not permit a further enlargement of the subject. Enough has been said to satisfy the unprejudiced mind that He will come again and usher in the time when a King shall reign in righteousness.

* The full report of this Conference may be had, price 50 cents, from Mr. S. R. Briggs, Willard Tract Repository, Toronto, Canada.

A CONVERTED ARMENIAN MERCHANT.

In a tour recently taken in Persia by the Rev. James W. Hawkes, the missionary party was accompanied by an interesting traveller. In a letter to the Church Mr. Hawkes thus describes him: Besides two servants and a muleteer, we had another interesting companion. His name is Baron Abraham (baron is a title given to Armenian merchants), the youngest of three Armenian brothers who are export merchants, sending raisins, almonds, etc., to Russia. The parents and elder brother, who is the head of the firm, reside in Tabriz, and the other brothers travel about the country which we have just traversed, buying up the goods and delivering them at Resht or Tabriz. This younger brother received as good an education as the city of Tabriz can afford, and that is probably the best the Armenians of Persia can get outside of the mission schools. He also has a good hold on the Persian language, and writes it well. He has also read the French infidel books, which the Armenians of Tabriz furnish their young men, both in the orignal French and in faithful translation into the best current Armenian.

It seems that this Baron Abraham, who is now about twenty-five years of age, in visiting Miss Montgomery's school two years ago, was impressed by the fact that there is a fountain of love in Christianity of which he had not tasted, and the impression remained with him. Afterwards, in reading the Persian New Testament for pastime, the passage describing Paul's conversion came home to him with a personal force which he was unable to drive off, especially the expression "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." The Holy Spirit was striving with him, and he too "was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision," but gave his heart to Jesus, and has ever since been working for Him with great boldness and freedom, as time and opportunity presented, telling Armenian, Jew and Moslem what great things the Lord has done for him.

FIVE PARISIAN TROPHIES.

A letter from the Rev. J. W. Hough, D.D., published by a contemporary, gives an interesting report of the McAll Mission work in Paris, of which he saw much during a recent visit. On one Sunday he was at a French Protestant church when five ladies were admitted to membership, who had been rescued through the agency of one of the missions established and supported by the gifts of American Christians—The Salle New York.

One of them Mlle. L——, having been cast off by her parents, began life as a singing girl, going from house to house, and earning a few sous by her songs—a life that could hardly have failed to end in ruin. Some habitués of Salle New York became interested in her; drew her to the Salle, and under the influence of the ladies who conduct the Mothers' Meeting; and she is now a member of Christ's fold, and a worthy domestic in an American family.

Mlle. D—— had lived with an Italian, after the irregular fashion so common in Paris, and being abandoned by him, was on the point of suicide, when in the Salle New York she heard of Christ, and was induced to give herself to Him. Pasteur Mettetal thinks the change in her remarkable.

Madame M—— has led a bad life; never made an honest living until recently. Now she is entirely changed.

Mlle. M—— likewise has a bad past. Though of Protestant birth, she was extremely ignorant, and immoral as well. After careful testing by time, Pasteur Mettetal has no hesitation in welcoming her to the Church.

Madame D——, a woman whose history would make a frightful record, who has been a "street-rover," and described as a "devil-let-loose," but who is now wholly changed.

"I learn," says Dr. Hough, "that Pasteur Monod received nine members at one time from the McAll Station in the Rue du Faubourg St. Antoine. Pasteur Lelièvre has recently received seven from Salle Beach, and Pasteur Mettetal a number from Salle New York, in addition to those referred to above."

A FALLEN GIRL'S TESTIMONY.

A VISITOR at the Florence mission for fallen women in Bleecker Street, New York, describing the meeting in Jerry McAuley's newspaper says: Perhaps the most thrilling testimony of the evening was that of a girl, who said: "I just want to say this—I am saved to-day." This was all she could say, but Mr. Crittenton, who is the founder of the Mission, told us a little of the story of her conversion. "Some three years ago," he said, "as I was leaving this place on a Saturday night, something said to me 'go and speak to ——.' I could not tell why, but I felt impelled to do so, and to do so then. I went to where I knew I would be likely to find her, and talked to her about her soul. She has been in great depression of mind for a long time, until to-day the heavenly light broke in upon her soul and set her free. I have been very anxious about her case ever since I spoke to her, and my heart is filled with joy that she is saved. I told the Lord to-day that if I lived for twenty-five years I never would doubt him again."

A RAINY NIGHT IN CHINA.

MR. PRICE, of the Shanse Mission, in the course of a recent journey, reached Yutsu. He writes the following account of his experience that night, to the Missionary Herald:

"The day before I arrived was a very rainy day. I reached the city about four o'clock, and tried to find lodging; but the inns were all full. There was nothing for me to do but to go on in the rain. I hoped to be able to reach Tung Yang, a large village fifteen miles ahead; but the roads were muddy, and my mule was too tired to be hurried—indeed, refused to hurry.

"Just at dark I rode into a small village and inquired for an inn. They told me there were no good inns in the place and that the small inns were full. I asked if I could reach Tung Yang that night. They said it was impossible.

"By this time there was quite a crowd of villagers around me. I said: 'What shall I do? I cannot go on, and there is no place for me to stop overnight.' Just then a young man with a fine face stepped out from the crowd and told me he could find a place for me.

"He led me to a large place for feeding animals. I waited outside while he went in and urged them to give me a place for the night. After a long talk, the proprietor came out and opened the large yard gate, and I rode in. I gave my mule to a boy and followed the man to my room. He showed me a room which they used for stowing away fodder. There was no bed; the ground was damp. An old mat was on the floor in one corner of the room. I said: 'I cannot sleep here, for my clothes and my bedding are wet, and there is no bed.' 'Well,' said the proprietor, 'if you will sleep with us in the room off the kitchen, you can have a dry bed.' I thanked him and went into their living-room. They said there would be two other men on the bed, but they were respectable men.

"My friend remained with me during the evening, and others came in. I had an attentive and kind audience during the evening. Not only were they willing to hear about Jesus, but they were ready to inquire about Him. I have seldom spent a pleasanter evening. I was given the best place, and they kindly furnished me with a bed and bedding. I arose before daylight the next morning, and was touched to notice that the proprietor had given up his own bedding to me and had slept on the bare kang, with only his large coat over him. I shall not forget the young man who so kindly helped me, and I hope and pray that I may be permitted to tell him more about the salvation of his soul. 'I was a stranger, and they took me in.'"

A WEEPING VIGIL ON A MOUNTAIN.

A REPORTER of a journal at Athens, Ga., recently heard a reminiscence of an unpleasant night on a mountain. Among the visitors of the season at the Falls was an old gentleman from Atlanta who brought with him a charming daughter, just budding into womanhood. The young lady on the second day after her arrival started about three o'clock in the afternoon for a ramble with a young gentleman who was a friend of the family. The father began to grow uneasy about sundown as they did not return, and an hour later, was in great distress, as a darkness as black as ink set in. The frantic old gentleman then explained the cause of his distress to the male visitors, and begged that they assist him in the search. Several squads were at once organized, equipped with torches, and the search began. One party, who decided to go out on the mountains, when near the top of one, discovered the lost couple sitting at the root of a large tree, and both crying. It seems that they got lost just as night set in. They wandered around in quest of a path as long as they could see, and then, fearing that they might stumble over some precipice in the dark, decided to remain where they were until daylight. It was a dreary prospect, but their decision was a wise one, for had they tried to find their way back they might easily have lost their lives. Sinners who have wandered from their Heavenly Father and are lost on the mountains of sin and unbelief, need never give way to such despair. Though they cannot find their own way back they can cry to their Father and Christ will save them (Luke 19: 10).

MR. GEORGE MULLER'S JOURNEYS.

THE annual report of Mr. Muller's Orphanages at Ashley Down, Bristol, has just been issued. In it he makes the following reference to his recent journeys: When the last report was written we were moving about in Victoria, New South Wales and Queensland, in which colonies of Australia I labored in the Word between seven and eight months; and then we went, by way of Batavia and Singapore, to China. In that vast empire, with its hundreds of millions of inhabitants, I was able to preach for a few months. At Hong-kong, Shanghai, Hankow, Nankin and Chinkiang I had an opportunity of addressing many thousands of Chinese yet unconverted; many thousands who were disciples of the Lord Jesus; and, what I reckon to be by far the most important part of my work, to lend a helping hand to very many missionary brethren, by seeking to strengthen their hands in God. This was done. God be praised for condescending to use me in this way, and for counting me worthy of this honor for Christ's sake! All the cities in which I labored are very large.

After having given a considerable time in China, we went to the empire of Japan, where, as in China, I labored for some time; and in Yokohama, in Tokyo (the capital of the empire), at Kobe, Osaka and Kioto, all very large cities, held many meetings. In Japan I had many opportunities of addressing from 800 to 3,000 Japanese at one time, who were either altogether careless about the things of God or were seekers after the truth. At all these meetings native Christian workers were also present, such as native pastors, native evangelists, native Sunday-school teachers, etc. But the most important part of my service in Japan, as in China, I consider to have been the spiritual help I had the privilege of affording to many of the missionaries of the Gospel.

I desire to inform the readers of this report, who do not know already what especially led me to these missionary tours, that, having preached, with rare exceptions, for forty-three years exclusively in Bristol, it was laid on my heart to spend the remainder of my life chiefly in preaching in other cities besides Bristol, and in laboring in foreign countries as well as in England; and during the past twelve years and two months I have preached in England, Scotland, Ireland, France, German Switzerland, French Switzerland, the Grand Duchies of Baden and Darmstadt, in Saxony, Wurtemberg, Bavaria, Prussia, Holland, Austria, Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, Russia, Italy and Spain; in Canada and the United States of America; in Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Asia Minor, Turkey and Greece; in the Presidencies of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, including most of the chief cities of India contained in them; also in the Punjaub, India; in the Colonies of New South Wales, Victoria and Queensland, in Australia; in China, Japan and the Straits of Malacca; so that our travels by land and by sea, since leaving home, have been 130,000 miles, or more than five times the circumference of the earth.

SAVED FROM SUICIDE.

A REMARKABLE experience is described by a subscriber who is now resident in Totis, Hungary. In the course of a letter expressing his pleasure at finding THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in that far-off land he says: "It was like meeting a tried and trusted friend, for your invaluable paper was instrumental by God's blessing in encouraging and directing me, some eight years ago, in a time of severe mental and spritual conflict." About that time he accompanied his mother to a service at the Insane Asylum, Flatbush, N. Y., where some of the inmates were present and listened to a service in which the chaplain gave an address, and the mother of our correspondent sang. During the service the silence was broken several times by the demoniac yells of some of the patients within hearing, and the noise so affected him as to produce the conviction that he too would some day lose his reason.

After the service the impression remained, and during the next few days it so strengthened its hold upon him, that he become melancholy, and almost desperate. "All sleep left me," he says, "and I was haunted day and night by that awful dread. I could do nothing but weep, and walk the floor in absolute anguish. Everything that my dear parents and friends could do to alleviate the terrible gloom was done, but without avail. Society, recreation, new pleasures were tried, but brought no relief. If the dreadful spectre was driven away by some enjoyment for a moment, it soon returned with double power, until I was utterly prostrate in mind and body. I was convinced that no human power could deliver me from the fate that awaited me."

At this time came the thought that he could take his life, and so escape. Many have been so tempted, and some have yielded to the temptation in their horror of seemingly inevitable dementia, and the powerlessness of human skill to save them. It was at that moment that God interposed, and by humble instrumentality he was led to God for relief. "Weak and exhausted," he says, "I dropped on my knees, and pleaded with Him as only those in such straits can plead. 'O God,' I cried, 'take pity on me and remove from me this dreadful load for Jesus' sake.' Suddenly I heard as distinctly as I have ever heard anything since: 'It is done; arise.' How can I describe the joy I felt on rising to my feet to find myself a new man—clothed, and in my right mind. My happiness was unbounded. Jesus had done it all. I fell again on my knees begging God to pardon all my sins, and make me worthy to bear His name, and serve Him, and thanking and praising Him who had delivered me. The dreadful apparition has never returned since, only to remind me of the goodness of God."

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to The Christian Herald. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Proposals for a Permanent Arbitration Treaty are to be submitted by the London Peace Society to President Cleveland. Mr. John Bright, writing to the secretary of the society on the subject, says: The project is a reasonable one, and discussion may lead to its adoption. If the government of the United States were willing, and were in any way to signify its willingness, to become a party to such a treaty, there is a force of good men with us to induce our government to consent. If this be done it will be a great step forward in the world's march, and be followed in some not distant time by other nations willing to escape the sorry burden of military armaments. Two hundred members of the House of Commons sign the arbitration memorial. But far more than this number will be ready to urge the acceptance of the treaty upon our government, if the action taken at Washington be favorable to the success of the scheme. England and the United States will still remain two nations, but I would have them always regard themselves as one people. An arbitration treaty honestly made and adhered to, would tend much to bring about this blessed result.

A Distinguished Assembly of Physicians commenced its sessions in Washington, D. C., on Sept. 5. It is the ninth triennial International Medical Congress which, at its last assembly at Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1884, accepted an invitation from America to hold its next meeting in this country President Cleveland welcomed the delegates in person, and opened the sessions of the convention. Subsequently they were hospitably received at the White House. There are over 2,300 physicians in attendance, including some of the most eminent practitioners in Europe."

The Largest Prohibition Convention on Record was held at Worcester, Mass., September 7. There were 857 delegates present from 190 cities and towns. Among the delegates were nearly two hundred ladies. The greatest enthuiasm prevailed, and the stirring contest over the nominations showed that the selection was no longer regarded as a matter of no importance. Mr. William H. Earle, of Worcester, was the candidate of the Convention for governor. The platform is a strong arraignment of the liquor dealers. It condemns the system of license, which it pronounces a failure, and declares that the prospect of obtaining the prohibition of the liquor traffic, either in Massachusetts or in the nation, through the agency of either of the political parties at present existing is delusive. The blame is about equally apportioned, for the platform goes on to say that the Democratic party makes no pretensions in that direction, while the Republican party for the most part makes nothing else. The only serious friction perceptible was caused by an effort to avoid a direct endorsement of female suffrage. It was urged that Republican votes might be won by omitting or modifying that plank, and the following resolution was offered in its place: "The great help rendered by woman, especially through the agency of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in the cause of prohibition, calls for our sincere gratitude, in which connection we point to the alacrity with which we have already welcomed her to our councils as the strongest evidence of our desire to open to her every door of political influence and power." But that did not satisfy the Convention, and point was given to it before being passed by adding: "Therefore, we demand, as an act of simple justice, that the Legislature grant municipal suffrage to women." A campaign fund of $4,000 was raised during the sitting of the Convention.

The Severe Tornado Which Worked Havoc through Ohio, on September 6, though happily unattended by the serious results at first reported, did considerable damage to property. The tornado originated in southern Michigan. It first struck Sylvania, a village ten miles north of Toledo, blowing down two gas well derricks and wrenching a boiler from its brick foundation. Three horses in a wooded pasture were killed by falling trees. All tall trees were leveled, but the lower ones were spared. A brick schoolhouse at Michie was destroyed. The track of the storm continued south by east along the line of the Toledo and Ohio Central Road cutting a swath from 100 to 200 yards wide. No fences or tall trees are standing in this track. Corn is scattered and houses and barns were unroofed for miles. No loss of life is reported, but many narrow escapes are narrated. The rumor that the new insane asylum was destroyed was circulated, but was afterward contradicted. The slate roofs of a number of the buildings were badly damaged and the towering chimneys of the main building were blown down, crushing the roof in, The total loss to the asylum will not exceed $8,000.

Still Another Political Party has been Organized. The Henry George section having excluded the Socialists from its convention, and having made concessions which the Socialists do not approve, the latter have organized by themselves under the title of the Progressive Labor Party. When, on September 5, the legal holiday appointed by the New York Legislature and called "Labor Day," the wage earners turned out to the number of over twenty thousand in procession, it was seen that the new party comprised a somewhat large proportion of Mr. George's followers. The Progressive Labor Platform has been drawn with a careful regard to public opinion, and though more radical than anything of the kind in existence, contains no planks distinctly anarchical. It endorses the Socialistic principle that there can be no harmony between capital and labor under the present industrial system. Further, that the emancipation of the working classes must be achieved by the working classes themselves through the establishment of co-operative institutions, such as will tend to supersede the wage system. It demands, among other things, eight hours for a day's work; enactment of juster laws for the liability of employers to employees; rigid enforcement of the law prohibiting the importation of foreign labor under contract; equal adult citizenship and suffrage without regard to sex; repeal of all blue laws, conspiracy laws, and of all class legislation and privileges. The platform further demands the public ownership and management of railroads, telegraphs, express and steamship lines, of gas and water works, and all industries involving the use of public franchises or the performance of public functions.

A Ghastly Theatre Catastrophe Occurred at Exeter, England, on September 5. About eight hundred persons were present in the theatre to witness the production of a new play. Everything proceeded smoothly until half past ten o'clock when a drop scene fell to the stage. There was some laughter in the house at this, as it was thought to be a stage blunder. In a moment, however, the scene bulged out in the centre, and a flame shot out. It was then seen that the whole stage was a mass of fire, and there was a wild panic instantly. The occupants of the stalls, pit and dress circle got away after a good deal of crushing and fighting. The occupants of the upper circle and gallery rushed in numbers to the windows and screamed for ladders. As soon as possible these were brought, but several persons had jumped into the street before they arrived, and were taken away more or less hurt. Others got on to the veranda over the door, and some jumped and others were taken off. Others rushed to the stairs and there the chief loss of life occurred. The crowd got as far as an angle on the staircase and in the rush overturned a ticket taker's box, causing a block. The pressure from behind was frightful, and in the struggle to get out some had their arms wrenched off. The theatre by this time was blazing fiercely, lighting up all the city, and the people were running up in thousands inquiring for friends or relatives. How many perished may never be accurately known. One hundred and thirty bodies were found, but it is feared that many must have been burned so completely that fragments unrecognizable as human remains are all that is left of them.

An Important Military Experiment has been tried in France. The experience of 1870 proved to the French nation that an army which looked formidable on paper might prove ineffective in an emergency through lack of organization. It was therefore resolved to suddenly call out one corps, to test the speed with which it could be placed in the field. The Seventeenth Corps, consisting of thirty-eight thousand men, was selected, and to the delight of the authorities no less than thirty-five thousand were at the rendezvous in three days. A cable despatch says: "The concentration of the corps around Carcassonne has been completed, the operations following the prescribed course without a hitch." A press-corrrespondent who watched the manœuvres, describes the mobilization as a perfect success, and adds by way of pointing out its significance: "The French now feel that they are ready to measure swords with anybody. Napoleon III. for nearly a quarter of a century was the school-master of Europe. Bismarck since 1870 has succeeded to the schoolmastership of Europe, telling this country and that what to do and what not to do. After the present successful mobilization the Iron Chancellor will find that the French benches of the school will begin to get up a rebellion, and important events may be expected next spring."

Mr. Gladstone Has Declined the Invitation to visit America, which was tendered to him by the Committee of the centennial celebration of the adoption of the Constitution, which is to be held at Philadelphia. In the course of his letter Mr. Gladstone says: "So far as I am able to foresee or free to decide, the whole of the small residue of activity which remains at my command, in connection with State affairs, is dedicated to the prosecution of a great work at home. I regard the Irish question as the most urgent in its demands, and as the most full of the promise of widely beneficial results for my country in which I have ever been engaged. I have, therefore, no remaining fund of time or capacity for public exertion on which to draw." Mr. Gladstone characterizes the invitation as "the most flattering I have ever received."

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of The Christian Herald, 63 Bible House, New York.

An Outbreak of Persecution in Mexico is threatened. The Roman Catholic bishops and clergy, who have always been restless under the republic, and anxious to recover the privileges of which it deprived them, are stirring up the people to acts of violence. The Monitor Republicano has openly stated that the clergy were plotting against republican institutions. It says there appears to be a well-formed plan to destroy in Mexico the precious achievement of religious liberty, and charges that the higher, as well as the lower class of the clergy, is constantly preaching a crusade against religious tolerance as enjoined by the constitution of the country. The Monitor charges that ecclesiastical penalties are inflicted for reading the Liberal party newspapers, and that recent acts of some of the bishops tend to revive the institutions of the Middle Ages. Recently in Puebla the Bishop warned the people not to have even the slightest social or business intercourse with Protestants. The Monitor adds: "It is feared with reason that the clergy contemplate repeating on Mexican soil the horrible atrocities of St. Bartholomew's Day in France."

Some Details Respecting "Hell's Kitchen," the district in New York described in this journal, of August 4, have been kindly forwarded to us by a subscriber. Our space is too limited to admit of the publication of his lengthy communication, but the purport of it we are glad to insert. It is gratifying to learn that much of the vice and lawlessness mentioned in the article, does not now characterize the neighborhood, and decent people may traverse it without danger of molestation. The centre of the real and original "Hell's Kitchen," is, our correspondent states, a few blocks farther north and one block farther west, and that locality is now much improved. The present condition of the streets around the Berachah Mission is a thickly populated tenement house district, inhabited chiefly by Roman Catholics, to whose conversion it may be hoped the mission will be blessed.

The American Missionary, Rev. E. P. Doane, whose arrest at Ponape, in the Caroline Islands was mentioned in these columns last week, has written to the American Board from Manila, where he was sent by the Spanish governor. He gives a full report of the outrage. Dr. Judson Smith, the Secretary of the Board, says that the State Department at Washington is moving vigorously in the matter, and that all information received by the Board has been forwarded to the American representative at Madrid, to be laid before the Spanish Government. "We have no doubt," he said, "that Mr. Doane will be restored, and that we will obtain the two objects we are seeking—reparation for the wrong, and the assurance that our missionaries shall be secure from future interference."

Mrs. Cleveland has Administered a Delicate reproof to the Mayor and Aldermen of New York. A few weeks ago a subscription was raised to present a set of colors to each of the fire brigades of this city. The flags will soon be ready for presentation, and it was suggested that the ceremony could not be performed more appropriately and gracefully than by the wife of the President. The suggestion was generally approved; but as Mayor Hewitt, though a Democrat, is known to be hostile to the President, there was some speculation as to how he would be able to act as host if he were invited. After consultation between the Mayor and Aldermen, the difficulty was surmounted by inviting Mrs. Cleveland only. Mrs. Cleveland replied on September 6, declining the invitation, and said: "I hope that I shall not be misunderstood when I base my declination of your kind invitation upon my unwillingness to assume that I, as the wife of the President, ought to participate in a public ceremony in which he takes no part." Mrs. Cleveland's act is generally approved, and her popularity has been increased by the rebuke she has administered to the ill-bred politician who desired her presence, but not that of her husband. Much scandal and reproach would be spared the Church, which is the Bride of Christ, if her members were similarly careful never to attend any places or take part in any entertainments at which the presence of their Lord is not sought (Ps. 139 : 21, 22).

A Cunning Defaulter was Recognized in Mexico recently. Several years ago the State Treasurer of Tennessee robbed the Treasury of a large sum of money and absconded. He was subsequently arrested and taken to Nashville. After a month or two he was reported to have sickened and died. A casket said to contain his body was shipped from Nashville to Boliver, Tenn., where it was deposited in the ground. Now comes the news that a prominent citizen of Anniston, Ala., has just returned home from an extended visit in the city of Mexico, and while there he met the defaulting treasurer alive and well on the street and talked with him. He made further investigations and found him in business in that city. The affair has created no little excitement in the State. The citizen who recognized the supposed dead man was well acquainted with him when he was Treasurer. The pretence of death which deceived the authorities and enabled him to escape the penalty of the law, will not help him if he should ever be caught on American soil. There are persons who in making a profession of Christian claim to have become dead to the law through Christ, but when we see them alive to the world and worldly influences, we have cause to fear that like the treasurer their death was a pretence and they are still amenable to the law of God. (Gal., 2 : 20).

A Life Saved by Bible Reading is an Incident narrated in the Pittsburg Commercial Gazette. It states that Colonel Pat Donan, the Western orator, owes his life to keeping a promise. Some years ago, during a journey by steamer from New Orleans to St. Louis, he was invited to make one of a party of card-players in the cabin. It was Sunday morning, and the Colonel, though making no profession of religion, objected. To cut off further pressure he went to his stateroom. Feeling dull, he looked around for something to read. Suddenly he remembered that he had received a present of a Bible from a cousin in New Orleans, and had promised to read it. This was a good opportunity, and he searched for and found the volume. He opened it almost at random, and was soon absorbed in its pages. He soon forgot the poker players, and read on for some time. How long he sat there he does not know, but he was aroused by a terrific explosion. Hurrying on deck, he found that the explosion had occurred just under the forward part of the cabin, where the card party was gathered, and every one of them was killed. The steamer was sinking, but Colonel Donan succeeded in getting on board one of the boats, with other passengers, and they were picked up three miles below. There are probably few persons who owe to their reading of the Bible the saving of their lives, but there must be an incalculable number who owe to it the saving of their souls, which is a still more important matter (John 5 : 39.)

Eighteen Years of Needless Exile Have Been endured by a citizen of Tennessee. In the year 1869, at Salisbury, Tenn., a young man saw his brother being beaten by two well-known and influential men. He ran to his assistance, and being unable to rescue him, drew his revolver, and shot them both. One look at the two prostrate bodies, satisfied him that they were dead, and knowing that their position in the community would render his conviction and execution certain, he ran to the railroad which was close at hand, boarded a passing train, and made his way to Montana. He dared not write home for fear of giving a clue to his refuge, but he procured a Tennessee journal, from which he learned that the Grand Jury, which was in cession at the time of the shooting, had indicted him for murder. He engaged in the cattle business under another name, and grew rich. He heard no more news from home until this year, when he met a man in Montana who came from Salisbury. Without revealing his identy he made inquiries, and learned that the men whom he had shot did not die, but had recovered, and were then alive and well. The relief to his mind was inexpressible. He turned over his business to his partner, and went home to his wife and family, arriving on September 8. A joy analagous to his, but greater in degree, is experienced by the awakened sinner when he first realizes that he is no longer in danger of punishment, God having "devised means by which His banished ones be not expelled" (II. Sam. 14 : 14).

Miles of Rope are Being Purchased by the hotel keepers of New York, to enable them to comply with a law passed at Albany last session. This law makes it a misdemeanor for hotel proprietors to neglect to place a rope or other fire escape convenient to each room above the ground floor. It will involve, it is estimated, the purchase of 350 miles of rope and a total expense of many thousands of dollars in New York City. It cost the Stewart estate $800 to equip the Grand Union Hotel at Saratoga, but hotels of ordinary size will be fitted up for an average of $500. The coils of rope will be near the windows, one end being spliced to a galvanized iron eye screw, which is fastened to the window frame above the sill. It is expected that by the end of this month every hotel in the city will have a rope in each room. Should a fire break out in any of these hotels and a guest know of his danger, see the rope, know what it is there for, and yet perish through neglecting to use it, he would be regarded as insane. Yet, when the way of salvation is pointed out to perishing sinners, multitudes pay no heed and die unsaved (Heb. 2 : 3).

BRIEF NOTES.

An estate valued at one hundred and thirty thousand dollars has been given to the Board of Missions of the Methodist-Episcopal Church by Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Hayes, of Warsaw, Ind.

The contributions of Dr. John Hall's church in New York to the Foreign Mission Fund of the Presbyterian Church last year amounted to over $28,000. Three other churches gave over $10,000 each.

Dr. L. W. Munhall commences work in Toronto next Sunday. Ten of the churches in the city are uniting in the movement. Dr. Munhall will be assisted by Professor and Mrs. Towner in the service of gospel song.

The Rev. H. W. Brown proposes to continue this season the work in the South in which he was signally blessed last year. He has accepted invitations from cities in Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia and South Carolina.

"Camp Meeting John Allen" died on August 31, while attending the East Livermore Camp Meeting. On the previous day he had preached with his usual vigor and apparently in his usual health. He was eighty-two years of age.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills has arranged to conduct a mission at Williamsport, Pa., opening on September 25. An invitation to hold union Services in Philadelphia, sometime during the fall or early winter, has been sent to him which he will probably accept.

Over one million dollars is the sum to be distributed under the will of the late Cornelius B. Erwin, of New Britain, Ct. Among the bequests $10,000 each are given to several missionary societies and to the Connecticut Industrial School for Girls, and the largest bequests are $30,000 for Marietta College, Ohio, and $25,000 for Olivet College, Michigan.

The Rev. Jacob Freshman has placed several young Jewish converts in seminaries to be educated for the Christian ministry. During the summer he attended Mr. Moody's convention, the meetings at Wesley Park and the conventions at Niagara. He was cheered everywhere by the sympathy of Christians and received several gifts toward the removal of the debt on his mission church in New York.

Mrs. M. F. Shipman, of England, has been laboring at Lawrence, Mass., with much success. The hall in which the services commenced grew too small for the crowds which attended. A notorious saloon, in which a law-breaking liquor dealer had long done business, was then hired for the services. A church and Sunday-school have now been established in it. Many drunkards who formerly went there to drink, have been converted and are now members of the church.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

S. S., OR THE SINNER SAVED.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"What shall we say then? That the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith. But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness. Wherefore? Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law."—Romans 9: 30–33.

Two Remarkable Facts—I. A Wonder of Grace—Certain Men had Attained Righteousness—In Spite of Disadvantages—Without Seeking It—II. A Marvel of Folly—Many Have not Attained Righteousness—Though They Seek It—And are Zealous—Observing the Law not the Spirit—A Servant who Would not be Discharged—III. A Discourse of Affection—Effective Spelling—Wading Preferred to the Bridge—Near the Kingdom.

It is very necessary often to go over the elements—the foundation truths of the gospel. Schools may rise to the classics, but they can never dispense with the spelling-book. All over the country there must be the repetition of the alphabet, and words of one syllable, or there will be no scholarship. I feel that it is necessary to give line upon line, precept upon precept, as to the first principles of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Multitudes of persons are in bondage, and will continue to be so until they hear a very clear and simple description of the way of salvation. This is the key of their liberty. You that know these first things must be willing often to hear them; indeed, I find that you are the people that never grow tired of viewing that stone which God has laid in Zion for a foundation; for it never becomes a rock of offence to you. To you the repetitions of Jesus are more acceptable than the novelties of human invention. The system and method of salvation, therefore, will come before you again this morning. Oh, that to some it may seem to be heard for the first time, though they may with the outward ear have heard "the old, old story" a thousand times! Oh, that they may now understand it, grasp it, and find the blessing of it, and rejoice their Saviour. Paul had before him: the first was, that wherever he went preaching Jesus Christ certain Gentiles believed the doctrine, and straightway became justified persons, receiving at once forgiveness of sin and a change of heart. He had been in Ephesus and Thessalonica, in Corinth and in Rome, and at his preaching of the Word of Life the heathen who were outside of the pale of true religious profession had believed in the Lord Jesus, and so had attained to righteousness, and proved that they had done so by their righteous, pure, devout lives. On the other hand, there was the sad fact that whereas he had usually commenced his ministry in the synagogues, and so had opened his commission by addressing the seed of Abraham, to whom belonged the covenants of promise, yet they had almost everywhere rejected the Messiah, and refused the grace of the gospel. At the same time, it was evident that they had missed the righteousness which they conceived they had obtained; for, as a nation, they were in bondage to superstitious prejudice, and were fallen low, both as to morality and spirituality. There were these two facts before the Apostle's mind: the Gentiles, who had been far off, had attained to righteousness; and the Israelites, on the border of it, yet perished there, and did not attain to righteousness.

Two Facts

I. First, I crave your earnest attention to

A Wonder of Grace.

Certain men had attained to righteousness. They had, so to speak, "put their hand upon righteousness." They had grasped the righteousness of faith, which is the righteousness of God. Saintly men and saintly women were produced among those who once had used "curious arts" and enchantments: in those in whom sin abounded grace reigned through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ. There were people in the world whom God, the Judge of all, accepted as righteous. Now that alone is a great wonder.

The wonder grows when we consider that these persons who had attained to righteousness had come to it under great disadvantages; for they were Gentiles. The Gentiles were considered by the Jews to be offcasts and outcasts, aliens from the commonwealth of grace. They were given up to idolatry or to atheism, and lusts the most degrading were rife among them. They had gone very far from original righteousness. A true picture from in the days of Paul would have very dark colors in it: it would be injurious to morals to describe in public the details of the lives of the best of the heathen. If you speak of the manners of the common people, you must be prepared to hear of vices which crimson the cheek of modesty. There are virtues for which the heathen had no name; and they practised vices for which, thank God, you have no name. The strange thing is that such originally were those men who attained unto righteousness. The gospel came into their streets, and at first they heard it with opposition, saying, "What will this babbler say?" Their attention was attracted, and they were willing to hear the preacher again concerning this matter. Conscience was aroused, and soon they began to inquire, "What must we do to be saved?"

The Gentile World

Are there not persons here whose condition is somewhat similar to that of the Gentiles? You are not religious; you are not members of godly families, neither are you frequenters of our sanctuaries; but why should not you also attain to righteousness by faith? Wonders of grace are things which God delights in; why should He not work such wonders in you? At any rate, while I preach I am exercising faith concerning you, that you shall at once be brought to salvation and eternal life.

The marvel of grace in the case of these Gentiles was all the greater because, as the apostle says, "They followed not after righteousness." They had originally felt no desire after righteousness before God. Some of them were thoughtful, just and generous towards men; but righteousness and holiness towards God was not a matter after which they labored. The Gentile mind ran more upon "What shall we eat? What shall we drink?" than upon "What is righteousness before God?" Gold or glory, power or pleasure, were the objects for which they ran; but they ran no race for the prize of holiness. It was a wonderful thing that, though they did not follow after righteousness, yet they found it. They are who, passing up the mountain-side pursuing game, grasped a shrub to prevent his slipping, and as its roots gave way they uncovered masses of pure silver, and thus the richest silver-mine was discovered by a happy accident by one who looked not for it. These Gentiles discovered in Christ the righteousness which they needed, but which they had never dreamed of finding. This reminds us of our Lord's own parable; the man was ploughing with oxen and on a sudden the ploughshare struck upon an unusual obstacle. He stopped the plough and turned up the soil, and lo! he found a crock of gold! This "treasure hid in a field" at once won his heart, and for joy thereof he sold all that he had, and bought the field. Grace finds men who else would never have found grace.

Like That Indian

Observe that these unlikely persons did really believe, and so attain to righteousness. Their first hearing of the Gospel saved them. We read of one of them, that he had shut up the preacher in the prison, and had gone to bed; but in the middle of the night an earthquake shook the prison; and that night he not only became a believer, but he was baptized, and all his household. These Gentiles did not want hammering at so long as some of you do; they did not require the preacher to rack his brains to find fresh illustrations and arguments, and then labor in vain year after year. At the first summons they surrendered.

The apostle asks us, "What shall we say, then?" We say this: herein is seen the sovereign appointment of the Lord. What said the Lord by His servant Hosea? "I will call them My people which were not My people; and her beloved, which was not beloved. And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people; there shall they be called the children of the living God." Thus spake the prophet, and so it must be. The Lord has many more such chosen ones to call forth from their death in sin. I expect as I stand here that God's infinite power is about to save certain of you. I do not know to whom this grace will be vouchsafed, but I know that the word of the Lord will not return unto Him void. He may of you. This is the gospel of the grace of God. That God smiles upon worthy people and rewards their goodness is not the gospel. The gospel is, that God hath mercy upon the guilty and undeserving. Behold, I set before you an open door of grace, and beseech you to enter in just as you are. We come not to mend the garments of those of you who are clothed already, but to present the naked with the robe of Christ's righteousness. We come not hither to search for your beauties, but to unveil your deformities, your wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores; and then to point you to the Lord Jesus, who can heal you, and cause the beauty of the Lord to rest upon you. We preach not merit, but mercy; not human goodness, but divine grace; not works of law, but wonders of love. This is the gospel of which the salvation of the Gentiles was a blessed result.

Bless the Least Likely

II. We see, in the second place,

A Marvel of Folly:

"Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness." Multitudes have never yet found true righteousness. I fear that many of my present congregation are in the number; they are not righteous, though perhaps they trust in themselves that they are so. Their consciences are not at ease; they are conscious of serious shortcomings; they have not yet found a safe anchorage. I commend to their study the case of Israel. You are the child of nature finely dressed, but not the living child of grace. You look somewhat like a Christian; but as you are not converted, and have never become as a little child, you have not entered the kingdom of heaven. It is a misery of miseries that you should stand on such a vantage ground as many of you do, and yet be lost. Shall it be so? Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die?

It was not merely that they had many advantages, but these Israelites were earnest and zealous in following after the law of righteousness. Alas! many who have never forgotten a single outward rite or ceremony of the church, and are evermore zealous for taking the sacrament, and regular in attendance at their place of worship, are nevertheless quite Dead as to Spiritual Things.

Some even kneel down every morning and night and repeat a prayer; they pay everybody their own, they are always kind to their neighbors and they do not refuse their help to the subscription list; and yet they are quite out of the running. Some of you know that it is so; you dare not die as you are; in fact, you can hardly go on living as you now feel. I pray you, take heed to yourselves.

Notice that these people made a mistake at the very beginning; it may not seem a great one but it was so in reality. Israel did not follow after righteousness, but after "the law of righteousness." They missed the spirit, which is righteousness, and followed after the mere letter of the law. To be really righteous was not their aim, but to do righteousness was their utmost motion. They looked at "Thou shalt not kill," "Thou shalt not commit adultery," "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy," and so forth: but to love God with all their heart was not thought of, and yet this the essence of righteousness. Love to God, and likeness to God, were forgotten in a servile attempt to observe the letter of the law. So we see everywhere, people nowadays consider what kind of dress a clergyman ought to wear on a certain day, and which position he should occupy at the communion, and what should be the decoration of the place of worship, and what should be the proper music for the hymn, and so forth; but to what purpose is all this? To be right in heart with God, to trust in His dear Son, and to be renewed in His image, is better than all the ritual.

What was the reason why these Israelites did not attain to righteousness? Theywent upon A Wrong Principle.

The principle of these Israelites was that of works. This system puffs you up, and makes you feel what an important person you are to deserve so well of God. It smells of that pride which the Lord abhors. While it thus lifts man up, it altogether ignores the great fact that you have sinned already. Are you going to be saved by your works? What about the past? If I am going to pay my way for the future, this will not discharge my old debts. What have you to say for your former sins and follies? Do you imagine that you can make up for wasted years by using the rest of life as you ought to do? If you do your best in future you will do no more than you are bound to do: this will not remove your old sins. Why, man, if you could start afresh as a new-born babe, and keep God's law perfectly throughout all time, yet the faults of the past would remain like blots indelible. Sin is sin, and God will punish it, and all your future obedience can be no atonement for it.

Moreover, dear friends, the system of salvation by works is impossible to you. You cannot perfectly keep the law of God, for you are sold under sin. I recollect when I resolved never to sin again. I sinned before I had done my breakfast. It was all up for that day; so I thought I would begin the next day, and I did, but my failure was repeated. Who can get clean water from a polluted spring? You will never keep the commandment without spot; it is so pure, and you are so impure; it is so spiritual, and you are so earthly. "There is not a just man upon earth that doeth good and sinneth not."

Mere obedience to the Lord, if there were no heart in it, would be a poor affair. We have many servants who regard their work as drudgery, and though they do their duties, they do them with no regard for our interests; but the were of another kind. If you have any such, you will prize one of such above a thousand others. They love their master, and they identify themselves with his interests. Old John did not want orders; he was a law to himself, he served from love. When his master one day spoke about parting, he wanted to know where his master was going, for he had no idea of going himself: he was part and parcel of the household, and was worth his weight in diamonds. You may well say, "I would give my eyes to get such a servant as that." I dare say you would. Our Lord Jesus gave Himself, that he might make such servants out of us. Mere work-mongering will never do this; it leaves the man still a self-seeker, a slave working under fear of the lash, with no delight either in his master or in his work. O my hearers, "ye must be born again," or ye cannot attain to righteousness; and there is no being born again on the principle of the works of the law; that must be a gift of grace, and it can only be given into that hand of faith which receives Christ Jesus the Lord.

Old-Fashioned Servants

III. In the last place, I am come to close-handed fighting. I must deliver a discourse of affection. As I love you, I would have you saved at once. Believe, I pray you, and God's righteousness is yours. Why should you not believe? Do I hear you say,

"I Cannot Feel?"

Did I say anything about feeling? Salvation by feelings is only another form of salvation by works, and it is not to be thought of. Salvation is by Jesus Christ, and it is received by faith alone. It is bestowed as a free gift, and it must be received as a free gift, or not at all. Trust Jesus to save you, and you are saved: believe Him, and be happy. Take to yourself what is freely presented to you in the gospel. If thou canst believe, thou art saved. I cannot help quoting my brother Hill's expression the other day: "He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life" (John 6: 47). You know how he put it: "H. A. T. H. spells got it." So it does, it is a curious but a correct way of spelling it.

Next, see why it is that you have failed hitherto to find rest. You have been earnest and sincere for a great many years, and you have kept on hearing and reading, and, after a fashion, you have even kept on praying; but all the while you have been

On the Wrong Road.

Suppose yonder young man should start with his bicycle to go to Brighton, and he should travel due north; he will never get there. The faster he travels the further he will go from the place. If you follow after righteousness by the works of the law, the more you do the further off you will be from the righteousness of God. It must be so. Hear a parable. Yonder is a river, deep and broad. You imagine that the proper way to cross it is to wade or swim through it. You will not hear of any other way. The king has built a bridge; it is open free and without toll: the passage is as safe as it is plain. You refuse to be beholden to His Majesty. You mean to get across by your own exertions. Already you are wet and cold, but you mean to persevere. You are nearly up to your neck in the stream, and the current is too strong for you. Come back, O foolish man, and Cross by the Bridge.

The way of faith is so safe, so simple, so blessed; do try it! Have you not had enough of self-saving? After years of struggling you are no forwarder, and have no more comfort: quit the struggle, and rest in the Lord Jesus. Give up your self-confiding folly, and confide in the Son of God, the bleeding Substitute for guilty men.

Do you not see, my friend, that in all your selfish trustings you are really fighting against your God. Jesus says, "Trust Me, I will save you;" and you reply, "I prefer my own doings." Is not that a great insult to Jesus? Have you not attacked the great Father upon a tender point? May He not appoint His own way of saving you? He has chosen the way of grace through faith What arrogance to refuse that way! God gives without money and without price; why do you provoke Him with your fancied merits? You are flying in the face of the great God, and, therefore, your very religion is a sin. The Cross is a superfluity if human merit can suffice. There was no need for the Father to put His Son to grief if, after all, men can work out a righteousness of their own. If works can save you, why did Jesus die? Do you see

What You are Driving At?

Do you mean to trample under foot the blood of Jesus? I beseech you, abhor all notion of self-justification. Dash down the idol which would rival your Lord. "Well," saith one, "you seem to know the ins and outs of a soul aiming at self-salvation." I do, for I long labored to climb up to heaven upon the treadmill of my own works. At length I grew weary, and gave myself up to Jesus, that He might bear me there in His own arms. Will you not do the same?

Now, my hearer, it will be an awful thing for you to understand this way of grace, and yet to neglect it. How long am I to preach to some of you? How long am I to wear my heart out in crying, "Come to Jesus; believe in Jesus?" If anybody had said twenty years ago that yonder seat-holder would still remain an unconverted man, he would have replied: "Impossible; I am near to the kingdom; I am almost persuaded, and before long I shall decide." Yes, you are persuaded on Sundays, but you forget it all on Mondays, and all because faith is not exercised. You believe in faith, but you do not believe in Jesus. You know that Jesus could save you if you trusted Him, but you do not trust Him. Oh that this moment you would end this delay! I see God's only begotten Son, who has deigned to become man for our sakes, and to die in our room and place, and from the Cross I entreat Him to speak to you. Speak, O my Master! He does speak, and these are His words: "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else." Look, I pray you! Look and live!

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

DIRECTION IN DETAILS.*

WE may not set these fancy tests. [Gideon's fleece, Judges 6: 36-40.] They were proper enough when Gideon applied them. The day was not then so far advanced; it was quite early morning, gray twilight, and men did not see clearly, so they asked for much assistance to their vision, and God graciously answered them. Even in Apostolic days the freak of the lottery was tried, and we hear but little of the happy consequences which flowed from the adventure. We have nothing to do with putting tests for God now. Why? It would seem a natural and beautiful thing to say, as Gideon said, if the fleece be wet, or if the earth be wet, and the fleece be dry, then God is with me, and the right way is open before mine eyes. Why may we not submit God to these tests? Because the day is far advanced. This is the age of the spirit—the age of true spiritual or religious faith. We have now to be guided by those inward and spiritual convictions which often have no words for their adequate and precise expression. We are to be students of Providence.

Providence itself is a succession of trials, tests, proofs. We are to see how things go, to watch their origin, sequence, consummation; we are to get rid of the superstition that life is a series of isolated incidents, instead of being right in this particular case or that, we ourselves are to be right, and all these things shall be regulated for us. The man who is anxious to know merely detailed rights has not entered into the Spirit of Christ. He is a man who would keep a book regarding himself, and separate or distribute his life into independent lines and items. That is the Baal we must cast down—the Baal of being right in instances, in mere details, and writing a little maxim-bible of our own. What then is the great aim of Providence to-day? To make right men, to create new and clean hearts and spirits, to make the soul right is that represented to us in any formal quotable words? Surely: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Expand that thought, and what happens but this great philosophy of life, namely: Be right in your soul, be right in your purpose, have a single eye, do not be playing a double game; do justly, and love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God; and as for the details of this opening life, they will fall into great laws of divine Providence, and will be ministers of grace to the trusting soul. What an insidious sophism lurks in this thinking, namely, that if we could have lotteries by which to test individual actions we could not go wrong. So long as you are meddling with individual actions, and trying to be guided by a kind of travelling time bill you cannot be right.

The First Gentile in Israel.

The providence of God is not an Old Testament story; it is the action of the day, the movement now circling around us—rustling of the leaves, the ploughing up of the land, the singing of the birds, the occurrences at home and abroad. Behold the hand of the living God! In that hand put your trust. The most mysterious action of this Providence was the bringing-in of the Gentiles. A new thing has been

* From "The People's Bible," Vol. VI., Judges 6 to I Samuel 18, by Dr. Joseph Parker; the most suggestive of commentaries, a perfect treasury of original thought, every line of which seems to point out some new wisdom or beauty in the sacred text, unnoticed before. A book of priceless value to ministers and Sunday-school teachers. Pp. 358. Price, $1.50. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York.

The Mountain Road from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico.

wrought in Israel: A Moabitess is numbered among the chosen children. Now that we read the story backwards, we see the meaning of it all. Reading it as the facts occurred, the reading was often rough and most difficult. How true it is that we must wait to the end to see the real meaning of the beginning! When God's way is finished, God's way will be clear. We ought to take an interest in the introduction of Ruth into the sacred lineage, because she was the first fruits of the people to whom we belong. She was a heathen woman, an outsider, a Gentile, and we belonged once to the outlawed class. Mean of us it is, to say we do not take any interest in the conversion of distant nations, when we ourselves were once a distant nation, and have been converted to the faith and crown of Christ. We are not true to our own history, or grateful for our own deliverance in the degree in which we are indifferent to the conversion of those that are afar off. Ruth was our first fruits; Ruth was our kinswoman, in the larger sense. Blessed be God for the introduction of our kinswoman into Israel. She was in the direct line of the Son of God. The Gentile woman beame a progenitor of God's own Christ. A strange genealogy! Having perused it line by line, we know what it is: The great king, the unknown man, the harlot, the Gentile Ruth, they all stand there a symbolic humanity, so that when the Son of God comes, He comes not in one direction alone, not as born of the Jew only, but of a line of kings; in Him all men are gathered up—the mightiest, the weakest, the wanderer, the homeless. Verily, this man was the Son of God—the Incarnate Deity.

Eli and the Child.

We find in Eli's treatment of Samuel nobleness, magnanimity—want of all the miserable tricks which are made use of by men who seek to enhance their own glory by diminishing the lustre of others. Look at the unpriestliness of his tone when he talks to the child. Samuel came to Eli in the hour of darkness and said, "Thou didst call me." Eli said, "No, my child, I did not call thee." Samuel came again, and yet again. What did Eli do, knowing that the child had heard a voice more than human? Did Eli say to Samuel, "Pay no heed to such voice, little child. I am the high priest of God. If thou dost see a spectre or vision, or hear an unearthly voice or tone, be not led away superstitiously by these things; but come to me and I will tell thee all about it, and determine what thou hast to do?" That would have been the talk of a priest; that is the native accent of a true priest. Yet Eli said to the child, "It is God that calleth thee; go and speak to Him face to face; stand before Him and say, 'speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth.'" Why, that was not priestly at all; that was putting him face to face with the Eternal, and clothing the soul with responsibilities which never can be transferred. Looking at this aspect of Eli's character, what reverence we feel for the old man!

CONVERSION OF A BUDDHIST PRIEST.

BUDDHISM is the religion of the greater part of the Burman people, and there is no part of the country in which the traveler does not find traces of it, either in a temple, shrine or monastery. It is the last-named institution that gives Buddhism its hold on the people. The monks take no priestly part in public worship, but they educate the children, and they preach sermons or give lectures on Buddhism to the people. They are pledged to celibacy and poverty, and are greatly venerated throughout the country. Mrs. M. B. Ingalls, who is laboring in Burmah, gives the following account of the recent conversion of one of the order: "We have some excitement over a Buddhist monk, who has read our books and heard the Gospel till he lost faith in his idols, and now he has desired to cast off his robes and be baptized. He has given me a few things as pledges, and I have purchased his lay dress. He seems honest, and this week will be his time of trial. He has been a very noted priest, and the people begin to fear he is to leave them. It is a great step for one who has been in the place of a god to the people; he has held his office twenty years."

FIDELITY TO A DEAD LOVER.

A TOUCHING history is connected with a grave in the cemetery of Pottstown, Pa. A lady is buried there, who died a few years ago, at the age of ninety-six. She was the daughter of Jacob Drinkhouse, who fought against England in the Revolutionary War, and died in Philadelphia in 1860. When Miss Drinkhouse was young and the belle of Pottstown, she became engaged to be married to Joseph Mintzer, but before the wedding-day came her lover died. The widowed sweetheart declared that she would never marry, and remained true to the memory of her betrothed for three-quarters of a century. When she was dying she requested that the gold engagement ring which young Mintzer had placed on her finger in the happy days of her girlhood, might be placed on her hand and be buried with her. She had cherished this love-token throughout her long life. This incident teaches a lesson to some members of Christ's church—His bride—whose relations with the world often suggest doubts of their fidelity to Him who espoused them and died for them (Eph. 5: 25, 27).

MOUNTAIN SCENE IN MEXICO.

(See Illustration).

THE traveller in the city of Mexico cannot fail to be impressed by the grandeur and natural beauty of the scenes through which he passes. Leaving Vera Cruz, the chief seaport of Mexico, situated on its eastern coast, a picture of which appeared in this journal on Sept. 1, he passes over the first railroad built in the Republic, which was first projected in 1837, but was not completed until 1873. The track for the first fifty miles from the coast lies through the "hot land" which forms a belt around the table-lands on which the cities of Mexico are built. The marvellous tropical vegetation of this region strikes the American visitor with wonder, the wild luxuriance and immense growths being far beyond anything to be found in the United States.

The railroad, fifty miles inland from Vera Cruz, curves around the base of the Chequehuete Mountain, and the traveller at once becomes aware that he is in purer and less enervating air, and every hour the view widens before him as he rises to higher ground. The scene below him grows with beauty, the variegated colors of the dense foliage looking like a terrestrial paradise; while, before and above him, standing out in clear outline against a sky of such glorious blue as not even Italy can rival, rises the magnificent mountain chain, over which, like a hoary king above his subjects, towers the snow-capped summit of the volcano Orizaba. This is the stage of the journey depicted in the illustration on this page, and it is one of indescribable beauty. What impresses the spectator most profoundly is the startling contrast of the two scenes, spread like a panorama before him from the elevation he has reached. On one side is the gorgeous beauty of the tropical forest, and on the other the rugged grandeur of the snow-clad mountains—the two scenes distinct, yet in amazing propinquity, as if nature had lavished on this wonderful spot every element of loveliness in her inexhaustible treasury.

It is inexpressibly saddening to the Christian traveller, as rapt in admiration, he surveys the wondrous scene, to think that in a region so favored and speaking so clearly of the wisdom and love of the Creator, the beings whom He has made to enjoy it and give glory to Him, know Him not, and in their blind ignorance are living in sin, bound in Satan's chains unaware that "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish." Here they live close upon our borders, five millions of Indians, besides nearly eight millions of whites, but few of whom have ever heard the pure Gospel proclaimed. Neither the Christian Church nor the Christian press of America, seems to realize the urgent need of these people, nor the responsibility upon us of taking up this work with energy. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is deeply grateful that God has blessed its feeble efforts in this direction with some measure of success, and wishes that its contemporaries would also take up the work. It commends the Church of Jesus in Mexico as an organization adapted to the character of the people. This church is free from ritualistic tendencies; its one object is to preach Christ and Him crucified; it is carrying on mission work and supporting orphanages; it has suitable buildings in its possession; but it is without funds, and its Roman Catholic enemies, dreading its power, and fearing that it will open the eyes of the people to the truth, are waiting eagerly to see it collapse, that once more the mummery of the priests may be heard in the buildings where now the way of salvation is proclaimed. The readers of this journal have nobly aided the Church of Jesus in its efforts, and we earnestly hope that they will continue to do so. Dr. H. Chauncey Riley, the Bishop of the Church, whose office is at 43 Bible House, New York, will gratefully receive any contributions that may be sent.

Marie Fabre's Appeal.

AT THE ELEVENTH HOUR.

(See Illustration.)

IT was a long, weary night of watching that the young girl spent by the bedside of her dying father. None but those who have sat the hours through know how seemingly endless they are from midnight to dawn, and Marie Faber had no experience, and was very nervous besides, But the physician who attended the sick man had said that he must have constant attention; so Marie sat up, for she would not trust a hired nurse. Besides, her father might become fully conscious and want to speak to her, though he was then lying either asleep or in a stupor.

Marie loved her father, though she feared him, too. She had come with him and her mother when they fled across the Atlantic after those terrible days of the Commune in Paris, when Jules Fabre had been in the front ranks, and had done his share in the bloody deeds which made all Europe shudder with horror. In America he had prospered, but his associations were with wild, desperate men, whose talk made Marie's cheek pale and her heart sink with dread at the thought of the reign of anarchy for which they were so eager. Her mother had been dead for some years, and now her father lay dying. For herself, Marie had no fear. She, by her mother's management, had secured Christian friends who would have made a home for her away from her father and his infidel associates, if she would have consented to leave him. By them she had been led to the Saviour, and had found peace and joy in His love.

Through the long night she sat wakeful and alert, but there was no change in the dying man. He took his medicine mechanically when she gave it to him, but he did not recognize her, nor appear to know where he was. "Oh," said Marie, earnestly, "if he would only awake, that I might offer but one prayer with him before he dies. Perhaps he would let me pray with him now." She could not be sure of it; for early in his illness, when she suggested it, he had sternly bade her do no such thing, and had spoken more harshly than he ever spoke to her before. Since then Marie had prayed much for him, and she hoped her prayers would be heard. Two or three times during the night she heard him muttering, and, bending over him, could make out sufficient of his words to find that he fancied himself back in Paris among his comrades.

As the day broke, however, he opened his eyes and looked at her intelligently. Marie saw that the light of reason had returned, and was instantly at his bedside. His voice was very feeble, and the huskiness of death was in his throat.

"Father, dear father," said Marie, "will you not let me pray for you?"

"I am dying, I suppose," said the sufferer; "they generally fetch a priest at the last, but I do not want one; they can do me no good. I will die as I have lived."

"I will pray, father, if you will let me; we need not send for a priest."

"Well, little one, as you like; it can do me no good; I have led a bad life, and I must take the consequences."

"You need not, father; God will forgive you if you will only ask Him to do it for His dear Son's sake, who died for you."

"You are a good girl, little one; do you pray. Perhaps God will hear you; He would not listen to me."

"He will, indeed, father, if you really want Him to."

"But I do not know what to say."

"Say just this, God be merciful to me a sinner, for Christ's sake."

"That is the right prayer for me, surely. I can say that." And the dying man said it with evident sincerity. Then Marie prayed earnestly for him, holding his hand as she knelt. Suddenly she felt the grasp relax, and heard a long-drawn sigh. Looking up quickly, she saw the unmistakable change, and realized that her father was gone. Had his prayer been heard in that last sad hour? Marie hoped so, and the thought comforted her. Like the thief on the cross, he had appealed to infinite love and mercy, and none could say that it would be refused to him.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 574.)

More Financial Straits—Instances of Divine Provision—Five Answers to Prayer—Journey to Bristol—Need of Private Prayer—First Sermons in Bristol—Providential Indications—Fare well to Old Friends in Devonshire.

APRIL 16. This morning I am still in peace. I am glad I have spoken to the brethren, that they may be prepared, in case the Lord should take me away. Having again but little money, and being about to leave Teignmouth for several days, I asked the Lord for a fresh supply, and within about four hours afterwards He sent me, from six different quarters, £3. 7s. 6d. I left today for Dartmouth, where I preached in the evening. There was much weeping to-day among the saints at Teignmouth. This is already a trial to me, and it will be still more so should I actually leave. It is a most important work to go about and stir up the churches; but it requires grace. I had five answers to prayer to-day. 1. I awoke at five, for which I had asked the Lord last evening. 2. The Lord removed from my dear wife an indisposition, under which she had been suffering. It would have been trying to me to have had to leave her in that state. 3 The Lord sent us money. 4. There was a place vacant on the Dartmouth coach, which only passes through Teignmouth. 5. This evening I was assisted in preaching, and my own soul refreshed.

April 17. I preached again at Dartmouth

April 18. I am still at Dartmouth. I wrote to Brother Craik that, the Lord willing, I should be with him at Bristol on the 21st. I preached again this evening, with especial assistance, before a large congregation.

April 19. I awoke early, and had a good while to myself for prayer and reading the Word, and left happy in spirit for Torquay, where I preached in the evening with much help. The brethren are sorry that, on account of my going to Bristol, my regular weekly preaching will be given up there for a while. I walked home after preaching, and arrived at Teignmouth at twelve o'clock.

April 20. I left this morning for Bristol. I preached with little power (as to my own feeling) in Exeter, from three till half-past four. At five I left for Taleford, where I preached in the evening, likewise with little power. I was very tired in body, and had had, therefore, little prayer. But still, in both places the believers seemed refreshed. I went to bed at eleven, very, very tired.

April 21. This morning I rose a little before five, and attended a prayer-meeting from a quarter past five to a quarter past six. I spoke for some time at the meeting. Afterwards I prayed and read again with some believers, and likewise expounded the Scriptures. The Bristol coach took me up about ten. I was very faithless on the journey; I did not speak a single word for Christ, and was, therefore, wretched in my soul. This has shown me again my weakness. Though the Lord had been so gracious to me yesterday in this particular, both on my way from Teignmouth to Exeter and from Exeter to Taleford, and had given me much encouragement, in that He made my fellow-travelers either thankfully to receive the word, or constrained them quietly to listen to the testimony; yet I did not confess Him to-day; nor did I give away a single tract, though I had my pockets full on purpose. O, wretched man that I am!

I would offer here a word of warning to my fellow-believers. Often the work of the Lord itself may be a temptation to keep us from that communion with Him which is so essential to the benefit of our souls. On the 19th I had left Dartmouth, conversed a good deal that day, preached in the evening, walked afterwards eight miles, had only five hours' sleep, travelled again the next day twenty-five miles, preached twice, and conversed very much besides, went to bed at eleven and rose before five.

We should remember that the body and spirit require rest, and, therefore, however careless about the Lord's work I might have appeared to my brethren, I ought to have had a great deal of quiet time for prayer and reading the Word, especially as I had a long journey before me that day, and as I was going to Bristol, which in itself required much prayer. Instead of this I hurried to the prayer-meeting after a few minutes' private prayer. But let none think that public prayer will make up for closet communion. Then again, afterwards, when I ought to have withdrawn myself, as it were, by force, from the company of beloved brethren and sisters, and given my testimony for the Lord (and indeed it would have been the best testimony I could have given them), by telling them that I needed secret communion with the Lord, I did not do so, but spent the time, till the coach came, in conversation with them. Now, however profitable in some respects it may have been to those with whom I was on that morning, yet my own soul needed food; and not having had it, I was lean, and felt the effects of it the whole day, and hence I believe it came that I was dumb on the coach.

April 22, 1832. To-day I preached at Gideon Chapel, Bristol. [Though this sermon gave rise to false reports, yet the Lord was pleased to bless it to several: and the false reports were likewise instrumental in bringing many individuals under the sound of the Word.] In the afternoon I preached at the Pithay Chapel. [This sermon was a blessing to many, many souls; and many were brought through it, to come afterwards to hear Brother Craik and me. Among others it was the means of converting a young man who was a notorious drunkard, and who was just again on his way to a public house, when an acquaintance of his met him, and asked him to go with him to hear a foreigner preach. He did so; and from that moment he was so completely altered, that he never again went to a public house, and was so happy in the Lord afterwards that he often neglected his supper, from eagerness to read the Scriptures, as his wife told me. He died about five months afterwards.] This evening I was much instructed in hearing Brother Craik preach. I am now persuaded that Bristol is the place where the Lord will have me to labor.

April 23. This evening I preached again with much assistance at Gideon. I was very happy. [The Lord made this testimony a blessing to several.] I feel that Bristol is my right place. The Lord mercifully teach me!

April 27. It seems to Brother Craik and myself the Lord's will that we should go home next week, in order that in quietness, without being influenced by what we see here, we may more inquire into the Lord's will concerning us. It especially appears to us much more likely that we should come to a right conclusion among the brethren and sisters in Devonshire, whose tears we shall have to witness, and whose entreaties to stay with them we shall have to hear, than here in Bristol, where we see only those who wish us to stay. Some asked me to stay with them while Brother Craik goes home. But it seems better that we should both go. [I observe here, it was evident many preferred my beloved brother's gifts to my own; yet, as he would not come, except I came with him; and as I knew that I also had been called by the Lord for the ministry of the Word, I knew that I also should find my work in Bristol, and that though it might be a different one, yet I should fill up, in some measure his lack, whilst he supplied my deficiencies; and that thus we might both be a benefit to the Church and to the world in Bristol. The result has evidently confirmed this. I am, moreover, by the grace of God, strengthened to rejoice in my fellow-laborer's honor, instead of envying him; having, in some measure, been enabled to enter into the meaning of that word: "A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from above."

April 28. It still seems to us the Lord's will that we should both leave soon, to have quiet time for prayer concerning Bristol. This afternoon I felt the want of retirement, finding afresh that the society of brethren cannot make up for communion with the Lord. I spent about three hours over the Word and in prayer, this evening, which has been a great refreshment to my inner man.

April 29. I preached this morning with much outward power, but with little inward enjoyment, on Revelations 3: 15–22. [As it afterwards appeared, that testimony was blessed to many, though I lacked enjoyment in my own soul. May this be an encouragement to those who labor in word and doctrine!] This afternoon Brother Craik preached in a vessel called the Clifton Ark, fitted up for a chapel. In the evening I preached in the same vessel. These testimonies also God greatly honored and made them the means of afterwards bringing several, who then heard us, to our meeting places. How did God bless us in everything we took into our hands! How was He with us, and how did He help us, thereby evidently showing that He Himself had sent us to this city!!] Brother Craik preached this evening at Gideon for the last time previous to our going. The aisles, the pulpit stairs, and the vestry were filled, and multitudes went away on account of the want of room.

April 30. It was most affecting to take leave of the dear children of God, dozens pressing us to return soon, many with tears in their eyes. The blessing which the Lord has given to our ministry, seems to be very great. We both see it fully the Lord's will to come here, though we do not see under what circumstances. A brother has promised to take Bethesda Chapel for us, and so be answerable for the payment of the rent: so that thus we should have two large chapels. I saw, again, two instances to-day, in which my preaching has been blessed. May 1. Brother Craik and I left this morning for Devonshire. May 2. I preached this evening at Bishopsteignton, and told the brethren that, the Lord willing, I should soon leave them. May 3. I saw several of the brethren to-day, and I felt so fully assured that it is the Lord's will that I should go to Bristol, that I told them so. This evening I had a meeting with the three deacons, when I told them plainly about it; asking them, if they see anything wrong in me concerning this matter, to tell me of it. They had nothing to say against it; yea, though much wishing me to stay, they were convinced themselves that my going is most certainly of God.

May 4. I saw again several brethren to-day, and told them about my intention to go to Bristol. There is much sorrowing and sighing, but it does not move me in the least, though I desire to sympathize with them. I am fully persuaded that the Lord will have us to go to Bristol. May 5. One striking proof to my mind, that my leaving Teignmouth is of God, is, that some truly spiritual believers, though they much wish me to to stay, see that I ought to go to Bristol.

May 7. Having received a letter from Brisfol on May 5, it was answered to-day in such a way that the Lord may have another opportunity to prevent our going thither, if it be not of Him. Especially we will not move a single stone out of the way in our own strength, and much less still be guilty of a want of openness and plainness, nor would we wish by such means to obtain Bethesda Chapel.

May 11. The Lord seems to try us about Bristol. There was reason to expect a letter the day before yesterday, but none came; also to-day there is no letter. Even this is very good for us. Yea, I do wish most heartily that we may not have Bethesda Chapel, if it be not good for us.

May 15. Just when I was in prayer concerning Bristol, I was sent for to come to Brother Craik. Two letters had arrived from Bristol. The brethren assembling at Gideon accept our offer to come under the conditions we have made, i. e., for the present to consider us only as ministering among them, but not in any fixed pastoral relationship, so that we may preach as we consider it to be according to the mind of God, without reference to any rules among them; that the pew-rents should be done away with; and that we should go on, respecting the supply of our temporal wants, as in Devonshire. We intend, the Lord willing, to leave in about a week, though there is nothing settled respecting Bethesda Chapel.

May 16. I preached for the last time at Bishopsteignton, and took leave of the brethren. May 17. I went to Exmouth and after preaching took leave of the brethren. May 21. I began to-day to take leave of the brethren at Teignmouth, calling on each of them. In the evening I went over to Shaldon to take leave of the brethren of whom brother Craik has had the oversight. It has been a trying day, much weeping on the part of the saints. Were I not so fully persuaded that it is the will of God we should go to Bristol, I should have been hardly able to bear it.

May 22. The brethren at Shaldon and Teignmouth say, that they expect us soon back again. As far as I understand the way in which God deals with His children, this seems very unlikely. In every respect we have seen the Lord's goodness, and all proves that it is His will that we should go to Bristol. This full persuasion has helped me to withstand all the tears of the saints. Towards evening the Lord, after repeated prayer, gave me Col. 1: 21–23 as a text for the last word of exhortation. It seemed to me best to speak as little as possible about myself, and as much as possible about Christ. I scarcely alluded to our separation, and only commended myself and the brethren, in the concluding prayer, to the Lord. The parting scenes are very trying, but my full persuasion is that the separation is of the Lord.

May 23. My beloved wife, Mr. Groves, my father-in-law, and I, left this morning for Exeter. Bro. Craik intends to follow to-morrow.

(To be Continued.)

QUARTERLY REVIEW.

S.S. Lesson for Sept. 25, Matt. 2 : 1 ; 7 : 29.

The Incarnate Word—Divinely Guided and Protected—Specially Heralded—Supernaturally and Publicly Endorsed—Fiercely Tempted—Manifested in Galilee—Proclaims the Ministry of Love—Explains the Spirit of Law—Enjoins Piety in Heart and Act—Inculcates Implicit Faith—The New Philosophy—The Two Ways.

REST IN THE LORD.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.*

What Resting in the Lord Is—Follows Work Done—The Work of God—The Rest of the Patriarchs—The Besetting Sin of the Israelites—Were Not Permitted to Enter into Rest—A Touchstone of Faith—How to be Sure of God's Will—Knowledge Promised to the Obedient—The Voice from Behind—Hastening into Rest—Resting Others over upon Him.

"WHAT do you mean by resting in the Lord?" This question is often asked. The Lord Himself by His Holy Spirit gives us grace to answer it. Rest is only right when work is done. A laborer who rests while he ought to be at work, is doing wrong to his employer. God Himself rested only when His work was completed. "The heavens and the earth were finished and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended His work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it; because that in it He had rested from all His work, which God created and made" (Gen. 2 : 2, 3). And we can only rest in the Lord when our work is complete. But

What is Our Work?

"This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent" (John 6 : 29). Naturally we all have a strong belief in ourselves; we have made experience of our own powers in many ways. We know our own motives, and though our powers are very limited, we would rather trust them in their little limited sphere, than go out of their sphere to trust in God. God's aim is to bring us out of ourselves into a dependence upon Him, which shall be so absolute that we shall stand upon His promises, even against sight and sense. Thus did Noah rest in the Lord when no single creature out of his own family believed in the coming deluge. He was so sure in his God that he spent one hundred and twenty years in preaching of, and preparing for, the impending judgment, when there was yet no outward sign of it. Thus did Abraham rest in the Lord when he offered up his son Isaac; he left God to solve the problem how His promises were to be fulfilled, if the very son in whom his seed was called, should die. Both these men of God counted God responsible to fulfil His own word, and this was rest.

The sin of the Children of Israel in the wilderness was "unbelief, in departing from the living God." Ten different times they provoked God in the desert, and each time their sin was unbelief. They set not their heart aright, and their spirit was not steadfast with God. They tempted God in their heart, they spake against God. "They believed not in God, and trusted not in His salvation; their heart was not right with Him; they turned back and tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel" (Ps. 78 : 8, 18, 19, 22, 41). Every trial they had was an opportunity to count upon the Almightiness of their God, and ten different times, because all resources in themselves were at an end, they failed in the time of trial, and lost God the opportunity of justifying the faith of those who could trust Him against all human probability. Instead of saying, when they were hungry, "Such a Father as we have will find means to feed us," they murmured against Moses and Aaron. Instead of saying when they thirsted, "God, who has opened heaven to give us bread, will surely give us water to drink," they murmured against Moses, and accused him of seeking to slay them by thirst. Therefore, God "was grieved with that generation, and said, They do always err in their heart; and they have not known My ways. So I swear in My wrath, They shall not enter into My rest." God's rest was in our rest can be in nothing less. Some of us are perfectly at rest about our soul's salvation from condemnation; we rest in a finished work. Jesus said, "It is finished," and we know that nothing can be added to what He has done to save us; therefore, we do not know anxiety regarding salvation. "We, which have believed, do enter into rest," because we are certain that God cannot fail us. Now, God wants us to rest in Him in the same way about everything. He may show us something in which we have failed hitherto to understand Him, and to do His will. We may be grieved at heart and disappointed with ourselves. But can we by this arrive at a knowledge of His will, or make ourselves more sensitive to it in the future? Never. What then shall we do? Paul answers us, "In everything, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God." Thanksgiving implies that we believe He does, then and there, undertake to answer that prayer, and to bring us into His mind. Thus He works and we rest. If you do believe, you do enter into rest about it; you cease from your own works, "as God did from His," and do only the work of God, which is to "believe on Him whom He hath sent;" your eye is off yourself, and on Him; and, with God in view, "the faithful God which keepeth covenant," you will forget how to be anxious, you will "enter into rest." This is a touchstone of our faith. If we are not at rest about anything we have prayed for which is according God's will, it is very clear that we have

A Finished Work;

Not Really Believed.

If we are anxious, it is evident that we count the issue as still uncertain. When the early disciples were gathered together in the house of Mary the Mother of Mark to pray for Peter's release from prison, they did not come into rest about the matter, for they went on praying far into the night; and when their prayers were answered and Peter stood knocking at the door, they did not believe that it was Peter, but said that it was his angel. When Paul and Silas prayed in the Philippian jail for the jailer and all in his house, they did come into rest; their prayer turned into praise, and immediately "the foundations of the prison were shaken, and every one's hands were loosed." When we believe, "enter into rest," prayer turns to praise. We do not commune less with God, but more; only praise very much takes the place of the sad and weary repetition of prayer which obtains where we are in unrest.

But how can I be sure enough of God's will to make me bold enough to pray thus in faith?" There is but one way: no man is sure about God's will until he has yielded up his own will to God. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, and be not confirmed to this world . . .

That Ye May Prove

what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." (Rom. 12: 1, 2). Again, "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine." We must yield our wills not to God's servants, but to God; and then He teaches us His mind by His own Word. Unless we know God's will about anything we cannot pray a prayer of faith, and, therefore, cannot rest in the Lord, But is it not His will that we should know His will? Does He want to keep His children in anxious perplexity about His will? Would it be like Him? Has He ever said that He loves to distress His children? No, on the contrary, He says, "I will guide thee with Mine eye" (Ps. 32: 8); "Thine ears shall hear a voice behind thee, saying, this is the way; walk ye in it; when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left." (Isa. 30: 21). "He leadeth me," is David's testimony. Surely these words are sufficient warrant for believing that God wants to make known His will to us. Why, then, do we not know it? If any one sends you some word in a letter, and you do not break the seal, whose fault is it that you do not know the contents? If any one speaks to you in a quiet voice, and you are too occupied in talking to or listening to someone else to listen, whose fault is it that you do not hear? Many of God's children come to God, and ask to know His will; but they do not rest in Him to show it, they accompany their prayer by their own reasonings about the matter, their own thoughts whether this, that or the other can be God's will. These have not believed that God will make known to them His will; they

Give Him No Chance

to show it them, they are without rest; like the Children of Israel, they tempt God by limiting the Holy One of Israel.

But rest in the Lord can never waive the responsibility of obedience to Him. When God commanded Joshua to marshal all the congregation of the children of Israel, and march them round the walls of Jericho, shouting and blowing with the trumpets, it would not have been true rest in the Lord if he had said, "I see no need to do all this marching and shouting; I am resting in the Lord to bring down the walls. I believe He will do it, so we will stop in our tents." It was not Joshua's obedience which conquered Jericho, but by his obedience he honored God in the sight of the men of Jericho, and in the eyes of the children of Israel, and if Joshua had not done as God had commanded him, he might have grown very anxious about the downfall of the city walls.

"Let us labor, therefore, to enter into that rest." The word here translated "labor," really means "hasten." Does this militate against the prophet's words, "He that believeth shall not make haste?" Surely not. It is simply, "Hasten to believe, that you may not make haste about any other thing," "Hasten to leave your own wants and your own anxiety about your soul and body, your children and friends, your Christian work, etc.

Hasten to Rest in the Lord, because He is so faithful that He will surely keep every promise which He has made, which you claim. A lady said, "I have taken Jesus as my Healer, and I have given my body to Him to heal it; why does he not do it?" As long as there is a "Why" or a "Wherefore" in our minds, we are not really believing, not really out of our own hands. The very question savors of our own works. There is but one real haven of rest. It is Jesus Himself. In ourselves we are full of fears, anxieties and tumults. Anchored in Him, we ride at rest. Our home is in Jesus; it is our privilege to take refuge in Him, abide in Him, hide in Him, be covered by Him; and that, not sometimes, but always. O, "rest in the Lord, wait patiently for Him" (Ps. 37 : 7). "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee; because he trusteth in Thee" (Isa. 26 : 3). We may rest our unsaved ones over upon Him; we may rest great things for the heathen world over upon Him; we may rest perplexities which we cannot name over upon Him; and as soon as we do so, and cease from our own works, taking our hands off, He puts His own Almighty hands on, and undertakes for His own name's sake. Glory and praise be unto Him for ever.

* Mrs. Baxter has sent this article in the place of the usual Sunday-school lesson. The International Lesson for September 25 is left to the option of superintendents and teachers. It may be either a "Review" of the past twelve lessons: From Matt. 2 : 1 to 7 : 29; or, "Temperance," Rom 13 : 8–14; or, "Foreign Missions, Matt, 4 : 12–16.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller. This reduction in price is made to encourage the study of this important subject.

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

Unanswered yet, the prayer your lips have pleaded
In agony of heart these many years?
Does faith begin to fail, is hope declining,
And think you all in vain those falling tears?
Say not the Father has not heard your prayer,
You shall have your desire sometime, somewhere!

Unanswered yet? Tho' when you first presented
This one petition at the Father's throne,
It seemed you could not wait the time of asking,
So anxious was your heart to have it done:
If years have passed since then, do not despair,
For God will answer you sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? But you are not unheeded;
The promises of God forever stand;
To Him our days and years alike are equal:
Have faith in God! it is your Lord's command.
Hold on to Jacob's angel, and your prayer
Shall bring a blessing down sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Nay, do not say unanswered,
Perhaps your part is not yet wholly done;
The work begun when first your prayer was uttered,
And God will finish what He has begun.
Keep incense burning at the shrine of prayer,
And glory shall descend, sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Faith cannot be unanswered,
Her feet are firmly planted on the Rock;
And tho' the wildest storms sweep round her undaunted,
Nor quails for the loudest thunder shock:
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, "It shall be done," sometime, somewhere.

—F. G. Browning.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A sample packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

Lovers of history should possess a copy of "The Siege and Fall of Constantinople."
A narration, the most important and full of thrilling interest, being the last struggle of the Romans. The book is a gem for all libraries, well bound in cloth, and will be sent to any address on receipt of 25cts. per copy.
P. CANUTI, Publisher, 343 Fifth Ave., Pittsburg, Pa.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed, Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

SEDGWICK STEEL WIRE FENCE.

The best Farm, Garden, Poultry Yard, Lawn, School Lot, Park and Cemetery Fences and Gates. Perfect Automatic Gate. Cheapest and Neatest Iron Fences. Iron and wire Summer Houses, Lawn Furniture, and other wire work. Best Wire Stretcher and Plier. Ask dealers in hardware, or address, SEDGWICK BROS., RICHMOND, IND.

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World. $65 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Send Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Couplers, Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL in Your Home 15 days. If not perfectly satisfactory, return at our expense. $35 MARCHAL & SMITH, 235 East 21st Street, New York.

CRYING BABIES
are made
GOOD NATURED, HEALTHY, HEARTY,
by the use of
Lactated Food

Babies do not cry if they are satisfied and they cannot be satisfied if they are not properly nourished by their food, or if it produces irritation of stomach or bowels.

Very many mothers cannot properly nourish their children, and the milk of many mothers produces bad effects in the child because of constitutional disease or weakness.

For all such cases there is a remedy in
LACTATED FOOD.
Hundreds of physicians testify to its great value. It will be retained when even lime water and milk is rejected by the stomach, hence it is of great value to all invalids, in either chronic or acute cases.

150 MEALS for an infant for $1.00.
Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.
A valuable pamphlet sent on application.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887
To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.
Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE By a New York S.S. Superintend't. Introduction By J. H. VINCENT, D.D.
10,000 Prize Questions and Answers pertaining to Persons, Places and Things, Bible Studies and Readings, Prayer Meeting Talks and Outlines, Concert Exercises, Blackboard Outlines, Object Lessons and Chalk Talks. Seed Thoughts, Religious Emblems and Allegories illustrated, with Reference Tables, Maps, etc. Endorsed by D. D.'s, Teachers and Press. Agt's sell 150 to 200 copies a month to saints and sinners.
"An ingenious help and pleasant guide to an acquaintance with the Bible."—Talmage.
606 Pages $2. AGENTS Wanted.
E. B. TREAT, Publisher, NEW YORK.

Many Infallible Proofs
By REV. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.
A series of exceedingly practical chapters on the evidences of Christianity or the Written and Living Word of God.
In "A Word Preliminary" the author says: "The writer of these pages once found himself getting into the deep darkness of doubt. Beginning at the foundation, he searched for himself until he found the proofs ample that the Bible is the word of God. It was like finding one's way out of a dense wood into the full light of day. Others are still in the dark, and these chapters are the blazed trees that mark the path by which one man got out of the forest. Perhaps some one else may try the same route with a like result." 317 Pages; 12mo, Cloth $1.25.
Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price,
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free. FOR OIL.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

Character Peculiarly Its Own.
In Glad Hallelujahs the songs are not "selections"—are mostly new. The book stands on their merit. The authors are Sweney and Kirkpatrick—their newest. We've not aimed to fashion Glad Hallelujahs after any book; but to give it a character peculiarly its own. Substantial words set to soul-inspiring music. It is a rare combination. Examine it.
By mail, 35 cents. By express (not prepaid), $3.60 per dozen; $30 per 100. One sample copy 25 cents.
Further inducements to Schools, Churches and Evangelists. Write us
T. T. TASKER, SR., PUBLISHER,
921 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

INTERNATIONAL SONG SERVICE BY PHILIP PHILLIPS & HIS SON
WITH GEMS OF SONGS FROM 50 AUTHORS

LATEST, CHEAPEST AND BEST
160 Pages. Strong Board Covers.
30 cents each, postpaid. $25.00 per 100
Send to The Phillips Publishing Co.,
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.
This Magazine portrays American thought and life from ocean to ocean, is filled with pure high-class literature, and can be safely welcomed in any family circle.
PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MAIL.
Sample Copy of current number mailed upon receipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 cts.
Premium List with either.
Address:
The American Magazine Co., Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N. Y.

GET UP CLUBS.
SINGING TEACHERS AND CONDUCTORS OF MUSICAL SOCIETIES, SHOULD APPLY
FOR COMPLETE CATALOGUES, SPECIMEN PAGES AND TERMS.
Any Book desired for examination sent on receipt of price. Money refunded if unsatisfactory.
BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth Street, New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

A WIDE-SPREAD DESIRE GRATIFIED.
DR. TALMAGE'S LABOR SERMONS.
As Authorized and Personally Revised by Dr. Talmage.
In response to a wide-spread desire, the entire series of sermons on "The Labor Question," just completed by Dr. Talmage, has been reprinted in NEAT PAMPHLET FORM suitable for permanent preservation, which we are now ready to supply. Every reader of Dr. Talmage's sermons should have the series in this form, as authorized by the Tabernacle pastor.
☞ AUTHORIZED EDITION, BEARING DR. TALMAGE'S PERSONAL AUTHORIZATION, sent, post-paid, to any address, for Twenty-five Cents. Address
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

400 Choice Recitations and Readings, bound in handsome Lithographed paper cover, mailed to any address, postpaid, for only 30 cents. Satisfaction guaranteed. Address J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers, 57 Rose Street, New York,
Mention the CHRISTIAN HERALD in your letter when you write.

Fall Dress Goo
JAMES McCREERY &
Offer among their large assor of Fall Dress Goods, the foll Special Lines:
Two lines Stripe and Check ots, 44 inches wide, at 60 worth $1.
Also, Three lines Check and Suitings, 54 inches wide, at 75 well worth $1.25.
ORDERS BY MAIL From any part country will re careful and prom tention.
JAMES McCREERY &
Broadway and Eleventh
New York.

Bridal Trousseau
Ladies who are unable to ex our stock of these goods pers would find it to their advanta correspond with us. The most plete information furnished, and ful attention given to special or

Lord & Tayl
Broadway & 20th Street, N.

TRAIN UP A CH
To wear the perfect-fitting
GOOD SEN
CORDED
CORSET W
and when she be
A BEAUTIFUL WO
enjoying good health, she will sure to wear them.
FITS ALL AGES—Infants to Every one recommend
SOLD BY LEADING RETAI
Everywhere. Be sure your c stamped "GOOD SENSE." no other. Send for descriptive c FERRIS BROS. Manufact 341 Broadway, NEW YO

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT
INVALUABLE
LADIES a CHILDR
You'll find it good to regulate
The organs of both small and great;
It checks Sick Headache, and the woe
That sad Dyspepsia ever know.
In TARRANT'S SELTZER people
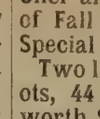
A remedy and treat combined.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
GOOD NEWS TO LADIES
Greatest offer. Now is you to get orders for our c Teas, Coffees and B. Powder, and secure a be Gold Band or Moss Rose Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Ca Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA C.
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New



You are interested in this question whether you think so or not. If there is no one in this broad world who is not interested in this question even a tramp, he don't own a house but never expects to own one. The F. J. Nash, M'f'g Co., Nyack, Rockland Co., N. Y., manufacturers of Ready Mixed Paints, in addition to the usual color card free, send an exceedingly interesting, plain, common sense explanation of paint free.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at 63 House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 36. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, SEPT. 8, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF DR. HORACIO GUZMAN, of Nicaragua, and Pictures of Central American Scenery.

THE QUEENS OF HOME. A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

PORTRAIT OF ZEBEHR PASHA, the Slave King.

1896 THE PROBABLE YEAR OF CHRIST'S ADVENT. By Rev. Joseph Baylee, D. D.

CURRENT EVENTS:—The Canadian Fishery Commission—The Conventions of Iowa and Pennsylvania—The Ute Outbreak—The Composition of the Prohibition Party—The Bulgarian Difficulty—The Irish League Preparing to Resist—A Convict's School in New Jersey—Harnessing Niagara—A Thief's Gift—The Purchase of a Husband, etc.

THE BLIND BEGGAR AND HIS WONDERFUL CURE. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

Mr. Studd's Confession—Precious Gifts for Mexico—Dr. Riley's Letter—Conversions in Chicago Streets.

Gems from New Books: A Clergyman Among Bears.

HAZELTON'S RETURN HOME. (Illustrated.)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. By George Muller. (Continued.)

SOLEMN WARNINGS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

DR. HORACIO GUZMAN, Minister from Nicaragua—A Central American Forest and City.

DR. HORACIO GUZMAN,

Minister to Washington from Nicaragua.

THE revival of interest in the scheme for piercing the isthmus which unites North and South America renders the arrival of the new diplomatist from Nicaragua, whose portrait appears on the first page, a matter of general interest. It is understood that the chief object of Dr. Guzman's mission is to promote the realization of the canal scheme, and to afford facilities to the American capitalists who have the matter in hand for communication with his government, which anxiously desires the success of the project. No better man could have been selected for the purpose than Dr. Guzman, whose knowledge of his own country is perfect, and who has had a long experience in this country, and a thorough scientific training here and in Europe.

Horacio Guzman was born at Granada, on the shores of Lake Nicaragua, in 1851; he is therefore now thirty-six years of age. When about fifteen years of age he was brought to the United States by an elder brother, who desired that he should learn to speak English, and with this purpose in view he placed him in the little town of Lester, Mass., in 1867, with a family that did not know a single word of Spanish or any but their mother tongue. After living there fourteen months he was sent to Philadelphia and placed in charge of a private tutor, for the study of chemistry and the natural sciences, of which he was very fond. He remained in the Quaker City two and a half years, and then went home, where he resided two years.

He did not however consider his education complete. Desiring a more thorough knowledge of science, and especially of chemistry, he determined to take a course of study in Europe. Accordingly he crossed the Atlantic and proceeded to Paris. He entered the college of France as a student. During his stay of three years, he heard some of the ablest men in the world lecture on the subjects of his inquiry. Mr. Guzman then returned home to Nicaragua, on a short vacation. He next proceeded to Philadelphia, where he entered Jefferson Medical College as a student of chemistry and medicine. This was in 1879. He pursued his studies at the Medical College for three years, and was graduated in the spring of 1882, with the degree of M. D. He married a daughter of the Rev. C. H. Ewing, of Philadelphia, soon afterward. Guzman then returned to Nicaragua and settled down to the practice of his profession, in which he was successfully engaged to within a few months ago.

Dr. Guzman is a gentleman of commanding appearance, fully six feet in stature, and of fine physical proportions. He is of dark complexion and has black hair and eyes. He is cordial and hearty in his speech, and carries himself in a courtly manner.

THE NICARAGUAN CANAL.

The Trend of the Age—Facilitating Travel—Prophetic Significance—The New Project—The Best Point of the Isthmus to Cross—Difficulties of the Panama Route—The Nicaraguan Canal Assisted by Nature—The Scheme Practicable—Dimensions of the Proposed Canal—The Route—The Mechanical Appliances—The Traffic Expected—The Work to be Commenced this Year.

THE vast extension of travel and exploration which prophecy indicated (Daniel 12 : 4) would be a characteristic of the last years of this dispensation, is one of the most prominent features of this age. Many run to and fro, and their desire to get from place to place with the greatest rapidity has taxed scientific ingenuity not only to devise means of speedy locomotion and communication, but to remove natural obstacles from the chief routes of travel. This century has witnessed the revolution in travelling produced by the application of steam, the annihilation of time and space, effected by the application of electricity, and has also seen the realization of the long-cherished project of cutting the canal across the narrow neck of land which barred navigation from Europe to India and China. It is in the line with these improvements and another evidence of the predominant desire for increased facilities of travel mentioned by the prophet, that an effort is now to be made to cut a highway for ships across Central America; thereby shortening the distance between our eastern coast and our western coast, also China, Australia and the islands of the Pacific. This is no new project, but it has never seemed so near to realization as now.

At the first glance at the map it would appear

The Best Place for a Canal

was at Panama, where the isthmus is at its narrowest. Indeed, M. De Lesseps, the famous French engineer who cut the Suez canal, is already at work there; but as American engineers predicted from the commencement, he has been met by difficulties almost, if not quite, insurmountable. The work was commenced in 1881, and in the six years that have been consumed only one-seventh of the work has been accomplished, and that the easiest part of it. The expense has already reached the enormous total of three hundred and fifty million dollars and appears likely far to exceed, before it is completed, the original estimate of eight hundred millions. It will also be necessary to incur a heavy standing expense to keep the canal open at each mouth, and as it is in a region of perpetual calms it will be practically useless for sailing vessels except by the use of tugs which will, with the tolls, involve a cost that will be a prohibition on traffic.

It seems like a paradox to say that though the Nicaraguan route is longer than that of Panama the canal there will be shorter, but that is the simple fact. Nature has already partly cut the Isthmus at that point by a large lake and by the river San Juan. The work to be done, therefore, is reduced to that of connecting those waters with the oceans on each side. This route has, beside, other recommendations. It has a good natural harbor at both its eastern and western ends and runs through a salubrious country, while the region through which the Panama canal runs is a most deadly climate.

The Dimensions of the Canal, as furnished to the Association for the Advancement of Science at its sessions in New York, indicate that the work will be of practical utility for any ship afloat except the Great Eastern. The actual length of the canal will be forty miles and a third—about half the length of the Suez canal—though the entire distance between the two oceans at this point is nearly one hundred and seventy miles; the large portion of one hundred and thirty miles being already navigable through Lake Nicaragua and the River San Juan. It will be about 120 feet wide at the bottom, varying in width at the surface according to the character of the country, but generally about 288 feet. Its depth at no place will be less than 28 feet. It will require the labor of from 10,000 to 15,000 men, and is expected to occupy eight years and to cost about seventy-five million dollars.

The Route.

Engineer Peary summarized the details of the project in a lucid address to the scientists on August 15, from which it appears that its western mouth will be at the port of Brito on the Pacific side, from which point the canal ascends the valley of the Rio Grande by four locks, and cutting through the low "divide," enters Lake Nicaragua, seventeen and a quarter miles from Brito, at an elevation of 110 feet above the sea. The route then extends across the lake, which is forty miles wide and over ninety miles long, to its outlet into the Rio San Juan, a distance of fifty-six and a half miles. Then down the broad, deep reaches of the majestic San Juan to the dam, sixty-four miles from the lake. This dam, 1,255 feet long and fifty-two feet high, backs the water of the river the entire distance to the lake, and makes it simply an extension of the lake.

On the north bank of the river, just above the dam, a short section of canal, less than two miles long, cuts through the hills into the Y-shaped valley of the Rio San Francisco, lying north of the San Juan and separated from it by a range of hills. An embankment 6,500 feet long and fifty-one feet high in the centre, built across the stem of the Y, floods this valley to the level of the water above the dam, and makes about ten miles of lake navigation.

At the eastern end of this lake begins the eastern division of the canal, and pierces the "divide" by a cut 14,200 feet long and averaging 149 feet in depth. At the eastern end of this cut is the upper lock of the Atlantic flight, and from here the canal descends the valley of the Deseado by three locks to the sea level, and stretches across the lagoon region back of Greytown to the harbor, eleven and a half miles distant. From the last lock to Greytown, the same as at Brito on the west side, the canal is enlarged, forming an extension of the harbor eleven and a half miles inland.

The lake and the river must form a part of any and every canal route through Nicaragua, and the location as a whole is the result of Civil Engineer Menocal's complete and exhaustive personal knowledge of the entire country, from ocean to ocean, gained in the course of eight different surveys, extending over a period of fifteen years, and supplemented by a conscientious study of all that has been done by others in that region. Of the forty miles of actual canal about twenty-seven miles will be excavation pure and simple, while the remaining thirteen miles will be largely if not entirely excavated by dredges.

The Locks

are to be magnificent structures of concrete, 650 feet long, 80 feet wide and 30 feet deep, capable of containing the largest merchant vessels. The gates are the only features of the locks that will invite discussion or criticism. But as captains are accustomed at Liverpool and Havre to conduct their vessels through the dock-gates, which is equally or more difficult than entering a lock, no difficulty is expected on that account, especially as at many English and French ports a vessel has to pass one and sometimes through two locks before she can reach the quay to discharge, to say nothing of numerous dry-docks and locks, abroad and at home, which are in constant and successful operation and are seldom the cause of disaster.

The Traffic.

The estimated time of through transit by steamer is thirty hours. The traffic of the canal is limited by the time required to pass a lock, and on the basis of forty-five minutes, and allowing but one vessel to each lockage, the number of vessels that can pass through the canal in one day will be thirty-two, or in one year 11,680, which at the average net tonnage of vessels passing the Suez Canal, will give an annual traffic of 20,440,000 tons. This is on the basis that the navigation will not be stopped during the night. On the lake and the river the vessels can proceed as fast as at sea.

The manager of the Nicaraguan Steamship Company, Mr. J. W. Miller, at the same meeting pointed out many advantages which the Nicaraguan route promised, beside those already mentioned. Among them was the fact that the lake divides the canal into two distinct sections, and consequently eliminates any danger from a block, vessels being locked directly up to the lake, where they can remain quietly at anchor, in fresh water, loading under the lee of the numerous islands with the products of the country, repairing any damages with timber of the best quality, or provisioning for the coming ocean voyage. The lake is then the great port, and in considering the question of harbors at either terminus, it will be well to remember that they can be limited in size to the accommodation of the ships which may daily arrive.

"The undeveloped water power of the lake is also a factor, the value of which can scarcely be estimated. The canal once built, there will be a fall of over 100 feet in a distance of nine miles on the Pacific slope; in a length of twenty-three on the Atlantic. This fall will be perfectly under control, and harnessed to serve commercial purposes. The products of the country will be changed into merchantable commodities by the waste energies of the lake. Passing vessels will anchor here and reduce the bulk of their cargoes from raw material into manufactured articles. Shipbuilding industries, factories and dockyards will line the lake, where the fleets of the world will meet."

Prompt Action

is contemplated by the Company. Mr. Menocal, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Navy, though prevented by sickness from attending the sessions of the Association, told a reporter that work would be commenced in December next. Two years would be occupied in making a minute survey of the route, which would be done by a corps of ten engineers, each with a large party of skilled assistants, after which the actual excavation would begin and the canal be in working order by the beginning of 1896. As has been already said, the government of Nicaragua is heartily in favor of the enterprise, and in granting the concession to Mr. Menocal promised to facilitate it in every way within its power. It required a deposit of a hundred thousand dollars as a pledge of good faith, which was immediately furnished.

It is almost unnecessary to point out that this new highway, like others that have been opened, will entail responsibilities on the Church of Christ. In Central America, which the canal will cross, there are thousands of heathens who have never heard of Christ. Mr. Clough, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on July 7, relates that as he stood on the deck of the steamer, during his voyages along the coast of Central and South America, gazing at the wonderful tropical forests (a picture of one of these appears on the first page), he saw groups of savages absolutely naked, emerge from the dense growths and gaze longingly and wonderingly on the ship. These are living in a state of barbarism—a virgin field for missions. Nor are the cities of Central America (of one of which there is also a picture on the first page) evangelized. Churches there are, it is true, but in scarcely any is Christ the Saviour of sinners proclaimed. The time grows short; it becomes us to use every facility placed by science at our disposal, to spread the knowledge of Christ, and to gather out a people for His name.

The Crown Prince of Germany has Again submitted to an operation upon his throat. This fact is regarded as ominous, because, when the last operation was performed, Dr. Mackenzie expressed the opinion that no further operations would be necessary. It indicates that the growth continues, as cancers do after they have been cut. The New York Medical Record, commenting on the case, says: "The nature of the operation would preclude the possibility of any microscopic examination of the diseased tissue being made. We are thus thrown, in our estimate of the final results, upon the purely clinical characters of the growth. In fact, thus far everything appears to be favorable, save a marked tendency to recurrence of the disease. The latter, however, is of the greatest possible significance in estimating the probabilities regarding the ultimate malignancy of the growth. We regret to say that the outlook is not as encouraging as it might be."

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller. This reduction in price is made to encourage the study of this important subject.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

With Father in His Room.—Mr. Campbell, speaking at the Glasgow Christian Institute, said: "A little child knocked at the door of his father's room, and when he opened it and asked the boy, 'What do you want?' the answer immediately came, 'Oh, nothing; only to sit beside you, father.' The father admitted him, and placed him tenderly in a chair by the side of his table, where the child played, and felt perfectly happy, because he was in the presence of his beloved father. Similarly, it is good for Christians, though they may have no special petition to ask from the Lord, to come into His presence, and abide there, simply basking in the sunshine of His sweet smile."

An Instructive Dream.—A Christian Worker tells the story of a poor woman who had for many years been away from Christ, but who became anxious to return to Him. "One night she dreamed she was walking on the verge of a precipice, when slipping, she fell over. Down, down she went, growing dizzy with the velocity of her descent. About half-way down she managed to catch hold of a twig which grew from the side of the precipice, and, retaining her hold there, she hung suspended between heaven and earth. As she hung there, she thought she heard a voice calling, 'Let go, and I will receive you.' She did so, and felt herself buoyed up in the arms of the caller. She was led to see that all she had to do was to let go and allow herself to be borne up in the arms of the Lord."

Running up his Colors.—A Minister Observes: "A young friend of mine, referring to his first appearance in an office in which he was to be employed, said to me, 'From the beginning I knew that the clerks were all looking at me, and wondering what I was made of, and what I was going to do. So, while they were talking and whispering, I went up to them, and said, "I know what you are thinking and saying, so I may as well tell you at once:" and taking out my Bible, I read that verse which says, "Ye must be born again." And then I said, "I am one of those who have been born again." They all laughed, but I told them that I was in earnest, and their laughing did not hurt me. I had taken my stand; they knew what I was, and if I wanted to draw back, I could not.'"

Only Six Months to Live.—The Rev. Mr. Scrymgour says: "I know a lady who had for some time been ailing. She went to a doctor and consulted him, telling him how she was affected. The doctor looked at her steadfastly, and quietly said, 'You have a disease upon you which, humanly speaking, it is impossible to cure; I am deeply grieved to tell you that it will kill you in six months. Had you come to me before, I should most probably have been able to cure you: but it is now too late.' The lady hoped the doctor's words would not be verified, but at the end of six months she did die, as the physician had told her. Oh, how glad that lady would have been if some one had told her in time of the disease that was slowly but surely encroaching upon her, and had presented her with the cure that would cure it. We now offer the Gospel of salvation to you, the certain cure for the disease of sin, that is insidiously creeping upon and threatening entirely to destroy you."

Saved from Imminent Death.—An Evangelist remarks: "I had a friend who was engaged with some other workmen on the top of a house. He had some work to do, to get at which it was necessary for him to be slung over the side of the house. They had no ropes, nor any of the usual apparatus with which to do this; the only thing which they could procure was a pair of laborer's slings, and with those they lowered him. And, as the man who lowered him looked down, he was horrified to find that the buckle had loosened, and that there was nothing to prevent the leather gliding through the buckle and the man being precipitated to the earth. He was afraid to shout, lest the man, perceiving his danger, should make some frantic effort, that would only assure his destruction; so, leaning over, and, striving to speak calmly, he said, 'Here, John, come up and look at this.' Up he came, hand over hand, and as he passed the buckle and saw in what danger he had been, he grew pale and almost fainted. He saw how utterly useless would all his strength and skill have been to cope with that overwhelming danger. Similarly, when a sinner passes from death to life, he realizes in what imminent peril was his immortal soul, and is full of thankfulness."

The Toll-Gatherer's Daughter.—Mr. Hefford says: "Once, while I was in the Midlands, I was asked by a friend to visit a young woman, the daughter of a toll-gatherer, who was lying very ill, and, the friend feared, in an unsaved state. Arriving at the house, and being admitted, I bent over the bed and said, 'You are very ill.' 'Yes, very,' she faintly replied. 'Are you aware that your time here is very short?' 'Yes,' 'Are you prepared for changing worlds?' 'I think so.' 'May I ask on whom or on what you are resting?' For a few moments she gazed into my face, and then seeing I waited for a reply, at length she said slowly, 'I never did any harm.' 'Oh, no,' interposed the weeping mother, 'she was always a good girl, so different from others. Never has she been disobedient. She has always attended school and church, read good books and said her prayers at night.' When the mother had finished, the eyes of the sufferer had closed never to open again. Who would choose to die resting on his own goodness? There is no safe resting-place but the finished work of Christ. 'He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, but he that believeth not is condemned already.'"

A Sheep-Stealing Case Decided.—Mr. Bennett observes: "I heard lately of an interesting case of sheep-stealing in Asia. The accused and the accuser were brought before the judge. In the course of the examination the judge asked, 'Are there no witnesses?' 'None, my lord,' said he from whom the sheep had been stolen. 'Is the sheep still alive?' then inquired the judge. Being told that it was, he commanded that it be brought in. When this was done, the supposed thief was asked to retire outside the door and call to the animal, for if it were his it would know his voice, and follow him. He did so, and called the sheep several time, but to no purpose. The sheep did not recognize his voice, and would not obey the call. 'It is certainly not your sheep,' said the judge, and commanded the complainant to go without and call it. There was no room for doubting that this man was the owner, for at the first sound of his voice the sheep sought its master. In like manner do they who belong to the Great Shepherd of the sheep, for Jesus Himself has said, 'They hear My voice and I know them, and they follow Me; but a stranger will they not follow, for they know not the voice of a stranger.'"

The Deacon and the Blacksmith.—Mr. Duncan relates: "Sometimes I feel just like the good deacon, who, having the salvation of a certain man very much at heart, stayed up one whole night praying for him. In the morning he saddled his horse and rode off to the place where this man, a blacksmith, resided. Meeting him, he said, I have been very much troubled concerning your soul, and now I have come to speak with you on that subject.' He began to speak about the Lord Jesus. He had prepared certain subjects upon which to speak, but when face to face with the man, he found they had all left his mind; although he was full himself of the power of God, he was unable to present Christ to his friend. So overcome was the worthy deacon that he burst into tears; then the Holy Spirit took up the work, and found the words that pointed the wanderer to the Cross. So, while the servants of the Lord may feel their own weakness and inability even to bear witness for Him, let us trust not in ourselves, but give self and all our weakness into His hands, that He may control our every action, so that it may be, not our working, but Christ's working in us."

THE QUEENS OF HOME.

A Vacation Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

(A Sequel to last week's Sermon on Woman's Opportunities.)

"There are three-score queens." Solomon's Song, 6:8.

Woman's Realm—Her Regal Functions—I. Comforting the Sick—A Traveller's Death in the West—The Sick Man's Craving for Home—Woman's Ministry on the Battle-Field—Heroines of the Christian Commission—II. Caring for the Poor—Helen Chalmers in the Slums—Safety of Ministering Women Among Criminals—Successful in Soliciting Charity—III. Consoling in Disaster—Tell Your Wife—The Deborah in the Home—IV. Bringing Heaven Near—A Sailor Haunted—An Immortal Marriage—A Dying Husband's Reproach.—V. Reaching Heaven—The Crown Prepared.

So Solomon, by one stroke, set forth the imperial character of a true Christian woman. She is not a slave, not a hireling, not a subordinate, but a queen. In a former sermon I showed you that crown and courtly attendants, and imperial wardrobe were not necessary to make a queen; but that graces of the heart and life will give coronation to any woman. I showed you at some length that woman's position was higher in the world than man's, and that although she had often been denied the right of suffrage, she always did vote and always would vote by her influence; and that her chief desire ought to be that she should have grace rightly to rule in the dominion which she has already won. I began an enumeration of some of her rights, and this morning I resume the subject.

I. In the first place, woman has the special and the superlative right—not again going back to what I have already said—woman has the special and superlative right of blessing and Comforting the Sick.

What land, what street, what house, has not felt the smitings of disease? Tens of thousands of sick-beds! What shall we do with them? Shall man, with his rough hand and clumsy foot, go stumbling around the sick-room, trying to soothe the distracted nerves and alleviate the pains of the tossing patient? The young man at college may scoff at the idea of being under maternal influences; but at the first blast of typhoid fever on his cheek, he says, "Where is mother?" Walter Scott wrote partly in satire and partly in compliment:

> "O woman, in our hours of ease,
> Uncertain, coy and hard to please;
> When pain and anguish wring the brow,
> A ministering angel thou."

I think the most pathetic passage in all the Bible is the description of the lad who went out to the harvest field of Shunem and got sunstruck—throwing his hands on his temples and crying out: "Oh, my head! my head!" And they said: "Carry him to his mother." And then the record is: "He sat on her knees till noon, and then died." It is an awful thing to be ill away from home in a strange hotel, once in a while men coming in to look at you, holding their hand over their mouth for fear they will catch the contagion. How roughly they turn you in bed. How loudly they talk. How you long for

The Ministries of Home.

I know one such who went away from one of the brightest of homes, for several weeks' business absence at the West. A telegram came at midnight that he was on his death-bed far away from home. By express train the wife and daughters went westward; but they went too late. He feared not to die, but he was in an agony to live until his family got there. He tried to bribe the doctor to make him live a little while longer. He said: "I am willing to die, but not alone." But the pulses fluttered, the eyes closed, and the heart stopped. The express trains met in the midnight; wife and daughters going westward—lifeless remains of husband and father coming eastward. Oh, it was a sad, pitiful, overwhelming spectacle! When we are sick we want to be sick at home. When the time comes for us to die we want to die at home. The room may be very humble, and the faces that look into ours may be very plain; but who cares for that? Loving hands to bathe the temples. Loving voices to speak good cheer. Loving lips to read the promises of Jesus.

In Our Last Dreadful War, men cast the cannon, men fashioned the musketry, men cried to the hosts, "Forward, march!" men hurled their battalions on the sharp edges of the enemy, crying, "Charge! charge!" but woman scraped the lint, woman administered the cordials, woman watched by the dying couch, woman wrote the last message to the home circle, woman wept at the solitary burial, attended by herself and four men with a spade. We greeted the generals home with brass bands and triumphal arches and wild huzzas; but the story is too good to be written anywhere, save in the chronicles of heaven, of Mrs. Brady, who came down among the sick in the swamps of the Chickahominy; of Annie Ross, in the cooper-shop hospital; of Margaret Breckinridge, who came to men who had been for weeks with their wounds undressed—some of them frozen to the ground, and when she turned them over, those that had an arm left, waved it and filled the air with their "hurrah!"—of Mrs. Hodge, who came from Chicago, with blankets and with pillows, until the men shouted, "Three cheers for the Christian Commission!

God Bless the Women

at home;" then sitting down to take the last message: "Tell my wife not to fret about me, but to meet me in heaven; tell her to train up the boys whom we have loved so well; tell her we shall meet again in the good land; tell her to bear my loss like the Christian wife of a Christian soldier"—and of Mrs. Shelton, into whose face the convalescent soldier looked, and said: "Your grapes and cologne cured me." Men did their work with shot and shell and carbine and howitzer; women did their work with socks and slippers and bandages and warm drinks and Scripture texts and gentle strokings of the hot temples and stories of that land where they never have any pain. Men knelt down over the wounded and said, "On which side did you fight?" Women knelt down over the wounded and said, "Where are you hurt? What nice thing can I make for you to eat? What makes you cry?" To-night, while we men are sound asleep in our beds, there will be a fight in yonder loft; there will be groaning down that dark alley; there will be cries of distress in that cellar. Men will sleep, and women will watch.

II. Again: woman has a special right to take Care of the Poor.

There are hundreds and thousands of them all over the land. There is a kind of work that men cannot do for the poor. Here comes a group of little barefoot children to the door of the Dorcas society. They need to be clothed and provided for. Which of these directors of banks would know how many yards it would take to make that little girl a dress? Which of these masculine hands could fit a hat to that little girl's head? Which of the wise men would know how to tie on that new pair of shoes? Man sometimes gives his charity in a rough way, and it falls like the fruit of a tree in the East, which fruit comes down so heavily that it breaks the skull of the man who is trying to gather it. But woman glides so softly into the house of destitution, and finds out all the sorrows of the place, and puts so quietly the donation on the table, that all the family come out on the front steps as she departs, expecting that from under her shawl she will thrust out two wings and go right up toward heaven, from whence she seems to have come down.

O, Christian young woman! if you would make yourself happy, and win the blessing of Christ, go out

Among the Destitute.

A loaf of bread or a bundle of socks may make a homely load to carry, but the angels of God will come out to watch, and the Lord Almighty will give His messenger hosts a charge, saying, "Look after that woman; canopy her with your wings, and shelter her from all harm;" and while you are seated in the house of destitution and suffering, the little ones around the room will whisper, "Who is she? Ain't she beautiful!" and if you will listen right sharply, you will hear dripping down through the leaky roof, and rolling over the rotten stairs, the angel chant that shook Bethlehem: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will to men." Can you tell me why a Christian woman, going down among on a Christian errand, never meets with any indignity? I stood in the chapel of Helen Chalmers, the daughter of the celebrated Dr. Chalmers, in the most abandoned part of the city of Edinburgh, and I said to her as I looked around upon the fearful surroundings of that place, "Do you come here nights to hold a service?" "O, yes, she said. "Can it be possible that you never meet with an insult while performing this Christian errand?" "Never," she said, never." That young woman who has her father by her side, walking down the street, armed police at each corner, is not so well defended as that Christian woman who goes forth on Gospel work into the haunts of iniquity, carrying the Bibles and bread. God, with the red right arm of His wrath omnipotent, would tear to pieces any one who should offer indignity. He would smite him with lightnings, and drown him with floods, and swallow him with earthquakes, and damn him with eternal indignations.

The Haunts of Iniquity,

Some one said: "I dislike very much to see that Christian woman teaching those bad boys in the mission school. I am afraid to have her instruct them." "So," said another man, "I am afraid, too." Said the first: "I am afraid they will use vile language before they leave the place." "Ah," said the other man, "I am not afraid of that. What I am afraid of is, that if any of those boys should use a bad word in her presence, the other boys would tear him to pieces and kill him on the spot." That woman is the best sheltered who is sheltered by the Lord God Almighty, and you need never fear going anywhere where God tells you to go.

It seems as if the Lord had ordained woman for an especial work in the

Solicitation of Charities

Backed up by barrels in which there is no flour, and by stoves in which there is no fire, and by wardrobes in which there are no clothes, a woman is irresistible; passing on her errand, God says to her: "You go into that bank or store or shop and get the money." She goes in and gets it. The man is hard-fisted, but she gets it. She could not help but get it. It is decreed from eternity she should get it. No need of your turning your back and pretending you don't hear; you do hear. There is no need of your saying you are begged to death. There is no need of your wasting your time, and you might as well submit first as last. You had better right away take down your cheque-book, mark the number of the cheque, fill up the blank, sign your name, and hand it to her. There is no need of wasting time. Those poor children on the back street have been hungry long enough. That sick man must have some farina. That consumptive must have something to ease his cough. I meet this delegate of a relief society coming out of the store of such a hard-fisted man, and I say; "Did you get the money?" "Of course," she says, "I got the money; that's what I went for. The Lord told me to go in and get it, and He never sends me on a fool's errand."

III. Again: I have to tell you that it is a woman's specific

Right to Comfort

under the stress of dire disaster. She is called the weaker vessel; but all profane as well as sacred history attests that when the crisis comes she is better prepared than man to meet the emergency. How often you have seen a woman who seemed to be a disciple of frivolity and indolence, who, under one stroke of calamity, changed to a heroine. Oh, what a great mistake those business men make who never tell their business troubles to their wives! There comes some great loss to their store, or some of their companions in business play them a sad trick, and they carry the burden all alone. He is asked in the household again and again: What is the matter? But he believes it a sort of Christian duty to keep all that trouble within his own soul. Oh, sir! your first duty was to tell your wife all about it. She, perhaps might not have distangled your finances, or extended your credit, but she would have helped you to bear misfortune. You have no right to carry on one shoulder that which is intended for two. There are business men here who know what I mean. There came

A Crisis in Your Affairs.

You struggled bravely and long; but after a while there came a day when you said, "Here I shall have to stop;" and you called in your partners, and you called in the most prominent men in your employ, and you said: "We have got to stop." You left the store suddenly. You could hardly make up your mind to pass throught the street and over on the ferry-boat. You felt everybody would be looking at you, and blaming you, and denouncing you. You hasten home. You told your wife all about the affair. What did she say? Did she play the butterfly? Did she talk about the silks and the ribbons and the fashions? No. She came up to the emergency. She quailed not under the stroke. She offered to go out of the comfortable house into a smaller one, and wear the old cloak another winter. She was one who understood your affairs without blaming you. You looked upon what you thought was a thin, weak woman's arm holding you up: but while you looked at that arm, there came into the feeble muscles of it the strength of the eternal God. No chiding. No fretting. No telling you about the beautiful house of her father, from which you brought her ten twenty, or thirty years ago. You said: "Well, this is the happiest day of my life. I am glad I have got from under my burden. My wife don't care—I don't care." At the moment you were exhausted,

God Sent a Deborah to meet the host of the Amalekites and scatter them like chaff over the plain. There are sometimes women who sit reading sentimental novels, and who wish that they had some grand field in which to display their Christian powers. O, what grand and glorious things they could do if they only had an opportunity! My sister, you need not wait for any such time. A crisis will come in your affairs. There will be a Thermopylæ in your own household where God will tell you to stand. There are scores and hundreds of households to-day where as much bravery and courage are demanded of women as was exhibited by Grace Darling, or Marie Antoinette, or Joan of Arc.

IV. Again: I remark it is woman's right to Bring to Us the Kingdom of heaven. It is easier for a woman to be a Christian than for a man. Why? You say she is weaker. No. Her heart is more responsive to the pleadings of Divine love. She is in vast majority. The fact that she can more easily become a Christian, I prove by the statement that three-fourths of the members of the churches in all Christendom are women. So God appoints them to be the chief agencies for bringing this world back to God. I may stand here and say the soul is immortal. There is a man who will refute it. I may stand here and say we are lost and undone without Christ. There is a man who will refute it. I may stand here and say there will be a Judgment day after a while. Yonder is some one who will refute it. But a Christian woman in a Christian household, living in the faith and the consistency of Christ's gospel—nobody can refute that. The greatest sermons are not preached on celebrated platforms; they are preached with an audience of two or three, and in private home life. A consistent, consecrated Christian service is an unanswerable demonstration of God's truth.

A sailor came slipping down the ratlines one night, as though something had happened, and the sailors cried: "What's the matter?" He said:

"My Mother's Prayers Haunt Me like a ghost." Home influences, consecrated Christian home influences, are the mightiest of all influences upon the soul. There are men here to-day who have maintained their integrity, not because they were any better naturally than some other people, but because there were home influences praying for them all the time. They got a good start. They were launched on the world with the benedictions of a Christian mother. They may track Siberian snows, they may plunge in African jungles, they may fly to the earth's end—they cannot go so far and so fast but the prayers will keep up with them.

I stand before women to-day who have the eternal salvation of their husbands in their right hand. On the marriage day you took an oath before men and angels that you would be faithful and kind until death did you part, and I believe you are going to keep that oath; but after that parting at the grave, will it be an eternal separation? Is there any such thing as making the flowers that grow on the top of the sepulchre brighter than the garlands which at the marriage banquet flooded the air with aroma? Yes; I stand here as a priest of the most high God, to proclaim the banns of an immortal union for all those who join hands in the grace of Christ. O woman, is your husband, your father, your son, away from God? The Lord demands their redemption at your hands. There are prayers for you to offer, there are exhortations for you to give, there are examples for you to set, and I say now, as Paul said to the Corinthian woman: "What knowest thou, but thou canst save thy husband?"

An Immortal Marriage,

A man was dying; and he said to his wife: "Rebecca, you wouldn't let me have family prayers; you laughed about all that, and you got me away into wordliness; and now I'm going to die, and my fate is sealed, and you are the cause of my ruin?" O woman, what knowest thou but thou canst destroy thy husband? Are there not some here who have at home? Are there not some here who have wandered far away from God, who can remember the Christian influences in their early home? Do not despise those influences, my brother. If you die without Christ what will you do with your mother's prayers, with your wife's importunities, with your sister's entreaties? What will you do with the letters they used to write to you, with the memory of those days when they attended you so kindly in times of sickness? Oh, if there be just one strand holding you from floating off on that dark sea, I would just like this morning to take hold of that strand and pull you to the beach! For the sake of your wife's God, for the sake of your mother's God, for the sake of your daughter's God, for the sake of your sister's God, come this day and be saved.

Kindly Influences

V. Lastly: I wish to say that one of the specific rights of woman is, through the grace of Christ, finally to reach heaven. O, what a multitude of Women in Heaven!

Mary, Christ's mother, in heaven, Elizabeth Fry in heaven, Charlotte Elizabeth in heaven, the mother of Augustine in heaven, the Countess of Huntingdon—who sold her splendid jewels to build chapels—in heaven, while a great many others, who have never been heard of on earth, or known but little, have gone into the rest and peace of heaven. What a rest! What a change it was from the small room, with no fire and one window (the glass broken out), and the aching side, and wornout eyes, to the "house of many mansions!" No more stitching until twelve o'clock at night, no more thrusting of the thumb by the employer through the work, to show it was not done quite right. Plenty of bread at last! Heaven for aching heads! heaven for broken hearts! heaven for anguish-bitten frames! No more sitting up until midnight for the coming of staggering steps? No more rough blows across the temples! No more sharp, keen, bitter curses!

Some of you will have no rest in this world. It will be toil and struggle and suffering all the way up. You will have to stand at your door fighting back the wolf with your own hand, red with carnage. But God has a crown for you. I want you to realize this morning that He is now making it, and whenever you weep a tear He sets another gem in that crown; whenever you have a pang of body or soul, He puts another gem in that crown; until, after a while, in all the tiara there will be no room for another splendor, and God will say to His angel, "The crown is done; let her up, that she may wear it." And as the Lord of Righteousness puts the crown upon your brow, angel will cry to angel, "Who is she?" and Christ will say, "I will tell you who she is. She is the one that came up out of great tribulation, and had her robe washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb." And then God will spread and He will invite all the principalities of heaven to sit at the feast, and the tables will blush with the best clusters from the vineyards of God and crimson with the twelve manner of fruits from the Tree of Life, and waters from the fountains of the rock will flash from the golden tankards, and the old harpers of heaven will sit there, making music with their harps, and Christ will point you out, amid the celebrities of heaven, saying: "She suffered with Me on earth, now we are going to be glorified together." And the banqueters, no longer able to hold their peace, will break forth with congratulation: "Hail! hail!" And there will be handwritings on the wall—not such as struck the Babylonian noblemen with horror—but fire-tipped fingers, writing in blazing capitals of light and love, "God hath wiped away all tears from all faces!"

A Banquet,

DISMAYED STUDENTS.

A PHYSICIAN in relating his reminiscences of college life says: "I remember a professor devoting a whole week of the session to the subject of the varieties of heart disease. He had a private apartment opening off the class-room, to which he was wont to retire after he had finished his lecture, in order to take off his gown and enjoy a little meditation by the fire. On the afternoon of the second day a modest knock came to the door. 'Enter,' said Professor Blank. And, hat in hand, appeared one of his students, looking somewhat worried and pale. 'What can I do for you, Mr. M.?' 'Nothing, I fear,' was the reply; 'nothing on earth can aid me. I have the very symptoms that you were describing to-day. Sound me, and see, sir.' The 'sounding' was soon performed. 'You're in perfect health as regards your heart.' That was the verdict of the professor, and Mr. M. went away happy.

"But hardly had the kindly old professor resumed his seat before another knock resounded on the door. 'Come in. Well, what's the matter with you, Mr. C.?' 'I'm a dead man,' gasped Mr. C., looking wildly round as if he wanted to clutch something, 'I've got heart disease, as sure as a gun.' 'Not quite as bad as that, I trust. Take off your coat.' Auscultation and percussion were speedily performed; then the professor laughed in C.'s face. 'Sound as a bell, man,' he said.

"The doctor did not sit down again, however. No, he was afraid there would be more of them, so he hurried along through the quad, and got into his carriage. But he had two more visits at his residence on the same night from frightened students, and every day during the remainder of that week he had a visit or two of the same kind. On the following Monday he lectured on fevers, and the students completely recovered from their cardiac complaints."

Unhappily, clergymen who deal with the same subject in a spiritual sense, and whose hearers are really suffering (Jer. 17: 9) do not find the same alarm manifested, though they are able to prescribe a sure cure (Ezek. 11: 19).

1896 THE PROBABLE YEAR OF CHRIST'S SECOND ADVENT.

By the Late Rev. Joseph Baylee, D. D., Vicar of Sheepscombe, England, and formerly Principal of St. Aidan's College, Birkenhead.

Extract from his Work published in 1871.

An Unwarranted Objection to the Study of Prophetic Dates—The Revelation to Christ After His Ascension—General Desire for Light—The Commencement of the 1260 Years—The Descent of Christ into the Air—The Re-Formation of Cæsar's Empire—The Increased Activity of Demons—An Awfully Important Question.

The study of unfulfilled prophecy must be a duty, inasmuch as it occupies so great a part of Divine revelation. Yet the number of students of prophecy is but an infinitesimal portion of even the devout readers of the Bible.

One great objection to many minds against inquiring into prophetical dates is our Lord's declaration, "But of that day and hour knoweth no man: no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father" (Mark 13: 32). Had we no subsequent revelation, this passage might seem to militate against inquiry into the date of the Second Advent. Our Lord, however, made that declaration when He was "in the days of His flesh." Since His ascension to glory, He received which removes the obscurity: "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto Him, to show unto His servants things which must shortly come to pass" (see Revelation 1: 1). The Revelation or Apocalypse was given sixty years after His ascension to the Apostle John in Patmos. In that Apocalypse there are some dates which give precision to the dates mentioned in the Hebrew prophets, besides other statements which contribute to the same result. It is, therefore, obviously a mistake to argue that we cannot now know prophetic dates, because they had not been revealed when Christ was on earth. Especially as the solemn and stirring events of our own day are arousing a widespread attention to the signs of the times, and the number is increasing of those who long for more light.

A New Revelation,

It is now (1871) forty-one years since I first believed in the Coming Personal Reign of Christ. Throughout that time I have employed all the means in my power to ascertain the truth regarding the predicted time. A comparison of our Lord's words in Luke 21: 24 with Revelation 11: 2 led me to apply the Conquest of Jerusalem by the Saracens in A. D. 636 as the commencement of the Mohammedan 1260 years, which consequently Terminate in 1896.

Still further, Nebuchadnezzar's 2520 years date from the era of his reign, and end simultaneously with the 1260 days—i. e., A.D. 1896.

About A. D. 1896 the Lord will gather His saints to meet Him in the air (1 Thess. 4: 17). If they are to meet Him in the air, He must have come down to the air, and, therefore, have left His present place, "far above all heavens." Now, we learn from Zechariah 14: 4, that at the last siege of Jerusalem His feet are to stand upon the Mount of Olives. Before that great event will probably be this rapture of the saints so strikingly described in Psalm 1: 1–6: "The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth, from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. Out of Sion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before Him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about Him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that He may judge His people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare His righteousness; for God is Judge Himself." From the heavens above shall come down His saints, from earth beneath His saints shall be taken up, and all those that have made a covenant with the Lord by sacrifice shall be gathered together.

That gathering up will be "in a moment; in the twinkling of an eye." Then will be fulfilled our Lord's words, "One shall be taken and another left" (Luke 17: 24, 26, etc.).

Naturally, evening ends in darkness. But on one great future day evening will end in morning. When Jesus stands with His feet on the Mount of Olives there shall be "one day (i. e., a peculiar day) which shall be known unto the Lord, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass that at evening-time it shall be light" (Zech. 14: 7). The evening issuing not in darkness but in the morning of the day shall see

The Sanctuary Finally Cleansed.

To those who are left it will be an unspeakably awful moment. All the well-meaning but self-deceived persons who unite in public worship, and reverentially go to the Lord's table, will suddenly find themselves left behind, and be as the foolish virgins. We have some reason to think that even converted persons, whose unwatchfulness did not permit the Christ-like mind to shine through them, will be left behind to endure the judgments of the vine of the earth. Within twenty-five years from this time (1871) we have reason to hope that this rapture of the saints will take place. May we all remember the Lord's warning, and keep our garments unspotted from the world.

To Nebuchadnezzar was shown the great Image. Its head was of fine gold, representing the Babylonian Empire. Its breast and arms of silver—its loins of brass; its legs of iron, its feet part of iron and part of clay. The Babylonian, Persian, Grecian, and Roman Empires were thus revealed to Nebuchadnezzar as constituting in reality one continuous system, differing in form and qualities, but one in community. The two arms of silver symbolize the Medes and Persians, the loins represent Greece, European and Asiatic, the two legs,

Cæsar's Roman Empire,

West and East, the two feet and ten toes, Rome and Constantinople with five powers round each. The last condition of the Roman Empire is therefore to be with five toes on each foot, i. e., five western and five eastern toes. we are now approaching rapidly to this last condition of the Prophetic Image. The five toes are the five western powers—England, France, Spain, Italy, and part of Germany (Austria). The Eastern Question will hurry on the formation of the five toes of the Eastern foot, namely, Austro-Hungary, and the four Alexandrine horns—Greece, Turkey, Syria, and Egypt.

Preparatory to the outpouring of the Seventh Vial, and to the last scenes of the times of the Gentiles, this vision is given of the larger liberty given to wicked spirits as a last judgment upon those who received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. Demoniac possession appears to have been more extensive in our Lord's days than in any previous or subsequent age. Judas was possessed by Satan himself. An analogous fact is here revealed. "Spirits of demons working wonders" are permitted to go forth to the kings of the [Roman] earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Such is the awful state of things now spreading through society.

In the midst of these predictions is the warning to the Lord's people, "Behold I come as a thief: blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments." It is whether a really converted child of God may so walk as to forfeit the privilege of being caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so be left to the judgment of the vine of the earth, partaking of the sufferings of the outer darkness—i. e., the tribulations by which men are to learn righteousness. Many of the warnings of Scripture seem to imply the possibility. See Mark 13: 35-37; Luke: 21 34-36; Matt. 22: 11-13. When we remember the twofold character of our renewal—first, the mind within; second, the power of the renewed mind seen without, the latter the garment—it seems but too probable that many "babes in Christ" (and therefore born again) will be found "carnal, and walking as men?" (1 Cor. 3: 1–3). At all events, it can do us no harm to take the warning, and be more careful to keep our garments undefiled (Rev. 3: 4).

An Awfully Important Question

MR. STUDD'S CONFESSION.

In a letter from Shanghai, China, dated May 29 last, there is a remarkable narrative, showing how great is the power of a really consecrated life on one who comes within the circle of its influence. On April 9, 1885, the portrait and life of Mr. C. T. Studd were published in this journal. Our readers will remember that this was the young undergraduate who, through Mr. Moody's influence, abandoned his brilliant prospects in life to go as a missionary to China. A few months ago he received a visit there from his brother, who thus writes of himself in the letter mentioned above:

"It is now about ten years ago, and when I was a schoolboy, that I first realized the Lord Jesus Christ as my personal Saviour. I realized that He had died to wash my sins away; I accepted His salvation, but there I stopped. I tried to live better, but I was only trying in my own strength, and I failed. It was not long before I was trying to live both for God and mammon, to have all the advantages of the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ, and yet not willing to confess Him before my fellow-men, nor to do anything for Him. I tried to get all the pleasure I could out of the world, and to rest happy that my sins had been forgiven. As a Christian, I felt that there were some things that I ought not to do, and yet I had not strength to resist temptation when it came, for the very simple reason that I was not looking to Jesus.

About four years ago I started in life, as men say. It had always been my ambition to go to the Bar, and so I began to read law. I had only been reading for a few months when I was overtaken by a very serious illness—an illness that laid me on what, for some time, seemed to be my death-bed. Then it was I began to think of my past life, and I could not but see that it had been very unsatisfactory and full of ingratitude to God. I resolved that, if God would raise me up, I would live a better life and begin to do some Christian work. But they were resolutions with reservations: I was not prepared to live entirely for God.

In His infinite mercy God did raise me up, and I did begin to do a little Christian work; but it was very little, done fitfully, and left undone when any small excuse offered. Last October I was again overtaken by illness, and was ordered to go away to Australia for the winter. I spent four months in Australia, and was just starting again for home when I got a letter from my brother in China, saying that if I would return by China he would come down to within a reasonable distance of the coast and see me. Right glad I was to get that letter, for I wanted to see my brother; I had not seen him for two years and a half, and I was not likely to meet him again for years. I arrived at Shanghai about ten days ago (on May 19) and found to my surprise that my brother had come here to meet me. When it was suggested that I should stay with my brother at the Inland Mission House I was somewhat alarmed, for I was afraid of being thrown too freely into the society of such earnest Christian workers. I did not know what they might not want me to do, and I was afraid of being identified too much with Christians by men of the world.

For the first day or two it was all right, though I could not help noticing the calm and the peace amongst the people with whom I was living. No troubles or difficulties seemed really to bother them. They had their trials and difficulties, but these did not seem to burden them. With me it was quite different: I was sometimes vexed and troubled by small, petty things. I asked the secret of this peace, and was told: "Oh! whenever we have a difficulty we lay it definitely before the Lord in prayer, and He always does according to His promise: 'Cast thy burden upon the Lord and He shall sustain thee.'"

That was all very well, but I did not understand it. I believed in prayer, but I knew nothing of it as such a power in everything. Unconsciously I began to wish that I might have this peace, this settled calm. I knew I had not got it myself, and I saw that it was something worth having. I began to ask how I might get it, and was told to submit myself entirely to the Lord Jesus, and trust Him for everything. I did not want to submit myself wholly. I didn't know what it might lead to; it might lead to my going to missionary work in China, and I didn't want to do that, as I was determined to go home and go back to the Bar.

I then heard there were to be some revival meetings in Shanghai, and that made me quite determined to go away at once. I thought they might want me to take part in them, which I was afraid to do; so I took my passage in the Japan Mail starting on Friday last. However, I began to feel such a craving, such a hungering for this peace, that I made up my mind at all costs that I must have it, and after much prayer I surrendered myself to the Lord Jesus, trusting that He would make my will His own. That was on Wednesday, and since that time I have had such peace, such joy in my soul, that I can't express it in words. I know it has made me feel altogether a different creature, and really, last Thursday and Friday I could scarcely believe that I was not in a trance, that I should not suddenly wake up the old self; but no, thank God! it is no trance, but just this: the Lord Jesus Christ is my Keeper. I felt that I must confess before men what the Lord Jesus had done for me. At once I went and got my passage transferred, and I am staying on here to tell out God's love for me. I can now understand what I never could before—the self-denial of my brother and others, who have given up home and comforts in order to preach the Gospel in China, and to live as Chinamen. Why, I see now it is truly their greatest pleasure to tell of the Love of Jesus, to be always on His service—it is no hardship for them—they have given up a sham that they might obtain a reality. Their sole aim now, and I pray God that mine may be for the future, is to be telling of the love of the Lord Jesus, and of the salvation which He is offering to every man who will only believe. Don't let any one refuse that salvation because he is afraid of what his fellow-men will say. Do trust Jesus, and trust Him fully. "O, taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that trusteth in Him."

SOME PRECIOUS GIFTS IN AID OF CHRISTIAN WORK IN MEXICO.

A Letter From The Rt. Rev. H. C. Riley, D. D.

AMONG those who have read of the pressing need of contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico several persons have, as they were able, forwarded gifts for that object. I most sincerely and heartily thank the kind donors for their most timely contributions. What is specially needed are regular monthly or quarterly contributions, which together may amount to three or four hundred dollars a month, to enable us, by God's blessing, to continue our work. One business gentleman, who has been in Mexico and who has become deeply interested in the Christian work of the Mexican Branch of the Church, offers to be one of thirty persons, provided twenty-nine others can be found to unite with him in doing the same, who shall each give ten dollars a month in behalf of that work, thus placing it on a strong financial basis. If among those who may read these lines twenty-nine persons would write to J. P. Heath, 43 Bible House, New York, offering to unite in this effort, it would do great good, and carry great joy to the earnest and faithful workers in Mexico. Who will join in this effort? I have received the following letter, which tells of a gift which well may move many to ask themselves if they too cannot part with something that shall enable them to forward some contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 7, 1887.

BISHOP H. C. RILEY.

Dear Sir: Enclosed please find one dollar, to be used in the effort you and others are making to extend our Master's Kingdom in Mexico. This gift has been used as an ornament by my boy, now nearing his thirteenth birthday, and was given to him on his seventh, as a reward for kind offices performed. After reading your need of help for Christian work in Mexico in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, he has insisted that it be forwarded to you; and may our Heavenly Father bless the gift.

Your's truly,

JOHN E. SNEAD.

A poor seamstress, who lived in a town on the Hudson River, some time since sent a dollar in aid of Christian work in Mexico, with a touching message, that she was a seamstress, in delicate health, and had to struggle hard to earn a livelihood. For some time back she had been economizing from her scanty earnings until she had been able to save a dollar, intending with it to buy herself a new hat; but when she heard of the pressing need of funds, with which to aid the Church of Jesus in Mexico, she made up her mind, instead of spending her dollar in buying herself a new hat, to make the old hat with a new ribbon do for some time longer, and to contribute her dollar in aid of the work of the Church of Jesus in Mexico.

A wealthy lady in Ireland, who had heard of this generous act of the poor seamstress, had asked in a store in Dublin for an elegant white feather, intending to purchase the same so as to wear it in her bonnet at a brilliant afternoon reception soon to take place at the hospitable home of a distinguished nobleman. As this wealthy lady was admiring the magnificent feather she had in her hands, she remembered what the poor seamstress had done in aid of Christian work in Mexico, and bravely decided not to purchase the feather, and to contribute the amount it would have cost her in aid of the work of the Church in Mexico. She attended the reception with only some simple artificial violet flowers in her bonnet, and forwarded her gift in aid of the work.

Among the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may many be moved to economize some trifle monthly, and to forward the same as a monthly subscription to aid the work. Several might club together and forward their gifts as a monthly subscription "from several friends of the work."

The Church of Jesus in Mexico has to pay salaries to its clergy and employees regularly each month, and needs a monthly income with which to meet these and other expenses. In giving to aid Christian work in Mexico, remember, dear reader, that you are giving to aid in firmly planting a pure branch of the Church of Christ, and helping it to work for our Saviour in a vast land by our side where such work is fearfully needed.

An humble couple, in Liverpool, who had heard of the work of the Church in Mexico, sent £5 to aid it. Their child, a little boy, had died a short time before, and as he was dying, he said to his parents, "Father, mother, don't forget Jesus."

Dear reader, don't forget Jesus when you give in behalf of His holy cause; remember "Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures" (1 Cor. 15: 3). May His divine love move you to generous deeds. Jesus has said, "I will build my Church." It is the work of His Holy Church that you are asked to aid.

A little girl in Worthing, in the south of England, who had heard of the work of the Church of Jesus in Mexico, presented herself at the home of a clergyman in that town, saying, "I want to be a missionary." Her very tiny form contrasting with her brave resolve, provoked a smile; abashed at being answered only with a smile she added, "At any rate, I can pray for the work, can't I?" and holding up a little silver coin in her hand, offering the same for the work, asked, "And will this do any good?" Sweet child, may your example move others to pray for the work, and to give as they are able.

Christian reader, will you help the work with your prayers, by your example, your generous gifts, and by seeking to interest others in the work?

There is a marvellous opportunity to do a most important work for Christ and His Holy Church in Mexico. There is a most effective instrumentality in that field—a faithful well-equipped, experienced native branch of the Church—through which to work. At its front there are persons of education, but its communion has been gathered from the humbler classes, whose means in Mexico are very limited. To maintain the work of this Church, the gifts of the faithful in other lands are pressingly needed.

Fellow-Christians, encourage with your gifts the efforts made to befriend this faithful branch of Christ's Church in doing its earnest work. May the prayers of many unite with ours to our Triune God in its behalf, asking Him for His blessing, protection, and help.

There are nearly fifty millions who speak the beautiful language of old Spain. They live in some of the fairest portions of the world. The Church of Jesus has already done much Christian work in their midst. Manifestly God has blessed the work. Your gifts are asked for, to continue and extend that work.

They can be forwarded to my address, H. CHAUNCEY RILEY, 43 Bible House, New York.

CONVERSIONS IN CHICAGO STREETS.

OPEN-air services were recently held in the streets of Chicago, the speakers going from place to place in a large truck drawn by two bay horses. An organ and some chairs were in the truck, and Tom Wright, the colored cornetist, sat beside the driver. The meetings were not disturbed anywhere, and in some cases there were blessed results. One young man came to the superintendent and said: "I'd like to join your Mission Band, but before I give my name to the secretary, I feel that it is my duty to tell you, sir, who I am; then, if you will take me, I'll be glad." He continued: "I'm not a drunkard; I look a little rough to-night, but I'm not a drunkard. I'm a professional burglar, a safe-blower; a criminal all my life, and only out of jail a few weeks; but I'm a changed man to-night; I've given my life to Jesus Christ, and if you will let me join this band maybe I can do some good." He was assured that if he had given himself to Christ he was just the fellow that was wanted.

Another man, a large, handsome fellow, who is employed in a dry goods house, was so affected at the street meeting that he sobbed like a child. He came to the superintendent after the above conversation and said, between his sobs: "Oh, sir, whiskey has nearly ruined me; my wife and family are separated from me, and I was fast going to ruin; but the singing in the street attracted me, and O, I'm so glad I came here to-night; I'm a changed man; I've started in a new life, and by the help of God I'll redeem the past." He was assured God would help him, and bring his family back to him if he was true to Christ.

Price, Five Cents, Post Free—160th Thousand
Enlarged Edition—64 Pages—
COMING WARS AND GREAT EVENTS,
and Ten Signs of the Approaching Final Crisis,
by Rev. M. Baxter—Dissolution of the Turkish Empire into the Five Ancient Kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, Thracian Turkey and Bulgaria, which with Britain (separated from Ireland), France, Spain, Italy and Austria, will be formed into an Allied Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms—Subsequent Rise of Napoleon as King of Syria—His Seven Years' Covenant with the Jews—Resurrection and Translation of Saints—3½ Years' Great Tribulation and world-wide Persecution of Christians—Descent of Christ at Armageddon—Ensuing Millennium of 1000 Years after the Year 1900. Address Manager "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Canadian Fishery Dispute Has Taken a more hopeful aspect, in the light of cable despatches from England. The British government has appointed a Commissioner to visit Washington with two colleagues, to discuss the question in its various bearings. It would appear from remarks made to a Times correspondent, by Mr. Bayard, that the visit of the Commissioners originated in his own suggestion. Mr. Bayard has been embarrassed in his negotiations by the triangular manner in which they have been carried on. Every proposition submitted to England by the United States had to be referred to Canada, for the views of the Dominion Government, and after months of delay, it would be returned with the Canadian objections, and the whole routine would have to be gone over again. Mr. Bayard has therefore suggested that if properly authorized persons consulted with the United States government, an agreement might be more readily reached. The cable despatches state that American commissioners have already been appointed to meet those from England, but Mr. Bayard denies that statement. They will confer with the Secretary of State, but, if it deemed advisable, two or more persons familiar with the question may, aid in the discussion. The arrangement is certainly a wise one, but as the Senate expressed a decided opinion last session against a Commission, it is doubtful whether any treaty that might be framed by the Commissioners and the Secretary of State, would be confirmed. It is unfortunate, and shows a singular lack of tact on the part of Lord Salisbury, that the only commissioner appointed so far, by Great Britain, should be Mr. Chamberlain, who is probably the one statesman against whom there is any strong personal prejudice in this country. Tory statesmen are not disliked because in opposing Mr. Gladstone on the Irish question they were consistent with their traditions and principles; but the part Mr. Chamberlain has taken has excited personal animosity against him, which bodes ill for the success of his mission.

The Pennsylvania Democratic Convention held at Allentown on August 31, appears to have been largely under the control of Mr. Randall, although the platform shows signs that there was some opposition to his views. As Mr. Randall is supposed to have aspirations for the Presidency, the endorsement of President Cleveland by the Convention was rather guarded than enthusiastic, and some of the President's utterances, notably those on the abolition of duties on raw materials, were ignored. The tariff plank, which is just now a very difficult subject for a Democratic convention to handle, avoids the crucial point by saying that in view of the existing condition of the public Treasury, we demand with emphasis that the large surplus already in the Treasury shall be used to pay the public debt and that the current and unnecessary increase going on beyond the needs of government shall be immediately prevented by a wise and prudent reduction of internal taxation and of duties on imports, in accordance with the declarations of the Chicago platform of 1884. The immigration difficulty is evidently growing into recognition. The convention said: We recognize the material benefits which this country has received from immigration. We endorse the legislation of Congress against the importation of contract labor and to compel the return of paupers and criminals. We commend the national administration for its efforts to rigidly enforce these laws, and, while we are opposed to any illiberal restrictions, we favor such additional measures of regulation as may be found necessary. This, with denunciation of Republicans in general, and Pennsylvania Republicans in particular, filled out a platform that was deemed sufficient for an off-year.

The Iowa Democratic Convention at Des Moines, on September 1, placed itself squarely on record on the liquor question, which will be the one that will probably take precedence of purely political issues in the coming election. There was a dispute on the details of that plank in the platform, between what is known as "the river country faction," which demanded a stringent license bill, and the interior districts, which proposed a minimum license of $500, with a local-option feature attached. Eventually, the Convention settled on the following plank, as an expression of its views: We are opposed to all sumptuary legislation, and in favor of the repeal of the present prohibitory liquor law, and substitution in its stead of a local-option and carefully guarded license law, with a minimum license fee of $500 for better control of the liquor traffic. As the Republicans stand pledged to the maintenance of prohibition, the liquor question will undoubtedly be the battle-ground, and, in Iowa at any rate, the Republican party will have the good wishes of Prohibitionists. The other planks in the platform included an indorsement of the President, and a resolution in favor of a reduction in the tariff, and maintenance of the existing taxes on liquors and tobacco. Major T. J. Anderson is the candidate for Governor.

A Test of the Composition of the Prohibition party which was made at Syracuse is deeply significant, and deserves the consideration of the politicians and of the public generally. In the course of the proceedings all delegates who had formerly belonged to the Democratic party were asked to stand up, and 134 rose. Then all who had been Republicans were requested to rise, and about 800 responded. This ratio, of course, applies only to New York State, but it is probable that all through the East and West the proportion would be about the same, and only in the South would there be much variation. Another showing was made which was still more significant. The clergymen among the delegates numbered ninety-five, and when a call was made for church officers and Sunday-school superintendents nearly every delegate was on his feet. The practical politicians, who have had their own way so long, cannot afford to ignore these facts.

The Trouble with the Utes in Colorado has given rise to reports so contradictory that it is difficult to get at the truth. It appears to have originated in an attempt on the part of a deputy sheriff to arrest one or more of the Indians on a charge of horse-stealing. The Indians, not understanding his object, resisted, and their friends aided them, until the outbreak grew to formidable proportions. They are said to have gone on the warpath, though this the Indians deny; but it is certain the sheriff collected an armed posse and went in search of them. On August 27 there was a regular pitched battle between the sheriff's posse and the Indians at a place near Rangly, Col., in which at least six Indians were killed and several whites wounded. Gen. Crook has now gone to the scene of the disturbance, which, it is believed, will soon be settled under his capable management. This outbreak is said to be a mere incident of a larger trouble. Colorow and about fifteen braves are strongly opposed to removal, while the consent of a majority of the tribe has been secured.

An Earthquake Shock of Considerable Violence was experienced at Tucson, Ariz., on the morning of September 1, about nine o'clock. It lasted seven seconds and caused general alarm, but no damage has been reported. This shock, following so closely on the slight shocks felt in parts of South Carolina and in Mexico, on August 27, shows how unstable is the earth's crust, and produces no little uneasiness, especially in the South, where the Charleston calamity will never be forgotten.

A Bonapartist Manifesto was Issued in France last week. Prince Victor, son of Prince Jerome Napoleon, who is endeavoring to supersede his father as head of the Bonapartists, has issued a manifesto from Brussels, in which he condemns the Conservative party of France for supporting the present Cabinet. He describes the present condition of his party, and expresses his views as to the proper course to be pursued to accomplish the end in view—the restoration of the empire. The manifesto makes no mention of Paul de Cassagnac, who is regarded as the responsible champion of Bonapartism.

Russia's Proposal to Send to Bulgaria a Provisional Governor until a new Sobranje shall legally elect a Prince for the Bulgarian throne has been accepted by the Sultan. A Russian journal states that Turkey is seeking the assent of the Powers to the carrying out of the proposal, and that the Sultan has guaranteed that Turkey will assist General Ernroth to carry out his mission, and supply him with a Turkish army if necessary. The Bulgarians are reported as strongly opposed to the proposal. Still more decisive, as indicating the Czar's intention to occupy the country, is a manifesto which has been circulated in all the Balkan provinces. In this document M. Neitchoff declares that Bulgaria has no means of safety unless Russia nominates a commissary to regulate the affairs of the soldiers as well as of the civilians.

The Irish National League is Preparing to resist the proclamation of the British Government. Mr. O'Brien, who recently visited this country and Canada, speaking at a recent meeting, said that the first branch of the League against which the government should issue a proclamation, would hold its meetings with closed doors, and refuse to open them for the police, even if they demanded admittance. This would leave the police nothing to do but break their way in, if they were determined to enter. As the police would probably resort to this violence, the central branch of the League would then ask the Lord Mayor to grant them the use of the City Hall, with special police to defend it during League meetings therein. Mr. O'Brien is himself to be prosecuted by the government, but the impending trial appears to have produced no fear in his mind. The Irish party in Parliament devoted its energies last week to opposing the grant of money to pay the Irish police and the Irish officials. They were voted, however, and on the question of the proclamation of the League coming up in the discussion, Mr. Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland, asserted that seventeen hundred persons in Ireland had either suffered from boycotting or been protected from it by the government. This, in his opinion, proved that the League was dangerous.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Imprisonment of an American Missionary by Spanish officials is reported. In March last a Spanish Governor, with his suite of fifty soldiers, six priests and a number of convicts, landed at Ponape, in the Caroline Islands, where the American Board has a mission. Almost immediately the Governor, probably incited thereto by the priests, began to encroach on the mission and interfere with its work. The Rev. Edward P. Doane, the missionary in charge, having made several ineffectual protests, ventured on a formal letter of complaint. At this the Governor took offense, arrested Mr. Doane, and put him in close confinement on board the Spanish man-of-war in the harbor. All this was within one month of the arrival of the Spaniards. After three days the Governor came to Mr. Doane, and, without even the form of a trial, sentenced him to fifteen days' imprisonment because of his protest. At the end of the fifteen days the Governor informed Mr. Doane that he was to remain in confinement on other charges, but did not state the charges. For six weeks the Governor paid no attention to the inquiries of Mr. Doane or of his American associates on the island as to the cause of such treatment. Then suddenly he sent word to Mr. Doane that within three days he was to be deported to Manila, 2,000 miles away, to be tried there, but gave him no opportunity to look after his personal property on shore, to find witnesses, or to confer with his associates. A telegram has now been received by Dr. Judson Smith, announcing the release of Mr. Doane, but speaking gloomily of the prospects of the mission.

School Monitors Armed with Repeating rifles keep watch over some pupils being educated in New Jersey. There are over eight hundred convicts in the State Prison, at Trenton, and of these one hundred and forty can neither read nor write. The idea of starting a night school in the prison occurred to one of the keepers, and was approved by the State authorities. Some of the convicts have received good educations, and a dozen, who are fully competent, have volunteered to act as instructors. Books, slates and charts have been obtained, and the school was opened on September 1. Turnkeys, armed with repeating rifles, act as the monitors, the desperate character of many of the convicts rendering it necessary to take every precaution, even on such occasions. It may be hoped that even in a school in which convicts are teachers, some prisoners will gain knowledge that will help them to lead honest lives when they are released. If these teachers could tell their pupils that they have been pardoned and that they might also obtain their pardon in the same way they would be listened to with eager attention. That message delivered by pardoned sinners to sinners in need of pardon, is delivered in our churches, but it too often falls on inattentive ears (1 Tim. 1 : 16).

How to Harness Niagara, and put its Vast power to practical use, is a problem on which many inventors have exercised their faculties. A Buffalo citizen now claims that he has solved it. He has invented a machine which may be used in any river, but will be tried first at Niagara. The model exhibited last week consists of a platform of a foot and a half wide, and nearly as long again, with three upright bearings set so that by stretching an endless chain about them an irregular triangle is formed. The chain is furnished with flat paddles that stand out from it to catch the current, which is, by means of dams or walls thrown against its longest sides. Hinges permit the paddles to feather back against the chain on the return side. One of the wheels around which the chain runs is furnished with a pulley, which gives off the power to a belt that goes ashore. "It is the intention," says the inventor, "to make a machine 100 feet long, with steel blades ten feet high, having eight feet sweep. This, with guiding walls of masonry built in Portland cement, will cost, it is thought, $12,000." The invention has been sold to a company which proposes to put the power so obtained to a variety of uses, among which is that of generating electricity. If the machine will do all that the inventor claims for it, his achievement will be of immense value. All the more because he will not have to produce the power, but only to utilize that which nature has placed ready to his hand. If philosophers and social reformers would follow the example, they would save themselves many disappointments. God has provided a power for the reformation of the world that is omnipotent, but men prefer their own devices (1 John 5 : 4, 5).

A Pathetic Spectacle was Witnessed in the waiting-room of the railroad depot at Kansas City, Mo., on August 19. It was that of a young husband and his wife, both of whom had the appearance of having struggled hard in their country home to earn a scanty living. The man held in his arms what many doubtless looked upon as a sleeping babe. At his side sat a young woman with an old-fashioned sunbonnet pulled over a handsome but girlish face. Her dark eyes were moist with tears, while her lips trembled. The cause of their grief could be easily guessed. The white cloth covered the features of a dead child. A sadder spectacle of mute sorrow than that presented by the father tenderly clasping his dead child, has rarely been witnessed. To a reporter the young man stated that he had recently lived in Wichita County, Kan. He left home to settle at Schuyler, Neb., hoping there to better his financial condition. The babe, which was not yet a year old, was taken sick as they were starting, but neither he nor his wife thought it in a dangerous condition. It grew worse after the journey began, and died in its mother's arms on board a Union Pacific train just before reaching Kansas City. For such sorrow the world has no consolation to give, but the believing soul can find it in the assurance God gives in His Word (11 Sam. 12 :23).

A Thief's Present to a Police Captain Led to his arrest in New York, last week. As the sergeant on duty at the Thirtieth Street Station was sitting alone in the office, on the night of August 29, a man came in and inquired for Captain Williams. The sergeant told him that the Captain had been promoted to an inspectorship, and was not at that station now. The man said he had heard of his promotion, and had called to make the Captain a congratulatory present. Perhaps the sergeant would take charge of it, and forward it to the Captain. The sergeant was willing, and the man handed him a handsome gold ring, with an enormous moonstone set in it. The stone, he said, was known as "the light of the world," and was valued at $1,000. The man's actions aroused the suspicions of the sergeant, and, taking him into his private room, he undertook to cross-question him. The man's answers were evasive, and he was put under arrest as a suspicious person. When he was searched, a handsome diamond stud was found in his pocket, which with the ring, proved to be part of the plunder taken in a recent robbery of a noted jewelry store. If the thief thought to make himself safe from arrest, by putting the Captain under an obligation to him, he must have been sorely disappointed when he found that his visit to the police station had involved his capture. Some men who are engaged in nefarious business occasionally give large sums to hospitals and Christian enterprises from similar motives. They only show their folly; God accepts no such atonement (1 Sam. 15 : 22).

The Purchase of a Husband has Involved a lady in a family quarrel. Some six months ago a lady who inherited over a million of dollars under her father's will, came to reside in a New York hotel. There she became infatuated with a physician who successfully treated her for various real or fancied ailments. The physician, however, was a married man, and this fact would, with a lady of principle, have been regarded as an insuperable obstacle to her union with the man on whom she had set her affections. Not so the heiress. She entered into negotiations with the physician's wife. She proposed to give the wife a certain sum of money, for which the wife was to secure a divorce. The wife demanded a hundred thousand dollars, and the heiress offered fifty thousand. What sum was eventually paid is not known, but the arrangement was effected. The physician went to Europe, and his wife, setting up the plea of desertion, procured a divorce, after which he returned and married the heiress. The lady's relatives expostulated with her, and tried to restrain her by a suit in the courts, but failed. She professes herself well satisfied with her purchase. It is not likely that she will remain so, however, for a man that would lend himself to so unnatural and wicked a bargain will probably prove an ingrate unworthy the sacrifice his wife made to win him. Her folly has been so great that if her husband does prove unfaithful, she will not be entitled to sympathy, but the man himself everyone will condemn. How much more culpable are those members of the Church who are unfaithful to Him who purchased them, not with silver and gold, but with His precious blood (1 Peter 1 : 18)!

BRIEF NOTES.

The death of the Rev. T. J. Comber, of the Congo mission, is briefly reported by cable.

The corner-stone of a Methodist theological seminary was laid at Pueblo, Mexico, July 21.

Bishop W. L. Harris, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died on Friday last. He was seventy years of age, and had been a bishop fifteen years.

Mr. Ferdinand Schiverea is holding services in the Gospel Pavilion, Brooklyn, and also assisting at the Cremorne and Berachah Missions in New York City.

Mr. James W. Allatt, of Hornellsville, N. Y., will conduct the musical part of the services which Mr. James Scovill has arranged to hold during the fall and winter.

It has been noticed by visitors to the White House that Mrs. Cleveland declines to take wine at the social gatherings given in her honor, accepting Apollinaris water as a substitute.

Miss Frances E. Willard, as Vice-President of the World's W. C. T. U., issues a call, by circular, urging the White-Ribbon Women everywhere to observe November 12 and 13, 1887, as "a World's day of special prayer for the temperance cause."

The Rev. W. F. Re Qua, writing from his sphere of labor among the Indians at McAllister, Ind. Ter., says that the Lord is opening their hearts to receive the Word, and he is expecting blessed results. He thanks the readers of this journal for help recently sent to him, which arrived at a time of pressing need when he had laid the matter in prayer before God.

Mrs. Irvine, who has had considerable experience in the training of young ladies, has opened a seminary in the neighborhood of Niagara Falls. Parents desiring a thoroughly religious but unsectarian education for their daughters, with careful regard to their moral and spiritual welfare, should apply to Mrs. Irvine, who, we understand, has unexceptionable references.

Margaret Strachan, the well-known philanthropic friend of fallen women in New York, who managed the Faith Home in West Twenty-seventh Street, died on Sunday, August 28, after a long illness. Continuous and exhausting labor with the exposure and loss of rest incident to her labors, are believed to have shortened her life, but she loved her work, and could not be persuaded to leave it while life and strength remained.

A Turkish student, named Messiah Meseropium, who has been studying at the Crozier Theological Seminary, at Chester, Pa., has recently been ordained to preach in his own land. He came to this country without any money, but has been aided by Baptists from all parts of Pennsylvania. Not only his education, but his journey home and his outfit for his work in the ministry there has been provided for by his Baptist brethren here.

The committee in charge of the Convention of Christian Workers ask us to remind our readers of the approaching Convention, notice of which appeared in these columns several weeks ago. The Convention will meet in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, on September 21, and the meetings will continue for eight days. Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stebbins will conduct the singing. For particulars as to reduced rates of fare, entertainment, etc., address Rev. John C. Collins, New Haven, Conn.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow

Copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

THE BLIND BEGGAR OF THE TEMPLE, AND HIS WONDERFUL CURE.

A New Sermon By Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"As long as I am in the world, I am the Light of the world. When He had thus spoken, He spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and He anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay, and said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam He went his way, therefore, and washed, and came seeing."—John 9: 5, 6, 7.

The Saviour at Congenial Work—The Blind Man Not Seeking Sight—Did Not Know What it Was—A Typical Case—I. The Conspicuous Healer—The Man's Growing Appreciation of Jesus—His Testimony of Him—A More Urgent Case—The Healer Still Present—II. The Special Means Used—Very Eccentric—Offensive to the Taste of Some—Commonplace but Adequate—III. The Plain Command—Simple—Personal—IV. The Result Certified—The Man Knew It—Others Perceived It—A Converted Man Afraid of his Wife.

OUR Saviour had been dealing with the Jews and the Pharisees, who had bitterly opposed, and even taken up stones to cast at Him. He felt much more at home when He could fix His eyes upon poor necessitous beings, and bless them with healing and salvation. It is the lot of some of us to be often in controversy with the carnal professors of the present day, and it is a great relief to us to get away from them and their stones, and find out individual sinners, and preach to them in the name of God the gospel, which spiritually opens the eyes of the blind.

At the gate of the temple sat a blind beggar, who must have been for he was possessed of remarkable shrewdness and mother wit. From having long been there, he must have been well known to all who regularly frequented the temple, and to the wider circle of those who came from far to the great yearly gatherings. This man could not see Jesus, but, what was better, Jesus could see him; and we read in the opening of the chapter, "As Jesus passed by, He saw a man which was blind from his birth." I suppose that the blind beggar of the temple hardly valued sight, for he had been blind from his birth. Those who have seen must greatly miss the light of day; but those who have never possessed sight at all can hardly have an idea of what that sense must be, and therefore it cannot be so great a deprivation to them.

A Notable Character,

This beggar did not pray for sight; at least, it is not recorded that he did so. He was a beggar; it was his trade to beg; but amongst all his petitions he did not ask for sight. Yet Jesus gave him sight. Know you not that glorious declaration of free grace, "I am found of them that sought me not"? Is it not a wonderful thing that Jesus does often come to those who sought not for Him? I am persuaded that there are some before me now who are like the man born blind: they do not know what they want, they are not yet aware of the value of the blessing, and consequently they have not sought it; but to-day they are going to receive it. This case of the blind beggar is eminently instructive, and, therefore, let us get at it at once, in the hope that while we are considering the model case, we may see it repeated in spiritual form in our midst.

I. First, in this man's healing, and in the salvation of every chosen soul, we shall see conspicuous in this man's mind, as soon as ever he received sight, "a man that was named Jesus" came to the forefront. Jesus was to him the most important person in existence. All that he knew of him at first was, that he was a man that was named Jesus; and under that character Jesus filled the whole horizon of his vision. He was more to him than those learned Pharisees, or than all his neighbors put together. Jesus was exceeding great, for He had opened his eyes. By-and-by, fixing his mind upon that figure, he saw more in it, and he declared, "He is a prophet." He boldly said this when he was running great risks by doing so. To their faces he told the carping Pharisees, "He is a prophet." A little further on he came to this, that he believed Him to be the Son of God, and worshipped Him. Now, my dear friend, if you are saved by Jesus, your star must set, but the star of Jesus must rise and increase in brilliance till it becomes no more a star, but a sun, making your day, and flooding your soul with light.

The Great Healer

After this man had received sight his testimony was all of Jesus. It was Jesus that spat, it was Jesus that made the clay, that anointed his eyes. So will it be in your mind with the gospel of your salvation: it will be "Jesus only." This man said expressly, "He hath opened mine eyes." Whenever he delivered his testimony, whether to his neighbors or to the Pharisees, there was no uncertain sound about it: he had been enlightened by Jesus, and by Jesus alone, and to Him he gave all the glory; and he was right in doing so. Oh, ye who would find light this morning, give me your thoughts at this moment! Endeavor to realize that Jesus Christ is a living and acting person. He is not dead; He has risen long ago. To us He is not an absent Christ, nor a sleeping Christ: but He is doing still what He did when He was on earth, only He now works in the spiritual, as once He worked in the physical, world. He is now present to save, present to open the eyes of the spiritually blind, present to bless you to whom I speak.

It was Jesus

Remember that you must have this miracle wrought upon you. If the blind man had remained blind he might have continued a tolerably happy beggar. He seems to have had very considerable mental resources, and he might have made his way in the world as well as others of the begging confraternity. But you cannot be happy or safe unless the Lord Jesus open your eyes. There remains for you nothing but the blackness of darkness for ever unless light from heaven visits you. You must have Christ or die. Here is the blessedness of it, that at this moment He is still in the midst of us, able to save to the uttermost, and willing now to repeat the miracles of His mercy to those who will trust in Him to do so. I think I can almost hear the prayer struggling in your bosom. Silent, and unclothed in words, it sits on your lip. Let it speak. Say, "Lord, open my eyes this day." He will do it! Blessed be His name! He has come on purpose to open the eyes of the blind.

II. Having spoken upon the great Healer, as He stands conspicuous in the miracle, I would now conduct you, in the second place, to observable in the miracle. Jesus could have healed this man without means, or He could have healed him by other means, but He chose to work the cure in a manner which to all ages will remain a grand sermon, an instructive parable of grace. He spat on the ground and made clay of the spittle, and He anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay. This is a picture of the gospel.

The Special Means

It meets with many modern criticisms. In the first place, the mode of cure seems very eccentric. Spat and made clay with the spittle and the dust! Very singular! Very odd! Thus odd and singular is the gospel in the judgment of the worldly-wise. "Why," saith one, "it seems such a strange thing that we are to be saved by believing." Men think it so odd, that fifty other ways are invented straightway. Though the new methods are not one of them worth describing, yet everyone seems to think that the old-fashioned way of "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ" might have been greatly improved upon. The way of justification by faith is peculiarly open to criticism, and is about the last that this wise world would have selected. Yet, eccentric as it may seem for Christ to heal with spittle and dust, it was the best and wisest way for His purpose. Suppose instead thereof He had put His hand into His pocket and taken out a gold or ivory box, and out of this box He had taken a little crystal bottle. Suppose He had taken out the stopper, and then had poured a drop on each of those blind eyes, and they had been opened, what would have been the result? Everybody would have said,

"What a Wonderful Medicine."

I wonder what it was! How was it compounded? Who wrote the prescription? Perhaps He found the charm in the writings of Solomon, and so He learned to distil the matchless drops." Thus you see the attention would have been fixed on the means used, and the cure would have been ascribed to the medicine rather than to God. Our Saviour used no such rare oils or choice spirits, but simply spat and made clay of the spittle; for He knew that nobody would say, "The spittle did it," or, "It was the clay that did it." No, if our Lord seems to be eccentric in the choice of means, yet is He eminently prudent. The gospel of our Lord Jesus—and there is but one—is the wisdom of God, however singular it may seem in the judgment of the worldly-wise.

In the next place, the means may appear to some offensive to the taste. Oh, I think I see some of the fine gentry! How they turn up their noses as they read: "He spat!" "He spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle!" It turns the stomachs of those delicate ones! So is it with the gospel. The Agags who go delicately do not like it. How the men of "culture" sneer at the gospel for which our fathers died!

Hear How They Decry

the ever-blessed Word of our salvation. They say that it is only fit for old women and idiots, and such fossils of the past ages as the preacher who is now addressing you. We are all fools except these men of progress, and our gospel is disgusting to carnal reason, to the idiotic self-complacency of those who, considering themselves to be wise, have become otherwise; but to you that believe He is precious.

It is further objected that the Lord healed this man in such a commonplace way! To spit and make clay of the spittle, why, anybody could do that! Why not have used an imposing ceremonial? Why not practice an eclectic method? If it had been one of the doctors of the age, he would have made a great performance of it. His prescription would have been a treat for learned men. And now to-day what is the new gospel that is proposed to us? It is the gospel of "culture." Culture! This of course, is the monopoly of our superiors. It is only to be enjoyed by very refined persons who have been to college, and who carry inside of them a whole university, library and all. The gospel, which is made to be plain enough for wayfaring men, is for that reason despised. Yet commonplace as our Lord's medicine was, it was unique. All the philosophers of Greece could not have compounded a drachm of this healing application. Even thus, if the gospel should seem commonplace, it is to be remembered that there is not another like it!

I think I hear another objector say that the remedy was quite inadequate. Clay made out of spittle would be postively inert, and could exercise no healing power upon a blind eye. Just so, we are prepared to hear all this. The clay has no efficacy; but when Jesus uses it,

It Will Answer His Purpose.

The man, after he had washed the clay into the pool, came seeing, The gospel may appear as if it could not renew the heart and save from evil. To believe in the Lord Jesus Christ seems an unlikely means of producing holiness. Men ask, "What can evangelical preaching do to put down sin?" We point to those who were once dead in sin who are made alive by faith, and thus we prove the efficacy of the gospel by facts. "Oh," they say, "can faith transform the character? Can belief subdue the will? Can trust conduct the mind to a high and elevated life?" It does do so; and though in theory it appears inadequate, yet as a matter of fact it has made men into new creatures, and has turned sinners into saints.

Another wise gentleman judges that clay upon the eyes would even be injurious. "To stick clay over a man's eyes would not make him see; it would add another impediment to the light." So have I even heard it said, that to preach salvation by faith is against good morals, and may even encourage men in evil. Blind bats as they are, can they not see that the case is the very reverse? How frequently by the gospel are harlots made chaste, thieves made honest, drunkards made sober! By this very gospel of faith which they say is against good morals, the best of morals are produced.

So, I would say in leaving this point: Do not cavil at the gospel. We sometimes tell servants that it is never wise to quarrel with their bread and butter. I would earnestly say to every anxious spirit: Do not quarrel with the gospel of salvation. If you are in a right state of mind as to your condition, I am sure you will not. When I found the Lord I was driven into such a corner, that whatever salvation might have been, I would have had it on God's terms without a question. If you are the man that I am looking for, if you want to receive spiritual sight, you must make no conditions with Jesus; you will not ask for a perfumed ointment for your eyes; but you will gladly accept an anointing with clay from your Saviour's hands. Whatever the Lord prescribes as the way of salvation you will joyfully accept. In that cheerful acceptance lies a great part of the salvation itself; for your will is at one with God.

III. I would now lead you a step further; is most noteworthy. Our Lord said to His patient, "Go, wash in the pool of Siloam." The man could not see, but he could hear. Salvation comes to us, not by sight of ceremonies, but by hearing the word of God. The ears are the best friends the sinner has remaining to him. It is by Ear-gate that the Prince Immanuel comes riding into Mansoul in triumph. "Hear, and your soul shall live." It was a little, insignificant affair, that pool of Siloam, whose waters flowed softly: why must he go there? He did not ask for reasons, but he at once obeyed, and in obeying he found the blessing. My hearer, you have to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and you shall be saved.

The Plain Command

It was also intensely simple. "Go, wash in the pool." Go to the pool, and wash the clay into it. Any boy can wash his eyes. The task was simplicity itself. So is the gospel as plain as a pikestaff. You have not to perform twenty genuflections or posturings, each one peculiar, nor have you to go to school to learn a dozen languages, each one more difficult than the other. No, the saving deed is one and simple. "Believe and live." But the command was also distinctly personal. "Go, wash." His parents could not go for him. It would have been idle for him to have said, "I will pray about it." No, he must go, and himself wash in the pool. So, too, the sinner must himself believe in Jesus. You get into the notion, some of you, that you may sit still and hope that God will save you. I have no authority to encourage you in such a rebellious inactivity. Jesus bids you go and wash, and how dare you sit still? Up with you, man! Up with you! The pool of Siloam will not come to you, you must go to it. The waters will not leap out of their bed and wash your eyes, but you must stoop to them, and wash in the pool until the clay is gone and you see. It is a personal direction; mind that you treat it so.

IV. I come, in the close of the discourse, to

The Result Certified.

I think I see this man, attended by his neighbors, going to Siloam. They had seen Jesus place the clay upon the man's eyes, and they had heard Him say, "Go to Siloam." They volunteer to go, and act as guides to the blind. Curiosity inspires them. He reaches the pool. He goes down the steps. He is close to the water. He stoops his head. He washes his eyes. What will come of it? The clay is gone, but what else has happened? Suddenly the man lifts up his face and cries, "I see! I see!" What a shout went up from them all. "What a wonder! What a marvel!"

This man could see at once. He washed, and his blindness was gone. Eternal life is received in a moment. It does not take the tick of a clock to justify a sinner. O soul, the moment thou believest, thou hast passed from death to life. Quick as a flash of lightning the effectual change is wrought, the eternal life enters and casts out death. Oh, that the Lord would work salvation now! This man Could See at Once.

We read of another blind man, that he first saw men as trees walking, and only after a time saw every man clearly; but this man saw clearly at once. Oh, that you who hear me this day would believe, and live at once!

This man knew that he could see. He had no question about that, for he said, "One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see." Possibly some of you have been decent people all your lives, and yet you do not know whether you are saved or not. This is poor religion. Cold comfort! Saved, and not know it! Surely it must be as lean a salvation as that man's breakfast, when he did not know whether he had eaten it or not. The salvation which comes of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is conscious salvation. Your eyes shall be so opened that you shall no longer question whether you can see. Oh, that you would believe in Jesus, and know that you have believed and are saved! Oh, that you might get into a new world, and enter upon a new state of things altogether!

And other people perceived that he could see. They could not make it out. Some said, "This is he;" but others would only say, "It is like him." A man with opened eyes is very different from the same man when he is blind. If we were to take any friend we know who has no eyes, and suddenly eyes were to be placed in his countenance, we should probably find his expression so altered that we should hardly think him the same person, and therefore the cautious neighbors only said, "He is like him." Yet they were all of them sure he could see. I remember a poor man who was converted, but he was not the only man in the world that is in that fear—and therefore he was fearful that she would ridicule him if he knelt to pray. He crept up-stairs in his stockings that he might not be heard, but might have a few minutes' prayer before she knew he was there. His scheme broke down. His wife soon found him out. Genuine conversion is no more to be hidden than a candle in a dark room. You cannot hide a cough. If a man has a cough, he must cough; and if a man has grace in his heart, he will show grace in his life. Why should we wish to hide it? Oh, may the Lord give you such an eye-opener this day that friends and relatives shall know that your eyes have been opened!

Afraid of His Wife—

This man, when he received sight, was willing to lose everything in consequence. The Jews cast him out of the synagogue, but when Jesus found him, the man did not fret about the Jews. I think I can see his face when Jesus found him; how happy he was as he worshipped his benefactor! "Poor soul, poor soul, you have been cast out of the synagogue!" "Oh," says he, "don't pity me. They may cast me out of fifty synagogues now that Christ has found me What care I for synagogues now that I have found the Messiah? When I was in the synagogue I was a blind man, and now I am but I have my sight." When you become a Christian, the world will hate you and revile you; but what of that? Some will have no more to do with you. This may be the best turn they can do you.

Out of the Synagogue,

We had a lady of title in our membership once, and a very gracious sister she was. I had some little fear about her at first, lest the great ones should draw her away from the truth. Soon after her baptism, she remarked that a certain noble family had given her the cold shoulder, and others, who were very intimate, had ceased to call. She took it as a matter of course, and only remarked that it made her own course all the more easy, for she had not now the pain of hearing their ungodly conversation, nor even the responsibility of severing the connection. The world has done its best for the child of God when it has cast him out. Its excommunications are better than its communications.

What a wonderful thing the Lord Jesus had done for this man, and what a wonderful thing He is prepared to do for all who trust Him! Let us pray the Almighty God to manifest among us the works of God this day. O Lord, regenerate, illuminate, pardon, and save those who are here present, and thus glorify thy Son! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A CLERGYMAN AMONG BEARS.*

THERE is among Western men much controversy as to the various kinds of bear inhabiting our Western Alps; but the number of those who, from personal observation, are capable of forming an opinion, is very small. In the first place, for all the sanguinary talk around the stove, there are not a great many men who have made a practice of hunting bear at all. One such incident as that which occurred two years ago in the Big Horn, scares a good many. Apoor fellow there came on a bear, a small cinnamon, feeding on an elk he had killed. He fired, and wounded it; the bear retreated, and he followed. Coming up with it again, he fired, when the bear charged him. Trying to reload (he used, I heard, a single-shot Sharp rifle), the extractor came off the empty shell, and of course he was defenceless. He evidently drew his knife and used it desperately, for when they found him the bear lay near him, dead, with many knife-wounds in it, but it had killed him first. In short, both on account of the danger and by reason of the great difficulty of seeing them, it scarcely pays to hunt bear alone.

Narrow Escape from a Big Cinnamon Bear.

The largest bear any of us ever saw was a cinnamon, that came within an inch of killing one of my men—a good hunter and first-class guide—Charles Huff. (I may refer to the big cinnamon, too, as an instance of the danger that sometimes attends trapping the bear.) He had set his traps near Sunlight, in the spring, and was unable to visit them for a week. When he got to the bait, trap and log were gone. After taking up the trail he soon found the remnants of his log chewed to match-wood; the bear, evidently a large one, had gone off with the trap. He followed his trail as long as he had light, but found nothing, and had to return to camp. Next day, very foolishly, he took the trail again alone, beginning where he had left off. After a long march he came to the steep side of a hill; the bear had evidently gone up there; on the soft, snow-trodden ground the trail was plain. Just as he was beginning to ascend, there came a rush and a roar, and the bear was on him. He had no time to put his repeater to his shoulder, but letting it fall between his hands, pulled the trigger. The bear was within a few feet of him, and by a great chance the unaimed bullet took him between the eyes. He had evidently tried the hill-side, and, worried by the heavy trap, had come back on his trail, and lain behind a great heap of dirt, into which he had partly burrowed, waiting for his enemy. Among the debris of spring-tide—fallen stones and uprooted trees—a bear could easily lie hidden, if he was mad and wanted to conceal himself, till the enemy was within a few feet. It was a terribly close shave.

The Pluck of a Grizzly,

We stalked two small grizzlies in the "open," one evening. They were busy turning over stones, in order to get the grubs and worms underneath, and when we managed to get, unseen, within forty yards; at first fire each received a bullet broadside behind the shoulder; but seemingly none the worse, they both turned down hill, as bear will when wounded, nine times out of ten, and made for the ravine, whence they had evidently come. This gave me a nice open shot as they passed, and No. 1 rolled over dead; not so No. 2. Before he got a hundred yards away I hit him three times. At the fourth shot he fell, seemingly dead. We got within a few feet of the bear, when up he jumped, and on one hind leg and one fore, went for Frank. The attack was tremendously unexpected and sudden. At a glance you could see that the brute was past hurting anyone, yet for a few strides he actually caught up to Frank, who made most admirable time; then he suddenly fell dead. Each of the five bullets I had fired had struck him.

* From the Rev. W. S. Rainsford's Paper on Camping and Hunting in the Shoshone, in Scribner's Magazine. Price 25c. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

Zebehr Pasha, the Slave King of the Soudan.

HAZELTON'S RETURN HOME.

(See Illustration on page 573.)

Two men were pacing the deck of an Atlantic steamer, bound for Liverpool, one night, watching the play of the moonbeams on the water.

"Do you stay long on the other side, Hazelton?" asked one of them. "If you are coming back soon we might arrange to make the passage together."

"I don't know," said Hazelton, a man of some five-and-thirty years of age; "my business is a strange one for a man of my age to take up, and it is possible I may remain for some years. I may as well tell you what it is."

"Do," said the other; "I have had the impression all through that your experience was out of the common order."

"No; I guess it is only too common, but I hope it will end better than it might. I am going to my home. I am the only son of my parents; good, pious people, who built their hopes on me. They thought I should be a good man, and perhaps a clergyman. I know my dear mother made that her prayer. Well, they brought me up a little strictly. Being the only one, you see, they concentrated their efforts on me. As I grew up I fell in with their wishes; thought I was converted, and joined the church. But when I was eighteen I formed an acquaintance that perfectly infatuated me. I lost my liking for religion, for reading and study, and gradually drifted into fast life.

"Well, after a few months I could not conceal the life I was living any longer. The exposure came, and my father's anger was awful, and my mother almost broke her heart. Then home was unendurable, and I ran away. In America I went from bad to worse, until I was a homeless, penniless vagabond. Then being driven by hunger, I turned over a fresh leaf, and went to work. I got on, and prospered, on the whole, but had occasional outbreaks, in which I spent all I had. It was no real reform, and for fifteen years I oscillated between decency and industry and dissipation.

That continued until three months ago when just as I was starting out on a spree after a longer period of abstinence that usual, it pleased God to stop me. I was truly converted and then my conscience put in its work. After a week or two of mental agony I determined to go home and see if I could make any amends to the old folks. I felt that was my first duty, so not waiting for letters I took my passage, and here I am. There never was a schoolboy so eager to get home for his vacation as I am. I can imagine my dear old mother when she sees me go in to the house, and my father won't be slow to forgive the prodigal."

"Ah, that is a pleasant errand," said Hazelton's companion. "I don't wonder it makes you happy to think of it."

Hazelton's impatience for the reunion grew as the voyage came to a close, and no sooner was he landed than he set out by express train toward home. He had some six miles to walk from the nearest station, but the distance seemed nothing. At last, turning a corner, he was at the gate behind which was the dear old house. He pulled the bell, but there was no response. Looking up he saw a board announcing that the house was to let. The disappointment was almost more than he could bear. He felt giddy, and steadied himself by a grasp on the fence.

As soon as he could collect his strength he walked to the village inn, and in a casual way made his inquires.

"Yes," the innkeeper said, "Hazel Cottage is to let. It's a dull place and out of repair. The old gentleman who used to live there didn't seem to have no heart to keep it up. His son ran away, and then his wife died. And after that the old man pined, but he lived on in a quiet sort of way till this spring, and then he took to his bed and died. We buried him a week ago last Monday."

Hazelton turned away with all the light gone out of his life. He was to late too make amends. There could be no place for repentance now, though he might seek it carefully and with tears. He went to the old churchyard, and by the two silent graves he asked God's forgiveness for his past life and consecrated the future to His service. But he was conscious that all his life long the burden of that irretrievable past would lie upon him.

ZEBEHR THE SLAVE KING.

(See Portrait.)

The intelligence that Zebehr Pasha has been released from captivity at Gibraltar is only one more surprise in connection with the career of this remarkable man.

The first heard of Zebehr was from the explorer Schweinfurth, who in 1864, found him holding a miniature court, and living in regal state, far up the Nile. He owned fortified posts, garrisoned by strong bands of Arabs, whose sole business was to kidnap negroes and drive them to the slave marts. His power and arrogance grew year by year. He dismissed the Khedive's tax gatherers empty handed, saying he would pay tribute to no one, and an expedition sent against them by the Khedive was annihilated. The dread of Zebehr heading a revolt and wresting from him the great region of the Upper Nile, was, it may be surmised, the chief factor in moving the Khedive to consent to Gordon's raid on the slave traffic, which would inevitably bring him into conflict with Zebehr, and might lead to the overthrow of that too powerful subject.

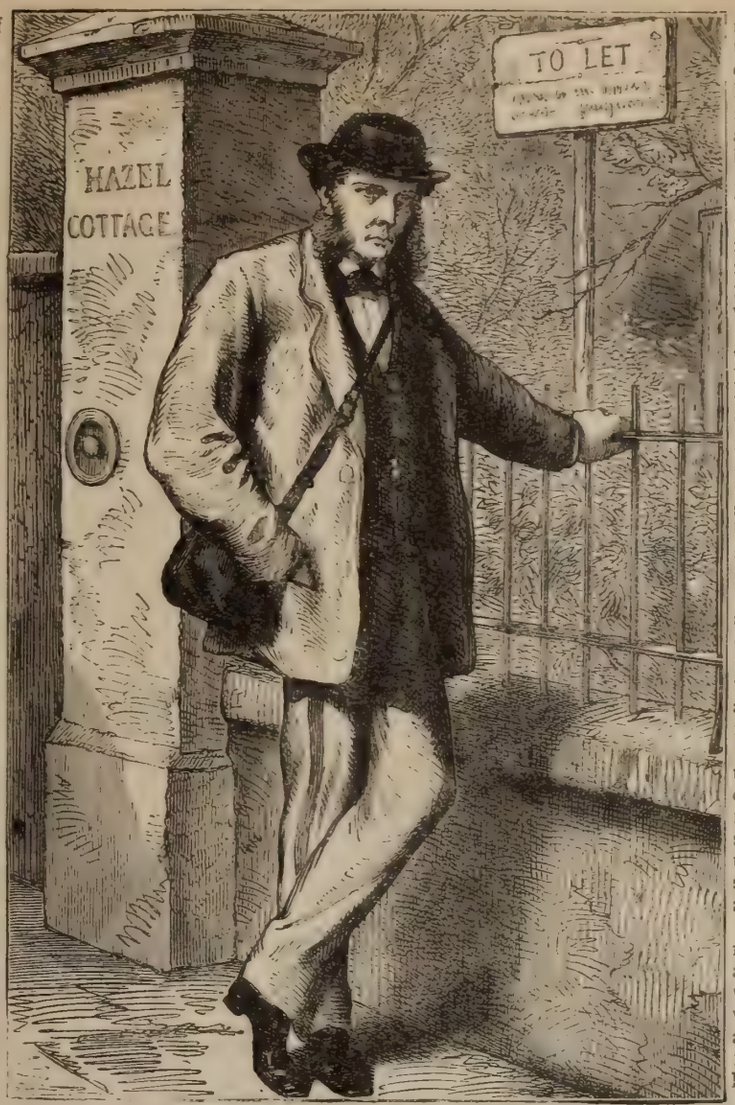
Meanwhile, Zebehr had a quarrel with the Sultan of Darfur, and contrived to represent to the Khedive of Egypt, that his enemy was also the enemy of the Khedive. He offered to lead an expedition against Darfur, and make it subject to Egypt. The offer was accepted, and Zebehr kept his promise. The Sultan was vanquished and killed, with his two sons, and Darfur was handed over to Khedi al rule. For this Zebehr was created a Pasha; but he was not satisfied with that reward. He claimed the governorship of the province which he had conquered, and in 1874 he went to Cairo to intrigue for the command. It was, however, refused him, chiefly through Gordon's influence, who knew Zebehr's character, and was aware of the fact that Zebehr was the chief of the slave dealers, whose inhuman traffic he had made it his mission to suppress. As a last resort, Zebehr tried to bribe Gordon, and that failing, his discomfiture made him desperate.

Before leaving for Cairo, he had assembled his chiefs under a large tree, near Obeid, and made them swear that if he sent the word they would unitedly take up arms against the Khedive. Now, as fast as steam and camel could take his messenger to the Soudan, the word of Zebehr Pasha went back to the leagued slave dealers: "Obey the orders I gave you under the tree." Promptly the call was answered, and under Suleiman, the eldest son of Zebehr, a large force was soon in the field. Gordon and his lieutenant, Gessi, immediately moved against him. On his way, Gordon intercepted many of Zebehr's caravans of slaves as they were being driven to the markets. Gordon said: "We must have caught two thousand in less than nine months, and I suspect we did not catch one-fifth of the caravans. Nothing could exceed the misery of these poor wretches. Some were children of not more than three years old; they had come from Shaka, a journey from which even I, on my camel shrink. Even the poor women were quite naked."

Eventually, after two years' fighting Suleiman was completely routed, was himself captured, and by Gordon's orders put to death. Zebehr also was put in prison in Cairo and charged with instigating the revolt. He was tried and condemned to execution. The Khedive, however, reprieved him, and he was permitted to reside in Cairo on a pension of $500 a month, allowed him by the Khedive. He still maintained communications with his followers and received a share of their plunder. He occupied a grand palace in Cairo, the harem of which was tenanted by numerous wives, of every hue, from Africa's shiniest black to the lightest bronze of Abyssinia, and the fairest complexions of the Lower Nile Valley. The courtyard in front of the "palace" swarmed with male retainers—slaves, of course, chiefly Nubians and negroes of Central Africa. In the reception-room was always a crowd of visitors and hangers-on, Zebehr himself sitting in the middle of the divan or low couch that runs along the upper wall.

His position became a source of danger when the British forces were fighting in the Soudan, for Zebehr in Cairo had access to information which he supplied to the Mahdi. Hicks Pasha's death was believed to have been one of the results of Zebehr's treachery. The British government therefore insisted on having him in its own keeping, and sent him to Gibraltar where he was kept under close surveillance. He has been there about three years and during that time has been begging for freedom. "I am an old man now," he said; "let me and my family go in peace. We will live in Mecca or in Jerusalem, and so I will end my time." His request has now been granted on his giving pledges of fidelity to the Khedive and the Queen.



Hazelton's Return Home. (See page 572.)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN.

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 558.)

The Review of the Year—A Spiritually minded Man—The Rent at the Eleventh Hour—Rupture of a Blood-vessel—Healed by Faith—Prayers for Sick People Answered—No Money for Food—A Dinner and Provisions Given—Decreasing Popularity at Teignmouth—Decides to Leave.

AFTER we had, on December 31, 1831, looked over the Lord's gracious dealings with us during the past year, in providing for all our temporal wants, we had about $2.50 left. A little while after the Providence of God called for that, so that not a single farthing remained. Thus we closed the year 1831, in which the Lord had been so gracious in giving to us, without our asking any one:—1. Through the instrumentality of the box, $158.—2. From brethren of the church at Teignmouth, in presents of money, $34.50.—3. From brethren living at Teignmouth and elsewhere, not connected with the church at Teignmouth, $466.50. Altogether, $659. There had been likewise many articles of provision and some articles of clothing given to us, worth, at least $100. I am so particular in mentioning these things, to show that we are never losers by acting according to the mind of the Lord. For had I had my regular salary, humanly speaking, I should not have had nearly as much; but whether this would have been the case or not, this is plain, that I have not served a hard master, and that is what I delight to show. For, to speak well of His name, that thus my beloved fellow-pilgrims, who may read this, may be encouraged to trust in Him, is the chief purpose of my writing.

In reading about all these answers to prayer, the believing reader may be led to think that I am spiritually minded above most of the children of God, and that, therefore, the Lord favors us thus. The true reason is this: Just in as many points as we are acting according to the mind of God, in so many are we blessed and made a blessing. Our manner of living is according to the mind of the Lord, for He delights in seeing His children thus come to Him (Matt. 6); and, therefore, though I am weak and erring in many points, yet He blesses me in this particular, and, I doubt not, will bless me as long as He shall enable me to act according to His will in this matter.

We had now in the new year to look up to our kind Father for new mercies, and during the year 1832, also, we found Him as faithful and compassionate as before, not laying more on us than He enabled us to bear, though space will only permit me to mention a few particulars.

January 7, 1832. We had been again repeatedly asking the Lord to-day and yesterday to supply our temporal wants, having no means to pay our weekly rent; and this evening, as late as eleven o'clock, a brother gave us 19s. 6d., a proof that the Lord is not limited to time.

February 18. This afternoon I broke a blood-vessel in my stomach and lost a considerable quantity of blood. I was very happy immediately afterwards.

February 19. This morning, Lord's day, two brethren called on me to ask me what arrangement there should be made to-day, as it regarded the four villages, where some of the brethren were in the habit of preaching, as, on account of my not being able to preach, one of the brethren would need to stay at home to take my place. I asked them kindly to come again in about an hour, when I would give them an answer. After they were gone, the Lord gave me faith to rise. I dressed myself and determined to go to the chapel. I was enabled to do so, though so weak when I went, that walking the short distance to the chapel was an exertion to me. I was enabled to preach this morning with as loud and strong a voice as usual, and for the usual length of time. After the morning meeting a medical friend called on me, and entreated me not to preach again in the afternoon, as it might greatly injure me. I told him that I should indeed consider it great presumption to do so, had the Lord not given me faith. I preached again in the afternoon, and this medical friend called again, and said the same concerning the evening meeting. Nevertheless, having faith, I preached again in the evening. After each meeting I became stronger, which was a plain proof that the hand of God was in the matter. After the third meeting I went immediately to bed, considering that it would be presumption and irreverence to try my strength needlessly.

February 23. I am now as well as I was before I broke the blood-vessel. In relating the particulars of this circumstance, I would earnestly warn everyone who may read this not to imitate me in such a thing if he has no faith; but if he has, it will, as good coin, most assuredly be honored by God. I could not say that if such a thing should happen again, I would act in the same way; for when I have been not nearly so weak as when I had broken the blood-vessel, having no faith, I did not preach; yet if it were to please the Lord to give me faith, I might be able to do the same, though even still weaker than at the time just spoken of.

About this time I repeatedly prayed with sick believers till they were restored. Unconditionally I asked the Lord for the blessing of bodily health (a thing which I could not do now), and almost always had the petition granted. In some instances, however, the prayer was not answered. In the same way, whilst in London, November, 1829, in answer to my prayers, I was immediately restored from a bodily infirmity under which I had been laboring for a long time, and which has never returned since. The way in which I now account for these facts is as follows: It pleased the Lord, I think, to give me in such cases something like the gift (not grace) of faith, so that unconditionally I could ask and look for an answer. The difference between the gift and the grace of faith seems to me this. According to the gift of faith I am able to do a thing, or believe that a thing will come to pass, the not doing of which, or the not believing of which, would not be sin; according to the grace of faith I am able to do a thing, or believe that a thing will come to pass, respecting which I have the Word of God as the ground to rest upon, and, therefore, the not doing it, or the not believing it would be sin. For instance, the gift of faith would be needed to believe that a sick person should be restored again, though there is no human probability; for there is a promise to that effect; the grace of faith is needed to believe that the Lord will give me the necessaries of life if I first seek the Kingdom of God and His righteousness: for there is a promise to that effect" (Matt. 6: 34).

March 18. These two days we have not been able to purchase meat. The sister in whose house we lodge gave us to-day part of her dinner. We are still looking to Jesus to pay the difference. We want money to pay the weekly rent and to buy provisions.

March 19. Our landlady sent again of her meat for our dinner. We have but a halfpenny left. I feel myself very cold in asking for money: still I hope for deliverance, though I do not see whence money is to come. We were not able to buy bread to-day as usual.

March 20. This has been again a day of very great mercies. In the morning we met round our breakfast which the Lord had provided for us, though we had not a single penny left; the last half-penny was spent for milk. We were then still looking to Jesus for fresh supplies. We both had no doubt that the Lord would interfere. I felt it a trial that I had but little earnestness in asking the Lord, and had this not been the case, perhaps we might have had our wants sooner supplied.

We have about £7 in the house; but considering it no longer our own, the Lord kept us from taking of it with the view of replacing what we had taken, as formerly I might have done. The meat which was sent yesterday for our dinner was enough also for to-day. Thus the Lord had provided another meal. Two sisters called upon us about noon, who gave us two pounds of sugar, one pound of coffee and two cakes of chocolate. Whilst they were with us a poor sister came and brought 1s. from herself and 2s. 6d. from another poor sister. Our landlady also sent us again of her dinner, and also a loaf. Our bread would scarcely have been enough for tea, had the Lord not thus graciously provided. In the afternoon the same sister who brought the money, brought us also from another sister one pound of butter and 2s., and from another sister 5s. Thus the Lord graciously has again answered our feeble and cold breathings. Lord, strengthen our faith!

March 29. I went to Shaldon this morning. Brother Craik has left for Bristol for four weeks. I think he will only return to take leave, and that the Lord will give him work there. [What a remarkable presentiment, which came to pass, concerning my beloved brother and fellow-laborer!]

April 4. Besides our own family, there are now four visitors staying with us, and we have but 2s.

April 5. Four pounds of cheese and one pound of butter were sent us.

April 7. Anonymously was sent to us from Plymouth, a large ham, with two sovereigns ($10), tied in the corner of the cloth in which the ham was wrapped up. Thus the Lord was once more in this our time of need, when our expenses are double, has graciously appeared for us.

April 8. I have again felt much that Teignmouth is no longer my place, and that I shall leave it.

I would observe that in August of the preceding year (1831), I began greatly to feel as if my work at Teignmouth were done, and that I should go somewhere else. On writing about this to a friend, I was led, from the answer I received, to consider the matter more maturely, and at last had it settled in this way: that it was not likely to be of God, because for certain reasons I should naturally have liked to leave Teignmouth. Afterwards I felt quite comfortable in remaining there. In the commencement of the year 1832 I began again much to doubt whether Teignmouth was my place, or whether my gift was not much more that of going about from place to place, seeking to bring believers back to the Scriptures, than to stay in one place and to labor as a pastor. I thought so particularly whilst at Plymouth in February.

On my return, however, I resolved to try whether it were not the will of God that I should still give myself to pastoral work among the brethren at Teignmouth; and, with more earnestness and faithfulness than ever, I was enabled to give myself to this work, and was certainly much refreshed and blessed in it; and I saw immediately blessings result from it. Thus my experience seemed more than ever to settle me at Teignmouth. But notwithstanding this, the impression that my work was done there, came back after some time, as the remark in my journal of April 8 shows, and it became stronger and stronger. There was one point remarkable in connection with this. Wherever I went I preached with much more enjoyment and power than at Teignmouth, the very reverse of which had been the case on my first going there. Moreover, almost everywhere I had many more hearers than at Teignmouth, and found the people hungering after food, which, generally speaking, was no longer the case at Teignmouth.

April 10. I asked the Lord for a text, but got none. At last, after having again much felt that Teignmouth is not my place, I was directed to Isaiah 51: 9–11.

April 11. Felt again much that Teignmouth will not much longer be my residence.

April 12. Still feel the impression that Teignmouth is no longer my place.

April 13. Found a letter from Brother Craik, from Bristol, on my return from Torquay, where I had been to preach. He invites me to come and help him. It appears to me, from what he writes, that such places as Bristol more suit my gifts. O, Lord, teach me! I have felt this day more than ever that I shall soon leave Teignmouth. I fear, however, there is much connected with it which savors of the flesh, and that makes me fearful. It seems to me as if I should shortly go to Bristol, if the Lord permit.

April 14. Wrote a letter to Brother Craik, in which I said I should come if I clearly saw it to be the Lord's will. Have felt again very much to-day, yea, far more than ever, that I shall soon leave Teignmouth. At last I was pressed in spirit to determine that to-morrow I would leave the brethren; so, in order that by the result of this I might see more of the Lord's mind, and that, at all events, I might have their prayers, to be directed in this matter by the Lord.

April 15. Lord's Day. This evening I preached again once more, as fully as time would permit, on the Lord's Second Coming. After having done so I told the brethren what effect this doctrine had had upon me on first receiving it, even to determine me to leave London, and to preach throughout the kingdom; but that the Lord had kept me chiefly at Teignmouth for these two years and three months, and that it seemed to me now that the time was near when I should leave them. I reminded them of what I told them when they requested me to take the oversight of them, that I could make no certain engagement, but stay only so long with them as I should see it to be the Lord's will to do so. There was much weeping afterwards. But I am now again in peace. [This would not have been the case had the matter not been of God. I knew of no place to go to. My mind was much directed to Torquay, to preach there for a month or so, and then to go further. For though I had written that I would come to Bristol, I meant only to stay there for a few days.]

(To be Continued.)

SOLEMN WARNINGS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for Sept. 18, Matt. 7: 13-29, Golden Text, Matt. 7: 19.

Ver. 13, 14. Only Two Ways Mentioned—The Narrow Way Needs to be Sought—The Broad Way Demands No Effort—A Knowledge of Destination Important to Travellers—The Strait Gate Too Strait to Admit Worldly Possessions—Or Vices—Or Proud People—Few Find It, Because the Conditions are Severe—Ver. 15-20. A Needed Warning—Dangerous Enemies—The Disguise Disarms Suspicion—A Sure Test—Their Inevitable End—Ver. 21-23. Shouting No Proof of Piety—The One Condition of Admission—Christ Intimates His Office—Ver. 24-29. Admiration of the Gospel Insufficient—Must Put it to Practical Use—The Rock to Build Upon—The House Falling Just When Shelter is Most Needed—The Peculiarity of Christ's Teaching.

"ENTER ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat: because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." The popular religion of the day is a kind of rationalistic universalism. You hear men speak in a patronizing way of the love of God, and they believe in just so much of it as suits their purpose. They are very broad, they will say, and they make out that God's friendship is just like their own; that He is too merciful to let any perish, that He may perceive faith where we cannot, that He is not arbitrary, etc., etc., thus they do away with all the distinctions which God makes so plain between the lost and the saved, the children of darkness and the children of light; the children of this world and the children of the Kingdom. His Word is clear in its witness that the two classes are fundamentally distinct and separate, and He uses figure after figure to show us this. "Enter ye in at

The Strait Gate."

Then everyone is either without or within this "strait gate," and none comes in by chance, no one is born into the narrow way, no one is carried in by somebody else. Our Lord is most definite about this, for He says, "Strive (agonize Gr.) to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able," (Luke 13: 24). Now, a striving which amounts to agony must be a very conscious thing, and this kind of death-struggle takes place in some way or other whenever a soul is really converted to God. The mere seeking is not enough. Unless a man is conscious that he is venturing his all, that time and eternity hang upon the issue, he does not really enter in at the strait gate. It is not always that a true conversion is accompanied with great emotion, but there is always a great venture; a going out from the known into the unknown; from experience to faith, from self to God. This is more than head knowledge. A man may be convinced by the clear arguments of another that God has forgiven his sins, he may even in words thank God for it, but unless he has seen that without Christ he is utterly lost, and has fled to Him as to a Refuge, and given himself up to be the Lord's, to belong to Him utterly, he is not really within the "strait gate;" on the "narrow way." When the heart receives Jesus and gives itself to Him, this new relationship cuts the cable which held it to the old life, and the soul is afloat in a new element—God. Men may be, and are, far narrower than God, but God's way of life is a and few there be that find it." It is, and always will be, unpopular. The broad way is the popular way; there is no agonizing to enter into that way; we are all of us born into it, we are by nature the children of wrath, even as others" (Eph. 2: 3). The only question of entrance is with regard to the narrow way, and everyone who has not definitely left the broad way for the narrow, is in the broad way still; there is no alternative, no middle way. But the life of God in a soul is a very real thing and God gives us a test of its reality. Many a worldly unconverted man says, "I hate these religious professors who are always talking about themselves, while their lives are no better than other people's." We are told that there shall be false prophets who shall "come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves: ye shall know them by their fruits." A good tree brings forth good fruit, an evil tree evil fruit. When a man makes a great profession of religion, and yet, instead of honestly gaining his own living, is constantly sponging upon Christian people and doing a great amount of religious begging, we cannot be uncharitable in saying, "This is not the fruit of God, for Jesus worked as a carpenter, and never begged, and Paul, who gloried in making "the Gospel of Christ without charge" (I Cor. 9; 15-18), taught that men who work not at all are "disorderly," (II Thes. 4: 11). They bring forth evil fruit. When men or women speak much of their own experience of holiness, and yet make a practice of speaking evil of other Christians, we cannot but see that they have on a good deal of sheep's clothing; what they profess is not the fruit of the divine nature, which is love. Satan is the accuser of the brethren (Rev. 12: 10), and such fruit is surely his. "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Do men gather strife, emulation, envyings, uncleanness, evil speaking of Christ? Do such fruits grow on such a Tree? Surely not.

"Narrow" Way,

Every Tree Bears its own Fruit, and when there is the life of God in a soul, the fruit will be divine, it cannot be otherwise. When Stephen was martyred, and cried with his dying breath, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," such fruit was so manifestly of the genus Christ, that it would need no learned divine to discover whence it came. The "sheep's clothing," the outward profession, the membership of a church, all this will pass for nothing with God, if the fruit of the life is not Christ. The balances of the sanctuary are unlike any human test; they cannot be untrue. When some poor native of India or Africa is persecuted for Christ's sake, brought to starvation, degraded from caste, shut out of society, and yet manifests only love to those who persecute, can we fail to see that this is the fruit of an indwelling God in him? O, it is a shame and disgrace to our modern Christianity that this good fruit is so often more apparent in heathen converts than among Christians in England and in America.

The amount of spurious Christianity among us has a fearfully deadening effect, both at home and abroad. Only the other day, a missionary who was sent out to India from the Missionary Training Home, Drayton Park, London, wrote of a native pastor who is a drunkard, taught to love strong drink by missionaries from England! As a heathen he was sober, as a converted native pastor, a drunkard! Is this the kind of conversion which God endorses? Jesus says, "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire; wherefore, by their fruits ye shall know them. Not every one that saith unto Me, 'Lord, Lord,' shall enter into the kingdom of Heaven, but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in Heaven." Some come to God with no other idea than to make God do their will; they accept forgiveness from Him, but they do not yield themselves up to Him. They are strong in their own will; they pray, but it is with the idea of making God come into their thoughts and serve their purpose; this is Not a True Conversion.

Real conversion turns us from ourselves and our own will to God and His will. Unreal conversions are very numerous. "Many will say to Me in that day, 'Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name, and in Thy name have cast out devils, and in Thy name done many wonderful works?' And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." To many—of the most prominent preachers—will this be said. Yes, if their lives are not accomplishing the will of God and bringing forth the fruit of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance (Gal. 5: 22, 23). To those who are gifted as speakers, it is no renunciation of self to preach, but when an eloquent preacher is patient under incessant interruptions, when he is teachable as a little child, ready to take rebuke from any, and just as pleased to minister to one person as to thousands, then the tree is bearing good fruit, and the man is doing the will of God. Can this condemnation include those who are used in healing? Yes, surely. For there are many who have faith for healing, and God responds to their faith, as He always does to these who trust Him in any way; yet how many of these have we seen puffed up and filled with spiritual pride, attributing the work they were doing to some power in themselves which God had given specially to them, rather than regarding themselves as the simple and unworthy instruments of the Holy Ghost! How many are there who stand before the world as the doers of "wonderful works," and whom many envy, and say, "I wish I were as useful a man as he, I wish I had a larger scope for my work." It is blessed indeed, but the glory belongs to Him whose hand holds the instrument, and not to the instrument himself. He may be the organizer of immense machinery in the work of God, he may set thousands of others to work; he may rescue thousands of orphans, of drunkards, of fallen men, and fallen women—but if his life does not speak Christ, if he is not really doing the will of God from the heart, he may, after all, hear the words spoken to him, "I never knew you, depart from me, thou that workest iniquity." It is not the amount which we do that pleases God; we can never lay Him under obligations to us by any amount of devotion, and if ever we look upon our work as something in which we enrich, or confer favor upon God, we are altogether out of our place. It is by grace we are saved, by grace we are kept, and, equally, by grace is it that we are made of God to do His will. Any power in preaching, healing, or working for God which makes us feel we are somebody is bearing evil fruit, is of the nature of the "wood, hay, stubble," which is to be burned by fire (I. Cor. 3:12, 15). Jesus said,

"Follow Me."

His life was a day by day and hour by hour doing the will of His Father, and this, not by constraint, but with joyous gladness. "So I come. I delight to do Thy will, O my God! yea, Thy law is within my heart" (Ps. 11: 8). By nature, every one of us has the tendency to do our own will; we all want to be kings of our own little kingdom, and to carry out our own plans and thoughts. But it is a greater and more glorious thing to carry out the thoughts and plans of our heavenly Father. Ours are imperfect and disjointed, and they have a selfish tendency; His cannot but do good, for they spring from His perfect, impartial, universal love.

"Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of Mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon the rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the wind blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock." God tries all His children, "everyone shall be salted with fire." When there exists real faith, it will be put to the proof; when there is love, it will be proved. No sooner do we come into a deeper knowledge and experience of our God, than we are tried on that very point. That which we are learning now is an

Education for Eternity,

and we must have our exercises and our long repetitions, that we may be grounded in our knowledge of God; the rain will descend, and the floods come, and the winds blow. There will be everything to test; but if we are "rooted and grounded in love" (Eph. 3: 17), i. e. "rooted and grounded" in God; if, indeed, God has the control of our life, if our wills are fully yielded up to Him, then our house shall stand, "the foundation of God standeth sure," the house is proved to be on a rock. God Himself has the care of it. Abraham was proved when God called him to offer up Isaac, but his house stood, it was founded upon the rock. Daniel was proved in the lion's den, but God was more than a match for the lions. It is in the time of testing that the good or the bad fruit appears. Fair-weather Christians are numerous; but, O how many fail when the time of testing comes! How few are they that find the "strait gate" and the "narrow way!" "Everyone that heareth these sayings of Mine (all this Sermon on the Mount), and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell, and great was the fall of it." In the testing time all that is of man fails, all that is of God stands. Peter thought his love to Jesus was true, but, in the testing time, it failed. None of the disciples would have believed that they should forsake Jesus and flee from Him, until the testing time revealed it. Thank God for the testing times, which show up our unreality and our nothingness. They are God's blessed provision to drive us from every false foundation to rest upon the Rock of Ages.

MRS. M. BAXTER'S WORKS.

THE following works by Mrs. M. Baxter, and others, may behad from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York:

"Words for Daily Life," "Practical Lessons," "Life Lessons," "Leaves from Genesis," "Trials and Teachings of Paul." By Mrs. M. Baxter. Each, paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 35 cts. "Record of International Conference on Divine Healing. London, 15" Paper, 25 cts. "Living Word in the Gospel of St. John." Paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. "God's Prophets." Paper 35 cts.; cloth 50 cts. "Lessons from St. Matthew's Gospel." Paper, 35 cts.; cloth 50 cts. "Teachings from St. Mark's Gospel." Paper, 35 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. "Sunday-School Lessons, 1877 and 78." By Mrs. Baxter. Each, cloth, 50 cts.

Any of Mrs. M. Baxter's tracts in the following list may also be had at one cent each or ten cents the dozen: "If it be Thy Will," "Does Sickness Sanctify?" "Casting All Your Care," two cents each or twenty cents the dozen. "God's Purpose in Sickness," "The Great Physician," "Job's Sickness," "God's Side of Prayer," "Pastor Rein," "The Body for the Lord." Also the following tracts at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen, by the late Rev. W. E. Boardman: "He Careth for You," "A Perfected Self," "Paul's Thorn," "The Father's Rod," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "The Law of Liberty," at three cents each, or thirty cents the dozen. "Bethshan, a House for Healing," and "Enduement with Power," Miss C. C. Murray's tracts, at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen. "Repeating Prayer," "Thou Art Loosed," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Redeemed from all Evil," "Anointing Him with Oil," at three cents each or, thirty cents the dozen. "Pastor Blumhardt," by Miss Sisson, at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen. "What About the Use of Means," and "The Apostolic Attitude," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Asking and Receiving," by Mrs. Boardman, at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Simple Truths about Faith." By T. Kirkman, "Health by Grace," and by H. W. S., "The Lord Hath Done It."

SLEEPING AND WAKING.

God giveth His beloved sleep:
They lie securely 'neath His wing
Till the night pale, the dawning break;
Safe in its overshadowing
They fear no dark and harmful thing;
What does He give to those who wake?

To those who sleep He gives good dreams;
For bodies overtasked and spent
Comes rest to comfort every ache;
To weary eyes new light is sent,
To weary spirits new content;—
What does God give to those who wake?

His angels sit beside the beds
Of such as rest beneath His care.
Unweariedly their post they take,
They wave their wings to fan the air,
They cool the brow and stroke the hair—
God comes Himself to those who wake.

To fevered eyes that cannot close,
To hearts o'erburdened with their lot,
He comes to soothe, to heal, to slake;
Close to the pillows hard and hot
He stands, altho gh they see Him not,
And taketh care of those who wake.

Nor saint, nor angel will He trust
With this one blessed ministry.
Lest they should falter or mistake;
They guard the sleepers faithfully
Who are the Lord's beloved; but He Watches by those beloved who wake.

Oh! in the midnight dense and drear,
When life drifts outward with the tide,
And mortal terrors overtake,
In this sure thought let us abide,
And unafraid be satisfied -
God comes Himself to those who wake!

—SUSAN COOLIDGE.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A sample packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of
J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

SPAIN
AND SPANISH AMERICA.
ILLUSTRATED.

A most beautifully illustrated new work on Spain and Spanish America, edited by Bishop Riley—sold in part—each part complete in itself and sold separately. The proceeds dedicated to aiding christian work in Mexico. Part I. now ready. Sent to any address on the receipt of price fifty cents. In asking for it mail your requests to J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York, inclosing fifty cents and the words, "Send Spain and Spanish America, illustrated: to"—and then give your address.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

WANTED—Agents in every town and village to sell our New Christmas Books (5), selling from 50 cts. to $3.50. One woman with a family writes that she averaged $7.00 a day last year, from September until Christmas. One new agent made $125 in six weeks. One sold 55 the first week in a village of only 200. Try it in your school district if no more. You can make from $25 to $500.
CASSELL & CO. (Limited), 822 Broadway, N. Y.; 40 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES—(avoid Agents and Dealers whose profits and expenses double the cost on every Piano they sell) and send this First-Class UPRIGHT Cabinet GEM 7⅓ Octave Rosewood Piano, Warranted 6 years, for $193! We send it—with Beautiful Cover and Stool—for Trial in your own Home before you buy. Send for circulars to Marshal & Smith, 235 East 21st St., N. Y.

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons, etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed. Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

A PERFECT FOOD FOR INFANTS.
THE MOTHER'S FAVORITE.
It has been successful in hundreds of cases where other prepared foods failed.

FOR INVALIDS AND DYSPEPTICS.
The Most Nourishing, Most Palatable,
Most Economical,
OF ALL PREPARED FOODS.
EASILY AND QUICKLY PREPARED.

Send for circulars and pamphlets giving testimony of Physicians and Mothers, which will amply prove every statement we make.
For sale by Druggists 25c., 50c., $1.00.
Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.
Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE

By a New York S.S. Superintend't. Introduction By J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

10,000 Prize Questions and Answers pertaining to Persons, Places and Things. Bible Studies and Readings, Prayer Meeting Talks and Outlines, Concert Exercises, Blackboard Outlines, Object Lessons and Chalk Talks. Seed Thoughts, Religious Emblems and Allegories illustrated, with Reference Tables, Maps, etc. Endorsed by D. D.'s, Teachers and Press. Agt's sell 150 to 200 copies a month to saints and sinners.
"An ingenious help and pleasant guide to an acquaintance with the Bible."—Talmage.
606 Pages $2. AGENTS Wanted.
E. B. TREAT, Publisher, NEW YORK.

Minnesota and Northwestern R. R.

Between Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis and between Chicago, Dubuque and Des Moines, Iowa.
Two Limited Trains each way Daily.

AGENTS WANTED (Samples Free) for DR. SCOTT'S beautiful Electric Corsets, Brushes, Belts, Etc. No risk, quick sales. Territory given. Satisfaction guaranteed.
DR. SCOTT, 843 Broadway, New York.

CORTICELLI SILK PURSE

This cut is reduced in size nearly one half from the original, which is one of many new engravings which illustrate

"FLORENCE HOME NEEDLEWORK"

1887, 96 pages, just published.

CROCHETED SILK BEADWORK is the leading subject, for which three complete and rare alphabets have been specially engraved. The Book mailed to any address for 6 cts.

NONOTUCK SILK CO., Florence, Mass.

CAUTION.—Purchasers should notice carefully the black spool with the name Corticelli Purse Twist on one end. ☞ The genuine is put up only in this way.
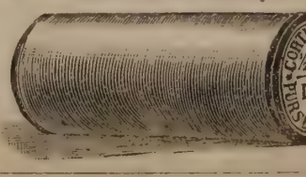
Sold by enterprising dealers.



400 Choice Recitations and Readings,

bound in handsome lithograph paper cover, mailed to any address, postpaid, for only 30 cents. Satisfaction guaranteed. Address J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers, 57 Rose Street, New York.
Mention the CHRISTIAN HERALD in your letter when you write.

A Song-Book Worth Buying.

Sweney and Kirkpatrick's Glad Hallelujahs is a song-book worth buying. This will be seen, 1. By its general use. Although bound neatly and substantially, we venture, it will be used so freely, that it will be worn out. 2. By the effect its songs will produce in church or school. They'll thrill and electrify your membership. Get it.

By mail, 35 cents. By express (not prepaid), $3.60 per dozen; $30 per 100. One sample copy 25 cents.
Further inducements to Schools, Churches and Evangelists. Write us.
T. T. TASKER, SR., PUBLISHER,
921 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

LATEST, CHEAPEST AND BEST
160 Pages. Strong Board Covers.
30 cents each, postpaid. $25.00 per 100.
Send to The Phillips Publishing Co.,
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

SINGING TEACHERS AND CONDUCTORS OF MUSICAL SOCIETIES,
SHOULD APPLY
FOR COMPLETE CATALOGUES, SPECIMEN PAGES AND TERMS.
Any Book desired for examination sent on receipt of price. Money refunded if unsatisfactory.
BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth Street, New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

FOR Indigestion,
Sick Headache,
Constipation,
Inactive Liver.

The merchant planning business schemes;
The preacher struggling through his themes;
The statesman in assembly halls;
The broker wild with "puts and calls,"
To cool the Blood and brace the mind,
Will TARRANT'S SELTZER safest find.

James McCreery &

are now exhibiting t first Importations fo
Fall Season, of Ha
Nouveautes in Silks, vets and Dress Goo
ORDERS by mail
ceive prompt and ca attention.
Address
Broadway and Eleventh
New York.

Infant Wardrobe

Ladies who are unable to e our stock of these goods pers would find it to their advant correspond with us. The mos plete information furnished, an ful attention given to special

Lord & Tay

Broadway & 20th Street, N

THE AMERICA MAGAZIN

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATE
This Magazine portrays A can thought and life from oc ocean, is filled with pure high literature, and can be safely comed in any family circle.

PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY M
Sample Copy of current number mailed ceipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15
Premium List with either.
Address:
The American Magazine Co., Put 130 & 132 Pearl St.,

GET UP CLUB

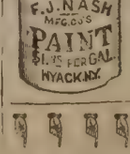
"Demonology or Spiritua Ancient and Modern."—"An effective weap sword of fire."—"Only unanswerable wo subject."—startling disclosures.—History data—Scores saved already. Whole co rescued. Every family, preacher and christi needs one. 310 pp. 12mo. cloth Price red Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, N



A Queen Anne house a the rays of the settin ing in the purity of its colors, the silver lini clouds we almost render J. Nash, M'f'g Co., Nya land Co., N. Y., in additi usual co or card free, se ceedingly interesting, p mon-sense exposition free.

IF YOU WANT ANY BOO
It makes no difference where you see them a or by whom or where they are publishe send your orders to me and I will attend promptly, send all books to you prepaid, once that they reach you safely. Posta received for fractional parts of a dollar.
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, N

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. X., No. 38. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, SEPT 22, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF CAPTAIN LAND AND PICTURE OF THE BURNING OF THE STEAMSHIP.

THE PRIME MINISTER. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

SATAN'S TACTICS IN THE LAST DAYS.

PICTURE OF BAY ISLANDS, HONDURAS.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Philadelphia Centennial—The New York Republican Convention—The Sentence on the Chicago Anarchists—Riot in Ireland—Bellicose Speeches in France—A German Prognostication of War—Herr Most Refused Citizenship—Curious Suit About a Corpse, etc.

PORTRAIT OF THE LATE CAPTAIN J. B. EADS.

FOLLY OF UNBELIEF. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.—Gems from New Books:

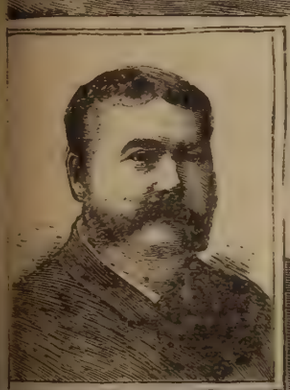
A Human Ambulance—A Magnetized Rudder—An Opium Slave's Emancipation—A Polygamist's Dilemma—A Priest Melting his Idol.

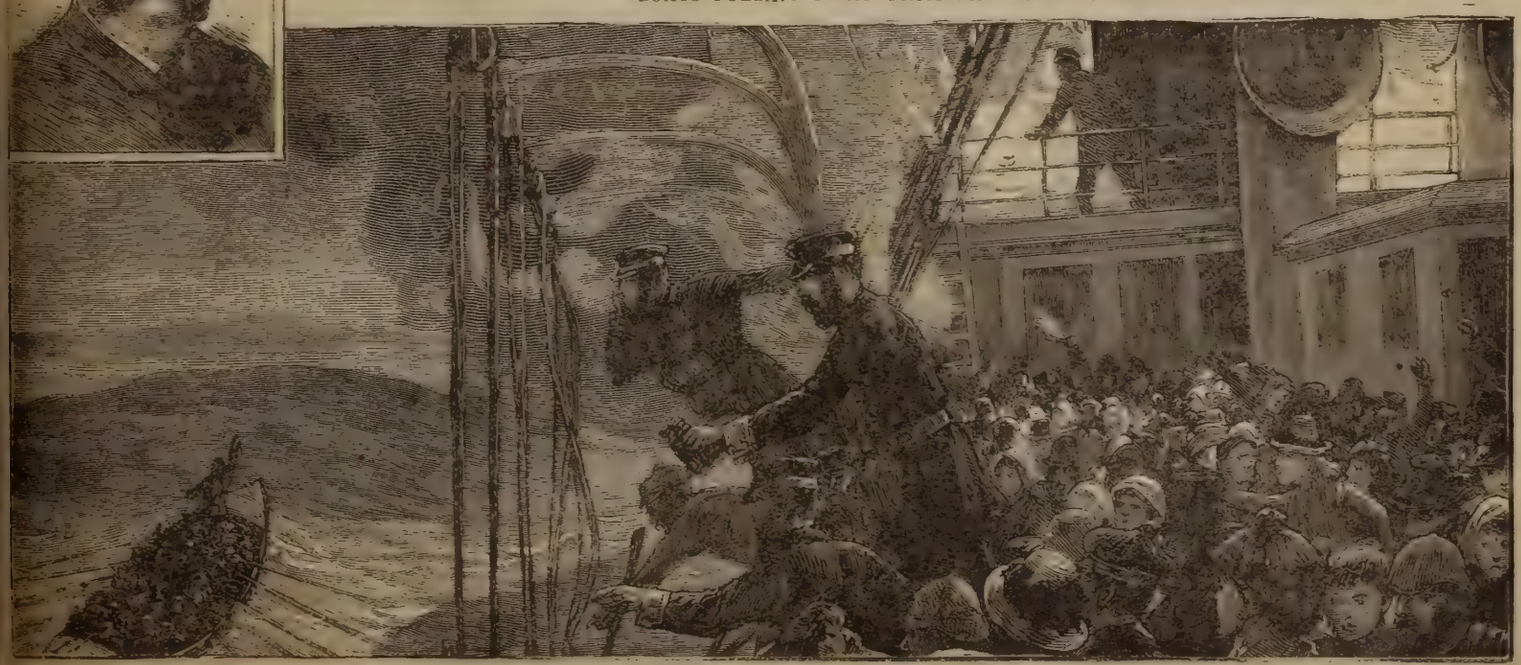
ENOCH WHITELEY'S CHILD. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. (Continued.)

THE CENTURION'S FAITH. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

BOATS PULLING AWAY FROM THE BURNING SHIP.





THE PASSENGERS LEAVING THE SHIP.

CAPT. F. S. LAND—THE BURNING OF THE STEAMSHIP CITY OF MONTREAL.

THE BURNED INMAN STEAMSHIP.

The Steamer and her Living Freight—A Clergyman's Experience—The Discovery of the Fire—Hand to Hand Battle with the Flames—Arousing the Passengers—The Fire Subdued—Breaks out Afresh—The Second Alarm—Hope Abandoned—Lowering the Boats—Ten Hours Drifting—Temporary Shelter—The Hospitable York City—The Captain of the Burned Steamship.

THAT the Inman steamship City of Montreal was burned at sea during her voyage from New York to Liverpool we have already learned from the cable despatches, a summary of which appeared in this journal on August 25; it is now possible, from the fuller narratives of officers and passengers, which have been brought by mail, to form some conception of the details of the awful scene and to realize how dire was the peril from which in the providence of God the people on board were rescued. The following account is compiled from those narratives, and it will, with the two pictures on the first page, which are drawn from material supplied by the purser of the ship, give a clear idea of what occurred.

The Discovery of the Fire was made on the fifth day out. The City of Montreal sailed from New York on Saturday, August 6, with twenty-three intermediate passengers and 112 in the steerage. She had a full cargo, including over 2,000 bales of cotton, which were stowed in the after part of the ship. The voyage for the first four days was uneventful. On the evening of August 10, the ship had reached latitude 43° 38′ north, longitude 43° 54′ west, and was then about 400 miles south easterly of St. Johns, Newfoundland. The night came on with a fresh northerly wind veering to northwest, and a pretty high westerly sea running. The Rev. J. M. Donaldson, of Adelaide, Australia, one of the intermediate passengers says: "On Wednesday night, about ten o'clock, after most of the passengers had turned in, and some were in their first sweet sleep, they were aroused by the cry of 'fire' and by the smoke, which increased rapidly and began to fill the cabins and darken the lights throughout the ship. In a short time all were hastily dressed and on deck."

Half an hour of desperate work, of alternate hope and fear, had preceded this alarm. The officers and crew had been battling with the destructive element on deck while the clergyman and his fellow-passengers had been sleeping quietly, unconscious of the danger. In a graphic narrative published in the Sun, this picture is drawn of that time: While the two mates were on the bridge, at half past nine o'clock and everything about the decks was quiet and in good order, the carpenter, who had been making a tour around the ship aft, came up on the bridge and reported from the second compartment forward of the stern, and that there must be fire in the cotton below. A fire at sea is an awful thing, under the most favorable circumstances, but in these days iron ships have been known to run for a week with a cargo on fire in the hold, and then reach port in safety. Captain Land was therefore quietly notified of the impending danger, so as not to alarm the passengers, while the boatswain called all hands to man the hose. The fire hoses were at once connected, and streams of water were poured down upon the flames.

Smoke Coming Up Through the Ventilator

The knowledge of the fire was kept from the passengers for nearly an hour; but then, the Captain, fearing that the smoke below might suffocate some of the passengers, sent for the steward, and bade him order

Every One on Deck.

But before this there came a smell of smoke creeping along the alleyways between the lines of staterooms, and, passing through the ventilators, reached some of the more wakeful. No one was for a time alarmed. There are so many bad smells about a ship at sea, that a little matter of burning cotton will not at once attract a passenger's attention. But the smell was persistent, and grew stronger and stronger, until some of the more timid began to open their stateroom doors and asked their neighbors if they noticed anything unusual in the air. Their neighbors had noticed it. Pretty soon even those least accustomed to a ship noticed that there was an unusual commotion on deck, as of men hurrying to and fro. Orders were frequently given and instantly obeyed. Everybody grew anxious, and some left their staterooms and walked down toward the cabin. All this time the smell of smoke was growing stronger, and finally the passengers could see by the dim lights in the alley between the staterooms that a thick black smoke was actually gathering overhead.

Then it was noticed that the steamer had slowed down, and in a moment the third or fourth officer came into the saloon and spoke to the stewards who were there. The man was calm in speech, but his face betrayed his anxiety. Some of the passengers heard him tell the stewards to awaken the passengers and sound the fire-alarm in the saloon.

A Passenger's Experience.

Mr. John B. Haughton, of New York, who was one of the intermediate passengers, says: "At this time persons were rushing excitedly from room to room. I jumped out of my berth, but had not had sufficient time to dress myself when the steward dashed at my door shouting:

'Up on Deck, Sir; the Ship is on Fire!'

I hurried from my room and got into the corridor, where I met the passengers, men and women, scantily dressed, rushing about in a state of panic to reach the companionway. When I got on deck, the sight was one I shall never forget. I saw that the night was pitch dark, with an occasional star peeping out here and there in the sky. A sharp wind was blowing. It was gloomy and dismal, save on the burning ship, where passengers were rushing to and fro in a state of intense excitement."

At midnight the fire was moderating, and the passengers were requested to retire below, as all appeared to be right. Several persons remained on deck all night, being too terrified to retire below; but most of them obeyed, though few if any undressed or turned in. They sat in groups, listening to the tramping overhead, the shouts and hurried movements; occasionally looking into the passages to see if the smoke had grown less dense. So the long hours of the night passed, and the eastern sky was turning from black to gray, when loud shouts to come on deck told the anxious passengers that the

Fire had Broken Out Afresh,

and this time it had gained complete hold of the vessel. Once on deck, the passengers were sent forward, and there gathered in groups, some weeping, some trying to encourage the distressed, some praying aloud for succor, and all by turns peering over the rail and off across the tossing water, hoping to see the welcome lights of some passing ship, while from the ventilators about the after part of the deck and cracks and crevices about the hatches, heavy clouds of smoke rose and drifted away eastward. When the cabin had been cleared, some sailors, crawling on their hands and knees, went through the staterooms on the main saloon deck and that below, and found that all the passengers had fled. There had been fears that some of them might be stupefied with the smoke while asleep.

The hatches were covered, in the hope of smothering the fire, and the vessel's head was got round to make for Newfoundland, four hundred miles away. But about six o'clock on Thursday morning a long tongue of flame burst from the hatchway amidships, where before this, it was supposed there was no fire. Then the captain realized that the cotton must be on fire in several places, and all hope of saving the ship was abandoned. Nothing could be done but Taking to the Boats.

There were eight of them—four life-boats and four launches—capable of carrying all on board without undue strain, but with little room to spare. All available hands were set at work to prepare provisions, to free the running gear, to see to the state of the boats and to hold all in readiness. About eight o'clock in the morning the fire had so gained that the inevitable moment had come to leave the ship. All the passengers were assembled on deck, each one encased in a life-preserver. It was a picture of human misery and most helpless despair such as words cannot describe. Mothers clasped to their bosoms, with a fervency proportioned to the danger, their helpless children; husbands and wives embraced each other for what they felt might be in all probability the last time. To add to the difficulty of the moment, the sea ran much higher than at any other time during the voyage, and the danger of the boats being smashed or swamped in lowering was imminent.

Leaving the Ship.

The ship had been headed about toward the wind, but had fallen off in the trough of the sea after the fire had progressed so far as to drive the engineers from their stations, for the engines were then, of course, stopped and the ship left without control. The boats were got down in the lee of the ship and the people lowered into them one or two at a time. But it often happen that just as one was ready to drop into a boat the sea would go down and the ship roll away, leaving the unfortunate person hanging in the air thirty feet above the boat. It was with great difficulty that the boats were kept from being smashed. The crew worked splendidly, and all the passengers were placed in the boats in a comparatively short time. How the boats floated with their heavy loads is like a miracle.

The lack of time prevented the manning of the boats with their respective crews, the men being compelled to continue until the last moment the work of keeping the flames down. Women and children were first put into the boats, then the male passengers, and the crew afterwards. As soon as each boat was loaded it left the ship's side, and all of them got safely away. By some unfortunate oversight, however, about twenty persons were left on board the burning craft. When this was discovered, No. 3 boat returned and took six, and No. 5 boat also took another six. Discouraging cries were heard that no land was in sight, and no succor appeared within the wide range of the horizon; but one of the eight men still on board the steamer, a noble young sailor, had the presence of mind to run up to the bridge and take a good look around the horizon, from that point of vantage. Mr. Donaldson, the clergyman before mentioned, says: "Who can describe the joy which was ours, as we laid by, when he shouted, 'I have just rising within the range of vision. A moment's careful survey with the captain's glasses discovered that the approaching vessel was a barque under full sail which was bearing with a fair wind, straight down upon us, her crew having evidently seen our condition. As soon as the joyous vision greeted our eyes every heart in the boats was cheered with hope, and not a few people bowed their heads in thankful prayer. In about ten hours, the deliverer, which proved to be a German barque, arrived, hove to, and waited the arrival of the boats."

Discovered the Masts of a Ship

After much difficulty, and at intervals extending over four hours, the boats having got considerably scattered during the ten to twelve hours they had been beating about on the waters, all but one reached the barque. This one was the most lightly laden and was supposed to be the best manned. It appears either it had unwisely been allowed to drift before the wind out of sight, or else her crew, anxious to take no more on board, had gone off in spite of the captain's orders to keep together. This boat was subsequently picked up after drifting for four days, during which those on board endured severe hardships from want of water, which they would have been spared had they not gone off by themselves.

Over a hundred persons were now crowded on board the little barque, which was only just large enough to hold them, and had but little provision on board. The temporary refuge, however, was very welcome and doubtless but for it many of the people in the open boats must have suffered much, and perhaps have died. The next morning, however, Relief Came.

The captain of the York City, a steamer on her voyage from Baltimore, Md., to London, had seen the light of the burning City of Montreal, and realizing that there must be men in peril there, altered his course and bore down upon her. Early on the morning of the 12th, the passengers and crew of the City of Montreal were taken off the barque and hospitably received on the York City. Happily, part of her cargo consisted of corned beef and flour, and the captain took the liberty of using it to help entertain his hungry guests. After seven days all were safely landed at Queenstown.

That such a catastrophe could have occurred without the loss of a single life, is truly marvellous. Every one who escaped from the burning vessel, must have felt that death was very near and must have rejoiced with a full and thankful heart on setting foot on dry land. Yet to them as to us all death must one day come. The King of Terrors he is generally called, but he has no terror for those who are in Christ. Whether he comes in catastrophe by land or sea, or approaches in illness, his power over the Christian is broken. When he has done his worst, he but introduces him into the presence of Him whom He loves, and where there is fullness of joy for evermore.

CAPTAIN FRANCIS S. LAND.

THE City of Montreal was commanded by Captain Francis S. Land, whose portrait appears on the first page. He is regarded by the company as one of its most efficient and skilful officers. He was not the regular commander of the steamer, but had taken charge of her while his own vessel, the City of Berlin, was laid up for repairs in England. Captain Land entered the service of the old Inman Company fifteen years ago. Twelve years ago he became Captain of the City of New York, and when that vessel was transferred to the China trade, Captain Land was placed in charge of the City of Brussels. He was afterward put in command of the City of Berlin, succeeding Captain Brooks. This was five years ago. A graphic personal sketch of Captain Francis S. Land from the pen of Charles A. Dougherty, was published in Harper's Magazine last year. He says: "If you are a believer in physiognomy, look at Francis S. Land's portrait and you will know him to be as he is, a man of the kindest instincts, and yet of the strongest force of character. Possibly better than any officer who can be named he illustrates the popular idea of the sea-captain. He is a big man, of the hearty, robust type; he looks like a giant in his uniform. You say, as you gaze upon him, 'Here is a man such as one looks for on the sea; he is approachable by a child, but he secures and retains the respect of every one.' He has hosts of friends, whom he has won by his geniality."

That he is genial and warm-hearted, thousands of passengers who have sailed with him on the City of Berlin, which he formerly commanded, can testify, but it is comparatively few who have seen how cool and self-possessed he can be in the face of danger. One instance before this of the fire is on record. It occurred in May, 1885, on the City of Berlin. In making the westward passage, the ship, one night, collided with an iceberg. The berg was almost as hard as the iron ship, and about ten times as large. Both opposing bodies were much crushed, and at one time affairs looked serious for the passengers on board the steamer, but the gallant mariner with the anomalous name carried his boat through dangerous seas to the port of New York. The passengers on that occasion presented the captain with a handsome gold watch and chain as a testimonial of their gratitude, and their spokesman in presenting it remarked that they would not have been there to tender it if Captain Land had not, in the hour of peril, been "cooler than the iceberg."

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

How a Lady Entered Another World.—Mr. Campbell said, at a converts' meeting: "I was recently told of a lady who was dying, when a friend, who stood by her death-bed, remarked, as she gazed down upon the tranquil expression that the dying one's countenance assumed, 'I suppose you are going into another world trusting in the truths of God?' 'Only one truth,' rejoined the lady sweetly; 'it is all I need, for the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanses us from all sin.' That lady was honoring God in her simple faith and trust in Him. Not long afterwards she 'fell asleep' in Jesus, in the sufficiency of whose blood she was trusting."

A Simple and Sincere Prayer.—An Evangelist remarked: "A young man went home from a meeting one evening much perplexed. Shutting himself into his room, he knelt down and prayed something like this: 'Lord Jesus, I don't understand what all this is about, not a bit of it; but I just come to Thee, knowing that Thou wilt understand me. So Lord, just take me.' Very soon light came, and he rejoiced in God's salvation. I think that poor contrite, heart-broken young fellow just did the right thing. You who cannot understand what Gospel meetings are about, just hand yourself in a definite act over to Jesus, and He will do the whole thing for you."

"Jemmy the Devil."—There is a town in the north of England, where three years ago, lived a man so bad that he was nicknamed "Jemmy the Devil." For miles around, if any serious mischief was in hand, it was always supposed that he was at the bottom of it. A mission was held in his town, and he was persuaded to go to some of the meetings. This was the means of his conversion. From that day he was known to be a new man, and at a meeting recently held in the same place, Jemmy, no longer "the Devil," but the servant of Jesus Christ, was one of the principal helpers. All such instances of the triumphs of God's grace give us fresh courage to do what we can to make known the Gospel which the Holy Spirit thus uses for the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

A Case of Fatal Procrastination.—A Christian worker said: "A young man was much agitated in regard to his eternal interests. He knew he was a sinner, and understood the freeness of God's grace to the lost. Rallied, however, by some careless companions, he resolved to put off the matter for ten years. Then, again, the Holy Spirit moved upon his heart, but he was again tempted to delay for ten years more. After this his concern gradually waned, and he died an old man, declaring that there was no hope for him, because he had sinned away his day of opportunity and mercy. Delays are always dangerous, but they are especially so in affairs of the soul. Let me, therefore, urge you to give yourself no rest till your eternal welfare is made sure through prayer and faith in Christ, who died for you and who waits to bless you."

Converted by an Infidel.—A Workingman, speaking in reference to some remarks made by Mr. G. W. Surger, said: "Yes, sir, it's quite true, and no mistake about it either; the devil and his scholars go a little bit too far sometimes. You see they tries to catch us in the quicksands; but we see them sink down instead. Jem Stakes (my mate here, sir) and myself was both a listening to a little man dressed in gray, a holding forth in Hyde Park. He was a saying as how he believed in some sort of a God as a Supreme Being, but he was quite sure He did not dwell in heaven, for he had took the biggest telescope he could find and looked up to see for hisself. This proved 'im to be a fool, says I. Of course it made the boys and maids clap their hands for to hear him, but it set sensible men a thinking he was a duffer. Then he went on to say as how Jesus Christ is not God, for God can't get angry; and it says in the Bible Jesus was angry, and cursed the fig-tree. And that did for me completely; so I cries out, 'O you bloke, I want you to do something.' Says he, 'What is it?' I says to him, 'Speak to that there tree, and tell it to shrivel and dry up.' He says, 'I can't do it.' 'Why?' I asks, laughing, 'Cause no man has the power,' he replies. 'Bravo,' I says, 'Jesus did do it, and if no man could do it, it tells me plainly that Jesus is God.' He put his tongue out, and made some more silly remarks; but folks saw I was right. All the way home I thought of it, things took a new way, somehow. From that night I began to read the Bible, and have since proved that Jesus is God, for he has forgiven all my sins."

A Highlander's Sad Death.—Mr. Smart Observed: "In a village, not far from Glasgow, a series of evangelistic meetings were being conducted, and one night a big, strong-looking Highland man came in, and, at the close, was asked to take Jesus as his Saviour. But he shook his head, saying, 'No, I would fain take Christ, but I have a piece of work to do to-morrow that I could not do were I a Christian.' He would not be persuaded, and, a few months afterwards, the gentleman who spoke to him was hastily summoned to a death-bed. There he saw, lying in the last moments of life, the wasted form of the strong and healthy man whom he had urged to accept Christ only a few months before. 'Ah,' said the dying man, as his friend again told him that Christ was still willing to receive him. 'Not now; I could have taken Christ that night in the meeting, but not now; my day of grace is past, and I must die unsaved!' With these words upon his lips he passed away."

The Thief's Temptation.—An Evangelist Tells us of "a boy who was brought up amidst very bad surroundings, and who had his conscience so warped that he thought that to be a successful thief was most laudable, and deserving the highest praise. A lady got hold of him, and imposed upon herself the task of reforming him. One day, as the lady and this boy were walking together, he saw a handkerchief hanging partially out of a lady's pocket. He could easily have taken it, and was greatly tempted to do so, but with a great effort he restrained himself. On their return home he told the lady what had happened, and how miserable he felt at having missed the opportunity, though he now knew it to be wrong. The lady comforted him, and told him rather to rejoice that he had been able to overcome the temptation. In that boy there were the two natures—the one the God-given conscience, long asleep, but ultimately awakened, and the carnal nature that strives against all that is spiritual. Happily Christ made that boy His own, and he became 'a new creature.'"

How the Runaway Horses were Stopped.—A friend observed: "About two years ago a party of ladies and gentlemen, at one of our Scotch watering-places, were driving one day. The spirited horses went off at a good speed, till at length the coachman, trying to check them, found he could no longer control them. In vain he pulled the reins and tried to stay their speed, but they madly rushed on. The occupants of the carriage, pale and trembling, held helplessly on to the sides of it, expecting every moment to be thrown on to the road. A little further down the road, which they were so rapidly traversing, divided a branch going off to the left, while the main road turned slightly to the right. This was the natural way for the horses to take, and it led to a precipice. The other, mounting over a steep hill, led to safety. As they approached this crossroad one of the gentlemen, a devoted Christian, knowing that all things are possible with God, and feeling sure that his work in this life was not yet done, prayed God to spare his life, and the lives of his companions. As he kneeled and prayed, they came to where the roads divided, and the horses, swerving slightly to the left, turned in that direction, and were soon brought to a stop."

Light for the Last Days; a New Work on Prophecy. By Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, with two Colored Diagrams, 673 pages. Price $3.50. May be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

THE PRIME MINISTER.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning, September 18, 1887, when services were resumed in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, after a suspension of eleven weeks. The vast building, which has been enlarged and renovated, was densely crowed in every part.

"And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, See, I have set thee over all the land of Egypt." Genesis 41 : 41.

The Good Man Sure of Appreciation—The Bismarck of Egypt—I The World Compelled to Honor Christian Character—Chrysostom's Intrepid Declaration—II. Persecution Leads to Alleviation—Denominations Thrive by Persecution—III. Sins will come to Exposure—The Criminal's Fatal Blunders—A General's Uncovered Forehead—A Court Fool's Suggestion—A Conscience-striken Highwayman—IV. Connection Between All Events—Precision of God's Judgments—A Preacher's Forgotten Text—V. The Propriety of Laying up for the Future—Two Ways of Laying Up Money—VI. A Storehouse in Every Famine.

YOU cannot keep a good man down. God has decreed for him a certain elevation to which he must attain. He will bring him through, though it cost Him a thousand worlds. There are men constantly in trouble lest they shall not be appreciated. Every man comes in the end to be valued at just what he is worth. How often you see men turn out all their forces to crush one man or set of men. How do they succeed? No better than did the government that tried to crush Joseph, a Scripture character upon which we speak to-day. It would be an insult to suppose that you were not all familiar with how his jealous brothers threw him into the pit, but, seeing a caravan of Arabian merchants moving along on their camels, with spices and gums that loaded the air with aroma, sold their brother to these merchants, who carried him down into Egypt; how Joseph was sold to Potiphar, a man of influence and office; how by his integrity he raised himself to high position in the household, until under the false charge of a vile wretch he was hurled into the penitentiary; how in prison he commanded respect and confidence; how by the interpretation of Pharaoh's dream he was freed and became the chief man in government,

The Life of Joseph;

The Bismarck of Egypt;

how in time of famine Joseph had the control of a storehouse which he had filled during the seven years of plenty; how when his brothers who had thrown him into the pit and sold him into captivity applied for corn, he sent them home with their beasts borne down under the heft of the corn sacks; how the sin against their brother which had so long been hidden came out at last, and was returned by that brother's forgiveness and kindness, an illustrious triumph of Christian principle.

Learn from this story, in the first place, that the world is compelled to honor Christian character. Potiphar was only a man of the world, yet Joseph rose in his estimation until all the affairs of that great house were committed to his charge. From this servant no honors or confidences were withheld. When Joseph was in prison he soon won the heart of the keeper, and, though placed there for being a scoundrel, he soon convinced the jailor that he was an innocent and trustworthy man, and, released from close confinement, he became a general superintendent of prison affairs. Wherever Joseph was placed, whether a servant in the house of Potiphar or a prisoner in the penitentiary, he became and is an illustration of the truth I lay down, that the world is compelled to honor Christian character. There are those who affect to despise a religious life. They speak of it as a system of phlebotomy by which a man is bled of all his courage and nobility. They say he has bemeaned himself. They pretend to have no more confidence in him since his conversion than before his conversion. But all that is hypocrisy. It is impossible for any man not to admire and confide in a Christian who shows that he has really become a child of God and is what he professes to be. You cannot despise a son or a daughter of the Lord God Almighty. Of course half and half religious character wins no approbation.

The First Man Everywhere,

Redwald, the king of the Saxons, after Christian baptism had two altars, one for the worship of God and the other for the sacrifice of devils. You may have a contempt for such men, for mere pretension of religion, but when you behold the excellency of Jesus Christ come out in the life of one of his disciples, all that there is good and noble in your soul rises up into admiration. Though that Christian be as far beneath you in estate as the Egyptian slave of whom we are discussing, by an irrevocable law of our nature Potiphar and Pharaoh will always esteem Joseph. Chrysostom when threatened with death by Eudoxia, the empress, sent word to her saying, "Go tell her that I Fear Nothing But Sin."

Such nobility of character will always be applauded. There was something in Agrippa and Felix which demanded their respect for Paul, the rebel against government. I doubt not they would willingly have yielded their office and dignity for the thousandth part of that true heroism which beamed in the eye and beat in the heart of the unconquerable apostle. The infidel and worldling are compelled to honor in their hearts, though they may not eulogize with their lips, a Christian firm in persecution, cheerful in proverty, truthful in losses, triumphant in death. I find Christian men in all professions and occupations, and I find them respected, and honored and successful. John Frederick Oberlin alleviating ignorance and distress, John Howard passing from dungeon to lazaretto with healing for the body and the soul, Elizabeth Frye coming to the profligate of Newgate prison to shake down their obduracy as the angel came to the prison at Philippi, driving open the doors and snapping locks and chains, as well as the lives of thousands of the followers of Jesus who have devoted themselves to the temporal and spiritual welfare of the race, are monuments of the Christian religion that shall not crumble while the world lasts.

A man in the cars said: "I would like to become a Christian if I only knew what religion is. But if this lying and cheating and bad behavior among men who profess to be good is religion, I want none of it." But, my friends, if I am an artist in Rome and a man comes to me and asks what the art of painting is, I must not show him the daub of some mere pretender. I will take him to the Raphaels and the Michael Angelos. It is most unfair and dishonest to take the ignominious failures in Christian profession instead of the glorious successes. The Bible and the Church are great picture-galleries filled with masterpieces.

Furthermore: we learn from this story of Joseph that is alleviation. Had it not been for his being sold into Egyptian bondage by his malicious brothers, and his false imprisonment, Joseph would never have become Prime Minister. Everybody accepts the promise: "Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven," but they do not realize the fact that this principle applies to wordly as well as spiritual success. It is true in all departments. Had it not been for Æschines who brought impeachment against Demosthenes, the immortal oration, De Corona, would never have been delivered. Men rise to high political position through misrepresentation and the assault of the public. Public abuse is all that some of our public men have had to rely upon for their elevation. It has brought to them what talent and executive force could never have achieved. Many of those who are making great effort for place and power will never succeed just because they are not of enough importance to be abused. It is the nature of man to gather about those who are persecuted, and defend them, and they are apt to forget the faults of those who are the subjects of attack while attempting to drive back the slanderers. Helen Stirk, a Scotch martyr, condemned with her husband, to death, for Christ's sake, said to her husband: "Rejoice; we have lived together many joyful days, but this day, wherein we must die together, ought to be most joyful to us both. Therefore, I will not bid you good night, for soon we shall meet in the heavenly kingdom." By the flash of the furnace best Christian character is demonstrated.

The Result of Persecution

I go into another department, and I find that those great denominations of most have spread the most rapidly. No good man was ever more vilely maltreated than John Wesley. His followers were hooted at and maligned, and called by every detestable name that infernal ingenuity could invent, but the hotter the persecution the more rapid the spread of that denomination, until you know what a great host they have become, and what a tremendous force for God and the truth they are wielding all the world over. It was persecution that gave Scotland to Presbyterianism. It was persecution which gave our own land first to civil liberty, and afterward to religious freedom. Yea, I may go further back and say it was persecution that gave the world the great salvation of the Gospel. The ribald mockery, the hungering and thirsting, the unjust trial and ignominious death, where all the force of hell's fury was hurled against the Cross, was the introduction of that religion which is yet to be the earth's deliverance from guilt and suffering, and her everlasting enthronement among the principalities of heaven.

Christians Which Have Been Abused

Patronage and Persecution.

The State has sometimes said to the Church, "Come, let me take your hand, and I will help you." What has been the result? The Church has gone back and has lost its estate of holiness and become ineffective. At other times the State has said to the Church, "I will crush you." What has been the result? After the storms have spent their fury, the Church, so far from having lost any of its force, has increased and is worth infinitely more after the assault than before it. The Church is far more indebted to the opposition of civil government than to its approval. The fires of the stake have only been the torches which Christ held in His hand by the light of which the Church has marched to her present position. In the sound of racks and implements of torture I hear the rumbling of the wheels of the Gospel chariot. Scaffolds of martyrdom have been the stairs by which the Church has ascended. Aqua fortis is the best test of pure gold.

Furthermore: Our subject impresses us that Sins Will Come to Exposure.

Long, long ago had these brothers sold Joseph into Egypt. They had suppressed the crime, and it was a profound secret well kept by the brothers. But suddenly the secret is out. The old father hears that his son is in Egypt, having been sold there by the malice of his own brothers. How their cheeks must have burned and their hearts sunk at the flaming out of this suppressed crime. The smallest iniquity has a thousand tongues, and they will blab out an exposure. Saul was sent to destroy the Canaanites, their sheep and their oxen. But when he got down there among the pastures he saw some fine sheep and oxen too fat to kill, and so he thought he would steal them. He drove them towards home, but stopped to report to the prophet how well he had executed his commission, when in the distance the sheep began to bleat and the oxen to bellow. The secret was out, and Samuel said to the blushing and confounded Saul: "What means this bleating of the sheep that I hear and the lowing of the cattle?" Aye, my hearers, you cannot keep an iniquity quiet. At just the wrong time the sheep will bleat and the oxen will bellow. Achan cannot steal the Babylonish garment without getting stoned to death, nor Benedict Arnold betray his country without having his neck stretched.

Look Over the Police Arrests, these thieves, these burglars, these adulterers, these counterfeiters, these highwaymen, these assassins. They all thought they could bury their iniquity so deep down that it would never come to resurrection. But there was some shoe that answered to the print in the sand, some false keys found in possession, some bloody knife that whispered of the deed, and the public indignation, and the anathema of outraged law hurled him him into the Tombs or hoisted him on the gallows. At the close of the battle between the Dauphin of France and the Helvetians, Burchard Monk was so elated with the victory that he lifted his helmet to look off upon the field, when a wounded soldier hurled a stone that struck his uncovered forehead and he fell. Sin always leaves some point exposed; there is No Safety in Iniquity.

Francis the First, King of France, was discussing how it was best to get his army into Italy. Amaril, the court fool, sprang out from the corner and said to the king and his staff-officers: "You had better be thinking how you will get your army back out of Italy after once you have entered." In other words, it is easier for us to get into sin than to get out of it. Whitefield was riding on horseback in a lonely way with some missionary money in a sack fastened to the saddle-bags. A highwayman sprang out from the thicket and put his hand out toward the gold, when Whitefield turned upon him and said: "That belongs to the Lord Jesus Christ; touch it if you dare," and the villain fell back empty-handed into the thicket. O, the power of conscience! If offended, it became God's avenging minister. Do not think that you can hide any great and protracted sin in your hearts. In an unguarded moment it will slip off of the lip, or some slight occasion may for a moment set ajar this door of hell that you wanted to keep closed. But suppose that in this life you hide it, and you get along with that transgression burning in your heart, as a ship on fire within for days may hinder the flame from bursting out by keeping down the hatchways, yet at last, in the Judgment, that iniquity will blaze out before God and the universe.

Furthermore: learn from this subject the inseparable

Connection Between all Events,

however remote. Lord Hastings was beheaded one year after he had caused the death of the Queen's children, in the very month, the very day, the very hour, and the very moment. There is wonderful precision in the Divine judgments. The universe is only one thought of God. Those things which seem fragmentary and isolated are only different parts of that one great thought. How far apart seemed these two events—Joseph sold to the Arabian merchants, and the rulership of Egypt. Yet you see in what a mysterious way God connected the two in one plan. So all events are linked together. You who are aged can look back and group together a thousand things in your life that once seemed isolated. One undivided chain of events reached from the Garden of Eden to the Cross of Calvary, and thus up to heaven.

The Ancestral Line.

There is a relation between the smallest insect that hums in the summer air and the archangel on his throne. God can trace a direct ancestral line from the blue-jay that last spring built its nest in a tree behind the house, to some one of that flock of birds which, when Noah hoisted the ark's window, with a whirl and dash of bright wings went out to sing over Mount Ararat. The tulips that bloomed this summer in the flower-bed were nursed off last winter's snow-flakes. The furtherest star on one side the universe could not look to the furtherest star on the other side and say, "You are no relation to me;" for, from that bright orb, a voice of light would ring across the heavens, responding, "Yes, yes; we are sisters."

Sir Sidney Smith in prison was playing lawn tennis in the yard, and the ball flew over the wall. Another ball, containing letters, was thrown back, and so communication was opened with the outside world, and Sidney Smith escaped in time to defeat Bonaparte's Egyptian expedition. What a small accident, connected with what vast results! Sir Robert Peel, from a pattern he drew on the back of a pewter dinner plate, got suggestions of that which led to the important invention by which calico is printed. Nothing in God's universe swings at loose ends. Accidents are only in the book of His eternal decrees. From our cradle to our grave there is a path all marked out. Each event in our life is connected with every other event in our life. Our loss may be the most direct road to our gain. Our defeats and victories are twin brothers. The whole direction of your life was changed by something which at the time seemed to you a trifle, while some occurrence, which seemed tremendous, affected you but little. The Rev. Dr. Kennedy, of Basking Ridge, New Jersey, went into his pulpit one Sabbath, and by forgot his subject and forgot his text; and, in great embarrassment, rose before his audience and announced the circumstance, and declared himself entirely unable to preach; then launched forth in a few earnest words of entreaty and warning which resulted in the outbreaking of the mightiest revival of religion ever known in that State—a revival of religion that resulted in churches still standing, and in the conversion of a large number of men who entered the Gospel ministry, who have brought their thousands into the kingdom of God.

God's Way of Turning a Leaf

A Strange Freak of Memory,

God's plans are magnificent beyond all comprehension. He molds us, turns and directs us, and we know it not. Thousands of years are to Him but as the flight of a shuttle. The most terrific occurrence does not make God tremble, and the most triumphant achievement does not lift Him into rapture. That one great thought of God goes on through the centuries, and nations rise and fall, and eras pass, and the world itself changes, but God still keeps the undivided mastery, linking event to event and century to century. To God they are all one event, one history, one plan, one development, one system. Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty!

Furthermore: we learn from this story

The Propriety of Laying Up for the future. During seven years of plenty Joseph prepared for the famine, and when it came he had a crowded storehouse. The life of most men, in a worldly respect, is divided into years of plenty and famine. It is seldom that any man passes through life without at least seven years of plenty. During these seven prosperous years your business bears a rich harvest. You hardly know where all the money comes from, it comes so fast. Every bargain you make seems to turn into gold. You contract few bad debts. You are astounded with large dividends. You invest more and more capital. You wonder how men can be content with a small business, gathering in only a hundred dollars where you reap your thousands. These are the seven years of plenty. Now, Joseph, is the time to prepare for famine; for to almost every man there do come seven years of famine. You will be sick, you will be unfortunate, you will be defrauded, you will be disappointed, you will be old, and if you have no storehouse upon which to fall back, you may be famine-struck.

We have no admiration for this denying one's self of all present comfort and luxury for the mere pleasure of hoarding up, this grasping for the mere pleasure of seeing how large a pile you can get, this always being poor and cramped because as soon as a dollar comes in it is sent out to see if it can't find another dollar to carry home on its back; but there is an intelligent and noble-minded forecast which we love to see in men who have families and kindred dependent upon them for the blessings of education and home. God sends us to the insects for a lesson, which, while they do not stint themselves in the present, do not forget their duty to forestall the future: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard, consider her ways and be wise, which, having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer and gathereth her food in the harvest." Now there are the one by investing it in stock and depositing it in banks and loaning it on bond and mortgage. The other way of laying up money is giving it away. He is the safest who makes both of these investments. But the man who devotes none of his gain to the cause of Christ and thinks only of his own comfort and luxury, is not safe, I don't care how his money is invested. But above all lay up treasures in heaven. They never depreciate in value. They never are at a discount. They are always available. You may feel safe now with your present yearly income, but what will such an income be worth after you are dead? Others will get it. Perhaps some of them will quarrel about it before you are buried. They will be right glad that you are dead. They are only waiting for you to die. What then will all your accumulation be worth if you could gather it all into your bosom and walk up with it to heaven's gate? It would not purchase your admission; or, if allowed to enter, it could not buy you a crown or a robe, and the poorest saint in heaven would look down and say, "Where did that pauper come from?"

Two Ways of Laying up Money;

Finally: learn from this subject that there is

A Storehouse in Every Famine.

Up the long row of buildings, piled to the very roofs with corn, come the hungry multitudes, and Joseph commanded that their sacks and their wagons be filled. The world has been blasted. Every green thing has withered under the touch of sin. From all continents and islands and zones comes up the groan of dying millions. Over tropical spice-grove and Siberian ice-hut and Hindoo jungle the blight has fallen. The famine is universal. But, glory be to God! there is a great storehouse. Jesus Christ, our elder brother, this day bids us come in from our hunger and beggary, and obtain infinite supplies of grace enough to make us rich forever. Many of you have for a long while been smitten of the famine. The world has not stilled the throbbing of your spirit. Your conscience sometimes rouses you up with such suddenness and strength that it requires the most gigantic determination to quell the disturbance. Your courage quakes at the thought of the future. Oh, why will you tarry amid the blastings of the famine when such a glorious storehouse is open in God's mercy?

BAY ISLANDS, HONDURAS.

(See Illustration on page 604.)

THE small islands situated in the gulf of Honduras, which washes the eastern shores of the little middle Republic of Central America, are but little known, yet their natural beauty is never forgotten by any one who has visited them. The illustration on page 604 gives some idea of the glorious wealth of tropical vegetation which combines with the wondrously blue skies and clear sparkling water to make up a picture of singular loveliness. The islands belong to the Republic of Honduras, a country containing 52,658 square miles, about the same area as North Carolina and a little larger than England. Its population is 323,274, or smaller than that of Baltimore, Md. It is governed by a President, one minister and an assembly of thirty-seven representatives. The religious condition of the country is deplorable. The Indians, who form the larger part of the population, call themselves in many cases Roman Catholics, but beyond wearing a tin-cross, as a sign of their faith, they appear to be purely heathen. The Moravians, however, established a mission there in 1848, and it may be hoped that from the seed which they have been sowing for forty years amid many discouragements, there will yet come a harvest of souls.

A HUMAN AMBULANCE.

A MINER at Virginia, Nev., owes his limbs, and probably his life, to the ingenuity and devotion of a comrade. The Enterprise, of that city states, that while three men were working in one of the mines, a fall of rock occurred which threw one of them to the ground and partially buried him. His two companions ran to his rescue, and had nearly succeded in releasing him when a second fall occurred in which all three narrowly escaped death. They recommenced the task of extricating the man first caught, though all about them was crumbling and threatening to come in. When he was finally dug out it was found that both his legs were broken. He was carried to a place of safety, when a messenger was sent for a surgeon. As there was a shaft fifty feet in depth to be ascended, and the only way of reaching the surface was by means of a rope and bucket, the miners thought that a surgeon could come down into the mine and in some way so mend the legs of their wounded companion as would enable him to go up in the bucket. When the surgeon came he said it was no use to try to do anything with the man down in the mine; he must be brought out. The miners descended and set to work upon the problem. It was an ambulance that was needed, but there are no ambulances for mines. But there are brave, strong men there, and one of them came to the rescue in this case. The strongest man among them stood erect in the drift, when the other lifted the one with the broken legs upon his back. With a long rope the two men were then lashed together, the sufferer being so placed that his broken legs were well up from the ground. The miner with his living burden thus lashed upon his back, got into the bucket and was hoisted to the surface, and the broken limbs were set. But for the intrepid conduct of the two miners, the injured man's life must have been sacrificed, as the rocky roof where he had been working continued to fall for some time. They were true friends, and their exertions to carry their comrade to the surgeon showed how anxious they were for his welfare. One can but wish that Christian men were as earnest in their endeavor to take their friends to the Great Physician who can give them eternal life (John 11 : 25,26).

AN OPIUM SLAVE'S EMANCIPATION.

THE remarkable conversion of a graduate in India reported by the Rev. Benjamin Peters, of Bangalore, is published in the current number of Thy Healer. Mr. Peters says: "A young man came to my house one afternoon, saying that he wanted to be saved. He was a graduate, yet he was addicted to drink, and was especially a slave of opium. I told him that his salvation was finished already, only he must accept it and fulfil the conditions, and go home rejoicing. He looked surprised, and said, 'What are the conditions?' I said, the confession and renunciation of all your sins, and you must make up your mind that, by the grace of God, you will rather die than sin again.

He thought about it for some time, and then said, 'Must I part with all my sins?' I said, 'There is no other way. 'Repent and believe the Gospel,' is what the Bible says.' He asked if Jesus was able to save him from his besetting sin. Not knowing that he was an opium-eater, I related to him the emancipation of a great opium-eater, through the repetition of the mighty name of Jesus. He replied, 'I will part with all my sins, and I determine, by the grace of God, to die rather than sin.' I said, 'Let us pray.'

He got down on his knees trembling, confessed all his sins, and told the Lord that, by His grace, he would rather die than sin again. I repeated to him several passages. The words, 'The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin,' brought light to his soul, and he went home rejoicing. As soon as he reached home, he threw away his cigars, opium and brandy, and gave himself to prayer and reading the Word of God. The next day, the young man began to put all his temporal matters aright. He went all over Bangalore, to his friends whom he had injured and wronged, and made confession and restoration. To one man, whom he had robbed of 200 Rs. ($100), while boarding, he went straight and made confession, and told him what the Lord had done for his soul. The man looked at him with astonishment, and told him to pay the money when it was possible for him to do so. He wrote to people whom he had injured, to forgive him, and told them what Jesus had done for his soul, and also wrote to all his creditors to furnish him with their bills. He wrote a very humble letter to his father (an unconverted man), and begged his forgiveness. This young man has joined our church as a probationer, and is of much help to me in my work. He teaches in my school, and preaches in the streets.

A MAGNETIZED RUDDER.

AMONG the remarkable experiences of a sea-captain, recently published, is one of an escape from almost certain shipwreck through a defective rudder. He was in command of the steamship Carmona, and during a voyage across the Atlantic it was found that the vessel did not answer to her helm as she ought to. The captain therefore determined that when he arrived at Montreal he would have the steering-gear thoroughly overhauled At one part of the voyage it seemed likely that the work would not be necessary, for the vessel became so unmanageable, and there were so many high seas and headwinds, that nearly all on board thought she would go to the bottom before reaching Montreal. However, she did arrive, and no sooner was she in dock than the mystery was clear. There was a great hole in the rudder itself, below the propeller, nearly three feet square. The only solution of the problem of the cause of the hole was given by a gentleman who has all his life been connected with the ship-building trade. He believes it due to the galvanic action of a large metal nut at the end of the propeller shaft. This having disintegrated the iron of the rudder, the action of the water washed away the iron piecemeal, until, at length, the large and dangerous hole was noticed. This remarkable defect will doubtless lead to precautions being taken in the building of vessels in the future. It is a type of trouble that often happens in the Christian life. Some sinful indulgence paralyzes the conscience and disintegrates the power to resist temptation. Then the man's life becomes erratic, and he no longer follows the course which he should take in the footsteps of Christ. When disintegration of this kind commences, the storms of life are apt to complete the process, unless the man goes to God for strength and renovation (Jer. 3 : 22–23.)

A POLYGAMIST'S DILEMMA

A VIOLATION of God's laws surely involves suffering, and unhappily the suffering brings misery to others as well as the sinner. An illustration in point is related of a man who sinned in darkness and is suffering in the light, by Mr. Tyler, who is laboring among the Zulus at Umsunduzi, in South Africa, in the Missionary Herald. It appears that some time ago a Zulu of considerable intelligence and good character went with his two wives, each of whom has four children, to the mission for instruction. "No more eager listener to the Word," says Mr. Tyler, "ever came within sound of my voice, and the repeated and earnest conversations my wife and myself had with him on religious subjects revealed very clearly that he was determined to know the truth. He also decided to learn to read, and succeeded. He can now read in the Zulu New Testament.

In respect to the domestic entanglement into which he had entered before he came to the station, and previous to his desire to become a Christian, I instructed and advised him to the best of my ability. He professed to see, and I believe did see, that polygamy is an evil, and not in accordance with the teachings of the Gospel, but how to get out of it was the question. I told him to look upward and pray earnestly for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, assuring him that, if he did so, he would receive divine direction. He promised to do this.

"Soon after this he rehearsed to me the difficulties under which he labored. He said to his second married wife: 'Will you leave me? You see the fix I am in. God's word does not sanction polygamy. As I am now, I cannot connect myself with the people of God.' She replied; 'You are my husband: I love you, and cannot love another man. I myself want to become a child of God. I cannot leave you. Where thou goest I will go." etc. A similar response came from the wife first married. It is not a wonder that the two chose to stick to him, for he is, to all appearence, a most amiable husband.

"Baffled in this attempt to extricate himself from his polygamous union, Uncapai concluded to let the matter alone for the present, but to do his duty as a Christian. All his children have been under instruction, and some of them shone brilliantly, one having spent nine years at Lovedale College in Kaffraria, at a good deal of expense, and now is Mr. Goodenough's assistant at Adams. Uncapai has grown in the knowledge of God's Word and stablity of moral character. He apparently lacks but one thing; emancipation from polygamy. The wives have also kept pace with their husband in Christian consistency, always attending our religious services, and often asking Mrs. Tyler: Why are we not allowed to sit at the table of our Lord like others, who profess to love Him.'" The difficulty is apparently still unsolved.

A PRIEST MELTING HIS IDOL.

The Rev. A. E. Haegert, missionary among the Santhals of India, narrates the following: Babaji is a chief priest among the Hindoos. The Hindoo priests have seven grades, and he belongs to the highest grade. When he was a little boy, the peace of his home was much disturbed by his eldest brother becoming a Christian. His father was in a towering rage, and drove the young convert from the house, calling on all his idols to destroy his son. However, Jehovah watched over the child, and all his anathemas fell like dead leaves to the ground. He was educated in the Mission School, and has since then become a magistrate.

Babaji, when he grew up, often remembered his brother, and when in his wanderings he met a missionary, who gave him a holy book, he read it, and carried it with him wherever he went.

But he was kept back from conversion by love of wealth and power, He used to say: "It is a good thing to worship God; but I am a Hindoo priest, and wherever I go people bow down and worship me. If I open my mouth the oldest holds his peace; and when I open my hands I get as much money as I want. It would not do to become a Christian for then none would honor me any more, or would give me money."

God, however, showed the man how little wealth and power were worth in comparison with the soul. Babaji was seized with severe illness and believed that he was going to die. He sent a letter to me saying: "Sir.—I am dying; please send my old friend D. with some medicine." Babaji was the means of saying D.'s life years ago. So D. was despatched with medicine and instructions to send for me at once if there was no improvement. We all prayed for the priest. When he thought death near, all his illusions vanished, and he most earnestly prayed for pardon. The Lord was merciful, he did not die. D. remained during his convalescence.

When strong enough, he considered his gods, of which he had a famous collection. There was no priest in our hills that had such a beautiful shrine. They were all discarded. The marble and gilded gods he threw in the village street, and there they were lying in the mud and rain with broken heads and feet. A passing Brahmin saw the gods' sad state, picked them up, reverently wiped them, and carried them home. Babaji shouted: "Brother, leave them alone; they cannot save themselves, neither will they save you. Come in and sit down, I will teach you the way of life."

"No, no," said the priest, "these will do for me."

A silver deity which he had worshipped for years, and which many had bowed down to, he put into a crucible and melted. And those who saw this god silent and helpless while he was being roasted, remarked that he had never sympathized with the Hindoos who had worshipped him in their distress; he had never moved a finger to remove their woe or lessen their misery; and so it came to pass, when he sat in the fire none moved a finger to save him from being melted. At the annual "Kalis" festival the converted priest preached so boldly that he was almost stoned by the people. D. said: "Sir, if we preached half the things he said, we should never leave the village alive." I wish Christians everywhere would earnestly pray for this and other priests, that Jesus would save them and give them grace to glorify His name.

SATAN'S TACTICS IN THE LAST DAYS.

By Dr. Henry Meymott.

Importance of Correct Views of Satan's Position and Work—His Place and Dignity—His Antagonism to Prophetic Study—His Followers—Aware of their Future Doom—Satan's Scientific Progeny—One Evidence of his Power—A Belated Message—A Change of Tactics—Crafty Designs.

THE present position of the Lord's children in the world cannot be very well understood, unless a clear perception is ascertained by them from the Word of God of the exact position in it occupied by Satan and his ministers. By that we learn that he not only has access to "heavenly places" (Eph. 6: 12), but that he roams without any apparent restriction all over the habitable globe (1 Peter 5: 8; Job 1: 7). We learn also that a time is fixed for his expulsion, and that of his angels, from the "heavenly places" down to this earth for the period of the final three and a half years Great Persecution by the future Antichrist (Rev. 12: 9). This event was anticipated by the Lord Jesus Christ (Luke 10: 18). Satan's amazing power and influence over mankind should also be fully appreciated. This would be overwhelming, had we not the assurance that he has no power over faith; and that by the exercise of faith (1 Peter 5: 9) he is effectually resisted (James 4: 5).

His Recognized Place

and acknowledged dignity should also be taken in account (John 14: 30; Jude 8, 9). The manifestation of his power is fully illustrated and demonstrated both in the Old and new Testament, and the power both of himself and his angels of entering into the bodies both of men and beasts, seems to be ubiquitous (John 13: 27; Matt. 8: 32). His future fate we have not, as members of the body of Christ, so much to do with, though that also is fully revealed, and the sure word of prophecy (more especially in Rev. 20), foretells his last exploits, and final ruin and captivity.

No wonder then that he exercises his influnce in restraining the world and the Church from entering into the study of that wonderful revelation, or from attempting to unravel any other portion of the Bible which relates to future events; or when it is entered into, no wonder that he brings to bear his power over the human heart and understanding, and causes disputations, and unseemly demonstrations, of unsanctified knowledge, the tendency of which is to puff up (I Cor. 8: 1). If his history up to the present time, and also what is predicted of him for the future, is dispassionately considered on the basis of Scripture, it will be observed that the is the inveterately contracted hatred of the Supreme Being, the Lord Jehovah, from whose happy service he separated himself, together with the angels "who kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation" (Jude 6). We may indeed fairly assume that his actions against mankind are not so much based upon hatred to them as upon his vindictiveness towards God (Acts 5: 3).

Foundation Of All His Actions

His power, pride and aspirations, together with the lamentation of his fall from his glorious position, as the "Light-bearing son of the morning," are beautifully described in the prophetic announcement of the doom of the king of Babylon (Isa. 14: 9-20). Yet for the completion of His own purposes, God allows Satan still to go about in the world, and uses him for the promotion of His own glory (Prov. 16: 4). It is stated in Jude 6 and II Peter 2: 4, in a general way, that some angels, who kept not their first estate or principality, are reserved in "everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." But we know that others of them are permitted, under Satan's leadership, to go about, and they seem to be aware of for in Matt. 8: 29 it is related that they asked the Lord Jesus, in the full cognizance of His power, if He was come to "torment them before the time," and by His permission they entered into a herd of swine. It will be observed that under whatever circumstances God is working, and under whatever dispensation of His providence, there Satan, as the adversary, is at hand to thwart Him (see Zech. 3: 1). Openly and straightforwardly where he can, and where that is not practicable or expedient, then, under some deceitful imitation of the works and ways of God. The terrible slavish and degraded position into which he has brought and is now still bringing mankind is well known, and when scientific truth withstands his system in action, he shifts his plans and adapts his ways, as we shall see further on, in regard to the progress of Christianity, to altered circumstances. It has been quaintly said that wherever a fresh place for the celebration of Christian worship is opened, Satan is sure to be amongst the first attendants.

The Doom That Awaits Them,

The relationship of Satan to the world must next be considered. Perhaps the expression in Eph. 2: 3, is the clearest and simplest in explaining what all mankind are by nature, that is, "children of wrath." To tell a worldly minded person, especially any one who is well educated, and moving in the best of worldly society, that he is a child of the devil, would be considered preposterous, and would be scouted, but what is the actual fact? If he is not a child of God, he must be a child of the devil. There is no middle place. It is to keep his educated and refined and scientific children altogether ignorant of their true spiritual parentage, and he encourages their atheistic tastes by decking out the worship of God, even where the evangelical doctrines of real Christianity are preached, with everything that art and science and a cultivated taste could effect. In this way, one of the characteristic signs of the perilous times of the last days, viz., the "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof" (II Tim. 3: 5), is promoted and encouraged.

One of Satan's Deep Designs

It will, however, be well to take a more extended view of the power of Satan, and observe from the Word of God, how, from the beginning of creation, he has thwarted the beneficent purposes of God, and succeeded in proportion to the extent to which mankind have yielded themselves over to his devices. In common parlance, "given themselves over to the devil." In considering the amount of already attained, and what "the sure word of prophecy" assures us he will yet achieve, and pondering over this alarming picture, let us take comfort in this gracious declaration in 1 John 3: 8, "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that He may destroy the works of the devil." One of the most striking instances of his remarkable power is related in Dan. 10: 13, when a heavenly message was detained twenty-one days. After his crushing defeat when "life and immortality were brought to light, and death abolished through the Gospel" (II Tim. 1: 10), and "death, and hell and the grave overcome by the resurrection of Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 54; Isa. 25: 8; Hosea 13: 14).

His Success

His next great object was to endeavor to crush the spread of Christianity by open and undisguised hostility. This was singularly instanced in the case of Ananias and Sapphira. The firmness with which the martyrs were endowed during the open persecutions caused and the "form of godliness denying its power" was employed by Satan when he mixed up Christianity with worldly power and authority in the reign of the Roman Emperor, Constantine. Soon after this, and in connection with the system of what is called "Church and State," the Papacy was established. During its career it has so fully filled up the apocalyptic account of the "great whore" in Rev. 17, that some of the interpreters of unfulfilled prophecy have taught that the Papacy represents the last Antichrist. They thus ignore the account of the "scarlet-covered beast" (Rev. 3: 3) and the work that is assigned to him. Under cover of the dominion which Popery had gained, Satan instituted the deadly system of Jesuitism, which has so extensively prevailed, and so insinuated itself among "all sorts and conditions of men," that the present Læodicean condition of being neither "cold nor hot," has extensively prevailed and will prevail until the time of that judgment, when all such loathsome hypocrisy will be "spued out of the mouth" of the Lord Jesus Christ (Rev. 3: 16). During all this hostility to the true principles of Christianity, which Satan has been promoting, God has not been left without His own witnesses, in the "little flock of faithful ones," and the Reformation opened up a splendid opportunity for the display of godly zeal. This was taken advantage of in the diffusion of Gospel truth, missionary enterprises, and the extensive circulation of the Bible.

A Change of Tactics,

But Satan has mixed up much that is not of Christ with the profession of Christianity in these days, especially the spread of sacerdotalism in counteraction to evangelical doctrine, involving thereby the proclamation of that other gospel, which is strenuously denounced by the Apostle Paul in the first chapter of his Epistle to the Galatians. Also by a wrong interpretation of to precede the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to receive His church, to destroy His enemies, and to re-establish the united and restored kingdoms of Israel and Judah, the believers in Christ are hindered from that spirit of watchfulness which is so plainly, so repeatedly, and so strictly enjoined upon them, and not being on the watch-tower, so graphically described in Isa. 21: 8, they will lose many privileges, and have to pass through much of the tribulation which will come "as a snare on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." (Luke 21: 35). When the mind of the believer is disentangled from tradition, and free from prejudices, and he will receive in godly simplicity the word of God, he will find that the ecclesiastical antichrist exemplified in the Popes of Rome successively will be stripped of all his pretensions, and that the infidel antichrist which is represented by the beast, endowed with Satanic "power and strength" (Rev. 17: 13), shall hate the whore" and "make her desolate," and will work as the "mystery of iniquity" until he is destroyed, whom "the Lord shall consume with the spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of His coming" (2 Thess. 2: 8).

The Events Predicted

Rev. G. H. Pember's New Prophetic Work, entitled "Earth's Earliest Ages and Their Connection With Modern Spiritualism and Theosophy," is for sale at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Office. Price $1.50. This volume of 500 pages draws a parallel between our time and the age before the Deluge, showing how closely in spirit and moral tone they resemble each other, and how many of the distinguished features of the earlier age have reappeared among us in modern dress. Thus proving that it fulfils the conditions which were to indicate the time of Christ's Second Advent (Mat

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Annual Report of the Commissioner of Pensions, issued last week, shows that during the last fiscal year over $73,000,000 was paid out in pensions, and, at the end of that year, there were over 400,000 names on the rolls. The system in operation evidently does not satisfy the Commissioner, who has exceptional opportunities for observing its defects. Among the suggestions he makes for its improvement are: an increase in the allowance to minor children from $2 to $5 per month; that widows' pensions should date from the death of the husband instead of the time of application; that the payment of more than one pension to the same person should be prohibited; and that the Commissioner be allowed discretion in correcting discrepancies in the pension for loss of limbs.

The New York Republican Convention at Saratoga, on September 14, nominated Colonel Fred Grant at the head of its ticket as the candidate of the party for Secretary of State. The nomination has given general satisfaction throughout the State, Col. Grant having many personal friends, beside bearing a name which is a passport to public good-will. The platform adopted by the Convention is a document which will be studied with much interest so far as it deals with live issues. The denunciation of the Federal and State administration which it contains, is a matter of custom, which will have little influence. The people are so accustomed to hear each party denounce the other, that they are coming to regard it as an empty formality and pass on to find out what the party pledges itself to do if successful. As to the tariff, the platform says: "National taxation should be so adjusted as to raise revenue sufficient for an economic and wise administration of the Government, for the payment of the public debt, for the development of national resources, and for national defense; but any reduction should be so made as not to impair the prosperity of the home industries." This appears to imply that in New York the Republican party is not opposed to a reduction of the tariff if it can be done without injury to the general prosperity. On the important question of Immigration the platform is in accord with the general opinion, here and elsewhere, of both political parties, so that we may hope that there will be no difficulty in getting a really effective measure through Congress next session. The classes of immigrants which the Convention desires to exclude are "Anachists, Communists, polygamists, paupers, fugitives from justice, and insane vicious, and criminal persons, as also contract labor." The Liquor question was, as in other conventions, the occasion of a struggle. The result was the following somewhat vague plank: "We heartily indorse the purpose of the Republican majority of the Legislature in passing the bills to limit and restrict the liquor traffic, and we condemn the vetoes of the Governor as hostile to that purpose. We recommend comprehensive and efficient legislation for giving local option by counties, towns and cities, and restriction by taxation in such localities as do not by their option exclude absolutely the traffic." As the liquor trade is already restricted by taxation, it is not quite clear whether the Convention was in favor of further restriction. Nor did it endorse the bills passed by the Legislature, but only "the purpose" of the bills. This plank certainly will not win prohibition votes.

The Centennial Celebration of the Signing of the Constitution at Philadelphia last week was worthy of the occasion. The city was magnificently decorated, and the presence of the President and his Cabinet and the Governors of thirty States with their staffs gave a dignity to the pageant which befitted the importance of the great event commemorated. The celebration commenced on Thursday with the processional industrial display, the object of which was to illustrate, upon cars moving in a long and brilliant procession, the customs, the domestic characteristics, commerce, arts, implements of industry, means of transportation, etc., of 1787, contrasted with those of 1887, giving ocular demonstration of the changes and national progress made in the first century of our constitutional existence. In the evening the Governor of Pennsylvania held a public reception in honor of the Governors of the States and Territories present at the celebration. The second day was devoted to a military parade and review by the President, of the regiments and companies of the militia of the several States and Territories, accompanied by their respective Governors and staffs, and by detachments from the Army and Navy of the United States, detailed for that occasion. On Saturday, the third and final day, being the day on which the Constitution was signed a hundred years ago, occurred the special services of commemoration, at which the President of the United States presided. The oration was pronounced by Mr. Justice Miller, of the Supreme Court of the United States. A poem was recited and a grand musical concert was given. Besides all this the citizens of Philadelphia, who have taken up the matter with praiseworthy enthusiasm, got up other entertainments on a smaller scale in honor of the event.

The Seven Chicago Anarchists who are Lying under sentence of death for killing the policemen by a dynamite bomb on May 4, 1886, have failed in their appeal to the Supreme Court of Illinois. On September 14, Judge Magruder delivered judgment on the points submitted to the court, affirmed the conviction, and fixed November 11, as the day of execution. All the judges concurred in the decision, so that there is now no hope of their escaping the just punishment of their crime but by appeal to the United States Supreme Court. The only important question in doubt was whether in the absense of proof as to which of the men actually threw the bomb, all the prisoners were legally guilty. On this point the court is decided. Judge Magruder said: "If the defendants advised and encouraged, aided or abetted in the killing of the policemen, they are as guilty as if they had taken these men's lives by their own hands. If any of them stood by and saw or aided in the throwing of the fatal bomb, each of the aiders and abettors is as guilty as him who did the fatal deed." The friends of the condemned men are now raising funds to carry the case to the Supreme Court, under the plea that the execution will be a violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. It is only by a forced construction of that amendment that the court can take cognizance of the case.

The British Parliament was Prorogued on Friday last. The Queen's speech on the occasion, in referring to the fishery difficulty, said: I have agreed with the President of the United States to refer to a joint commission the difficult questions respecting the North American fisheries, which have recently been discussed by the two nations. On the Irish question the Queen says: "The wants and difficulties of Ireland have occupied your close attention during a protracted session. I trust the remedies your wisdom has provided will gradually effect a complete restoration of order in Ireland, and give renewed encouragement to peaceful industry." The Queen, or rather her ministers who prepare her speech, is more sanguine than the rest of the world. The general impression is, that the measures this Parliament has passed have exasperated the Irish people and rendered their discontent more embittered.

A Deplorable Riot in Ireland took Place on September 9. An open air meeting was convoked at Mitchellstown to protest against the arrest of Wm. O'Brien the Nationalist editor. Mr. Labouchere and several other English Members of Parliament attended to take part in the proceedings. While the meeting was in progress a government reporter arrived, and the police in endeavoring to force a passage for him through the crowd to the carriage, from which the speeches were being made, hustled some of the people. The result was an attack on the police with sticks and stones, and they were driven back to the barracks. A few of the bolder men followed them throwing stones. The police apparently apprehending an attack on the barracks, formed in line and fired into the crowd, killing two men, and dangerously wounding several others, two of whom have since died. Mr. Labouchere in the House of Commons, denounced the firing as deliberate murder, but Mr. Balfour, the Secretary for Ireland, declared that the conduct of the police was ample justified, and that they were in no way to blame, the sole responsibility resting upon those who convoked the meeting.

Bellicose Speeches at a French Banquet have stirred the spirit of France. The banquet was one given at Toulouse, Sept. 14, to General Bréart, commander of the Seventeenth Army Corps, which has just been mobilized as a test of the efficiency of the army generally. The General, responding, declared that France now knew her strength, and that she was ready and awaited revenge. M. Cales, member of the Chamber of Deputies, said the recent mobilization experiment showed that the army was now in a position to give France the revenge for which she impatiently awaited. The papers endeavored to soften the effect of the speech made by General Bréart, and assert that no importance must be attached to them. They blame the speakers, and say that the German press will be sure to make an outcry because of the speeches, and they therefore admonish France to remain quiet and dignified. It is clear, however, that a war on Germany, which must shortly take place, according to the views of prophetic students, would be popular in France.

The German Government is Apparently Apprehensive of an approaching war. The North German Gazette, which is believed to be controlled by Bismarck, in discussing the Bulgarian situation states that the Prince cannot assent to the Russian proposals, and declines the Czar's request that he act as mediator, because he does not wish to assume responsibility in the Eastern question. Neither does the German government desire, in view of the European situation, to increase its labors or divide its strength. Germany is ready to agree to the Ernroth mission, and also to recommend the other Powers to assent to it, provided the proposal is officially made by both Russia and the Porte. This apparent assent to General Ernroth's going to Bulgaria is explained by irreconcilable differences between the Porte and Russia over the mission. There is only a remote chance of both presenting a similar proposal to the Powers.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored ministers with this journal have been received, since our last acknowledgment, to the amount of $16. They are: from Mt. Jackson, Va., $1; Woodhaven, L. I., $2; San Andreas Island, West Indies, $3; Leadville, Col., $10. We are extremely glad to receive these amounts, and more would be very welcome, for many applications from colored ministers are on hand. Those among them who have received the paper through this fund during the past twelve months speak very gratefully of the benefit they have derived from it, and of the assistance it has rendered them in the preaching of the gospel.

Cheering News of Mr. H. M. Stanley Arrived last week. Major Bartellot, commander of the camp on the Aruwimi, wrote that he had received a letter from Stanley dated July 12. Stanley was then ten days' march in the interior, and was still proceeding up the Aruwimi, which he had found navigable above the rapids. He had launched the steel whaleboat and rafts. The members of the expedition were in good health, and provisions were easily procured at the large villages. The country showed a gradual rise toward high table-lands. A caravan of 480 men followed the expedition on the left bank of the river and an advance guard of 40 natives of Zanzibar led. Stanley expected to arrive on July 22, at the centre of the Mabode district, and to reach Wadelai by the middle of August. The advance had been so peaceably accomplished that Stanley had instructed Bartellot that he would shortly send him orders to follow the expedition by the same route.

The Arrest of Mr. Doane, the Missionary of the American Board, at Ponape, in the Caroline Islands, is, it now appears, only the initial step in an effort to completely crush the Protestant Mission there. Mrs. Rand, the wife of Mr. Doane's colleague at Ponape, has arrived at Boston to present the facts to the American Board for transmission to the Department of State, which is prepared to make a strong case to the Court of Madrid. Mrs. Rand says: "The arrest was part of a preconceived plan to oust us out from the islands and supplant our faith by that of the Roman Catholic Church. The Governor was predisposed against us, and evidently only awaited the slightest pretext to annoy and arrest us. We hold good deeds to our property from the native chiefs, but these the Governor entirely ignored, and declared that all the land belonged to Spain. But he did not confine his persecution to us. In the case of one native preacher, he threatened him with imprisonment and flogging if he did not renounce his faith. Then they are at work to break up our schools, indirectly, by taking away our teachers to work by forced labor on the public roads, and, in every way, their determination is shown to supplant us entirely." Mrs. Rand appears to think that even the removal of the Governor will not remedy the matter, as a new man, under the same influences, would follow the same policy.

An Impudent Application was Made to the clerk of the Superior Court in New York, on September 12. In the course of the day's business a man with a red beard strutted into court, and, addressing the clerk, said: "I am Herr Johannes Most, and I want to declare my intentions." Mr. Boesé replied by asking him if he was prepared to swear that he would obey the laws passed under the Constitution by the proper authorities. Most answered: "If they are good laws. If the laws are detrimental to the interests of the people, I believe that force should be used to resist them. It is our duty to use force against laws which deprive people of their rights. I will resist tyranny wherever I find it." The clerk said that in that case he should not administer the oath, nor allow Most to take any steps toward becoming a citizen, adding that we do not want any citizens who will not promise to obey the laws. Most intimated that he should appeal against the decision, but he is not likely to fare better, for the clerk is undoubtedly right. Men who will not obey the law are not fit for citizenship. That fact should be impressed also on all who seek membership in our churches. Many are admitted, unhappily, who do not obey the laws of Christ's kingdom, and much scandal is thereby caused; but all such should be warned that their admission to the church on earth, is not a guarantee that they have been accepted by Christ (Luke 6: 46–49).

A Curious Suit over a Dead Body is being tried in a New Jersey court. It is on an application to the Court of Chancery at Trenton, by a gentleman of that city for an injunction restraining his daughter-in-law from disinterring the body of his son. When the son died he left a will directing his wife, whom he made executrix, to bury his body in a separate plot in the cemetery where she and their child could be interred by his side, when they died. His instructions, however, were disregarded, as his father offered to bury the body at his own expense in his plot, and the wife consented. Now the wife has revoked her consent, has purchased a plot and prepared to remove her husband's corpse to it. It is to prevent her doing so, that the father has invoked the power of the Chancellor. The question now to be decided is as to the ownership of the body and whether the wife forfeited the rights with which her husband's will invested her when she consented to deposit it in her father-in-law's plot. Though all the relatives are in a state of intense concern and excitement about the dispute, and in much suspense as to the result, the dead man himself, if he knows of it, must be supremely indifferent about the place where his body shall lie. For him the all-absorbing subject is the place in which his soul abides. He knows now, if he did not know before, how trivial are the interests relating to the body dead or alive compared with the interests of the soul (Matt. 6: 25, 33).

A Remarkable Confession was Made a few days ago at Ferryville, Ala. A young man, only twenty-seven years old, a stranger in the city, lay dying, and requested that the story of his life might be made public. He said that he was the son of wealthy parents, formerly residing at Dallas, Tex., and when he was thirteen years of age, and while at school, he had a violent quarrel with his cousin, a boy about his own age and his constant companion, and he had procured a gun and shot him dead. Then he had run away and wandered off among the Indians, with whom he made his way to California. He followed the Pacific coast north for a time, then worked eastward. For fourteen years he had wandered from place to place, never staying anywhere more than a month or two, always haunted by the memory of his crime, and tortured by remorse. He had endured many hardships, had suffered from hunger and ill treatment, and had often been in imminent danger of death. He died shortly after making his confession, and when his body was prepared for burial it was found to be marked all over with gashes of knives and scars of bullet wounds. His career was a melancholy illustration of the terrible results of sin. Had he only realized what the atonement of Christ could do for him, he might have been restored; but, as it was, he suffered to the last the literal curse pronounced on the first murderer (Gen 4:14).

A Mechanical Voice has been Supplied to a patient in the New York Hospital. Some six months ago a man went to the hospital suffering from cancer of the throat. The diseased parts were cut out and a silver tube inserted in the windpipe to allow him to breathe and eat. The tube answered the purpose, but the man could not speak articulately, and he was much distressed by the privation. A few days ago he returned to the hospital to inquire whether something could not be done to alleviate his loss of voice. Dr. Bull exercised his ingenuity on the case, and devised a little musical arrangement which he has placed in the silver tube, that is acting as deputy windpipe in the patient's throat. It is on the principle of a jewsharp or harmonica, which will enable the man to emit a variety of musical sounds. These after a time, the doctor thinks, his family will learn to understand and interpret, thus enabling the sufferer to converse, after a fashion, with those about him. Ingenious as the arrangement is, and useful as it doubtless will be to the patient, it is but a poor substitute for the natural voice, which man with all his skill cannot construct. For all who are afflicted with the loss of any faculty there is only one hope of real recovery, and that will come if they give themselves to the Saviour, when the whole earth is rejoicing in His millennial reign (Isa. 35: 5, 6).

A Lost Son Was Found Many Miles Away from home two weeks ago. A wealthy merchant of Waterford, N. J., has two sons, the elder of whom recently went on a pleasure trip to Atlantic City. The younger son wanted to accompany him, but the parents refused permission. Then the boy, who is only seven years old, in his anger at being refused, concluded to run away from home. He quietly packed a few of his boyish treasures in a bundle, and as soon as it was dark disappeared in the pine forest. He wandered through the forest until he reached a railroad, where a man who found him crying gave him some supper, and he slept all night in a shed. On the next day he walked to Camden, a distance of twenty-five miles. Footsore and homesick, he threw himself on a doorstep and cried. Two ladies who lived in the house thus found him, took him in and cared for him, and, finding out who he was, notified his friends. They kept him with them until his father came to fetch him home. There was no hesitation or delay on the father's part, though the child's misery was the result of his own wilfulness. If those who have fallen into trouble through wandering from God, would only learn the lesson this father's conduct conveys, they would apply to their heavenly Father for forgiveness through Christ, and He would receive them. (Isa. 55: 7).

BRIEF NOTES.

A party of eighteen missionaries will leave New York on October 1, to join Bishop Taylor's African mission.

A general conference of all evangelical missions in Mexico is to be held January 31 to February 3, 1888, in the City of Mexico.

Mr. E. P. Telford, the famous English Methodist evangelist, is about to visit this country. His services in Nottingham and other large English cities have resulted in extensive revivals.

More than twelve hundred million cigarettes were sold in the United States during the past year. Physicians are agreed that of all forms of smoking the cigarette is most injurious, as it induces diseases of the throat.

The thirtieth anniversary of the commencement of the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting will be celebrated to-morrow (Sept. 23). The Rev. T. W. Chambers, D. D., will preach a commemorative sermon on the occasion at noon in the Collegiate Church.

Seven hundred and twenty-eight new members were received into Dr. Talmage's church last year, making the entire membership 4,020. The Rev. Ralph W. Brokaw, of Belleville, N. J., will act as assistant pastor at the Tabernacle this year.

There are now twenty-seven vessels engaged in missionary work in different parts of the world under the auspices of sixteen societies; of these missionary vessels sixteen are running on the coasts or rivers of Africa, and six among the islands of the Pacific.

The new building erected by Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt in Forty-fifth Street New York, for the employees of the Fourth Avenue Railroad, will be presented to the railroad branch of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Vanderbilt has also given a library of 6,000 volumes to the branch.

The Evangelical Alliance has issued a call for a conference of evangelical Christians in the United States, to meet in Washington, District of Columbia, December 7–9, 1887. Among other questions to be considered are the following: What are the present perils of the Christian Church and of the country? Can any of them be best met by co-operation of all evangelical Christians?

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

FOLLY OF UNBELIEF.

A New Sermon By Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Then He said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken."—Luke 24 : 25.

Sadness not a Proof of Insincerity—An Example for Comforters—Let the Mourner Talk—The Saviour's Rebuke—Unbelief a Fault, Not a Weakness—Unbelief in Believers—A Folly—Arises from Thoughtlessness—From Hurry—Causes Needless Suffering—A Strange Inconsistency—Frauds Find Faith—Plenty of Evidence—Mr. Muller's Tour—Slow of Heart, Not Hard of Heart—Why Seekers Do Not Believe—People who Want a Vision.

THE two disciples who walked to Emmaus and conversed together, and were sad, were true believers. We may not judge men by their occasional feelings. The possession of gladness is no clear evidence of grace; and the existence of depression is no sure sign of insincerity. The brightest eyes that look for heaven have sometimes been holden so that they could not see their heart's true joy. Be not cast down, my brethren and sisters, if occasionally the tears of sadness bathe your cheeks. Jesus may be drawing near to you, and yet you may be of grief. The Lord Jesus Christ came to the two disciples, and took a walk of some seven miles with them to remove their sadness; for it is not the will of our Lord that His people should be cast down. Do not dream, when in sadness, that your Lord has deserted you; rather reckon that for this reason He will come.

Troubled by Mysteries

Observe that, when the Saviour did come to these mourning ones, He acted very wisely towards them. He did not at once begin by saying, "I know why you are sad." No; He waited for them to speak, and in His patience drew forth from them the items and particulars of their trouble. You that deal with mourners, learn hence the way of wisdom. Do not talk too much yourselves. Let the swelling heart relieve itself. Allow those who are seeking the Lord to tell you their difficulties: do not discourse much with them till they have done so. You will be the better able to deal with them, and they will be the better prepared to receive your words of cheer.

Again, learn another point of wisdom. When our Lord had heard their statement of distress he rather rebuked than encouraged them. He began by saying, "O foolish men, and slow in heart to believe in all that the prophets have spoken!" Observe that I quote the Revised Version, for the Authorized is too harsh. Our Lord did not call them fools, but foolish persons. The difference is rather in the manner than in the sense. He chided them; gently, but still wisely. He let them know that their unbelief was blameworthy, and for indulging it. O beloved brother, if thy Master chide thee, do not doubt His love! If, when thou goest to Him in grief, He answers thee roughly, it is His love scarcely disguised, which thus seeks thy truest welfare. If thou believe in thy Lord, thou wilt reply, 'Master, say on." If He call thee foolish, thou wilt wonder that He does not say something worse of thee; and in any case thou wilt trust Him after the manner of Job when he said, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him."

He Called Them Foolish

Especially observe that our Saviour's rebuke was aimed at their unbelief. Unbelief, which we so often excuse, and for which we almost claim pity, is not treated by our Lord as a trifle. It is for this that He calls them foolish; it is about this that He chides the slowness of their hearts. Do not let us readily excuse ourselves for mistrust of God. If we ever doubt our gracious Lord, let us feel ourselves to be verily guilty. Regard unbelief as a fault rather than a weakness. Brace yourselves to seek a braver and more constant faith than you have reached.

In speaking to believers, I would have them observe that our Lord rebuked their unbelief under two heads: first, as being folly, and secondly, as arising from slowness of heart.

Unbelief is Folly.

Not to believe all that the prophets have spoken, and not to draw comfort out of it, is great folly. Folly! Note the word. "O fools! O foolish men!" It is folly such as makes the tender Jesus cry out. It is folly because it arises from want of thought and consideration. Not to think is folly. To give way to sadness, when a little thought would prevent it, is foolishness. Is it not? If these two disciples had sat down and said, "Now the prophets have said concerning the Messiah that He shall be led as a lamb to the slaughter, and thus was it with our Master," they would have been confirmed in their confidence that Jesus was the Messiah. If they had said, "The prophet David wrote, 'They pierced My hands and My feet,'" they would have recognized in this their crucified Lord. And if then they had turned to the other passages of the prophets in which they speak of Messiah's future glory, they would have been refreshed with hope.

Forgot the Scriptures.

Had they compared the testimony of the holy women with the prophecies of the Old Testament, they would have obtained ground of hope. The women reported that the body was no longer in the tomb and that they had seen a vision of angels, who said that He was alive; two apostles went to the sepulchre and gave in a like report; and this tallied with the Lord's own words, in which He made Jonah His type, because he came up from the deep on the third day. But they forgot the Scriptures; they did not think of that great source of hope. Their eyes were dimmed with tears, so that they did not see what was plain before them. How many a precious text have you and I read again and again without perceiving its joyful meaning, because our minds have been clouded with despondency!

Unbelief is folly because it is inconsistent with our own professions. The two disciples professed that they believed in the prophets; and I have no doubt that they did so; and yet now they were acting as if they did not believe in the prophets at all. Are we not often found guilty of like inconsistency? O brethren, it is one thing to say, "I believe the Bible," but it is quite another thing to act upon that belief! There is more than he dreams of. We think we believe in the gross; and yet, when it comes to the detail, and we have to deal with this promise and with that as a matter of fact in every-day life, we have to light a candle, and sweep the house, to find our faith. What folly this is! We may safely rest the weight of our body and soul, our present and future, upon the sure promise of a faithful God; and we are bound by our profession to do so. It is folly to call ourselves believers in the Bible, and then to doubt and distrust.

Infidelity in the Best Believer

Folly, again, is clearly seen in unbelieving sadness, because the evidence which should cheer us is so clear. In the case of the brethren going to Emmaus they had solid ground for hope, They speak, to my mind, a little cavalierly of the holy women as "certain women." Yet there were no better disciples in the world than those women. They were surely the best of the chosen company—Mary and the Magdalene. Even the testimonies of Peter and John—the very chief of the apostles—are not sufficiently valued, for they speak of "certain of them which were with us." I say not they speak disrespectfully; but there is a slurring of their witness by casting a doubt upon it. Concerning these godly women they leave an impression on my mind as if they had said, "Women will talk, and these women said that they had seen a vision of angels, which said that He was alive." If they had been pushed to the point, the two disciples would not have allowed that the Magdalene and the other women, or Peter, or John, were unworthy of credence; and yet they were by their sadness acting as if the witnesses were mistaken. Now, dear friends, you and I have had superabundant evidence of the faithfulness of God, and if we are unbelieving, we are unreasonable and foolish. These many years that I have trusted in Him He has never failed me once. Experienced Christians, how can you waver in your confidence? If we disbelieve, is it not folly? If the Saviour does not call us fools, we are forced to call ourselves so.

Unbelief is folly, because it very often arises out of our being

In Such a Hurry.

They said, "Beside all this, this is the third day." I know that they had expected great things on that third day, and were justified in expecting them; but still, the day was not yet over, and they were in as great a fever as if it was past a month ago. Although the Saviour had said that He would rise on the third day, He had not said that He would appear to them all on the third day. He told them to go into Galilee, and there they should see Him; but that meeting had not yet come. "He that believeth shall not make haste;" but they that do not believe are always restless. Well, it is written, "Ye have need of patience." God's promises will be kept to the moment, but they will not all be fulfilled to-day. Divine promises are some of them bills which are payable so many days after sight; and because they are not paid at sight we doubt whether they are good bills. Is this reasonable? If the vision tarry, wilt thou not wait for it? It will come in its own appointed time; wouldst thou have it hurried on for thee?

Yet, again, I think we may be well accused of folly whenever we doubt, because we make ourselves suffer needlessly. There are in this wilderness without our digging more. There are enough real causes of sorrow without our inventing imaginary ones. If these two travellers had considered and believed, they would have known that Christ was risen from the dead; and as they walked along to Emmaus, if indeed they had ever taken that walk at all, their faces would have brightened at the prospect of soon seeing Him they loved so well.

Enough Bitter Wells

I want you to notice yet further that it was folly, but it was nothing more. It was not wicked rebellion; there was no enmity in it. They loved their Lord, though they feard He had not risen from the dead. I do not want you to draw undue comfort from this gentle word, but yet I would have you lose none of the cheer it is meant to convey. You that are vexed at your own doubts are not to come to the conclusion that the Lord utterly rejects you. He discriminates between the folly of a child and the wickedness of a rebel; he knows what is in your heart, and knows that you are His. You are like a ship that is well anchored, and though the tide is rushing in, and makes your vessel roll from side to side, so that you yourself stagger, yet the vessel is not loosed from its moorings, neither are you in any danger. Your faith is fixed on Christ, and this anchor holds you; though you are tossed about a little, you will suffer no shipwreck because of sin, but much sea-sickness because of folly. So much concerning unbelieving sadness as folly.

Then our Lord rebuked them for

Slowness of Heart

to believe. This is an evil greatly to be fought against, but it is by no means a rare sin among the people of God. Let me try and bring home the charge made by our Lord against the two disciples, since I fear it applies to us as much as to them. Our hearts are full often sluggish in believing; at least, mine is so, and I suppose we are much alike. First, we are slow in heart to believe our God, for we are much more ready to believe others than to believe Him. I am often amazed with the credulity of good people whom I had credited with more sense. Credulity towards man and incredulity towards God are singular things to find in the same person. We cannot help seeing in the daily papers how easily people are duped. Get up a prospectus, and a list of names as directors, including a titled pauper, and you can bring in money by wagon-loads. The confidence trick can still be successfully performed. One impostor lived for months by calling at the door of guileless old people in almshouses, and telling them that a cousin in America had died, and left them a fortune, but it was essential that fees should be paid at the government offices, and then the legacy would at once be handed over. Times and times the money has been scraped together, the rogue has gone his way, and no more has been heard of the cousin in America. There are so many simpletons about that rogues reap harvests all the months of the year. And yet the God of truth is doubted! This makes our slowness of heart in believing God all the more sad a sign of our inward depravity of nature. We can believe, for we believe in man; and yet we are slow at heart to believe our God. Oh, my brethren, can we excuse ourselves? The Lord forgive us!

We are quick of mind to believe mentally, but we are slow of heart to Believe Practically.

The very heart of our believing is slow. Our dear friend, Mr. George Muller, whom may God long preserve, says that one of his objects in journeying about, at his advanced age, from church to church, is to try and lead God's people to real faith in the promises of God. Mr. Muller's object is a very desirable one: but what fools we must be that 'his should be necessary'!

There are plenty of people who believe God after a superfine kind of fashion up there on the edge of the moon, or "at the back of the north wind"; but they do not believe the Lord in their shops, and on their beds, and in their kitchens: they cannot believe as to bread, and cheese, and house-rent, and raiment. They talk about believing in the Lord for eternity, but for this day and next week they are full of fear. True faith is every-day faith. The faith of the patriarchs was a faith which dwelt in tents and fed sheep. We want a faith which will endure the wear and tear of life—a practical, realizing faith, which trusts in God from hour to hour. Oh, to be delivered from shams, and windbags, and to believe God as a woman believes her husband, or a child believes its father!

These two disciples must have been slow of heart to believe, again, because they had enjoyed so much excellent teaching, and they ought to have been solid believers. They had been for years with Jesus Christ himself as a tutor, and yet they of simple faith. "Oh," say you, "they were very slow!" Are not you the same? How many years have you been with Jesus? Perhaps for even thirty years. He has Himself taught you, has He not? Let me remind some of you of the remarkable events of your lives. What wonderful providences you have seen! What singular deliverances you have experienced! What divine upholding you have enjoyed! What heavenly consolations you have received! Have you not said many times in the flush of your gratitude for some signal favor, "There, I can never doubt my Lord again?" You were foolish when you made that boastful observation: but you are more foolish still for running back from it.

Had Not Learned the Elements

Before I leave this point, I beg you to notice that the Saviour does not say they were "hard of heart," but "slow of heart." I like to notice that. When He is more severe, he is still tenderly discriminating, "Slow of heart" we are, but there is no enmity in our heart towards Him. It is slowness, and that is bad enough, but our Lord graciously helps our pace. Our face is in the right direction, and our feet are going the right way; but we are slow in heart, and lame in faith. So there I leave it. There is the Master's gentle rebuke, not meant to discourage you, but to encourage you. He calls you foolish in order that you may be so no longer. Believe, and this shall be your wisdom.

Will the Lord's people kindly pray for me while I now speak to the unconverted? Ask that I may have God-speed while I try and speak to the Lord, and have not yet believed in Him. I want to say to them just this: "O, foolish men, and slow of heart to believe!" Some of you are really seeking the Lord, but you say that you cannot believe, though you long to believe.

Those who are Seeking

Listen! This unbelief proves you to be foolish and slow of heart, for there are other parts of His Word which you easily believe. If there is a threatening or a condemnation, you believe it. You have a quick eye for anything which reads hard and looks dismal. You are ready enough to take in the hard things, but the gracious promises of the loving Christ you will not believe. How can you justify this? How foolish you are! Next, you are very foolish, because your objections against believing are altogether poor and puerile. I should think I have heard hundreds of them in my time, but out of all the objections raised by troubled souls against believing in Jesus, there is not one worthy of serious discussion. One man cannot believe in Jesus because he does not feel humble enough; as if that affected Christ's power to save! Another says he cannot believe, because he has not felt the terrors of the law and the dread of hell. Does he think that his terrors are to save him? Would his dreads and horrors help Christ to save him? Would he not be trusting his terrors, and not Christ? The Lord Jesus says, "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." The Gospel is to be preached to every creature, and every creature that believes it shall be saved; but these people back out of it, and begin hammering out reasons for their own destruction. A sadly suicidal business this!

And then some of you are foolish and slow of heart because you make such Foolish Demands upon God.

You would believe if you could hear a voice, if you could dream a dream, if some strange thing were to happen in your family. What! Is God to be tied to your fancies, that you will not believe Him unless He does this and that extravagant thing? If He chooses to bring some to Himself by extraordinary means, must He do the same with you, ot else you prefer to be cast into hell? Surely you are mad. Who are you, that you are to dictate to the Lord, and say He shall do this or that, or else you will refuse to believe Him? And so you will trample on the blood of Jesus, and turn your back upon the kingdom of heaven, unless an angel is sent to you, or you hear a voice from heaven! O fools and slow of heart, to make these irrational demands upon the ever-blessed God!

You are foolish and slow of heart, because to a great extent you ignore the Word of God and its suitability to your case. If a soul in distress will take down the Bible and turn it over, he need not look long before he will light upon a passage which describes himself as the object of mercy. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Does not That Apply to You?

Why, if you will but look through the Word you shall find passages so pertinent to your condition that, as a key fits a lock, they will seem made for you! Those two disciples did not, for a while, see how the prophets met the case of the crucified and risen Christ; but as they did see it their hearts burned within them. As you also see how God has provided for your condition in His Word, in His covenant, in His Son, your sadness will flee away.

I close with this one word of warning to those who are distressed in heart, and are falling into the habit of looking for reasons why they should not believe in Christ. I do pray you to leave off this silly practice. Before this evil becomes chronic with you, quit it as a deadly thing. People can reason themselves down, but they cannot reason themselves up again. If thou seest a door open, in God's name hasten in, for one of these days thou mayest be so blind as never to see an open door again. A man may act the cripple till he grows hopelessly lame. Mind what you are at. You may lock a door and open it again for many a year; but one of these days you may so hamper the lock that it will not open again. Oh, that you may at once believe in Jesus Christ unto eternal life!

I have come to this pass myself—if I perish, I will perish believing in Jesus. If I must be lost, I will be lost clinging to His cross. Can any man be lost there? No, "fools and slow at heart" though we may be, we know that none shall perish who come to Christ, for that would greatly dishonor the Saviour's name. God bless you! Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

HOW THEY CROWN A QUEEN.*

OLD animosities were driven out of the heart on June 28, 1838, amid the June sunshine and the coronation joy. The procession had taken about an hour and a half to reach Westminster Abbey, where the coronation was to take place. The Queen entered the venerable building, preceded by the regalia, and clad in the royal robes of crimson velvet, lined with ermine and embroidered with gold lace, and wearing the orders of the Garter, Thistle, Bath, and St. Patrick. Many of the dignitaries of church and state had preceded her, and she was accompanied on either side by the Bishops of Bath and Wells and the Bishop of Durham. Amid the blare of trumpets and the booming of cannons, the Queen enters the Abbey and halts at the Recognition Chair, where she kneels in prayer. On her rising, the Archbishop of Canterbury approaches, accompanied by some of the chief civic dignitaries, and presenting the Queen, says: "Sirs, I here present unto you Queen Victoria, the undoubted queen of this realm; wherefore, all you who have come this day to do your homage, are you willing to do the same?" Those to whom the words were more immediately addressed, and those on the east side of the church, then said: "God save Queen Victoria!" Then turning to the south, west and north, the Archbishop made the same "Recognition," and from each side in turn came the same answer, "God save Queen Victoria!"

After this initial part of the ceremony was over, the Queen proceeded with her attendants to the altar, on which she laid her first offering to the Church—a golden altar cloth and an ingot of gold a pound weight. Then followed the litany, the holy communion, and the sermon, preached by the Bishop of London, from II Chronicles, 24: 31, "And the king stood in his place and made a covenant before the Lord," etc.

After the sermon, the various oaths were administered, the Queen replying to each in an audible voice, and, finally, going to the altar and laying her right hand upon the Gospels in the Bible, she stood and said: "The things which I have here before promised, I will perform and keep, so help me God!" she then kissed the book, signed the oath, and again knelt in prayer. The ceremony of anointing followed. She seated herself in King Edward's chair, and four Knights of the Garter held a cloth of gold over her head. Meanwhile, the Dean of Westminster had taken the ampulla from the altar, and poured some of the oil it contained into the gold anointing spoon, and the Archbishop proceeded to anoint the head and hands of the sovereign.

The Queen then received the insignia of royalty, the spurs and the sword of state, was invested with the royal robe, and the orb which

---

* From "The Story of the Life of Queen Victoria; Told for Boys and Girls all over the World." By W. W. Tulloch, B. D. (Revised by Her Majesty), pp. 277; price $1.25. Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York.

The Late Capt. James B. Eads.

Bay Islands, Honduras, Central America. (See page 597.)

it is said she found heavy to hold, was given to her. The ring it seems had been made for the wrong finger, and there was some difficulty in getting it on the right one. The royal sceptre was then given her as the ensign of kingly power and justice; the rod with the dove as the "rod of equity and mercy." The placing of the crown upon her head was the striking culmination of this part of the proceedings. It was more tasteful than that worn by George IV. and William IV., which had been broken up. The old crown weighed more than seven pounds, and the new, which was smaller, only about three pounds. It was composed of hoops of silver, enclosing a cap of deep blue velvet. The hoops were completely covered with precious stones, surmounted by a ball covered with diamonds, and having a Maltese cross of brilliants on the top of it. The cross had in the centre of it a splendid sapphire. The rim of the crown was clustered with brilliants and ornamented with Fleur-de-lis and Maltese crosses equally rich. In the front of the large Maltese cross was the enormous heart-shaped ruby which had been worn by Edward the Black Prince, and which afterward adorned the helmet of Henry V. at the battle of Agincourt. Beneath this in the circular rim was a large oblong sapphire. There were many other precious gems, emeralds, rubies and sapphires, and several small clusters of drop pearls. The lower part of the crown was surrounded with ermine. The value of the jewels on the crown was estimated at $568,800. The following is a summary of the precious stones comprised in the crown: 1 large ruby irregularly polished, 1 large broad-spread sapphire, 16 sapphires, 11 emeralds, 4 rubies, 1,363 brilliant diamonds, 1,273 rose diamonds, 147 table diamonds, 4 drop-shaped pearls, 273 other pearls.

The procession from the Abbey after the ceremony was even more splendid than in the morning, for the Queen now wore her crown, and the peeresses their robes and jeweled coronets. The enthusiasm and acclamations of the crowd were also heartier and louder.

THE LATE CAPTAIN J. B. EADS.

(See Portrait.)

The death of the eminent engineer whose portrait appears on this page, occurred at Nassau, New Providence, Bahama Islands, where he went last February for a brief vacation, hoping to recruit his system, which was exhausted by overwork. Neither he nor his friends had any apprehension of his death; it was supposed that there was nothing the matter with him but debility, which change and rest would remove. But Captain Eads had exhausted his vitality more completely than he knew, and the two potent remedies were powerless to restore it.

Captain Eads was born May 23, 1820, at Lawrenceburg, Ind. He was, therefore, sixty-seven years old when he died. The family removed to Louisville, Kentucky, when he was nine years old, and there, four years later his father died, and young Eads at thirteen years of age went out to face the world. He went to St. Louis and obtained a situation as clerk, which after about nine years he resigned to enter a firm engaged in the recovery of valuables from sunken wrecks. So energetic and successful was he in this occupation, that in 1857 he was able to retire from business with a handsome fortune. At the outbreak of the war in 1861 he offered his services to the national government, and prepared a plan for the defense of the great rivers of the west. Under a contract with the government he built a fleet of iron-clad gunboats and another of double-turreted "monitors" for offensive and defensive use on the Mississippi. In the construction of these vessels many new features of his invention were employed for the first time, and with marked success.

Captain Eads was from that time forward identified with colossal engineering undertakings. One of his most important achievements was the construction of the bridge over the Mississippi at St. Louis, which was opened in 1874. After its completion Captain Eads secured from the government a contract for deepening the channels at the mouths of the Mississippi River. His operations were highly successful, opening the Mississippi ports to the deep-water commerce of the world. Captain Eads's last great project was of a ship railroad across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, Mexico. Captain Eads proposed to construct, at a cost of about seventy-five million dollars, a many-tracked railroad 134 miles in length, and having a grade in some places of fifty-three feet per mile, with turn-tables, etc., and with dry-docks at each end. The largest ocean steamers, heavily laden, were to be docked, placed in huge cradles, mounted on cars, and dragged overland from sea to sea by the combined force of half a dozen giant locomotives. This plan of Isthmian transit was encouraged by the Mexican Government, but failed to receive the guarantee of the United States Congress, which Captain Eads needed before commencing the work. It was again discussed by the last Congress, but did not secure even a charter.

In person Captain Eads was an exceedingly small man. His hair was a flaxen gray and his complexion sallow; his eyes, blue in color, were penetrating and very bright; his forehead was high and broad; his nose sharp and well defined, and his mouth firmly set and determined-looking. Captain Eads had many friends in all parts of the country, who had a warm regard for the indomitable little man, and sincerely deplore his death.

ENOCH WHITELEY'S "LITTLE UN."

(See Illustration on page 605).

"Mornin', Doctor," said Enoch Whiteley, as he emerged from a path through the woods into the highroad, and accosted a good-looking young surgeon who was cantering past. "Could you come in and look at my little un. I'm kinder oneasy about her."

"What is it, Enoch?" said Dr. Travers, "anything serious? I'll come around as I return if it is not. I am going to see Mrs. Wheeler."

"That will do, doctor; she's been ailing on and off for a week or two. Sort o' dull and lifeless. Aint got no pain to speak of, but seems tired all the while, lies about, and don't care about anything, and she used to be as full of fun and life as a little squirrel. Guess she wants picking up a bit. Anyhow, you'll know. You won't forget to come in, will you, Doctor? She's all the world to me, and I couldn't bear to lose her."

"All right, Enoch, I'll be sure to come. But it amuses me to hear you say she is all the world to you. I thought your world was in the grocery. You would be a great deal better off, in your health and pocket both, if you thought more of your child and less of rum."

"May be you're right, Doctor, but it's the little un, now, If you can put her right, I'll forgive you for preaching," said Enoch magnanimously. He stood looking after the Doctor for a minute or two until he was lost to view, and then turned back home. He just looked in to tell his wife that Dr. Travers was coming before going to his work.

"Mind you keep sober then, Enoch," said his wife, who was not remarkable for her tact. "It aint o'much use fetching the doctor to her if you scare her out o' her life wi' your shines when you come home full o' nights."

Enoch muttered something very unpleasant as he went out, and had half a mind to go right off to the grocery instead of to work, just to show her it "warn't o' no use nagging," but concluded he would not, for the "little un's sake."

When Enoch got home at night he was quite sober, and very anxious to hear what the Doctor had said. His spirits sunk as he entered, for there sat his wife crying bitterly, while the little girl, who was about twelve years old, was trying to comfort her. The timid, apprehensive look that was on the child's face as she turned at the sound of his step was a reproach to Enoch, which he felt keenly. There was cause for it, as he knew, for he could remember many a time when he had come home riotously drunk and quarrelsome. He had never hurt his child in his worst times, but he had distressed her by his violence to her mother.

"Well, what's Doctor say about her?" he asked.

"Says he can't do nothing. She's got consumption. All the doctors in the world can't save her. O my precious lamb, it breaks your mother's heart!" and the mother went back to her fit of weeping.

Enoch felt like joining her, strong man as he was. He looked vacantly around, half dazed, like a man who has had a stunning blow, and then walked out of the house without a word. He scarcely knew where he went at first, but he was going in the direction of the Doctor's house, two miles off. With a sad face he entered the office when at last he reached the place, and looked up at Dr. Travers in mute agony. "Is it true, Doctor?" he said at length. "Can't anything save her?"

Enoch Whiteley's Appeal to Dr. Travers.

"Oh, I don't say that," said the physician, perceiving at once that Mrs. Whiteley had exaggerated what he said to her. "She is in a critical state, but I shall do my best. She is young, and that is in her favor. She will want care, and perhaps she will pull through. You had better stop spending your money in rum and use it to buy her better clothes and shoes and more nourishing food. It is like murdering her to let her go about with those old shoes on that let the water in every step. Mind you, Enoch, it depends more on you than me whether that child lives. Now go and turn over a new leaf."

"God help me, sir, I will," said Enoch solemnly.

It was quite late at night when Enoch reached home. His wife had laid the little girl in her bed, and was sitting up in fear and trembling, listening for the staggering steps and the maudlin song that were the usual tokens of her husband's return. He was silent, however, tonight, and she thought he was more steady in his walk. Perhaps, though it was so late, he might be sober. But that was almost too much to hope for. It was true, however, as one look at him convinced her.

"Late, aint I," Enoch said; "where do you think I've been?"

"I don't know, if it aint the grocery, as usual."

"Well, I'll tell you. I've been over to the town to them temperance fellows, and I've signed the pledge."

"You don't mean it, Enoch?"

"I do, and what's more, I'm going to stick to it."

"Thank God, Enoch! that's the best news you ever brought me; let me tell Mamie." But there was no need for that. A little white-robed figure was at the door listening, and when she heard the joyful news she ran in, put her arms around the big rough man's neck and kissed him. His wife too was at his side, clasping his hand and her eyes were full of glad tears.

"Why, I didn't think you'd both be so glad about it," he said. "Well, it's done and maybe it aint too late. You might ask God to save her life, and it wouldn't do no harm to ask Him to help me to hold on to what I've done tonight. You often wanted to pray; you can do it now."

Mrs. Whiteley needed no second invitation. All three knelt together while she pleaded for husband and child, and her petitions for both were heard and answered.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 590.)

A Retrospect—Removal to Bristol—Justified by Results—A Chapel Secured—Meetings for Inquirers—Ravages of Cholera—Birth of a Daughter—Present of Furniture—His Inferior Preaching—Tries his Colleague's Method and Succeeds—An Invitation to Bagdad.

Review of the time since I left London, up to my removal from Teignmouth.

I. All this time the Lord never allowed me to regret the step I had taken in separating from the society.

II. The results have most abundantly shown that it was of God; for, by His help, 1. I have not lost in truth or grace since. 2. I have been in peace concerning the matter. 3. The Lord made it a blessing to many souls.

III. The Lord most graciously supplied all my temporal wants during this period, so that I lacked no good thing.

IV. We had unexpectedly received, just before we left Teignmouth, about £15, else we should not have been able to defray all the expenses connected with leaving, travelling, etc. By this also, the Lord showed His mind concerning our going to Bristol.

The following record will now show to the believing reader how far what I have said concerning my persuasion, that it was the will of God that we should go to Bristol, has been proved by facts.

May 25, 1832. This evening we arrived in Bristol. May 27. This morning we received a sovereign ($5), sent to us by a sister residing in Devonshire, which we take as an earnest that the Lord will provide for us here also. May 28. When we were going to speak to the brethren who manage the temporal affairs of Gideon Chapel, about giving up the pew-rents, having all the seats free, and receiving the free-will offerings through a box, a matter which was not quite settled on their part, as brother Craik and I had thought, we found that the Lord had so graciously ordered this matter for us, that there was no objection on the part of these brethren.

June 4. For several days we have been looking about for lodgings, but finding none plain and cheap enough, we were led to make this also a subject of earnest prayer; and now, immediately afterwards, the Lord has given us such as are suitable. They are the plainest and cheapest we can find, but still too good for servants of Jesus, as our Master had not where to lay His head. We pay only 18s. ($4.50), a week for two sitting-rooms and three bedrooms, coals and attendance. It was particularly difficult to find cheap furnished lodgings having five rooms in the same house, which we need, as brother Craik and we live together. How good is the Lord to have thus appeared for us, in answer to prayer, and what an encouragement to commit everything that concerns us to Him in prayer!

June 5. To-day we had already a testimony of a sinner having been converted by brother Craik's instrumentality, on the first Lord's Day in April, simply through hearing the text read. [This aged sister lived eleven years afterwards, during which time her walk was according to the profession she made. She fell asleep in 1843.] June 7. We have daily fresh encouragements, and fresh proofs that our being here is of God. June 16. We saw another instance of conversion through brother Craik's instrumentality.

June 25. To-day it was finally settled to take Bethesda Chapel for a twelvemonth, on condition that a brother at once paid the rent, with the understanding that, if the Lord shall bless our labors in that place, so that believers are gathered together in fellowship, he expects them to help him; but, if not, that he will pay all. This was the only way in which we could take the chapel; for we could not think it to be of God to have had this chapel, though there should have been every prospect of usefulness, if it had made us in any way debtors. We had tried to obtain a cheaper meeting-place, but could find none large enough.

July 6. To-day we commenced preaching at Bethesda Chapel. It was a good day. July 13. To-day we heard of the first cases of cholera in Bristol. July 16. This evening, from six to nine o'clock, we had appointed for conversing at the vestry, one by one, with individuals, who wished to speak to us about their souls. There were so many that we were engaged from six till ten.

These meetings we have continued ever since, twice a week, or once a week, or once a fortnight, or once a month, as our strength and time allowed it, or as they seem needed. We have found them beneficial in these respects—

1. Many persons, on account of timidity, would prefer coming at an appointed time to the vestry to converse with us, to calling on us in our own house. 2. The very act of appointing a time for seeing people, to converse with them in private concerning the things of eternity, has brought some, who, humanly speaking, never would have called on us under other circumstances; yea, it has brought even those who, though they thought they were concerned about the things of God, yet were completely ignorant; and thus we have had an opportunity of speaking to them. 3. These meetings have also been a great encouragement to ourselves in the work, for often, when we thought that such and such expositions of the Word had done no good at all, it was, through these meetings, found to be the reverse; and likewise, when our hands were hanging down, we have been afresh encouraged to go forward in the work of the Lord, and to continue sowing the seed in hope, by seeing at these meetings fresh cases, in which the Lord had condescended to use us as instruments, particularly as in this way instances have sometimes occurred in which individuals have spoken to us about the benefit which they derived from our ministry, even as long as two, three and four years before.

For the above reasons I would particularly recommend to other servants in Christ, especially to those who live in large towns, if they have not already introduced a similar plan, to consider whether it may not be well for them also to set apart such times for seeing inquirers. Those meetings, however, require much prayer, to be enabled to speak aright to all those who come, according to their different need; and one is led continually to feel that one is not sufficient of one's self for these things, but that our sufficiency can be alone of God. These meetings also have been by far the most wearing out part of all our work, though at the same time the most refreshing.

July 18. To-day I spent the whole morning in the vestry to procure a quiet season. This has now for some time been the only way, on account of the multiplicity of engagements, to make sure of time for prayer, reading the Word, and meditation. July 19. I spent from half-past nine till one in the vestry, and had real communion with the Lord. The Lord be praised, who has put it into my mind to use the vestry for a place of retirement!

August 5. When all our money was gone to-day, the Lord again graciously supplied our wants. August 6. This afternoon, from two till after six, brother Craik and I spent in the vestry to see the inquirers. We have had again, in seeing several instances of blessing upon our labors, abundant reason brought before us to praise the Lord for having sent us here.

August 13. This evening one aged brother and four sisters united with brother Craik and me in church-fellowship at Bethesda, without any rules, desiring only to act as the Lord shall be pleased to give us light through His word.

August 14. This day we set apart for prayer concerning the cholera, and had three meetings

August 17. This morning, from six to eight, we had a prayer-meeting at Gideon, on account of the cholera. Between two and three hundred people were present. (We continued these meetings every morning, as long as the cholera raged in Bristol, and afterwards changed them into prayer-meetings for the church at large, so that we had them for four months.)

August 23. This morning a sister in the Lord, within fifty yards of our lodging, was taken ill with the cholera, and died this afternoon. Her husband, also a believer, has been attacked, and may be near death. The ravages of this disease are becoming daily more and more fearful. We have reason to believe that great numbers die daily in this city. Who may be the next, God alone knows. I have never realized so much the nearness of death. Except the Lord keep us this night, we shall be no more in the land of the living to-morrow. Just now, ten in the evening, the funeral bell is ringing, and has been ringing the greater part of this evening. It rings almost all the day. Into Thy hands, O Lord, I commend myself! Here is Thy poor worthless child! If this night I should be taken in the cholera, my only hope and trust is in the blood of Jesus Christ, shed for the remission of all my sins. I have been thoroughly washed in it, and the righteousness of God covers me. As yet there have not been any of the saints among whom Brother Craik and I labor, taken in the cholera. (Only one of them fell asleep afterwards in consequence of this disease. Though Brother Craik and I visited many cholera cases, by day and by night, yet the Lord most graciously preserved us and our families from it.)

September 17. This morning the dear Lord, in addition to all His other mercies, has given us a little girl, who with her mother are doing well.

September 21. On account of the birth of our little one, and brother Craik's intended marriage, it is needful that we change our lodgings, as they will now be too small for us, because we shall want one room more. Just as we were thinking about this, the house belonging to Gideon Chapel, which has been let for three years, was unexpectedly given up by the tenant, and it was now offered to us by the Church. We said we could not think of going into it, as we had no furniture, and no money to buy any. The brother who proposed our going into that house, however, replied, that the brethren would gladly furnish it for us, to which we objected, fearing it would burthen them. When, however, the matter was repeatedly mentioned, and when it was particularly expressed that it would be a pleasure to the brethren to furnish the house, we began to consider the subject in prayer, and we saw no Scriptural objection to accept this kindness, providing the furniture was very plain. This was promised. The house was furnished, yet the love of the brethren had done it more expensively then we wished it.

September 23. To-day an individual desired publicly to return thanks to the Lord, for having been supported under the loss of a child, mother, brother, and wife, in the cholera, within one month.

September 25. Last night Brother Craik and I were called out of bed to a poor woman ill in the cholera. She was suffering intensely. We never saw a case so distressing. We could hardly say anything to her on account of her loud cries. I felt as if the cholera was coming upon me. We commended ourselves into the hands of the Lord when we came home, and He mercifully preserved us. The poor woman died to-day.

October 1. A meeting for inquirers this afternoon from two to five. Many more are convinced of sin through brother Craik's preaching than my own. This circumstance led me to inquire into the reasons, which are probably these:—1. That brother Craik is more spiritually minded than I am. 2. That he prays more earnestly for the conversion of sinners than I do. 3. That he more frequently addresses sinners, as such, in his public ministrations, than I do. This led me to more frequent and earnest prayer for the conversion of sinners, and to address them more frequently as such. The latter had never been intentionally left undone, but it had not been so frequently brought to my mind as to that of brother Craik. Since then, the cases in which it has pleased the Lord to use me as an instrument of conversion have been quite as many as those in which brother Craik has been used. May the Lord be pleased to use this as a means to lead any of His servants who may not have acted according to these two last points, to seek to do so, and may He graciously enable me to do so more abundantly!

October 3. This day we set apart as a day of thanksgiving, the cholera having decreased. October 5. Prayer meeting this morning as usual. The cholera is very much decreasing, and the number at our morning prayer-meetings likewise. Hundreds of people were stirred up at that time, and many of them, when the judgment of God had passed away, cared no longer about their souls. Yet a goodly number, who were first led through the instrumentality of the cholera to seek the Lord, are now breaking bread with us, and are walking in the fear of the Lord. How merciful in its results has this heavy judgment been to many!

January 4, 1833. This morning we received letters from Bagdad. The missionary brethren there invite brother Craik and me to come and join them in their labors. The invitation was accompanied by drafts to the amount of £200 for our travelling expenses. What wilt thou have me to do, gracious Lord? I do not know what may be the Lord's mind. There are points which ought to be much considered and prayed over: There are German villages not very far from Bagdad, where I might labor; upon our going, that of certain other individuals may depend; the brethren at Bagdad are of one mind respecting our going out; good may be done on the way; the going out without any visible support from a society, simply trusting in the Lord for the supply of our temporal wants, would be a testimony for Him; I have had for years a feeling as if one day I should go out as a missionary to the heathen, or Mahomedans; and lastly, the hands of the brethren at Bagdad may be strengthened; these are the points, which must appear of no sufficient weight in comparison with the importance of our work here, before I can determine not to go.

January 5. I considered with brother Craik about going to Bagdad. We can see nothing clearly. If the Lord will have me to go, here I am. January 7. I spent again some time in prayer respecting our going to Bagdad, and examined more fully into it. January 8. I had from half past five till eight this morning to myself in prayer and reading the Word. I prayed then, and repeatedly besides this day, respecting our going to Bagdad, I wrote also a letter to some believers at and near Barnstable, to ask their prayers concerning this matter. I do not see more clearly than I did before. January 9. I again asked the Lord concerning Bagdad, but see nothing clearly respecting it. I told the Lord I should stay at my post unless He Himself should most evidently take me away, and I did not feel afterwards my remaining here to be against His will. January 14. I feel more and more satisfied that it is not of the Lord that I shall go to Bagdad. January 19. For some days past I have been reading brother Grove's journal of his residence at Bagdad, both for the sake of information respecting his position there, and also, if it please the Lord, that He may use this as a means to show me clearly whether I should go or stay. Blessed be His name that I have no desire of my own in this matter! [Thirty-six years have since passed away, and I think I may say this day, still, according to the best of my knowledge, I had no desire of my own in this matter; but I never saw it to be the Lord's will to leave the work which He had so evidently given me to do in Bristol and the neighborhood.]

(To be Continued.)

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles among others are contained in the number for September:

1896, the probable year of the Second Advent. By the late Rev. Joseph Baylee, D. D.

The Removal of the Vail. By the Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kan.

Deliverance from the Woes of the Seventh Vial. By the late T. Evill, Esq.

Observations on the Apocalypse of St. John By Sir Isaac Newton.

Satan's Counterfeit Christianity. By Mr. Henry Meymott.

The Coming Inquisition for Blood. By Rev. E Cornwell.

The Jewish Morning and Evening Sacrifices. By Rev. Dr. Edersheim.

Prophetic Lectures. By Rev. M. Baxter.

The Seven Seals Fully Explained in Their Double Fulfilment. Year-Day and Literal-Day. By Rev. M. Baxter.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes containing the monthly numbers for 1884 or 1883 may be had; price $1.]

THE CENTURION'S FAITH.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for October 2, Matt. 8 : 1-13, Memory Text, Matt. 8 : 10.

Ver. 1. Christ Goes from Teaching to Work—An Example to be Imitated—The Multitudes to See His Teaching in Practice—Ver. 2. Meets the Leper—How Ordinary Men Treated a Leper—The Man's Avowal of Confidence—What He Knew and What He Doubted—Ver. 3. How Jesus Always Deals with such Faith—The Touch of Sympathy and Healing—Ver. 4. The Healer Expects Obedience—Shows Respect for Law—Ver. 5-6. A Centurion the Captain of a Hundred Soldiers—A Great Man's Concern for a Sick Servant Uncommon Now—Ver. 7. The Answer One of Kindness and Conscious Power—Ver. 8, 9. The Centurion's Idea of Disease—Thought it would Obey Christ—Ver. 10. The Roman Officer's Faith a Surprise to Christ—Ver. 11, 12. Christ's Prediction now Being Fulfilled—Ver. 13. The Measure of all Blessings—In Proportion to Faith.

HAVING completed His summary of the laws and customs of His Kingdom, our blessed Lord proceeded to exemplify them in His own life. When He came down from the mountain, followed by the multitudes which had been hanging on His words, a poor, loathsome leper came and worshipped Him, saying "Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean." This was the only time that such a question was ever raised in the lifetime of our Lord, and it was answered at once: "I will, be thou clean." Yet in all parts of the world men are saying: "Of course we believe that God can heal the sick, but the question is, is it in every case? Is it always His will to save sinners? Some thirty years ago the answer to this question was looked upon as doubtful, but the word of God has answered it so constantly that it is rarely raised now. The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all (Isa. 4: 6)—"He, by the grace of God, should taste death for every man (Heb. 2: 9), "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Heb. 22: 17). But none about sickness? The theology of the day says that sickness is a good thing, but God never said so. We are told that it was sent to teach us patience, yet that we are to do all we can to get rid of it by means of doctors and medicine, but that we may fight against the will of God if we do the only thing He has told sick people to do, i. e., to "call for the elders of the church," and to trust God Himself for healing (James 5: 14-16). Now, if sickness is a good thing, why did Jesus always take it away from those who came to Him? If it is such a means of blessing, why did He not lay a double portion of it on them? Why did He take our infirmities and bear our sicknesses (ver. 17), just as He bare our sins, if He saw that it was better for us to bear them ourselves? But there arises the universal difficulty, "How is it then, that so many souls have been blessed on a sick bed? Because their sickness has driven them to Jesus; and anything, poverty, sickness, accident, the reproach of men, bereavement, or anything which drives us to Jesus, is blessed so far. But there are thousands who are brought to Jesus without these things. God says, "Faith cometh by hearing (not by sickness), and hearing by the Word of God (Rom. 10: 17). But God loves us too much to let us go on in our own evil ways without making some strenuous effort to save us, and if we will not hear by gentle means, He must use the whip. But when the sickness has served its purpose, and we have listened to His voice, He does not want to let it remain any longer (Ex. 15 : 26; Job 33: 19-26).

His Will to Heal

Among the good things He created, before man fell, sickness is not mentioned, and among the herbs provided in those creation days for man's food, He never spoke of any provision against sickness. The Word of God and the example of Jesus upon earth, and then His bearing of our sickness and His plain command to the sick to be healed (James 5 : 14-16), all are evidence enough that He wills to take away sickness whenever His sick children really come to Him. But then

What About Death?

"It is appointed unto men once to die" has never been reversed. Jesus is our refuge from sickness as from sin; He has taken away the sting from death, and when He comes again it will be as the Conqueror of death, to take away His own, without dying, to be "for ever with the Lord." "But how am I to know whether it is His will for me to die of this illness?" He will not refuse to make known His mind to one who is fully yielded up to Him.

"Jesus put forth His hand and touched" the leper, and then told him to go and make the offering which a cleansed leper was to make (Lev. 14 : 3, 4, 10, 11) "for a testimony unto them." The only cleansed lepers we read of in the Old Testament are Miriam and Naaman (Num. 12 : 13, 15; II Kings 5); there may have been others, but they are not mentioned; we read of no cleansing of Gehazi or of Uzziah. So rare was the cleansing of a leper, that probably the priests had never had experience in performing the rites which were prescribed, and this man presenting himself among them as cleansed by Jesus must have caused a stir and inquiry.

But Jesus passed on. As the Levite of Levites, He came to bless in the name of the Lord (Deut. 10 : 8). Life, healing, pardon, joy, comfort, flowed forth from Him. He "entered into Capernaum," and there met Him some elders of the Jews who came from a Roman centurion of that city, and besought Him with great urgency to come and heal the centurion's slave who "was sick and ready to die" (Luke 7 : 2-4). They urged their plea on the ground that this man was worthy, for "he loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue." O how mistaken are man's ideas of God! How many ask prayer for a sick one, saying that he is such a useful man, such an earnest Christian, etc., as though it would be more worth God's while, so to speak, to heal him than to heal some more commonplace Christian. O when will men learn that God deals with us in grace, not for the sake of what we are, but out of the wondrous, undeserved love which He is. The plea, did not weigh with Jesus. Human worthiness of the highest order cannot find a place in the presence of the All Holy God. And then, "he loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue," as if to say, "we shall lose his subscriptions to the synagogue if he is offended. We can't afford to lose the help of such an one." What a motive to be urged by one who believes in the living God! Let us be free from men, and make higher calculations; man may fail us, God never. It may be that some one ran back and repeated to the centurion the words which had been spoken. It aroused him. This was a made-up argument, he had never commissioned the Jewish elders to speak thus, so he sent his trusted friends to say what he a few moments later came and said himself, "Lord, I am not worthy that Thou shouldst come under my roof; wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto Thee, but speak the word only and my servant shall be healed." The man was worthy because of his very sense of unworthiness, his emptiness was his strongest appeal to Jesus. When men come to God for sanctification, reckoning on their own devotedness, or for healing, counting on their own great faith, they are sure to be disappointed.

"He is Worthy,"

The Ground for all Blessing is in Jesus, not in us. What have we, that we did not receive? Surely, nothing. And so He who gave us the faith or the devotion is alone to be praised. The centurion had his eye on Jesus, "Speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed. For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me; and I say to this man, go, and he goeth; and to another, come, and he cometh; and to my servant, do this, and he doeth it." In his little province, he knew how to command that which was subject to him, and he counted that sickness and disease were equally subject to Jesus. In his opinion, the word of Jesus was enough. He asked no sign, no feeling, "Speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed." O, how many souls lose blessing for want of the simple reckoning upon God. By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of His mouth. For he spake and it was done; He commanded, and it stood fast" (Ps. 33: 6, 9). The centurion would have opened his eyes very wide if he had heard some modern so-called Christians talking about natural law as though it governed God who made it. This man saw God superior to his laws, controlling, enforcing, or suspending them, as He would. The greatest hinderance to God's work throughout the world is the poor opinion which men have of Him. Men judge God by themselves, and measure Him according to their own standard. They only believe a fellow creature when they have no reason to question his veracity, and when his words accord with their own experience. But God's word leads us into regions beyond our own experience, and we must either trust or doubt. Joshua believed, although he had never before seen walls fall down in answer to the praises of God's people, and he was not disappointed. Daniel believed, and the lions became as lambs. Peter and John believed, and the prison ceased to imprison them. The lame man at Lystra believed, and stood upon his feet. The centurion counted on the authority of the word of Jesus, and he was not disappointed. "When Jesus heard it, he marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, I have not found no, not in Israel." God values faith; Jesus spoke words of direct commendation to the Gentile woman, "O woman, great is thy faith." He commended the Gentile centurion. God will always own faith. Samson, imperfect and inconsistent man as he was, appears among the men of faith in Heb. 11. "Without faith it is impossible to please Him, for he that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him" (Heb. 11: 6). Faith rests in what God is, and so gives Him an opportunity of manifesting Himself. It was in this that Israel had failed, "They believed not in God" (Ps. 78: 22). They had "an evil heart of unbelief" (Heb. 3: 12). Now, the Lord said "Verily I say unto you, that many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into utter darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Jews will not be saved because they are Jews; it is "he that believeth," whether Jew or Gentile, who shall be saved, and "he that believeth not," whether Jew or Gentile, must know the "outer darkness." "And Jesus said unto the centurion, go thy way; and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee." How did he believe? The event proves how, "His servant was healed in the selfsame hour." "O, sir," said

So Great Faith,

A Seeking Soul to an Evangelist,

"I don't know how it is, but I cannot trust God." "Try it the other way round," he said. "can you doubt Him?" "Doubt Him? I couldn't doubt Him for the world; O, I do trust Him with my all." God's measure to us all is the measure of faith, the measure in which we take of Him. To take and to trust are almost the same, for all His good gifts are held out to us for our acceptance, whether pardon, holiness or healing. How may I know that I trust Him? O, so simply. The heart which trusts him praises Him, and gives thanks, and all anxiety goes out as trusting and believing comes in. "We, which have believed, do enter into rest" (Heb. 4: 3). Before the centurion saw with his own eyes, that his sick slave was healed, his heart was at rest about it; he knew that he was as sure as though he saw it done, and the God whom he trusted would not, and did not, disappoint him. Lord, give us like faith. Amen.

INVITATION.

Oh, come to the merciful Saviour who calls you,
Oh, come to the Lord who forgives and forgets;
Though dark be the fortune on earth that befalls you,
There's a bright home above where the sun never sets.

Oh, come then to Jesus, whose arms are extended
To fold His dear children in closest embrace;
Oh, come, for your exile will shortly be ended,
And Jesus will show you His beautiful face.

Yes, come to the Saviour, whose mercy grows brighter
The longer you look at the depths of His love;
And fear not! 'tis Jesus, and life's cares grow lighter,
As you think of the home and the glory above.

Have you sinned as none else in the world have before you?
Are you blacker than all other creatures in guilt?
Oh, fear not and doubt not! the mother who bore you
Loves you less than the Saviour whose blood you have spilt.

Oh, come then to Jesus, and say how you love Him,
And vow at His feet you will keep in His grace;
For one tear that is shed by a sinner can move Him,
And your sins will drop off in His tender embrace.

Come, come to His feet and lay open your story
Of suffering and sorrow, of guilt and of shame;
For the pardon of sin is the crown of His glory,
And the joy of our Lord to be true to His name.

—F. W. Faber.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE By a New York S.S. Superintend't. Introduction By J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

10,000 Prize Questions and Answers pertaining to Persons, Places and Things, Bible Studies and Readings, Prayer Meeting Talks and Outlines, Concert Exercises, Blackboard Outlines, Object Lessons and Chalk Talks, Seed Thoughts, Religious Emblems and Allegories illustrated, with Reference Tables, Maps, etc. Endorsed by D. D.'s, Teachers and Pres's. Agt's sell 100 to 200 copies a month to saints and sinners.

"An ingenious help and pleasant guide to an acquaintance with the Bible."—Talmage.

606 Pages $2. AGENTS Wanted.

E. B. TREAT Publisher, NEW YORK.

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed, Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES—(Good Agents and Dealers whose profits and expenses double the cost on every Piano they sell) and send this First-Class UPRIGHT Cabinet GEM 7⅓ Octave Rosewood Piano, Warranted 6 years, for $193! We send it—with Beautiful Cover and Stool—for Trial in your own Home before you buy. Send for circulars to Marshal & Smith, 235 East 21st St., N. Y.

Lactated Food

The Mother's Favorite.

Send for our Circular entitled

"LETTERS from MOTHERS,"

which contains a large number of letters, many of which say the life of their baby was saved by the use of LACTATED FOOD.

Read these letters and, if you wish, write to the mothers and get their opinion—every one will gladly answer.

If your baby is not hearty and robust try it.

LACTATED FOOD

Is also a Perfect Nutrient for INVALIDS, in either chronic or acute cases. Weak stomachs always retain and relish it. Thousands of Physicians recommend it as the best of all prepared foods. Unequalled in DYSPEPSIA.

150 MEALS for an INFANT for $1.00.

Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

This Magazine portrays American thought and life from ocean to ocean, is filled with pure high-class literature, and can be safely welcomed in any family circle.

PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MAIL.

Sample Copy of current number mailed upon receipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 cts.

Premium List with either.

Address:

The American Magazine Co., Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N. Y.

GET UP CLUBS

SINGING TEACHERS AND CONDUCTORS OF MUSICAL SOCIETIES, SHOULD APPLY FOR COMPLETE CATALOGUES, SPECIMEN PAGES AND TERMS.

Any Book desired for examination sent on receipt of price. Money refunded if unsatisfactory.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth Street, New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

Soul-Stirring Songs

Glad Hallelujahs will make a live Church or School livelier. Its songs are of the soul-stirring kind. A musical composer, a fine singer, and a gentleman well acquainted with hymnology, after enjoying a season of song with Sweney & Kirkpatrick, said of it, "I have not found a poor piece. It is the best I ever got hold of. It is victuals and drink, both."

By mail, 35 cents. By express, $3.60 per doz.; $30 per 100. Further inducements to Schools, Churches and Evangelists. Write us.

T. T. TASKER, SR., PUBLISHER,
921 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

LATEST, CHEAPEST AND BEST
160 Pages. Strong Board Covers.
30 cents each, postpaid. $25.00 per 100
Send to The Phillips Publishing Co.,
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

HEAVENLY RECOGNITION.

By Rev. Thomas Martin McWhinney, D.D.

—The Natural and Scriptural Argument for Immortality and Personal Identity after this Life.

12mo, super calendered paper. Vellum Cloth, 60 cents.

"A very thoughtful and suggestive book, entirely different from anything of the kind we have ever seen. The style is elevated, fresh, spiritual. It is full of quickening, inspiring thoughts."—[Christian Advocate, Buffalo.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price,

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

Not one other manufacturer of Paints can show either by analysis or mode of preparation that their Paints can render the services ours do.

A mere assertion is utterly worthless.

All the ingredients of our Paints have a practical record of over fifty years. We have many skilled processes, but in them all do that immense amount of work without which no Liquid Paint is at its best. Color Cards. Circulars. THE F. J. NASH M'F'G Co., Manufacturers of Pure Linseed Oil Liquid Paints, Nyack, N.Y., U.S.A.

TRITELEIA UNIFLORA.

This (as shown in cut) is one of the choicest additions to winter flowering Bulbs that has been offered in many years. The Bulbs are small and several can be planted in a pot, each one of which will send up several flower scapes, bearing star shaped blossoms, pure white, elegantly lined with celestial blue. As the flowers follow each other successively and last a long time before fading, a pot of these Bulbs is never without flowers for several months in mid-winter. They are also quite hardy and can be planted in the open ground where they will bloom elegantly in the early spring. We earnestly advise all lovers of flowers to plant this beautiful gem. It is sure to delight you. It is of the easiest culture and always sure to thrive. Fine Bulbs, by mail, post-paid, 15 cts. each; 3 for 25 cts.; 12 for 75 cts. We will also mail 12 double or single Hyacinths for $1.25; 12 double or single Tulips for 40 cts.; 25 beautiful mixed Crocus for 25 cts; 7 fine Lilies, $1.00.

Our elegant Catalogue of Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissus, Lilies and other hardy Bulbs and Plants for fall planting and winter blooming, also Pansy Seed and Choice New Fruits, will be mailed FREE to any who think of purchasing. If you wish anything in our line, write at once for Catalogue.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS,
FLORAL PARK, Queens Co., N. Y.

400 Choice Recitations and Readings, bound in boards, with gilt stamped cover, mailed [illegible] post-paid, for only 30 cents. Satisfaction guaranteed. Address J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers, 57 Rose Street, New York.

Mention this Herald in your letter when you write.

Fall Dress Goods

JAMES McCREERY & C[o]

Offer among their large assort[ment] of Fall Dress Goods, the follo[wing] Special Lines:

Two lines Stripe and Check C[loth]s, 44 inches wide, at 60 c[ents] worth $1.

Also, Three lines Check and S[tripe] Suitings, 54 inches wide, at 75 c[ents] well worth $1.25.

ORDERS BY MAIL { From any part o[f the] country will rec[eive] careful and prom[pt] tention.

JAMES McCREERY & C[o]
Broadway and Eleventh
New York.

Ladies' Suit[s]

Ladies who are unable to ex[amine] our stock of these goods perso[nally] would find it to their advanta[ge] correspond with us. The most [com]plete information furnished, and [care]ful attention given to special or[ders]

Lord & Tayl[or]

Broadway & 20th Street, N.

SALZER'S CA[TALOGUE]

In t[he] rooms or [where] o[ne] do poorly the CA[TALOGUE] our W[ORLD] BLO[OM] BUL[BS] grow and bloo[m] ly. The c[ata]l and rare beautifu[l] fragrant [flowers]

PR[ICE]
10 Cu[rio]s ent, 1[0] Cereus, $1.00.
15 Wi[nter] ing Bulbs a Lily, $1.00.
15 Wi[nter] ing Pl[ants] Paid, $1.
Send Fall List
J. A.,
LA C[ROSSE] W[IS.]

AGENTS WANTED (Samples F[REE]) DR. SCOTT'S beautiful Corsets, Brushes, Belts, Etc. No risk, q[uick] Territory given. Satisfaction guaranteed
DR. SCOTT, 843 Broadway, New[York]

INVALUABL[E]

LADIES

CHILDR[EN]

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

You'll find it good to regulate
The organs of both small and great:
It checks Sick Headache, and the woe
That sad Dyspepsia ever know.
In TARRANT'S SELTZER peop[le]
A remedy and treat combined.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEW[S] TO LADIE[S]

Greatest offer. Now is [the] to get orders for our c[elebrated] Teas, Coffees and [Baking] Powder, and secure a [Handsome] Gold Band or Moss Ro[se] Tea Set, Dinner S[et], Gold Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Webster's Dictionary. For particulars addre[ss] THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P. O. Box 289 [illegible] 33 Vesey St., N[ew York]

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at Bible House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 39. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, SEPT 29, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

'ORTRAITS OF TWO MEXICAN STATESMEN AND PICTURE OF THE OLD INQUISITION.

'LUMB LINE RELIGION. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning.

'HE MIDNIGHT CRY. By Henry Varley.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Government Buying Bonds—The Chicago Anarchists—The Massachusetts Democratic Convention—The Texas Cyclone—Disturbances in Ireland—European Unrest A Millionaire's Gratitude—An Enigmatical Message from the Arctic—A Saloon Floor Inlaid with Dollars, etc.

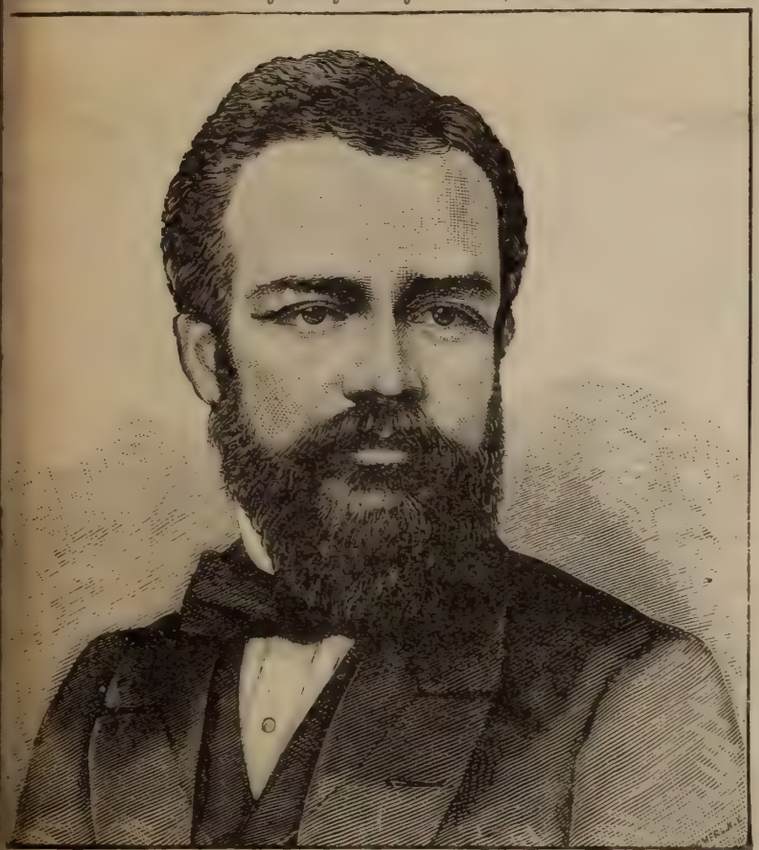
GOD THE WONDER WORKER. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.—Gems from New Books.

PORTRAIT OF COL. CHAILLE-LONG.

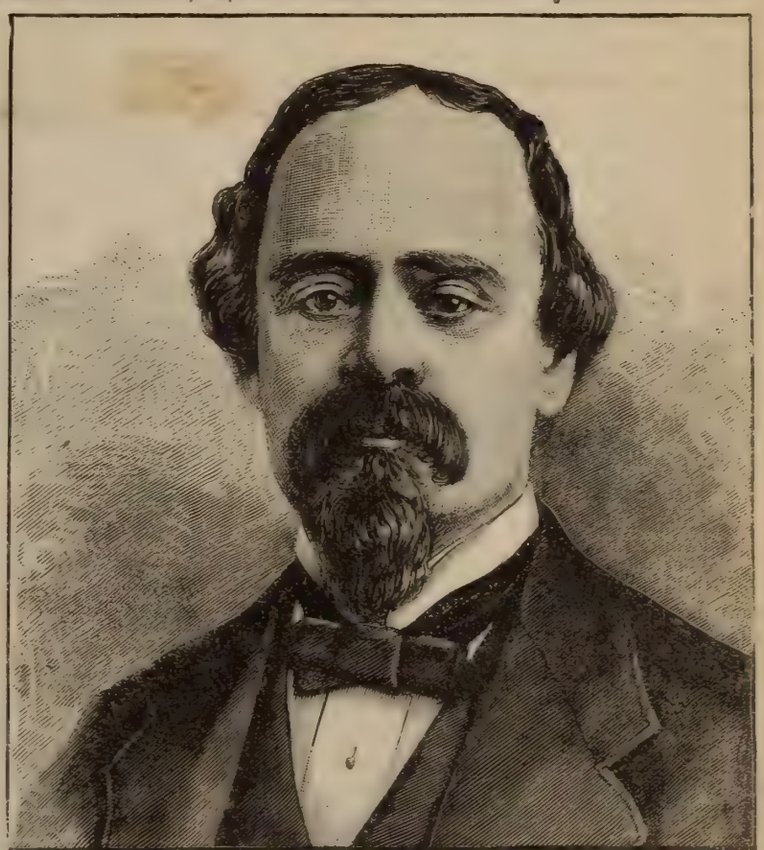
PICTURE OF KENTISH HOP PICKERS.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. (Continued.)

THE TEMPEST STILLED. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



ENOR DON MATIAS ROMERO, Mexican Minister to Washington.



SENOR DON IGNACIO MARISCAL, Mexican Secretary of State.

MOUNTAIN SCENE IN MEXICO.

THE OLD INQUISITION BUILDING IN MEXICO.

THE PROTECTORS OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN MEXICO.

If the Christian public of the United States were as familiar with the history of Mexico as they are with the history of England, the interest they feel in the story of Oliver Cromwell and William of Orange, would be awakened also by the names of several Mexican statesmen, notably, the present President, Porfirio Diaz, and the two eminent men whose portraits appear on the first page—Matias Romero, formerly Secretary of the Treasury, now Minister to Washington, and Ignacio Mariscal, the Secretary of State. These last two are natives of the southern town of Oaxaca, a town that has been distinguished as the birthplace of many of the Liberal leaders in Mexico. Both have married American wives, and while faithful to their own nationality, have shown a hearty admiration for American institutions and a warm friendship for the American people. Both speak English fluently.

Our sympathy with these two men and President Diaz is enlisted by the fact that they, with other courageous coadjutors whose names are less widely known, are bravely struggling to preserve to Mexico the religious liberty which she acquired in 1821, and which since then has appeared more than once to be on the verge of extinction. It is not a light matter to enter the lists against the might and cunning of the Roman Catholic hierarchy. Kings and powerful statesmen in every century have fought that fight and been beaten; and in our own day the Iron Chancellor of Germany has been glad to end the struggle with a compromise.

It is not that the Mexican Government is inimical to the Roman Catholic Church; it is that they wish it to be placed on a level with other sects, while the priests demand supremacy. Their demand is opposed not only because it is unfair, but because to grant it would mean death to civil as well as religious liberty. What happens in a state in which Roman Catholicism is dominant, every student of history and every intelligent observer of foreign affairs knows perfectly well. The present Mexican Government is aware of the fact, and has only to look back about twenty years for confirmation, to the days when the Roman Catholic party labored hard to rivet the despotism of Maximilian on the country. Consequently the struggle has been a fierce one, and so far the Church has been worsted. She has lost more than she would have lost had she accepted the situation and subsided into the equality assigned her. But proud and obstinate, she resisted the government, and resisted with so much vigor that that government found it necessary to reduce her fighting power. They have sold many of her churches, suppressed her monasteries, and confiscated much of her property. It is therefore not suprising that every priest is an enemy to the government and is continnally plotting against it.

The difficulties with which these liberal statesmen in Mexico have to contend are increased by the condition of the people. Nearly three-fourths of the ten million inhabitants of the country are now unable to appreciate the blessings which are at stake. Many of them are Indians, many are half-breeds, and they do not realize that the future of their country depends on their giving moral support to the men who stand between them and the most merciless tyranny under the sun. If the present freedom of education can be maintained a few years longer, and such societies as The Children's Guardian Society can be helped by Protestants in other lands to continue its work of training and teaching the children, the next generation will be of a different order. The men like those now at the head of the Mexican government will have a valiant band of supporters at their back, and will hold a position against which the hosts of intolerance will fight in vain. May God give courage and fortitude to the Mexican patriots, and move His people in more highly favored lands to support those who are laboring to teach the young, and preach to the adults, Him, whom to know, is to be free indeed!

THE INQUISITION IN MEXICO.

(See Illustration on preceding page.)

On the first page, below the two portraits, is (on the left) a picture of a scene among the mountains, a specimen of the beautiful spots which the traveller in Mexico sees frequently in his journeys through the country. The picture on the right is a view of the quadrangle, in which the Protestant visitor reverently uncovers his head. It is holy ground; for there, tied to stakes, the bodies of martyrs have been burned, and in the projecting building, about the centre of the picture, they were previously imprisoned and tortured, for that building was the Inquisition. It was founded in 1571, though the inquisitorial functions had been performed then for forty years, though without local organization. The chronicler, Ventancurt, records with delight: "They have celebrated general and particular autos de la fé with great concourse of dignitaries, and in all cases the Catholic faith and its truth have remained victorious" . . . . The brasero, brazier, or burning place, whereon the decrees were executed, was a short distance eastward of the Church of San Diego. It was a square platform with wall and terrace arranged for the erection of stakes to which the condemned, living or dead, were fastened to be burned. Being raised in a large open space, the spectacle could be witnessed by the entire population of the city. When the ceremony was ended, the ashes were thrown into the marsh that then was in the rear of the Church of San Diego . . . The first auto da fé in New Spain was celebrated in the year 1574; as its result, as is mentioned with much satisfaction by the chronicler, there perished "twenty-one pestilent Lutherans." The Inquisition was not finally suppressed in Mexico until May 31, 1820.

THE REPUBLIC OF MEXICO.

By the Rev. H. Chauncey Riley, D. D.

The republic of Mexico has an area of territory equal to that of the United States east of the Mississippi River. The population of that neighboring sister republic amounts to about ten millions of souls. As the tourist approaches Mexico from the Gulf, he finds a belt of low-lying coast land, from which, at some distance from the shores of the Gulf, there rise magnificent ranges of mountains that rise to an altitude of about 8,000 feet. Reaching the summit of these mountains, the traveller then finds a vast table-land that extends throughout almost all the interior of Mexico. The climate along the belt of low-lying lands near the coast is tropical, but the climate on the lofty table-land, on the contrary, from its great altitude, is delightfully cool—a perennial spring. A few magnificent snow-capped mountain peaks tower high above this vast table-land, while ranges of mountains here and there intersect it with rich and beautiful valleys between them. Far away in the interior of this vast table-land, the tourist begins to pass through richly cultivated plains, numerous estates and villages, and then reaches the leading cities of the Republic of Mexico.

The Capital,

situated near some sparkling lakes in the valley of Mexico, surrounded in the distance by an amphitheatre of mountains, presents an indescribably picturesque appearance, and contains over 300,000 inhabitants. Entering the city, the tourist finds himself surrounded by a mixed population—the higher classes being evidently of Spanish descent, while the humbler classes have a decidedly Asiatic appearance. The homes of the higher classes are often of palatial grandeur; those of the poorer classes, on the contrary, are exceedingly humble. On the central square of the capital,

A Magnificent Cathedral,

the grandest church edifice in America, rises high above the surrounding buildings. A short distance from this grand structure, a massive stone building, of sombre aspect, formerly the great building of the Inquisition in America, now a model medical college, claims the attention of the traveller. Facing the same square as the cathedral, a very spacious building, called the Palace, forms the central building of the General Government of Mexico. Not far away from the main square of the capital the tourist finds a former Roman Catholic church building, converted into a national library. Near the leading street in this capital, the finest church, after the Roman Catholic cathedral just named, especially deserves attention, as it is the central church building of the native "Evangelical Church of Jesus."

From the western suburbs of the capital a broad avenue leads to the castle palace of Chapultepec, that crowns a lofty eminence, surrounded by a forest of gigantic trees. This palace castle is the residence of the President of the Republic of Mexico—General Porfirio Diaz. The view from this palace castle is surpassingly beautiful. To understand the present aspect of one must keep in mind some of the leading facts of the past history of that nation. When, early in the sixteenth century, the Spaniards found this way from the West India islands to this part of the mainland of America, they discovered a powerful empire, firmly established in its midst, with organized armies, official administrators, courts of justice, mechanical arts, and massive stone buildings. The people of this empire were of Asiatic appearance, and imbued with Asiatic ideas. The little army of Spaniards, led by Cortez, had the advantage of cannons, musketry and other weapons, that enabled them to cut their way through the native armies much as an iron monitor can cut its way through a wooden fleet. The Spaniards captured the Mexican emperor Montezuma. The government of Spain soon sent a viceroy to rule the newly conquered country. An army of Spanish ecclesiastics soon occupied the land and endeavoured to do what they could to Christianize the natives.

Affairs in Mexico,

For three hundred years Mexico remained a colony of old Spain. In the year 1821 this Spanish colony from the mother country. Since that date a band of patriotic men have struggled nobly to organize this former Spanish colony into a republic, with a constitution very like that of the United States. Prominent among this band of patriots should be mentioned the names of Benito Juarez, Porfirio Diaz, the present President, and the two statesmen whose portraits appear on the preceding page, Matias Romero, the intimate friend of General Grant, formerly Secretary of the Treasury and now Minister to Washington, and Ignacio Mariscal, now Secretary of State.

Achieved its Independence

The Dawn of Protestantism.

In the year 1827 an agent of the great English Bible Society arrived in Mexico, and, for two or three years, met with unexpected welcome. The Bibles which he offered for sale were quickly purchased. Many earnest souls who read these Bibles became convinced of the idolatry of the Roman Catholic Church, and have endeavored to establish in the Republic of Mexico a native branch of the Christian Church that firmly maintains and earnestly teaches the gospel in its primitive purity. This native Mexican Evangelical Church is popularly called the "Church of Jesus." Its communion having been gathered almost exclusively from the humble poor, to continue its Christian work effectively, needs to be encouraged by the gifts of the faithful in other lands.

Work among Children.

By the side of this native Evangelical Church a society, called the "Children's Guardian Society," has been doing a most important work by not only giving an excellent secular education to a large number of children, but by also carefully training them in the Christian faith. The work done on behalf of these poor children in Mexico has awakened deep sympathy and gained the respect of some of the foremost men in Mexico.

There are about fifty millions who speak the beautiful language of old Spain. The Spanish is the ruling language in Mexico. The Christian work of the Mexican Church of Jesus, is done in Spanish, and has already extended its blessed influence from that neighboring Republic to the Island of Cuba, and even to Old Spain, across the Atlantic. There are millions and millions throughout Central and South America to whom the pure gospel has not yet been preached, and very few of whom have ever seen a Bible in their lives. Among these vast and neglected portions of the human race, the Church of Jesus in Mexico might eventually extend its Christian work far and wide, if the faithful in other lands will generously contribute in its behalf, as they are able. What is specially needed are systematic contributions. If four hundred persons would each contribute regularly a dollar a month, or if one hundred persons would each contribute a dollar a week, this precious Christian work in Mexico, can be placed on a firm financial basis.

The subscription list commenced for this object, already amounts to thirty-five dollars a month We earnestly solicit further subscriptions to be forwarded regularly each month to the address of BISHOP RILEY, care of J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York.

Every little aids—who will help?

That the Church of Jesus in Mexico is doing a good work, especially in its efforts to benefit the children, is beyond question, and no stronger proof is needed in this place than the following extracts from two who, perhaps better than any one else, know what is Mexico's greatest need. The first from the Secretary of Foreign Relations in Mexico, Don Ignacio Mariscal, to the Children's Guardian Society in that Republic, runs as follows: "In no part of the world that I am acquainted with could the noble hearts that have devoted themselves to the protection of childhood in Mexico find a field so desolate on which to pour their consolations; nowhere else will they find such a field as here, where circumstances, which for a long time cannot be changed, so affect the poorer class that it presents a sad spectacle of wretchedness, neglect and suffering.

Letters From Statesmen

Your noble sentiments are the more useful and worthy of praise here, because official beneficence, insufficient in any country, is still less sufficient in ours to alleviate the immeasurable evils which unprotected childhood must suffer. Faithfully yours, IGNACIO MARISCAL."

The second extract is from a letter written by Don Matias Romero, the Minister to the United States from Mexico. Referring to the Children's Guardian Society, that statesman says: "Believing that sound instruction is one of the fountain-heads of the prosperity of the country, be assured that I shall co-operate as much as possible in the labors so well begun and faithfully prosecuted by the Children's Guardian Society. MATIAS ROMERO."

Price, Five Cents, Post Free—160th Thousand
Enlarged Edition—64 Pages—
COMING WARS AND GREAT EVENTS,
and Ten Signs of the Approaching Final Crisis,
by Rev. M. Baxter—Dissolution of the Turkish Empire into the Five Ancient Kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, Thracian Turkey and Bulgaria, which with Britain (separated from Ireland), France, Spain, Italy and Austria, will be formed into an Allied Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms—Subsequent Rise of Napoleon as King of Syria—His Seven Years' Covenant with the Jews—Resurrection and Translation of Saints—3½ Years' Great Tribulation and world-wide Persecution of Christians—Descent of Christ at Armageddon—Ensuing Millennium of 1000 Years after the Year 1900. Address Manager "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

A Report of the Addresses Delivered at the Recent Prophetic Conference, at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers, may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The College Professor at Prayer.—"There was a well-known German professor, the beauty and consistency of whose life powerfully attracted all who knew him. On one occasion his students remarking upon him as a most peculiar man, thought that if they could only hear him as he prayed in private, they would know better what to think of him. Accordingly, they waited, concealed in a safe place, until he was about to retire to bed, when they heard him revently and most filially say as he knelt down: 'Lord, we are here once more on the same old terms of fellowship and love. Thou art mine and I am Thine.' What a sweet, child-like prayer! How many of us could use it or anything like it?

A Skater's Fatal Mistake.—An Evangelist remarked: "I heard of an enthusiastic skater, who, with a friend, went down one wintry day to the river to enjoy his favorite pastime. His friend told him that the ice was not good, and that did he venture on he would most likely fall through. But the skater would not be dissuaded. He pronounced it to be in excellent condition, and declared that he had faith in it. He went on, but had not proceeded far when the ice gave way under him; he fell through and was drowned. His belief in the ice did not save him from a watery grave, though he believed it truthfully. "His faith did not save him." (James 3: 14.)

Cost of a Signalman's Neglect.—The Rev. Mr. M'Lauchlin said: "Two years ago a train left one of the Edinburgh stations, and about the same time a second train left a neighboring station. About a mile out of Edinburgh they rushed into one another, and seven men were killed. John Wood, signalman, was simply neglecting his duty, but the awful cost was seven human lives. He was at once arrested, but was bailed for £100. On the day of his trial he was missing, for he feared to face his judge. He is now outlawed, and dare not return home: and all this because he simply neglected his duty; he did nothing actively wrong, he only neglected. And as surely will men be eternally lost if they neglect this salvation offered to them."

A Mohammedan Convert Poisoned.—Mr. Lamb, missionary to North Africa, said at a meeting of believers: "A Mohammedan embraced Christianity lately in Morocco. He was an official in the mosque, and when he had accepted Christ, he went about preaching the Lord in the cafés and other public places. One day after he had been preaching Christ, and was standing speaking to a friend, he fell down ill, and soon afterwards died. He had been poisoned by his former friends of the Mohammedan faith. So incensed do the misguided fanatics become at anyone who deserts the religion of their fathers. From this it may be seen that converts in that district have a large share of persecution to bear, But we thank God that we are getting much more familiar with the people, and finding a way into their hearts, and now that they see we are their friends, we look forward with God's blessing, to a time of harvest."

Providential Deliverance from Death.—Mr. Love, an evangelist, observed: "A recent terrible colliery disaster reminds me of an incident that occurred some years ago. There was a family in a mining district, of which the father and two sons worked in the pit. The old man was a devoted Christian, and lived very near to the Lord, and held with great tenacity to anything that he thought was right. It was his belief that a father should conduct family worship in the morning as well as in the evening. And he regularly rose early that he might do so. One morning as he rose from his knees, he said, 'Now, I don't want to be superstitious, but I think that there is something unusual going to happen to-day; just let us all go on our knees again.' And a second time the father committed himself and his sons unto God's keeping. Just as there is a rush of cold air before thunder, so there is in a pit before an explosion, only in the latter case it is much more perceptible. When engaged at their work that day the youngest son felt this precursor of the explosion, and ran and told his father and brother, who were working near him, and together they rushed to the cage and got up in safety; but not a moment too soon, for hardly had they set their feet upon the ground when a terrific explosion occurred, in which, but for their celerity they would have lost their lives. This was a most providential escape in answer to prayer, showing that the Lord does take care of His children."

A Young Man in a Bad Plight.—"At the close of one of my Gospel meetings, says Richard Weaver, I was much struck with what a young man said to me. He was a backslider, and had once been living in the light of the Sun of Righteousness. I urged him to come back to the fold from which he had strayed, but he shook his head mournfully, and replied, 'No, I am given up by the Lord.' 'Thank God,' I replied, 'you are in time and not in eternity to-night.' 'But,' he said, 'I have no desire to be saved.' 'No desire to go back to the place from which you have strayed?' I rejoined. 'No,' he rejoined; 'no desire; I am damned by the Lord.' 'Do not say that,' I answered, 'God damns no man; it is your own sin that condemns you!' No persuasions would avail; he turned away. It did seem, indeed, as if God's Spirit had ceased to strive with him. Remember, poor sinner, God has said, 'My Spirit will not always strive with man.'"

A Brave Blacksmith's Deed.—Mr. Forbes relates: "In one of our large cities there was a hall built upon iron pillars. On a particular occasion it was crowded to excess, and so great was the pressure that it soon became evident the pillars were unable to support the terrible strain. The whole building swayed from side to side, and threatened every instant to crash to the ground. The people inside were seized with a panic and rushed, tumbling over each other, to the doors. There were only two narrow exits, and before half the people were through, the building fell, burying many in its ruins. Among those upon whom it fell was a blacksmith, a strong, muscular fellow, who as he saw a large beam falling towards him, held up his hands and arrested it, and upheld it thus for a time, enabling six poor creatures to crawl past him, from peril into safety. Six lives saved through one man's strength and courage! We call him a noble fellow, and so he was; but what shall we say of Him who stood in the gap bearing the crushing weight of sin that sinners might escape eternal death!

A Spendthrift Prodigal's Discovery.—Richard Weaver said: "I was once residing with a lady and gentleman, who told me of a son that had gone from them, and of whom they had heard nothing for years. Before going to my own home, they gave me as a parting gift, a photograph of themselves, and also of their missing son. They little thought what this act of kindness was to result in, with God's blessing. Years passed, and early one morning the servant came to my room, telling me that a young man had come to the street door begging for food, and she was unwilling to turn him away. I went down and spoke to him. He told me he was a gardener. I took him inside, and offered him a day's work in the garden. I left him, and presently returned with the photographs, and holding up my two friends' photos before him I said, 'Do you know these? He gazed in silence for a few moments, and then exclaimed, while tears rolled down his face, "Oh, I am a wretch! Since I separated myself from all I love I have spent $150,000.' I telegraphed at once to his parents, and the reply came back, 'Keep him; his father and mother are on the way.' When the lady entered my room, she exclaimed, 'You have got him?' Her strength gave way and she fainted. When she recovered, her boy was kneeling at her side, and twining her arms about his neck his mother cried, 'My son, my son!' We talked with him of his need of salvation, and before half an hour he had forgiveness with God through Jesus Christ."

PLUMB-LINE RELIGION.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, September 25, 1887.

"And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? and I said, a plumb-line." Amos 7 : 8.

The Mason's Useful Implement—Tests the Perpendicular—The Leaning Tower of Pisa—I. The Divine Plumb-Line in Business—Society Utterly Askew—What would Make Times Good—The Harassed Business Man—The Larger Houses Swallowing the Smaller—How Large Businesses Are Broken Up—II. The Plumb-Line in Theology—Vain Religions, Legislative and Other—Begin at the Wrong End—Unsatisfying Soap Bubbles—Why Men Change their Religion—A Man Dying of Delirium Tremens—Religion Does not Exclude Fun—Two Brothers—III. Over Nations—The Cross by the Plumb-Line.

THE solid masonry of the world has to me a fascination. Walk about some of the triumphal arches and the cathedrals, four or six hundred years old, and see them stand as erect as when they were builded, walls of great height, for centuries not bending a quarter of an inch this way or that. So greatly honored were the masons who builded these walls that they were free from taxation and called "free" masons. The trowel gets most of the credit for these buildings, and its clear ringing on stone and brick has sounded across the ages. But there is another implement of just as much importance as the trowel, and my text recognizes it. Bricklayers and stone masons, and carpenters, in use an instrument made of a cord, at the end of which a lump of lead is fastened. They drop it over the side of the wall, and, as the plummet naturally seeks the centre of gravity in the earth, the workman discovers where the wall recedes, and where it bulges out, and just what is the perpendicular. Our text represents God as standing on the wall of character, which the Israelites had built, and, in that way, testing it. "And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? and I said, a plumb-line."

The Building of Walls,

What The World Wants

is a straight up-and-down religion. Much of the so-called piety of the day bends this way and that, to suit the times. It is horizontal, with a low state of sentiment and morals. We have all been building a wall of character, and it is glaringly imperfect, and needs reconstruction. How shall it be brought into perpendicular? Only by the divine measurement. "And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? and I said, a plumb-line."

The whole tendency of the times is to make us act by the standard of what others do. If they play cards, we play cards. If they dance, we dance. If they read certain styles of book, we read them. We throw over the wall of our character the tangled plumb line of other lives and reject which Amos saw. The question for me should not be what you think is right, but what God thinks is right. This perpetual reference to the behavior of others, as though it decided anything but human fallibility, is a mistake as wide as the world. There are ten thousand plumb-lines in use, but only one is true and exact, and that is the line of God's eternal right. There is a mighty attempt being made to reconstruct and fix up the Ten Commandments. To many they seem too rigid. The tower of Pisa leans over about thirteen feet from the perpendicular, and people go thousands of miles to see its graceful inclination, and, by extra braces and various architectural contrivances, it is kept leaning from century to century. Why not have the ten granite blocks of Sinai set a little aslant? Why not have the pillar of truth a leaning tower? Why is not an ellipse as good as a square? Why is not an oblique as good as straight up and down? My friends, we must have a standard; shall it be God's or man's?

The Infallible Test

The divine plumb-line needs to be thrown over all merchandise. Thousands of years ago Solomon discovered the tendency of buyers to depreciate goods. He saw a man beating down an article lower and lower, and saying it was not worth the price asked, and when he has purchased at the lowest point he told everybody what a sharp bargain he had struck, and how he had outwitted the merchant. "It is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth." (Proverbs 20: 14.)

Society is so Utterly Askew

in this matter that you seldom find a seller asking the price that he expects to get; he puts on a higher value than he proposes to receive, knowing that he will have to drop. And if he wants fifty, he asks seventy-five. And if he wants two thousand, he asks twenty-five hundred. "It is naught," saith the buyer. "The fabric is defective; the style of goods is poor; I can get elsewhere a better article at a smaller price. It is out of fashion; it is damaged; it will fade; it will not wear well." After awhile the merchant, from over-persuasion or from desire to dispose of that particular stock of goods, says: "Well, take it at your own price," and the purchaser goes home with light step, and calls into his private office his confidential friends, and chuckles while he tells how that for half price, he got the goods. In other words, he lies, and was proud of it.

Nothing would make times so good, and the earning of a livelihood so easy, as the universal adoption of the law of right. Suspicion strikes through all bargain-making. Men who sell know not whether they will ever get the money. Purchasers know not whether the goods shipped will be according to the sample. And what, with the large number of clerks who are making false entries and then absconding to Canada, and the explosion of firms that fail for millions of dollars, honest men are at their wits' end to make a living. He who stands up amid all the pressure and does right is accomplishing something toward the establishment of a high commercial prosperity. I have deep sympathy for the laboring classes who toil with hand and foot. But we must not forget the business men, who, without any complaint or bannered processions through the street, are enduring terrific. The fortunate people of to-day are those who are receiving daily wages or regular salaries. And the men most to be pitied are those who conduct a business while prices are falling, and yet try to pay their clerks and employees, and are in such fearful straits that they would quit business to-morrow, if it were not for the wreck and ruin of others. When people tell me at what a ruinously low price they purchased an article, it gives me more dismay than satisfaction. I know it means the bankruptcy and defalcation of men in many departments. The men who toil with the brain need full as much sympathy as those who toil with the hand. All business life is struck through with suspicion, and panics are the result of want of confidence. The pressure to do wrong is stronger from the fact that in our day the large business houses are swallowing up the smaller, on blue-fish and minnows. The large houses undersell the small ones because they can afford it. They can afford to make nothing, or actually lose, on some styles of goods, assured they can make it up on others. So, a great dry goods house goes outside of its regular line and sells books at cost or less than cost, and that swamps the booksellers; or the dry goods house sells bric-à-brac at lowest figure, that swamps the small dealer in bric-à-brac. And the same thing goes on in other styles of merchandise, and the consequence is that all along the business streets of all our cities there are merchants of small capital who are in terrific struggle to keep their heads above water. The Cunarders run down the Newfoundland fishing smacks. This is nothing against the man who has the big store, for every man has as large a store and as great a business as he can manage.

A Stress of Circumstances

The Whales Dining

To feel right and do right under all this pressure requires martyr grace, requires divine support, requires celestial reinforcement. Yet there are tens of thousands of such men getting splendidly through. They see others going up and themselves going down, but they keep their patience and their courage, and their Christian consistency, and after a while their turn of success will come. The owners of the big business will die and their boys will get possession of the business, and with a cigar in their mouths, and full to the chins with the best liquor and behind a pair of spanking bays, they will pass everything on the turnpike road to temporal and eternal perdition. Then the business will break up, and the smaller dealers will have fair opportunity. Or the spirit of

Contentment and Right Feeling

will take possesion of the large firm, as recently in the case of the great house of A. A. Low & Co., and the firm will say: "We have enough money for all our needs, and the needs of our children; now let us dissolve business and make way for other men in the same line." Instead of being startled at a solitary instance of magnanimity, as in the case just mentioned, it will become a common thing. I know of scores of great business housess that have had their opportunity of vast accumulation, and who ought to quit. But perhaps for all the days of this generation the struggle of small houses to keep alive under the over-shadowing pressure of great houses will continue; therefore, taking things as they are, you will be wise to preserve your equilibrium and your honesty and your faith, and throw over all the counters and shelves and casks, the measuring line of divine light. "And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? and I said, a plumb-line."

II. In the same way we need to Measure our Theologies.

All sorts of religions are putting forth their pretensions. Some have a spiritualistic religion, and their chief work is with ghosts, and others a religion of political economy, proposing to put an end to human misery by a new style of taxation, and there is a humanitarian religion that looks after the body of men and lets the soul look after itself, and there is a legislative religion that proposes to rectify all wrongs by enactment of better laws, and there is an aesthetic religion that by rules of exquisite taste would lift the heart out of its deformities, and religions of all sorts, religions by the peck, religions by the square foot, and religions by the ton—all of them devices of the devil that would take the heart away from the only religion that will ever effect anything for the human race, and that is the straight up-and-down religion written in the book, which begins with Genesis and ends with Revelation, the religion of the skies the old religion, the God-given religion, the everlasting religion, which says, "Love God above all and your neighbor as yourself. All religions but one and in the wrong place. The Bible religion demands that we first get right with God. It begins at the top and measures down, while the other religions begin at the bottom and try to measure up. They stand at the foot of the wall, up to their knees in the mud of human theory and speculation, and have a plummet and a string tied fast to it. And they throw the plummet this way, and break a head there, and throw the plummet another way and break a head there, and then they throw it up, and it comes down upon their own pate. Fools! Why will you stand at the foot of the wall measuring up when you ought to stand at the top measuring down? A few days ago I was in the country, thirsty after a long walk. And I came in, and my child was

Begin at the Wrong End,

Blowing Soap Bubbles,

and they rolled out of the cup, blue, and gold, and green, and sparkling, and beautiful, and orbicular, and in so small a space I never saw more splendor concentrated. But she blew once too often and all the glory vanished into suds. Then I turned and took a glass of water, and was refreshed. And so far as soul thirst is concerned, I put against all the blowing, glittering soap-bubbles of worldly reform and human speculation, one draught from the fountain from under the throne of God, clear as crystal. Glory be to God for the religion that drops from above, not coming up from beneath! "And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? and I said a plumb-line."

I want you to notice this fact, that when a man gives up the straight up-and-down religion in the Bible for any new fangled religion, it is generally to suit his sins. You first hear of his change of religion, and then you hear of some swindle he has practised in Colorado mining stock, telling some one if he will put in ten thousand dollars he can take out a hundred thousand, or he has sacrificed his chastity, or plunged into irremediable worldliness. His sins are so broad he and he becomes as broad as temptation, as broad as the soul's darkness, as broad as hell. They want a religion that will allow them to keep their sins, and then at death say to them: "Well done, good and faithful servant," and that tells them: "All is well, for there is no hell." What a glorious heaven they hold before us! Come, let us go in and see it. There is Herod and all the Babes he massacred. There is Charles Guiteau, and Jim Fiske, and Robespierre, the friend of the French guillotine, and all the liars, thieves, house-burners, garroters, pick-pockets and libertines of all the centuries. They have all got crowns, and thrones, and harps, and sceptres, and when they chant they sing: "Thanksgiving, and honor, and glory, and power to the Broad Religion that lets us all into heaven without repentance and faith in those disgraceful dogmas of ecclesiastical old-fogyism."

Has to Broaden His Religion,

My text gives me a grand opportunity of saying a useful word to all young men who are now forming habits for a lifetime. Of what use to a stone-mason or a bricklayer is a plumb-line? Why not build the wall by the unaided eye and hand? Because they are insufficient, because if there be it cannot further on be corrected. Because by the law of gravitation a wall must be straight in order to be symmetrical and safe. A young man is in danger of getting a defect in his wall of character that may never be corrected. One of the best friends I ever had died of delirium tremens at sixty years of age, though he had not since twenty-one years of age—before which he had been dissipated—touched intoxicating liquor until that particular carousal that took him off. Not feeling well in the street on a hot summer day, he stepped into a drug store, just as you and I would have done, and asked for a dose of something to make him feel better. And there was alcohol in the dose, and that one drop aroused the old appetite, and he entered the first liquor store, and stayed there until thoroughly under the power of rum. He entered his home a raving maniac, his wife and daughters fleeing from his presence, until he was taken to the city hospital to die. The combustible material of early habit had lain quiet nearly forty years, and that one spark ignited it.

A Deflection in the Wall

Remember that the wall may be one hundred feet high, and yet a deflection one foot from the foundation affects the entire structure. And if you live a hundred years and do right the last eighty years, you may nevertheless do something at twenty years of age that will damage all your earthly existence. All you who have built houses for yourselves, or for others, am I not right in saying to these young men, you cannot build a wall so high as to be independent of the character of its foundation? A man before thirty years of age may commit enough sin to last him a lifetime. Now, John, or George, or Henry, or whatever be your Christian name or surname, say here and now:

"No Wild Oats for Me, no cigars or cigarettes for me, no wine or beer for me, no nasty stories for me, no Sunday sprees for me, I am going to start right and keep on right. God help me, for I am very weak. From the throne of eternal righteousness let down to me the principles by which I can be guided in building everything from foundation to capstone. Lord God, by the wounded hand of Christ, throw me a plumb-line."

"But," you say, "you shut us young folks out from all fun." O, no! I like fun. I believe in fun. I have had lots of it in my time. But I have not had to go into paths of sin to find it. No credit to me, but because of an extraordinary parental example and influence, I was kept from outward transgressions, though my heart was bad enough and desperately wicked.

I Have Had Fun

illimitable, though I never swore one oath, and never gambled for so much as the value of a pin, and never saw the inside of a haunt of sin save as when ten years ago, with Commissioner of Police, and a detective and two elders of my church, I explored these cities by midnight, not out of curiosity, but that I might in pulpit discourse set before the people the poverty and the horrors of underground city life. Yet, though I was never intoxicated for an instant, and never committed one act of dissoluteness, restrained only by the grace of God, without which restraint I would have gone headlong to the bottom of infamy. I have had so much fun that I don't believe there is a man on the planet at the present time who has had more. Hear it, men and boys, women and girls, all the fun is on the side of right. Sin may seem attractive, but it is deathful, and like the manchineel, a tree whose dews are poisonous. The only genuine happiness is in a Christian life. There they go—

Two Brothers.

The one was converted a year ago in church one Sunday morning, during prayer, or sermon, or hymn. No one knew it at the time. The persons on either side of him suspected nothing, but in that young man's soul this process went on: "Lord, here I am, a young man amid the temptations of city life, and I am afraid to risk them alone; come and be my pardon and my help; save me from making the mistake that some of my comrades are making, and save me now." And quicker than a flash God rolled heaven into his soul. He is just as jolly as he used to be, is just as brilliant as he used to be. He can strike a ball or catch one as easily as before he was converted. With gun or fishing rod in this summer vacation, he was just as skilful as before. The world is brighter to him than ever. He appreciates pictures, music, innocent hilarity, social life, good jokes, and has plenty of fun, glorious fun. But his brother is Going Down Hill.

In the morning his head aches from the champagne debauch. Everybody sees he is in rapid descent. What cares he for right, or decency, or the honor of his family name? Turned out of employment, depleted in health, cast down in spirits, the typhoid fever strikes him in the smallest room on the fourth story of a fifth rate boarding house, cursing God and calling for his mother, and fighting back demons from his dying pillow, which is besweated and torn to rags. He plunges out of this world with the shriek of a destroyed spirit. Alas for that kind of fun! It is remorse. It is despair. It is blackness of darkness. It is woe unending and long reverberating and crushing as though all the mountains of all continents rolled on him in one avalanche.

Poor Fun.

My soul, stand back from such fun. Young man, there is no fun in shipwrecking your character, no fun in disgracing your father's name. There is no fun in breaking your mother's heart. There is no fun in the physical pangs of the dissolute. There is no fun in the profligate's deathbed. There is no fun in an undone eternity. Paracelsus, out of the ashes of a burnt rose, said he could re-create the rose, but he failed in the alchemic undertaking, and roseate life once burned down in sin can never again be made to blossom.

Oh, this plumb-line of the everlasting right! God will throw it over all our lives to show us our moral deflections. God will throw it over all churches to show whether they are doing useful work or are instances of idleness and pretense. He will throw that plumb line to demonstrate whether their laws are just or cruel, their rulers good or bad, their ambitions holy or infamous. He threw that plumb-line over the Spanish monarchy of other days, and what became of her? Ask the splintered hulks of her overthrown Armada. He threw that plumb-line over French imperialism, and what was the result? Ask the ruins of the Tuileries, and the fallen column of the Place Vendome, and the grave trenches of Sedan, and the blood of revolutions at different times rolling through the Champs Elysées. He threw that plumb-line over ancient Rome, and what became of the realm of the ancient Cæsars? Ask her war-eagles, with beak dulled and wings broken, flung helpless into the Tiber. He threw it over the Assyrian empire of a thousand years, the thrones of Semiramis, and Sardanapalus, and Shalmaneser, of twenty-seven victorious expeditions, the cities of Phœnicia kneeling to the sceptre, and all the world blanched in the presence. What became of all the grandeur? Ask the fallen palaces of Khorsabad and the corpses of her one hundred and eighty-five thousand soldiery slain by the angel of the Lord in one night, and the Assyrian sculptures of the world's museums, all that now remains of that splendor before which nations staggered and crouched.

Over all Nations

God is now throwing that plumb-line

Over this Republic,

and it is a solemn time with this nation, and whether we keep His Sabbaths or dishonor them, whether righteousness or iniquity dominate, whether we are Christian or infidel, whether we fulfil our mission or refuse, whether we are for God or against Him, will decide whether we shall as a nation go on in higher and higher career or go down in the same grave where Babylon and Nineveh and Thebes are sepulchred.

"But," say you, "if there be nothing but a plumb-line,

What Can Any of Us Do, for there is an old proverb which truthfully declares: "If the best man's faults were written on his forehead it would make him pull his hat over his eyes." What shall we do when, according to Isaiah, 'God shall lay judgment to the line and righteousness to the plummet?'" Ah, here is where the Gospel comes in with a Saviour's righteousness to make up for our deficits. And while I see hanging on the wall a plumb-line, I see also hanging there a Cross. And while the one condemns us, the other saves us, if only we will hold to it. And here and now you may be set free with a more glorious liberty than Hampden, or Sidney, or a Kosciusko ever fought for. Not out yonder, or down there, or up here, but just where you are you may get it.

A Scottish Invalid.

The invalid proprietress of a wealthy estate in Scotland visited the continent of Europe to get rid of her maladies, and she went to Baden Baden and tried those waters, and went to Carlsbad and tried those waters, and went to Homburg and tried those waters, and instead of getting better she got worse, and in despair she said to a physician: "What shall I do?" His reply was: "Medicine can do nothing for you. You have only one chance in the waters of Pit Keathly, Scotland." "Is it possible?" she replied, "why, those waters are on my own estate!" She returned, and drank of the fountain at her own gate, and in two months completely recovered. Oh, sick, and diseased, and sinning, and dying hearer, why go trudging all the world over, and seeking here and there relief for your discouraged spirit, when close by, and at your very feet, and at the door of your heart, aye, within the very estate of your own consciousness, the healing waters of eternal life may be had, and had this very hour, this very minute, this very Sabbath? Blessed be God that over against the plumb line that Amos saw is the Cross, through the emancipating power of which you and I may live and live forever!

THE MIDNIGHT CRY.

By Henry Varley.

The Rapture a Sign to the World—It will Prove that Christ is at Hand—The Complement of the First-fruits—An Impressive Event—Distinction Between the First-fruits and the Harvest—Will the Rapture be Secret—The Gleanings—The Precedent of Elijah's Rapture—The Searc for Him—A Rationalistic Committee—The Effect on Idolaters.

MAY it not be that the rapture of those saints "accounted worthy to stand before the Son of Man," is designed by our Lord to be to the world that His second coming is at hand? These, I understand, make up the complement of the first-fruits before the throne (Rev. 14: 4). They are represented by the wise virgins, who, being ready, arose, trimmed their lamps, and went in with the bridegroom to the marriage. The parable of the virgins gives the truth of rapture, not resurrection. It does not refer to those who have died and are raised from the dead by the Lord, but to the removal and going in with the bridegroom on the part of prepared ones who are living when the midnight cry is made. Mark the words: "Behold! the Bridegroom cometh! go ye out to meet Him" (Matt. 25: 6).

The Unmistakable Sign

May not the rapture of the latest addition from the earth, of those "accounted worthy to stand before the Son of Man"—the Lamb on Mount Zion—be the astonishing sign to the world that the Lord is at the door?

Will the World Read that Sign?

Few things could so deeply impress the whole earth, or so fittingly inaugurate the times of breach in natural sequence which will mark the intervention of our Lord in the last days of this age, as the removal of the residue of the first-fruits, raptured from among men. It will be seen, therefore, that the position I maintain is this: I do not believe that one of the dead or living saints will be left behind when our Lord descends to raise the sleeping, and to change the living members of His body. That time is distinctly the time of the harvest, as distinguished from the first-fruits, and is clearly defined in 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52; 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17; and Rev. 14: 14–16. I suggest that the redeemed, cleansed, and consecrated followers of the Lamb have in all ages been taken to the position, association and glories which are identified with the first-fruits, of whom it is written: "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. These were redeemed from among men; and in their mouth was found no guile, for they are without fault before the throne of God" (Rev. 14: 4, 5).

This view certainly yields intelligent meaning and constant application to those Scriptures which have pleaded with believers in every age to walk so that they might "be accounted worthy to stand before the Son of Man" (Luke 21: 36; Rev. 3: 10-12).

There has been much discussion as to whether the rapture of the Church

Will Or Will Not Be Secret,

i. e., unknown to the world. I do not think this is revealed; neither do I regard it as important. The ascension of our Lord, however, does not appear to have been witnessed by any but the disciples themselves. Whether this should guide our thoughts or not, I cannot tell (Acts 1: 3, 9-11). Certainly the world cannot be ignorant long of the rapture. There will doubtless be a great cry throughout the world, even as in Egypt on the night of the avenging angel's visit.

It will occur to some that these sudden removals from the earth will surely induce reflection and repentance among men. In many cases, I doubt not, it will be so. The door of mercy will not be altogether closed to the inhabitants of the earth, after the Church is removed. There yet remaineth which will be gathered during the time of the great tribulation. These gleanings will comprehend the martyred saints, and all who, having obtained mercy of the Lord, escape the devastating tyranny of the Antichrist. In those days will be fulfilled the solemn words of God, given to the prophet Amos: "Behold! the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine on the earth: not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord. And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east; and shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it" (Amos 8: 11, 12).

The Gleanings,

From the testimony of Scripture concerning the iniquity and atheistic blasphemy of the last days, I gather that, when the first tremendous surprise produced by the removal of the Church is over, there will set in a coarse, sceptical, reactionary spirit, which probably had its foreshadowing in the days of the rapture by the chariots of fire of the great prophet Elijah.

It may be remembered that, immediately the rapture took place,

A Rationalistic Committee

was formed in the school of the prophets. This committee sent out a special contingent of fifty strong men, who for three days gave consistent materialistic search for the missing man of God. There business was to find the prophet, and to this end they were to be particularly careful to explore every cavern, crevice, and perpendicular rock in the whole district round about.

Elijah according to their view, might even then be sitting desolate upon some projecting crag, from whose summit he found it impossible to descend, much less ascend. His remarkable departure was clearly a "breach of natural order." In vain did Elisha tell them of "the chariots of fire, and the horses of fire." In vain did he say: "Ye shall not send" (II Kings 2: 11–15). The sons of the prophets were not accustomed to give place to the strong will of an enthusiastic ploughman. True, fifty of their number had been to view the whole scene, but as to the nature of the phenomenon presented. The intense light and the whirlwind! Well, those items were capable of explanation! Besides this, Elisha was the only man who distinctly affirmed the fact of the rapture, and might it not have been on his part an optical illusion? [In our day Elisha would have been suspected of crime. He was the last person seen in company with the missing man. He was in possession of his cloak and he gained promotion by Elijah's disappearance. His explanation of the chariots of fire would have been laughed to scorn]. Spiritual facts are so difficult to analyze, and they constantly border on fanaticism. Thus it came to pass that they said unto Elisha: "Behold, now, there be with thy servants fifty strong men: let them go, we pray thee, and seek thy master; lest peradventure the Spirit hath taken him up and cast him upon some mountain, or into some valley" (verse 16). Despite the prophet's resolute protest, we read: "And when they urged him, until he was ashamed, he said: Send! They sent, therefore, fifty men, (all rationalists); and they sought three days, but found him not" (verses 16, 17).

They Were Quite Unsettled

With scepticism of such a character in the school of the prophets, we can hardly affect surprise at the effect produced amongst the idolaters who dwelt in Bethel. It is evident that the taking up of the prophet by a whirlwind in the chariot of fire was soon Turned Into Ribald Jest.

We read that as Elisha was on his way to Bethel a young and godless crowd came out of the city. They mocked God's prophet, and cried: "Go up, thou bald head! Go up, thou bald head!" (verse 22). These words were in evident allusion to the taking up of Elisha's great master. From this scene I gather that probably a similar ribald blasphemy may follow the removal of the Church of Christ in the closing day of this corrupt age. It will scarcely be necessary to say to my readers that this act of judgment—the death and wounding of forty-two of their number by two she-bears—does not apply to little children, in the sense in which we use the term. Minors up to twenty years of age, in those days were denominated children. Strong, corrupt, and ungodly youths are here referred to (II Kings 2: 23, 24).

Pool, in his "Annotations," says; "Forty and two children, the Hebrew word signifies, not little children only, but those also who are grown up" (see Gen. 32: 22, 32; 33: 1; and 37: 30). It is evident that little children, unable to discern between right and wrong, would not be in the least likely to utter this ribald blasphemy. Beside this, Bethel was a stronghold of idolatry. This gross insult offered to Elisha was directed not only against himself, but through him to the majesty of the God of Israel.

KINGS IN QUEER RAIMENT.

AN interesting letter which the Rev. Dr. Eaton, of Burlington, Vt., has received from Mr. J. C. Waller, of Bishop Taylor's African Mission, has been published by the Free Press, of that city. It is dated Banana, Congo Free State, July 10, 1887, announces the arrival of the party at Vivi, one hundred miles from the coast. Mr. Waller says: "Bishop Taylor and myself were present at a meeting of Kings which had been called for consultation with the Bishop. They call such meetings "a palaver." We wanted to establish a mission, and the object of our meeting was to ascertain whether or not they would permit us to come among their people. Our conference with them lasted more than an hour. They consented to our establishing a mission among them, and engaged to let their subjects work for us in building a house, &c., for the schooling we would give them.

"The Bishop has appointed me for this, the first station on the north side of the Congo, and I expect to have the house finished in about three or four weeks from date. I must tell you just

How the Kings Were Dressed.

King No. 1 had three different kinds of blankets wrapped around him as he sat on his throne, which was an empty gin cask with an old native mat thrown over it. King No. 2 came marching in with nothing on but an old coat, which looked like one of Lord Nelson's cast-off coats. The lace on the sleeves came down to his fingers' end, the broad collar with fancy facings folded back to his shoulders. He was accompanied by a servant who carried an umbrella over him. King No. 3 had on a green coat which formerly belonged to one of the London sharpshooters. He also wore a vest. These two articles constituted his entire wardrobe. There were seven Kings at the meeting, and all were dressed in a similar fashion. One of them had brass rings on his ankles and three or four iron rings on his arms. The servants placed before us seven bottles of palm wine, one from each King. We asked for water, saying we did not drink wine, and water was brought us. The Kings bore themselves with great dignity throughout the entire interview."

Camping on the Congo.

Mr. Waller gives the following graphic sketch of the first experiences: "We were landed on the banks of the Congo with no place to lay our heads except on the bosom of mother earth. Our tents were on the boat, but could not be unloaded until the next day. We begged the captain to furnish us with a few cans of provisions for immediate use, which he did. We soon sat down to our first meal on the banks of the Congo. It consisted of tomatoes and sardines, all eating out of one can, without knives or forks. The night was coming on, and I was anxious for my wife and children, but the good Lord graciously provided for them. A Baptist mission about five miles from Matiti sent a boat from the mission to see who had come up on the boat, as they were expecting some one by it. They saw our condition, and feeling sorry for us, especially for our dear little ones, they took my wife and children to the mission for the night, though their quarters were very small. Next day they returned and took all the ladies of our party and gave them dinner at the mis sion. My wife and children remained two days and nights at the mission. Our tents having been put up and arranged as comfortably as possible, my family came up from the mission, and we commenced housekeeping under canvas. The Lord has been very good to us. The natives have brought us chickens and other articles of food, and the chiefs have also been very kind to us. Bishop Taylor is much interested for the comfort of our entire party."

At the time of writing, Mr. Waller had not fallen with the fever, though of the whole party of twenty-one, nineteen had been down with it, and had a hard siege. It was then midwinter: the thermometer registered eighty-two degrees at noon, and seventy in the night. It had been as low as sixty degrees once since the arrival of the party.

A MISSIONARY INVITED BACK.

IN the course of a recent journey in Persia, the Rev. James W. Hawkes went to Anneh, an Armenian village where there had once been a mission school, but the teacher had been driven out by the priest. "We heard," he says, "that the priest was dead, and the people would be glad to see us, and so it was found. On that Sunday Mr. Hawkes preached twice to quite respectable congregations. Some listened well. Many were anxious that the missionaries should send back the teacher, and assured them that no one would molest or oppose him. Their children had just begun to spell, and were desirous of going on, and the parents regretted that the past two years had been lost to them." Mr. Hawkes also saw the owners of the village, who are Mohammedans, and who were pleased with the teacher, and encouraged their sending him back, assuring them that they would take the trouble to look after him and his interests. "Oh, that we may have the men and means," says Mr. Hawkes, "to enter in and give the gospel light to these benighted people as fast as they are prepared to receive it! Their eyes are just opened. May the Lord, who opens their eyes, also fill their hearts with a bountiful supply of His grace, joy and love."

ROMANCE OF A SANTHAL GIRL.

THE following remarkable story of a Santhal girl is related by the Rev. A. Haegert, a medical missionary in Santhalistan India: Chapa Manjhan is the daughter of a village priest, who presides at the religious ceremonies of the people, and appeases the wrath of the evil spirits by sacrificing pigs, goats, sheep and cocks. His family assisted to build our mission station twelve years ago, and as we had divine service every morning and evening with the workpeople, they must have heard the Gospel scores of times. Chapa was a strong and healthy girl, and was married to a Santhal farmer five years ago, and then removed to her husband's home, five miles west. After four weeks she was brought back to her parents' home on a bed, carried by four men. Her father and mother came begging me to go and see her. I went at once, and there was no doubt that she was dangerously ill: and I knew she was not prepared to die. I went and prayed with them for the recovery of their daughter, and exhorted her to pray for herself,

The next morning I went again, and found her much better, and asked her if she had been praying to Jesus. She said, "Father, I have prayed, and I lie just thinking of Him," and she wept. After a couple of months, Chapa, being quite recovered, returned to her husband; and, to her horror, found that he had taken another wife. This is a common thing for heathens to do. Chapa was henceforth depised in her own home, and, after a few months, returned to her parents for good.

She was a changed girl, and was now earnestly seeking the light of Christianity. Sometimes she was caught praying, and was well scolded, and sometimes severely beaten. By and by she was baptized into the name of Jesus. When the news spread, the people of the village held a meeting, when violent speeches were made, but through God's kindness nothing further was done, but she was regarded as an outcast—as one dead, and the ceremony for the dead was performed in her name, and her effigy publicly burnt. While the effigy was being devoured by the flames, Chapa was in the girls' school praying for her country.

Time rolled on, and Chapa became a widow. The headmaster of our boys' training school was a widower, and as several other people were wishing to marry, the banns were published, and one day five Christian young couples were married, among them Chapa and the Christian schoolmaster. Our own garden was stripped of flowers and leaves to decorate our church. Christians from thirty-five villages, in white, and many heathen filled the building. A new wedding anthem, composed for the occasion had been prepared by the boys and girls of the training schools. There was great joy, and smiles on every face. Over three hundred sat down to the wedding feast.

One other incident about Chapa. On the 25th of May, 1887, a cobra pounced suddenly upon her, and bit her. The alarm of the brethren was great. One of my trained medical preachers was called, and attended her, and used the bottle of medicine I had left for this purpose. God blessed the medicine, and Chapa recovered to the joy of all her friends.

TWO MIDNIGHT WEDDINGS.

THE celebration of two weddings is described in a letter recently received from Mr. Stanley Smith, the English Undergraduate now laboring as a missionary in China. He says: "The first two Christian marriages in the Chao-ch'eng district created great excitement, and, to add to the novelty, my harmonium was carried there for the occasion. At what time do you think the marriages took place? After midnight one, and just before midnight the other. The bridegrooms in both cases were fifteen years of age, and the brides about seventeen — the bridegrooms in both cases Christian, and the brides heathen. This latter case is unavoidable, as, according to custom, these marriages are settled by the parents of the parties concerned long before, generally quite in young childhood; so, of course, these two matches were made long before they heard of the Gospel. About midnight, the sound of tom-toms and music — if music may be applied to such discordance—in the distance announced the fact that the bride in her sedan was being brought from her village, and nearing the bridegroom's house. We thereupon gathered in a tent erected in an open yard. Two chairs were placed in front of the table facing me; the bridegroom was first escorted to a chair, and then the bride, dragged (to come willingly would be considered a sign of forwardness) by a number of lady attendants, four in number, to her seat. The service was very short and simple, and consisted mainly of prayer and singing, with the customary questions as to willingness, etc., on the part of bride and bridegroom. It was a grand opportunity for proclaiming the Gospel, as people came in from many parts."

A DISSOLUTE KING.

THE death of King Jamba Yamina, of Bihe, is announced in a letter from Mr. Fay, of the West Central Africa Mission, published in the Missionary Herald. His dusky majesty appears to have surpassed his brother monarchs in Europe a little in conceit. While they claim superiority over ordinary men by virtue of their royal blood they still admit humanity: but this man actually believed that he had the Divine nature. The missionary, however, does not seem to have been rendered inconsolable by his death. He says:

"The Lord can take the burden off his children even if it is in a mysterious way. In all our dealings here the king was the man we most dreaded, because, on account of his greater abilities and energy, he could, if he choose, do us the most harm. The last visit Mr. Sanders made to the ombala, the king would not see him at all. And word has just reached us that he did intend harm to us. But while part of his head men assented to his plans, some of them would not consent that we be plundered or be put out bag and baggage. So the matter dropped, and the attention of the king was given to a new lot of wine and liquors just arrived from the coast.

As it had been fifteen days since he had had any liquors, he began at once to drink to excess, and what might have occurred had we come before him in his frenzied drunkenness none can tell. But in the midst of his excess he was called to his last account. He had been drinking for some time, when in a vomiting fit blood gushed out of his mouth, and he died. I doubt not that his people will be very glad, as they did not like him much. I cannot say that we were glad of his death, but I can say that it has taken a great load off our shoulders. It virtually stops all the trouble, and before any new questions arise we will have word from the coast that will stop any further attempt to molest us. It will give us an opportunity to pray that the next king may not be so opposed to Christ's work. It is a source of some satisfaction that several times Mr. Sanders has tried, as best he could, to tell Jamba Yamina of the true way, but each time has been laughed at or stopped by some foolish talk on the part of the king. He evidently did not care to hear of God and his duty to Him; in fact, he claimed to be Suku—God. And I remember how his eyes started out when Mr. Sanders told him he was not God."

A KING'S PRAYERS ANSWERED.

A REPORT of the Presbyterian mission in West Africa published by the Church, contains cheering news from the Rev. Thomas H. Roberts, who is now laboring in the Vei country. The mission is situated on a spot called by the natives, Glima Koro (Old Glima). This is the spot where the old Glima stood over a hundred years ago. King Musa, of Glima, who is himself about sixty-five or seventy years old, says that his grandfather was a boy in this old Glima. The print of mud huts can still be seen on the ground. King Musa told me that where our mission stands was once a great slave mart. Slaves were brought from all parts of the interior to Glima Koro, and here awaited the slave traders. Thus where once human beings were brought to be sold into perpetual slavery, the same spot, in the providence of God, shall be where they shall come to be "free indeed." The mission is about fifteen miles from Robertsport, Cape Mount, by the sea. You ride eight or ten miles up the Mafa River, and then branch off on the Mani River about five or six miles. There are towns and villages all along the banks of the Mafa. The Mani River is much wider in some places than the Mafa, but not so deep. Both of these rivers are densely wooded on both banks. The land rises higher and higher toward the interior. Measuring by the coast line the mission is about the centre of the Vei country. There are roads and river courses to all the principal towns of the tribes. Gbese, the capital of the Vei country, lies three hours back of this point.

"The situation of the mission," says Mr. Roberts, "is favorable in every respect. King Musa, of Glima, is himself a Christian, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Robertsport. He has been asking for a missionary for his people for years. My coming here seems to be an answer to his prayers. The king and his people are happy over the idea that a mission is to be established among them. They are doing all they can, in their way to assist the mission. King Duamba Como, known as King Freeman of the entire Vei country, and his sub kings or chiefs, welcome the mission and promise to send their children. Surely a change for the better is coming over these people. God is working in the hearts of the heathen."

Volume IX. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1886, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1883, 1884, and 1885 are also for sale. We have none prior to 1883.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements. etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Treasury Interposed again Last Week to relieve the stringency in the money market. The prediction that if no steps were taken by Congress to prevent the accumulation of money in the Treasury there would be serious difficulties in the fall among business men, was fulfilled. Money was so scarce at the beginning of the week, that even responsible men with unimpeachable security were unable to obtain loans on reasonable terms. Money was not to be had, though it was lying idle in abundance in the Treasury. Mr. Fairchild prevented the impending panic, by offering to purchase two classes of bonds and the stringency immediately relaxed. It may be hoped, however, that this constantly recurring source of embarrassment may be removed by the next Congress adopting some wise plan of reducing the revenue to the necessities of the government.

The Massachusetts State Democratic Convention at Worcester on Sept. 20, nominated ex-Congressman Henry B. Lovering for the governorship. He was a distinguished soldier in the War, and lost one of his legs while fighting under the Union flag. Democratic politicians claim that he will receive the support of the soldier element in the State. The platform adopted by the Convention strongly endorses the administration, though it implies in its third plank that there has been remissness in retaining Republicans in the Civil Service. This reproof, coming from Massachusetts, is a surprise, and must be peculiarly vexatious to the administration. The platform "favors and desires a revision of the present unjust and burdensome tariff laws," but is careful to say that it does "not advocate free trade." On the subject of temperance the platform is silent.

A Large and Enthusiastic Meeting to Express sympathy with the Chicago anarchists now under sentence, was held in Cooper Institute, New York, on September 19. The majority of those present were foreigners, and many of the speeches were in German. Two reasons were urged against the execution of the condemned men. One was that the conviction and sentence were against evidence. On that point the meeting was at issue, not only with the judge and jury who tried the case, but with the Supreme Court of Illinois, which affirmed the judgment. The second reason urged, was that the execution would exasperate the wage-earning classes. That there are some workingmen who would be exasperated, was self-evident, but until the Knights of Labor and other trade organizations explicitly and officially protest against the execution, no one will believe that the workingmen as a body sympathize with the prisoners. At present the evidence is the other way. While the anarchists and their friends express no contrition, and do not ask for mercy, neither the wage-earners nor any other class are likely to exert themselves to save the lives of the condemned men.

A Careful Analysis on the Vote of Prohibition in Texas, shows how little politics had to do with the question in that State. It is popularly supposed that all Prohibitionists come from the Republican party, yet every one of the nineteen counties which Mr. Blaine carried in 1884, voted against the amendment. Their aggregate vote being 9,267 for and 30,352 against it. It is remarkable too that the colored vote was nearly solid against the amendment. The total vote of the State was larger by 29,998 than in the Presidential election; of this total 129,273 votes were cast for the amendment and 221,934 against it. The Prohibitionists, though defeated, need not be cast down by the result. That in Texas thirty-seven votes in every hundred would have polled for Prohibition in 1887, is a fact that a few years ago no political prophet would have dared predict.

A Destructive Cyclone Visited Sections of Texas and Mexico, on September 21. The storm was accompanied by a heavy rainfall, which a Brownsville despatch says reached by actual measurement ten inches. Seventy houses in that city were blown down, and three hundred others severely damaged; scarcely a tree remains standing, and the telegraph poles were thrown down. Matamoras also suffered heavily by overturned houses. The Rio Grande rose rapidly, submerging Santa Cruz, destroying crops and carrying away cattle and sheep. The interruption of telegraphic communication prevents a full knowledge of the losses being obtained, but it is feared that fully a million dollars worth of property was destroyed. Many persons were injured, but no death had been reported when the despatches were sent out.

A Cholera-Infected Vessel Arrived at New York on Friday last. It was the Alesia, from Marseilles. When the vessel left that port, fugitives from Naples were flying in terror from the scourge, and the Alesia was crowded with terror-stricken passengers. When only a few days out, two of the steerage passengers were seized with cholera. There were over five hundred persons in the steerage and they became panic-stricken. The patients were isolated, and precautions were promptly taken to prevent the plague spreading; but six other persons were attacked by the disease, and all of the eight died and were buried at sea. Four others were dying of the plague when the ship arrived here. The vessel was quarantined and thirty of her passengers who showed signs of sickness were sent into hospital, and the others to Swinburne Island to await developments. The ship's cargo will have to be thoroughly fumigated before it is put ashore.

The New Local Option Law in Michigan is now in operation, the Legislature having appointed September 28, as the day for its going into effect. By its terms, whenever one-fifth of the voters at the last preceding election shall sign a petition, asking for the submission of the question of prohibition in that county, it is made the duty of designated officers to take the necessary steps to have the vote taken. The result of the election, whatever it may be, is thereafter to remain undisturbed for three years, The Prohibition State Central Committee has decided not to take the initiative in getting up petitions, but whenever or wherever a petition is gotten up to sign it, vote for the measure, and if carried, heartily co-operate in securing its enforcement.

The Reform in the Moral Condition of New York City effected under the administration of Mayor Hewitt, has been much lauded in some of the city journals, and still more by journals at a convenient distance. How radical that reform is may be perceived by an incident which occurred in Justice Duffy's court on Thursday last. A saloon-keeper was summoned there to answer the charge of violating the Excise and Theatrical laws. There was plenty of evidence of the man's guilt, but the Justice adjourned the case to obtain further information. He assigned a significant reason for doing so. He said the saloon-keeper had informed him a few weeks ago that the reason he had been able to violate the law with impunity was that he paid a regular sum to the proper parties. Justice Duffy told him to refuse to pay any longer and see what would happen. The man did refuse and he was promptly hauled into court. The Justice, therefore, thought it advisable to adjourn the case, that he might learn who it was that had been receiving the money. If reform means prosecution of law-breakers who refuse to pay blackmail and immunity for those who will pay, the less we boast of such "reform" the better.

General Uneasiness in Europe is Reported by the trans-Atlantic correspondents of the daily press. Their observations are confirmed by the state of the financial markets, which are always regarded as a safe and a sensitive barometer of international relations. One cause of apprehension arises from the visit the Czar of Russia is paying to his father-in-law, the King of Denmark. Arrangements were made for a meeting between him and the Emperor of Germany at Stettin, but the meeting did not take place at the time fixed, and a rumor is in circulation that the Czar abruptly refused the invitation. This lack of cordiality with Germany, however, does not imply that there is a close friendship between Russia and France. The Czar does not like republics, and while France continues under that form of government an alliance with the Czar cannot be counted upon. It is significant, that while the Czar has been at Copenhagen the Compte de Paris, who, like him, is allied by marriage to the Danish royal family, should have issued his manifesto, making a new bid for the throne of France. European observers suggest that the manifesto was inspired by the Czar, whose objections to an alliance would be removed if the Count becameKing of France.

Another Irish Riot is Reported. A League meeting held in Cork on Thursday night, overflowed the hall in which it was held. The crowd outside amused themselves with stone-throwing, and subsequently by attacking the building of the Protestant Young Men's Association. The police charged the crowd with their clubs, but were unable to disperse it until, after a protracted fight, Mr. Tanner, M. P., came out from the League meeting and implored the mob to separate quietly. Mr. O'Brien, the editor, who has been arrested under the Coercion Act, was taken to Mitchelstown on Friday for trial, the language complained of having been uttered there. The streets were lined with sympathizers, who cheered him and gave him flowers. A Roman Catholic priest from St. Louis, Mo., who is now visiting Ireland, is doing his utmost to injure the cause of the League. In a recent speech he announced himself a believer in the doctrines of Henry George, and urged that no rent should be paid. At the Chicago Convention he had expressed his readiness "to become a chaplain in any army raised to relieve Ireland from the slavery she was enduring." Mr. Harrington who appeared at the coroner's inquest on behalf of the families of the men killed at Mitchelstown, has also damaged his case by intemperate language. He called one of the witnesses a liar, and told another he could scarcely restrain himself from kicking him. Violence of this character will render it very difficult for Mr. Gladstone to convince the English constituencies that the government of Ireland may safely be intrusted to such men.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Mr. H. M. Stanley Appears to Have Overestimated the influence of his strange ally, Tippo Tib, the slave dealer. The Arabs are indisposed to obey him, now that he has pledged himself to suppress the slave raids. A letter from Stanley, written on June 23, has been received, in which he says that 500 slave traders at Yarnhombe, half of whom were under command of Chief Saidhabbub, refused allegiance to Tippo Tib, whose own people, however, warmly welcomed him and paid ready obedience. Tippo Tib was reluctant to fight old friends, and asked for a small force of Congo State troops, to uphold his authority as Governor. Mr. Stanley was confident that Tippo Tib would prove himself worthy of the trust reposed in him. Mr. Stanley concludes as follows: "As soon as fuel as been obtained, the steamers will start, and the last chance of communicating with Europe for a few months will be gone."

An Extensive Famine Prevails in Asia Minor. Reports received from the missionaries of the American Board stationed in that country, state that people are dying of starvation, and that the food supply will soon be entirely exhausted. The Board has sent seven thousand dollars to be expended in relieving the most urgent cases, and is now making an appeal for funds for another remittance. Mr. Montgomery, one of the missionaries, says: "Large numbers of people are kept alive by eating grass, roots, refuse of the streets, berries and small fruits. There was brought to me this week a kind of nauseous, bitter, puckery bread, made from the pods of a low thorn found upon the plain, which I should think would kill those who eat it, and yet I am told that whole villages eat it and have nothing else. The gratitude of those who are helped appears to be sincere, and Heaven's blessings are invoked by Moslem and nominal Christians alike upon the Protestants who minister to their needs."

The Convention of Christian Workers at the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, has been largely attended. Earnest workers from all parts of the country have met together for consultation, study of the Bible and prayer. No one could be in the meetings without being impressed with the desire manifested by the delegates to reach a practical result from the convention. The great question so far has been how to reach the masses, and every suggestion made with that object has been eagerly received and examined. The Rev. Jacob Freshman's description of his successful work among the Jewish population excited deep interest, as the Jews in all our great cities are rapidly increasing in number. Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, gave an address on Thursday, on "The Ideal Church for the People" which was listened to with deep attention. Dr. A. F. Schauffler of the New York City mission, and Dr. Josiah Strong, who explained the object of the Evangelical Alliance, were among the speakers at the earlier sessions. Among the missions represented are the Central Union Mission of Washington, D. C., one of the most important in the country, from which have come Rev. E. D. Bailey, Mr. George W. Wheeler, Mr. N. A. Robbins, and others; The Minneapolis City Mission; The McAll Mission; The Florence Mission of New York; The School for Christian Workers, etc. etc. The Rev. R. A. Torrey of Minneapolis, Minn., is chairman.

An Incorrigible Offender was Released from the State Prison of Massachusetts on September 16, by the pardon of Governor Ames. The man is forty-eight years of age and has spent most of that time behind the bars. He was only ten years old when he was incarcerated first. In 1855, when he was sixteen, he served another year for burglary, and three years later he was again sentenced to five years in the penitentiary. In 1866 he received a sentence of ten years, but escaped in 1872. The next year he was again caught and sent up for three years. After that he spent a few months at large, but took to burglary again, was captured and sentenced to another ten years in prison. He and another convict dug a tunnel under the prison wall after he had served about half his sentence and both escaped, but he had not had his liberty many weeks before he was detected in committing a burglary and was again convicted and sent back to prison. Governor Ames has been induced to pardon him by the fact that he is now suffering from consumption and can live but a short time. Were it not for that fact the Governor's pardon would be folly, as the man would be sure to offend again. There would be the same hopelessness about the case of the sinner who through Christ obtains pardon for past offences, if it were not that with his pardon he receives a new heart and is sanctified by the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 6: 11).

A Floor Inlaid with Silver Dollars has been laid in a bar-room in New York which was opened last Thursday. The same coins are also set in other conspicuous places about the room. An admiring reporter who attended the opening gives this inventory: "In every stone in the white marble floor are two silver dollars, and in the centre of the floor in front of the bar is a black marble stone with a $20 gold piece in the centre and nineteen $1 silver pieces around it. Overhead in the ceiling are three medallions, serving as centres of three chandeliers, made of ground glass and representing silver dollars. At the back of the bar is a chandelier which has $500 worth of silver dollars on it. There is, besides, on the back bar a star and crescent a foot high, covered with silver pieces from a dime to a dollar. The silver dollars in the floor are secured by the strongest cement known. To pry them up with a knife is impossible. It is easier to chisel them out by destroying the stone. The actual cost of this unique embellishment is about two thousand dollars." Customers who, going there to drink, see the dollars under their feet, and think they might be put to a better use, may profitably consider whether the use to which they are putting their money is not far worse. They buy liquor which curses them body and soul, while Christ offers them the water of life without money (Isa. 55: 1, 2).

A Millionaire's Gratitude is the Subject of a press despatch published in a Southern journal last week. About twenty-five years ago a young man of Laurens, S. C., went West to make his fortune. He went from place to place, without finding a good opening, and finally all his little capital was exhausted in travelling expenses and unprofitable ventures, and he was in a sore strait. At last, being pressed for money he wrote to his family. They were poor, and could not help him, but his brother-in-law, a struggling young lawyer, borrowed a hundred dollars on his own security and sent it to him. That appears to have been the turning-point in the young emigrant's fortunes. He began to prosper, and eventually succeeded in amassing a large fortune. Some investments in mineral lands soon multiplied it, and he became many times a millionaire. He never forgot the kindness of his brother-in-law, who helped him in his early difficulties and who is now a lawyer in Nashville, Tenn. The millionaire died recently, and on his will being read it was found that he had bequeathed to the lawyer's two daughters a legacy of $1,600,000. Thus the hundred dollars has been repaid above a thousand-fold. There will be far greater surprises than that at the last great day, for Christ will then reward His servants so munificently that they will themselves wonder that services so small as those they have rendered to the sick and the poor should be deemed worthy of recompense (Matt. 25: 34–40).

An Enigmatic Message on a Cedar Board was given by an old Indian deer-hunter to Captain Cogan, of the Bark Hunter, when off Cape Behring, in June last. On one side of the board was the request in letters rudely carved, "Give Tobacco," and on the other side "Help Come," followed by the initials J. B. V. B. K. Nap. Another group of letters read S. W. C. Nav. 10 M. There was no question about the meaning of the words on one side and the Indian, having received the tobacco as a reward for delivering the cedar board, departed. The other inscription, with its plaintive appeal for help, was shown to several whaling captains, and eventually was submitted to Captain Healy, of the Revenue Cutter Rush, stationed at Sitka, who sent a copy of it to the Treasury Department. After repeated efforts to decipher the inscription it was thought that the letters J. B. V. B. K. Nap might signify J. B. Vincent, of the Bark Napoleon, as a vessel named Napoleon, which was lost in Behring Sea in 1885, had among her crew a seaman named J. B. Vincent. This solution gave a clue to the other inscription; and "S. W. C. Nav. 10 M." was read as "Ten miles southwest of Cape Navarin." On receiving this explanation, Captain Healy went to the point indicated and there found that the carving had been rightly read. Vincent was there among the Indians and, having neither pen nor paper, had carved the board and had sent it by an Indian, going south, with instructions to give it to any sailor he might fall in with. He was the sole survivor of the eighteen men on board the bark Napoleon, all his comrades having died from exposure after the wreck and from scurvy. He is now on the steamer Bear on its way to San Francisco. He would not have been rescued if his message had not fallen into the hands of humane as well as intelligent men. It was so vague that none other could have understood it or responded. The Christian has reason to rejoice that in the same way his prayers are heard. Sometimes in his distress they are inarticulate and incoherent (Rom. 8: 26, 27).

BRIEF NOTES.

The bequests received by Yale University last year amounted to $300,000.

The number of churches of all denominations in the United States is 132,435; and the number of clergymen 91,911.

During the last fiscal year the Grand Army of the Republic expended $253,936 for charitable purposes, relieving 26,606 persons.

The seventy-eighth anniversary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions will be held in Springfield, Mass., commencing October 4.

The Rev. Edward Judson, D. D., son of the celebrated missionary, Adoniram Judson, has begun a series of meetings at Baptist Tabernacle, Bowdoin Square, Boston.

Professor Drummond, the author of Natural Law in the Spiritual World, has accepted the pressing invitation of the Amherst students to conduct special services among them before leaving the country.

Temperance women have prevailed upon the managers of the New York State Fair, held this month, to allow no sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds, and to permit addresses to be made on the Fair grounds.

The committee of clergymen who have been especially interested in Christian work among prisoners, have issued a request that the churches will make October 30 "Prisoners' Sunday." Responses indicate that the day will be observed both in the States and in Canada.

Special religious services for the employees of the Longdale Iron Company, in Alleghany County, Va., have been held recently. They have been wonderfully blessed —more than seventy persons have made a profession of faith, and many others are earnestly seeking salvation.

The house to house visitation organized by Mr. Moody in Chicago, is being industriously carried forward. During the past six months four thousand families have been visited by lady missionaries, who have read the Bible to them and distributed religious literature, and invited them to church and their children to Sunday-school.

A congregation of Presbyterians at Chatham, Va., is sorely in need of a church building. They have raised a considerable sum themselves, and some kind friends in the North have liberally assisted them. They need further help before beginning to build. Contributions may be sent to Mr. W. B. Shepherd, Chatham, Va.

The Rev. Yaroo M. Neesan, the Persian student who is preparing for mission work in his native land, and whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on December 23, 1886, has returned to New York from an extensive lecture tour. He expects his wife and son to arrive from Persia shortly. They will assist him in his lectures during the fall and winter by appearing in various Oriental dresses. This is his last year at college.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

GOD, THE WONDER-WORKER.

A New Sermon, by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"To Him who alone doeth great wonders: for His mercy endureth forever."—Psalm 136:4.

An Inexhaustible Theme—An Unfair Preacher—I. God Working Wonders Now—In Saving Sinners—Preserving His People—Great Things to be Expected—Preparations for Christ's Coming—Promises Confirmed by Facts—II. The Wonders Still Great—Do not Diminish by Familiarity—Can Never be Eclipsed—III. Are Wrought by God Alone—Forgiveness Superhuman—When Nobody can Help Him—The Railway of Heaven—The Rule in Fishing—IV. God to be Praised for Wonder-Working—No Collision Between Mercy and Justice.

BELOVED, when we get into God's world of wonders, we have range enough. Which way shall I turn? On what subject shall I speak? If I turn to nature, it teems with wonders. Altering a little the language of Coleridge, I would say, "All true science begins with wonder and ends with wonder, and the space between is filled up with admiration. If we turn to Providence, the history of the nations, the history of the Church, what centuries of wonders pass before us! It is said that wise men only wonder once, and that is always; because they are fools. The story of the Church is a constellation of miracles. I cannot venture upon themes so vast as Creation and Providence. Shall we turn to the works of Grace, the wonders of Redemption? If we consider the glory of grace surrounding the Cross, which is the wonder of wonders, we are upon a boundless ocean. Here is sea-room indeed. we are at no loss for a subject, but we are lost in the subject. Now are we where the height, and depth, and length, and breadth are each immeasurable. It was said of Dr. Barrow that he was an unfair preacher, because he exhausted every subject he touched, and left nothing for anyone else to say. I would like Dr. Barrow to try my text, and I am sure for once he would have to vary his style. He would only be able to suggest to us what might be said by ten thousand preachers all occupied ten thousand years upon the one theme.

Fools Never Wonder,

"To Him who alone doeth great wonders: for His mercy endureth for ever." I feel inclined to bow the knee instead of opening the mouth, and to ask you rather to meditate in the silence of your hearts than to listen to my scanty speech. Happily the text assists me; for it suggests that I narrow my theme to the consideration of wonders of mercy; and that I narrow it again to the present wonder of mercy; for the text is in the present tense—"To Him who doeth great wonders"—that is to say, is doing them now. Only, then, of marvels of mercy shall I speak at this time, and I shall endeavor, as far as possible, to direct your thoughts to present wonders of mercy. I say as far as possible, for it must needs be that we link with the present both the past and the future, because they are all of one, and God lives in all the tenses at once.

I. Our first head shall be this—God is Working Wonders Now.

"To Him who alone doeth great wonders: for His mercy endureth for ever." It is enduring now, and is the present tense for ever. Wonders are things out of the common, unusual things, extraordinary things. Usually they are unexpected; we wonder at them partly because they are novel and surprising. They take us aback; they are things which we looked not for. Great wonders, even when we grow accustomed to them, still continue to excite admiration, and frequently they cause us to praise the worker of them, as it is written, "Sing unto the Lord, for He hath done marvellous things."

I believe that to-day God is doing great wonders in saving great sinners. It is a wonder that God should touch a sinner at all; yea, that He should even look at him. A sinner is such an evil thing, his sin is so vile, so foul, that holiness cannot take any pleasure in him. He who fails to obey his Maker, is creation's blank, creation's blot, and it is a wonder that his Creator should think of him with patience. But that God should call the sinner with the voice of love, and bid him return and find favor is a wonder. That when he does not return at the gracious bidding, the Lord should draw him with bands of love, is more wonderful still. The Lord, travailing with compassion, goes about to compass the salvation of the greatly erring one. He is still doing great wonders in changing depraved natures, breaking hard hearts, subduing obstinate wills, enlightening darkened judgments and winning rebellious minds.

Spiritual Miracles

Jesus is working still; and of this fact many of us are instances in our own persons, and also eye-witnesses of the wonders wrought in others.

Nor less may the wonders of the Lord be seen in the preservation of those who believe on His name. We are men wondered at. Do you not wonder, my brother, that you are still a Christian? Faith is so contrary to nature that its existence in the heart is like a spark burning in the sea. Faith is so much attacked, especially in this evil day, that it is like a candle kept alight in a cyclone. Yet you have not drawn back unto perdition! Still, though faint, you are pursuing. Truly, if you had been mindful of the country from which you came out, you have had many opportunities to return. Satan's chariots and his horses have waited upon you with many invitations to ride back into the land of your former slavery, if you had a mind to go. Kept alive, with death so near,

You are a Standing Wonder to your own self. The Lord God does wonders still by maintaining His Church and the cause of truth in the midst of the world. Read through history, and you meet with periods when the light seemed quenched; but then, suddenly, it burned up with superior lustre. Remember the Reformation, and the revival of the last century. When spiritual life seemed almost extinct, there came times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. It will be the same at this dark hour. God is still doing great wonders in the maintenance of His despised Gospel, and in the keeping alive of those spiritual doctrines which the carnal mind hates as much to-day as it ever did.

Now, dear brethren, why may we expect the Lord still to do wonders? I answer, first, because His Word raises our expectations. This inspired Book does not promise us small things. It is not pitched in a low key. Concerning the multitudes that will be saved in the latter days, it speaks in grand terms, saying, "Nations that knew not Thee shall run unto Thee." We have so much to this effect that I will not stay to quote the passages; only of this we are sure, that one day we shall hear the glorious shout, "Hallelujah! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." But, beloved, we have something more than words. God has evidently made preparations for doing great things. If our Lord Jesus Christ is to receive a reward commensurate with His accomplished work, we may safely look for things which shall amaze the world. Furthermore, when I reflect that the Holy Ghost has come down from heaven, and that He has never quitted us, but abides with His Church to carry out the purposes of grace by convincing men of sin, and glorifying Christ, I am encouraged to look for great things. The Holy Ghost is not here in vain. He intends to do great things.

When I see, in addition to the covenant, the Christ and the Holy Ghost, all the preparations of the Lord's effectual power for for His glorious reign upon the earth, and for the eternal glorification of the redeemed, I am assured in my own soul that the Lord is working upon a wonderful scale, whether we see it or not. Between now and the consummation of all things, wonders are to be common. The pathway of grace shall blaze with splendor. I invite you to enlarge your hope concerning Him who alone "doeth great wonders: for His mercy endureth for ever."

The Coming of the Lord,

Dear friends, we are not left to promises and preparations. Our faith is continually refreshed by new facts. I have the great happiness of frequently seeing very extraordinary instances of God's grace among sinful men. I will not relate even one of them, but my memory is stored with them. Often my eyes are filled with tears when I grip the hand of a convert who but a little while ago was a blasphemer and injurious, a Sabbath breaker, a drunkard, and sunk in every form of uncleanness. When I see such a man converted, renewed and made holy, because the Lord has met with him and revealed Himself to him through the preaching of the Word, my eyes are filled with tears of wondering joy. When I find that such a poor testimony as I am able to bear is made by God's grace effectual to work a total change of nature, I am overwhelmed with wondering and grateful emotions. We are assured that among us upon whom the ends of the earth have come, "the Lord doeth great wonders." Did I hear one say, "Truly, if I were converted it would be a wonder. Yes, you are for God to work upon in the creation of a wonder. Did I hear another say, "A person is here this morning who, if he were saved, would be a wonder indeed?" Pray for him, then. Pray at once, distinctly, for him, in the glad hope that he will be another wonder. The God of infinite mercy looks out for room for His grace to work in, and space for almighty love to display its power. Your necessity, feebleness, and emptiness are the space in which infinite mercy finds elbow-room for its energy. He "who alone doeth great wonders," looks for the greatly guilty and the greatly needy, that in them He may reveal His grace. Oh, that my heart were enlarged, and that my mouth were opened fitly, to encourage you who think you are beyond the bounds of divine mercy! Oh, think not that the grace of God can never come to you! The Lord delighteth in mercy.

Excellent Raw Material

II. I pass on to another phase of the same thought; for upon this one thought I mean to harp at this time, so that this one note shall linger in your ears for many a day. Our first head has been that God is working wonders of mercy; our second point is that These Wonders are Still Great.

"To Him who alone doeth great wonders." Many apparent wonders can be explained, and, henceforth, the wonder is gone. Certain nations wonder at an eclipse, which to the astronomer is a very simple affair. Now, you cannot explain away election, redemption, regeneration, and the pardon of sin: these great wonders of almighty love are all the greater the more you know of them. Many wonders, also, are diminished by familiarity. Well do I remember as a child being taken to see the first train drawn by a steam-engine to our town: I greatly wondered; but I have now ceased to wonder at such an ordinary sight. I remember a viaduct, which to my juvenile mind was stupendous; I have seen it since, and it is by no means one of the wonders of the world. The wonders of grace are such that the more you see them the more your wonder grows. In these cases it is ignorance which does not wonder; but knowledge marvels exceedingly. Those who are most familiar with the Lord think the most of Him and His grace.

The wonders of grace are so great that they

Can Never be Eclipsed

by any greater marvels. No one will ever tell us a more marvellous story than the life and death of our Lord for sinful men. In the gift of Jesus Christ the infinite God has outdone all His previous acts. This is the greatest wonder that ever angels heard of; they desire still to look into it. This is in words and sense the climax of all miracles—"God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Now," cries some one, "you speak about wonders; if I were to be converted it would not only be a wonder, but a great wonder." That is why I expect it, for the Lord takes pleasure in performing wonders.

This leads me to believe that the Lord Jesus will yet save greater sinners than He ever did save, if such sinners there be. Our Lord celebrated His entrance into Paradise by the salvation of a thief, and soon after His resurrection He restored Peter. He will always be saving thieves, and restoring backsliders. He went after Saul of Tarsus, who was both a persecutor and a blasphemer; and He means always to be saving sinners of that kind. That Philippian gaoler, converted at the dead of night, is but a specimen of the sort of hard, rough, cruel brutes that He will still subdue by his mighty grace. The Lord will go on to save great sinners, for He has put His hand to

The Plough of Grace,

he will not look back. The very guiltiest, and most hardened, and most daring of rebels are welcome to come to Jesus and look to Him and live. How pleased I am to preach this gospel! Oh, that I could preach it better! I expect the Lord to go on saving great sinners by these words of mine, and this shall be to His praise.

The Lord is working great wonders of delivering grace. Are any of you in great trouble or great danger? The Lord that delivered David out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, and from the hand of the uncircumcised Philistine, will deliver you also with a great deliverance. He that saved Daniel in the den of lions, and brought him out unharmed, even He that walked with the holy children in the burning fiery furnace, is the same God still. He can, He will, He doth deliver. You shall see His great wonders if you will but trust in Him. You that are tossed about and sorely pained with the present state of the Church of God, you may look for wonders of grace. I expect our Lord to do great wonders at this time by sending us great revivals of religion, or in some other way making bare His holy arm. The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. Now we have got some good way into our text—"To Him that doeth great wonders" be glory for ever and ever.

III. The third point is this—these great wonders are Wrought By God Alone.

He alone doeth great wonders. Lay emphasis heavily upon the word alone." My brethren, there are deeds of kindness which you could not expect any one else to do. The most forgiving of human spirits can never pardon as God does. You, poor sinner, have been measuring God's corn with your bushel, and therefore you conclude that He cannot forgive you; but his long-suffering and grace are greater than yours. If you had offended others as you have offended God, you might safely come to the conclusion that forgiveness would be out of question; but the Lord in mercy far outruns all others. None can forgive and forget as the Lord does. It was never heard of, that one could pass over such offenses and rebellions as God doth freely blot out. The Lord can do, and is daily doing, such acts of love and mercy as would be looked for in vain among men and angels. Believe that God is more able to forgive than you are able to believe. Ah, poor desponding soul! you had a dream. Did you not dream that you were a child again, and could begin life once more? You woke up, and cried, "Ah me! this will never be true. I wish it were." It can be true. The Lord can make you again to become a little child by being born again. It is hard, I know, for you to believe it; but nothing ought to be hard to believe concerning the God whose mercy endureth for ever. He alone, Himself, and by Himself, can perform prodigies of love.

When it is said that He does these great wonders "alone," it means that He does them

When Nobody Can Help Him.

My friend, you cannot do anything: you are now reduced to utter impotence, under a sense of sin. You fear that you cannot even believe, or feel; but the Lord is all-sufficient, and He alone doeth great wonders. He can do all for you, and work all in you. What strange creatures we are! We feel that we must try to help God. What folly is this! Out of the way with you! You do but block the road. Stand aside, and let grace work! What canst thou do? Do you reply, "I must believe and repent? I know you must, but Jesus Christ comes to save you just as you are, and His salvation comes to you where you are. When they make railways in England they usually carry them sufficiently far from a town to give work to an omnibus. Seldom does the station stand near the house where one wants to go.

The Railway to Heaven is of another sort; it comes to your door. Jesus comes where you are, and meets your actual condition. Though you lie at death's door, Christ comes as the Resurrection and the Life. In your spiritual helplessness and hopelessness, Jesus comes to you, saying: "Trust me now to be all in all to you." Praise Him who alone, without your puny aid, or the aid of priest, or the aid of mortifications and penances, can remove your sins, and make you pure and holy. His own arm brings salvation to those who trust Him, and He alone doeth great wonders.

When the Lord uses means in the salvation of a soul, He takes care that nobody shall praise the means or ascribe the salvation to the agent. He has many ways with His most useful servants of making them keep their places; and you will notice that as soon as ever any one of them begins to grow rather large in his own esteem, he is usually met with weakness and barrenness. We must, brethren, keep self out of the way. We must put ourselves absolutely into God's hands, that He may use us in the winning of souls, and then we must send the great I down, down, down, till it is buried out of all remembrance. They tell us that when you go fishing it is wise to stand back and keep yourself out of sight as much as possible. The fish that see you will not take the bait. The Lord will not do great wonders in company, but alone. His servants must not set up to be masters, or they will be sternly rebuked.

IV. I close with my last head—upon which I will speak briefly. Beloved, if you know anything about these wonders, these great wonders, these wonders in which God stands alone, then remember that for these wonders He is to be praised. This verse is An Ascription of Praise.

"To Him who alone doeth great wonders: for His mercy endureth for ever." It means to Him be thanks and praise and power and honor and majesty for ever and ever. Wonder is a sort of praise; it is the chaos out of which a world of praise is to be made. Sit thou still and silently meditate on the greatness and goodness of God until thou art overcome with admiration, and then thou wilt adore. Our wonderment should always blossom into thanks. Holy wonder is like sweet incense, but love must set it on a blaze with a burning coal of gratitude.

Still, when thou praisest God for the wonders He has wrought for thee, and for others, let the climax of thy praise be this, that "His mercy endureth for ever." Magnify with all thy faculties of mind and heart; with memory, and hope, and fear, and every emotion of which thou art capable, the changeless mercy of God. He is ever merciful, or full of mercy. He always will be so. Thou hast a God of immutable goodness; rejoice in Him at all times, and Under All Aspects.

When thou thinkest upon His terrible justice, doubt not his mercy. Pharaoh is cast into the Red Sea, but Jehovah's mercy endureth. He slays mighty kings, but "His mercy endureth for ever." Ay, when thou seest hell engulf the impenitent, and thou thinkest with solemn awe of the dread punishment necessary to sin, rest assured that this alters not the fact that God is love, and that "His mercy endureth for ever." There must be no collision in thy thoughts between His justice and His mercy: they are both divine and they both endure for ever. Do thou say "Hallelujah!" when thou seest His wrath.

Accepting His mercy in Jesus, praise Him; resting in that mercy, praise Him: hoping in that mercy that it will follow thee all the days of thy life, praise Him. By-and-by, brothers and sisters, we shall know more of His eternal mercy, and then we shall praise Him in loftier strains. Shall we ever need a sweeter song than this—"To Him who alone doeth great wonders: for His mercy endureth for ever?" As we shall hear the harpers harping with their harps, and see the holy ones casting their crowns before Him on the glassy sea, shall we not chant this great Hallel—"To Him who alone doeth great wonders: for His mercy endureth for ever?" The Lord bless you ever! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE DISCOVERY OF GOLD IN CALIFORNIA.*

WHAT El Dorado had been to the active imaginings of De Soto's Spaniards, was now to become a reality that would startle the world from its long forgetfulness. The world believed they had been chasing a phantom which had lured them to their death. One seeks in vain to know why nature at last revealed the secret she had long kept hidden from those who had sought but not found, to disclose it to others who were not seeking.

The war which gave us California was scarcely ended, when a scene took place there of far-reaching moment to mankind. Words can scarcely describe it. For a moment it seemed the overturning of all laws governing the acquisition and distribution of wealth, if it were not to put the common laborer on a level with the millionaire, and so revolutionize society itself. When we consider what has followed in its train, the story itself seems tame indeed.

Captain Sutter had been having a saw-mill built for him fifty miles above his fort, on the south fork of the American River, which is there a swift mountain stream. One evening when all within the fort wore its usual quiet, a horseman rode up in hot haste, and asked to see Sutter alone; this was James W. Marshall, one of Sutter's men, who had charge of the mill above. Seeing by his manner that something unusual was the matter, Sutter led the way into his private room and turned the key in the lock. With much show of mystery Marshall then handed his employer a packet, which being opened was found to contain a handful of yellow metal, in flakes or kernels, which he said he had taken from the mill-race, and asserted to be gold. By the light of a candle the two men bent over the little heap of shining particles in eager scrutiny. Sutter would not believe it was gold. Marshall was sure it could be nothing else. Aqua-fortis was then tried without effect. The metal was next weighed with silver in water. All doubt was then removed. It was indeed gold, yellow gold, that Marshall had found.

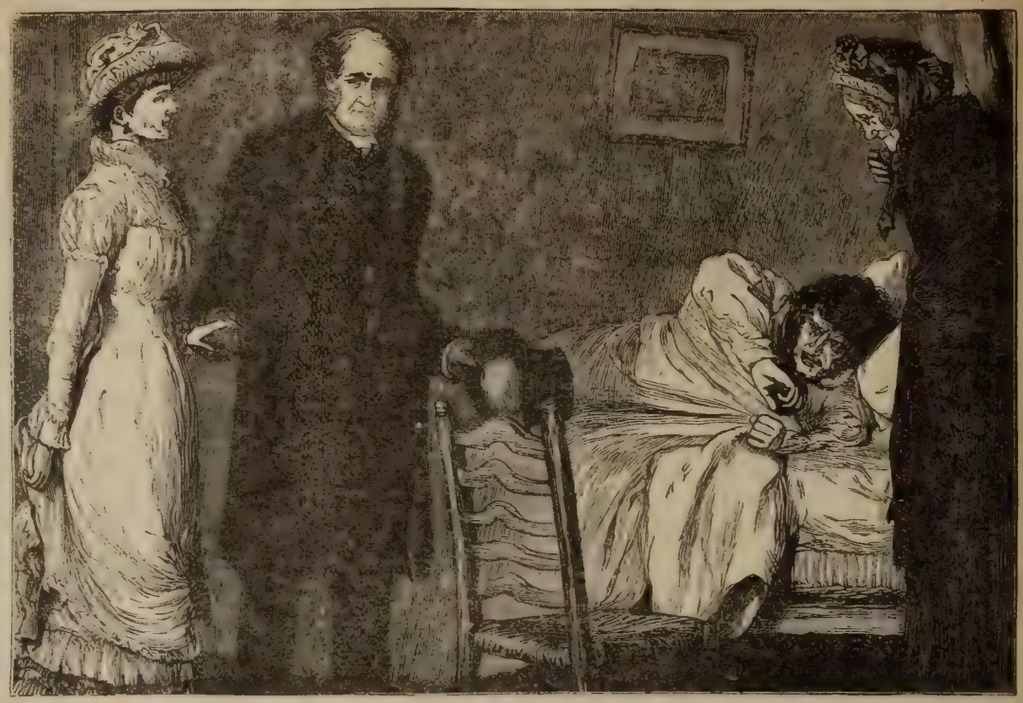
His story briefly told was to this effect. They had started the mill, when the tail-race was found to be too small to carry off the water; in order to deepen it the whole head of water was then let into the race, thus washing it out to the required depth. It was while looking at the work the water had done, that Marshall saw many shining particles lodging in crevices of the rocks, or among the dirt the water had carried down before it. All at once it flashed upon him that this might be gold. Gathering up what he could without risk of detection, he had started off to the fort without making his discovery known to any one.

Sutter saw his happy pastoral life of the past on the point of vanishing. He made an idle effort to keep the discovery secret, at least till he could set his house in order. It was soon known in the household and at the mill. From this little mountain-nook it was borne on the wings of the wind to the seacoast, and from the seacoast to the four quarters of the globe.

Captain Sutter's men deserted him in a body. The American settlers and Indians of the neighborhood next caught the infection. Gold was soon found at a point midway between Sutter's fort and mill, called the Mormon Diggings, on

* From "The Making of the Great West, 1512–1883." By Samuel Adams Drake. Pp. 379, with many Maps and Illustrations. Price $1.25. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

Col. Chaille-Long, U. S. Consul to Corea.



The Dying Man Mistakes his Daughter for her dead Mother.

Feather River, and in the gulches above the mill site. From these districts the miners began to straggle down to San Francisco with pouches of gold dust in their possession. Men who had hardly known what it was to have a dollar of their own, suddenly lived like an emperor in their expense.

The effect was magical. Within a short three months most of the houses in San Francisco and Monterey were shut up, Blacksmiths left their anvils, carpenters their benches, sailors their ships, soldiers were every day deserting from the garrisons of San Francisco, Sonoma and Monterey. The two newspapers then printed in the country suspended their issue indefinitely. Everybody was off for the mines; nothing else was talked of but gold.

CHARLES CHAILLE-LONG.

The Friend of General Gordon Recently Appointed American Consul in Corea.

(See Portrait.)

THE eminent American citizen whom President Cleveland has selected to represent the government in "the Hermit Kingdom" is a man whose antecedents inspire confidence in his capacity to promote mutually advantageous relations between this country and the comparatively unknown nation whose closely shut gates have only recently been opened to international intercourse.

Colonel Chaille-Long is the son of Mr. L. Long, of Maryland, whose mother belonged to the old Huguenot family of Chaille in Rochelle, France. The desire to perpetuate the memory of his grandmother and the glorious traditions of her house prompted him to take legal measures to incorporate the name of Chaille with his own. He was born in Somerset County, Maryland, July 2, 1842, and is now therefore forty-five years old. He was educated for the law, but his career has been more stirring and adventurous than that of most lawyers. In 1862, he enlisted in the United States Volunteers, served through the war, and in 1865 was mustered out with the rank of captain. Shortly afterward he went to Egypt and entered the service of the Khedive under General Gordon, who conceived a strong regard for the young man, and appointed him to responsible and important commands. While engaged in the expeditions planned by General Gordon, Chaille-Long made several important geographical discoveries, which brought his name prominently before European savants.

In 1876, he returned to America, but after practicing law in New York for five years he returned to Egypt where he rendered important services to the government. It so happened that he was in Alexandria when Arabi Pasha's troops commenced to sack the city and kill the foreigners. The American Consul was not in the city at the time, and Chaille-Long, at the suggestion of American residents, assumed control at the Consulate, gave refuge to the fugitives and saved many lives. He sent information of the state of affairs to the British commander, who, acting upon it, occupied the city and put a stop to the carnage. Colonel Chaille-Long assisted in the task of restoring order with a detachment of American sailors, who were placed at his disposal by the commander of the United States vessels in port.

Colonel Chaille-Long is a profound Arabic scholar, and also speaks French fluently. He is prompt in action and cool and sagacious in danger, a man of inexhaustible resource and an expert diplomatist. In his new office of Consul-General of Corea, which is a peninsula lying between China and Japan, there will be ample opportunities for the exercise of his talents; for the Coreans have emerged from their seclusion of centuries with many misgivings, and will need to be constantly reassured of the wisdom of the step they have taken in admitting foreigners into their kingdom.

WORK AMONG HOP-PICKERS.

(See Illustration on page 621).

CHRISTIAN workers and evangelists in England are now busy with their annual labors among the hop-pickers in Kent, Surrey and the adjoining counties, where the cultivation of hops is carried on. It is a remarkable work, due to the sagacity and energy of a few earnest men. Many of the hop-pickers are denizens of the London slums, whom it is diffieult to reach at any other time of the year. When the hops are ripe, countrymen who have drifted to London and are living in poverty in squalid dens keeping body and soul together by precarious occupations, migrate to the country, where they are assured of a few weeks of steady work in a healthy atmosphere, redolent with odors that remind them of their boyhood days, and where they can look once more on green fields.

For a long time their annual visit demoralized the country districts, and while they were there drunkenness and vice were rampant, but a few years ago a mission was organized specially for them, which has brought about a happy change.

Evangelists travelled down and conversed with them individually, held services for them after working hours, and much good has been done. Now, many a London loafer goes back to the city not only with his pocket heavier for his work, his health renewed by country air and food, but with a new heart, a soul redeemed, full of love to the Saviour, and resolved to lead a new life in the strength of the Lord.

A HAUNTED DEATH-BED.

(See Illustration).

A SHORT time ago a clergyman passing through the poorer quarters of a great city was accosted by an elderly woman who asked him if he would visit one of her boarders who was very sick, and had, apparently, something on his mind. "I ought to tell you, sir," she said, "that he don't want to see a clergyman; I've begged him to, times and times, but he says no, he won't—and he uses dreadful bad language.

The old lady paused, and Dr. Winter said, "Yes, surely I will come at once."

His guide led him to one of those old houses which had once been an aristocratic residence, but, in its old age, had fallen from its high estate to the boarding-house level. In the highest floor of that house, he found the sick man. An angry glance was the only greeting the clergyman received, and it travelled on to the woman, the sick man evidently perceiving who was responsible for the intrusion.

Dr. Winter, however, spoke kindly to him, saying he had heard of his illness, and had called to see if he could be of any service, adding, by way of explanation, "I serve a Master who enjoins on all His servants the duty of visiting the sick and telling them how to reach a place where sickness and death are unknown."

"Well," said the sick man, in a surly tone, "you have done your duty now, so you can go. I don't want any preaching here."

"Will you let me pray with you? I will not preach; I did not come for that" said Dr. Winter, quietly. "If I can help you in any way I shall be glad."

"You can't help me; I don't want your help and I will not talk to you at all," said the man with sullen determination.

His was clearly a case in which human skill was powerless, and Dr. Winter did as he had done in many other cases which he had met with in a long experience—appealed to God. Kneeling down by the bed, he prayed that this man's eyes might be opened. "He knows not that thou art a loving Father," said the clergyman, "reveal Thyself to him in love. Let him see Thee as Thou art, a Being full of tenderness and patience and mercy, and draw him to Thee." Pleading thus for some minutes, he rested the case of the dying man in God's own hands and then rose to go.

"I don't wish to intrude upon you against your will," he said, "and I will not come again unless you wish it, but if you will let me help you, I shall do so joyfully. Be assured that if you need forgiveness for the past, you may have it. God never casts any out who come to Him through Christ.

"It is of no use your coming," said the man, in a somewhat softened tone. "You mean well, I dare say, but I am past your help. There is no forgiveness for me. I have ruined scores of persons: one young man shot himself when I had won his last dollar in a gambling house, and he has been here while I have been lying here, to taunt me with his fate, and chuckled over the punishment getting ready for me. My wife comes too, I broke her heart years ago and she died, but they have let her come back and she stands just where you do and points at me with her skeleton finger. And my little daughter, whom I drove out of the house after her mother died, and who went to shame and a life of sin—she comes too, and they charge me with their ruin, and call for vengeance. I lie here and defy them, but I'll have to go. I've done enough wickedness in my time to make a fiend ashamed. What is the use of talking about forgiveness to me? I hate 'em all. I don't forbid you coming, but you see it is of no use."

Hop Pickers at their Dinner.

Dr. Winter tried in vain to point him to the blood of Jesus, which cleanses from all sin, but as the man said, it was of no use, and he went away full of pity and sorrow. From the boarding-house keeper he gleaned a few facts as to the man's name and occupation, and, promising to come again, he turned his steps homeward. That night when his family and servants were gathered for family prayer, he spoke of what he had witnessed, and dwelt upon the awful results of a sinful life. An hour later, when he had retired to his study, there came a knock at the door, and on opening it he saw his children's governess.

"Excuse my disturbing you, sir," she said. "Do you know the name of the dying man of whom you spoke just now?"

Dr. Winter told her the name.

"Oh, sir," she said, "he is my father. I am the daughter whom years ago he turned out of his house. Will you take me to him?"

There was no time to be lost, and Dr. Winter, deeply agitated, as he was, set out at once with the girl to her dying father's abode. The woman whom he had seen in the morning, said he was much worse. She had just returned from going to fetch a physician to him. She led them up to the room, and Dr. Winter, holding the daughter's hand, was leading her to the bedside, when the sick man, seeing her, gave a cry of horror. He had not seen her before, since as a child he had driven her forth from his home, and he did not know her; but her remarkable resemblance to her mother deceived him, and he thought it was his dead wife that the clergyman was bringing to him.

"Take her away; take her away," he shrieked, and uttering an awful malediction, he passed into a paroxysm of dementia. That night he died, raving wildly and cursing to the last—an awful example of the anguish of an impenitent's doom.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 606.)

The Use of Tea-Meetings—Helping the Poor—First Project for the Children—Results of Personal Work Among the Unconverted—The Financial Result of Faith—Four Years of Absolute Dependence—An Attempted Burglary—The Help of Unbelievers Rejected.

FEBRUARY 9. I read a part of Franke's life. The Lord graciously help me to follow him, as far as he followed Christ. The greater part of the Lord's people whom we know in Bristol are poor, and if the Lord were to give us grace to live more as this dear man of God did, we might draw much more than we have as yet done out of our Heavenly Father's bank, for our poor brethren and sisters.

May 27. To-day the two churches, assembling at Gideon and Bethesda, met together at tea. These meetings we have often repeated, and found them profitable on several accounts. 1. They give a testimony to the world of the love of the brethren, by rich and poor meeting thus together to partake of a meal. 2. Such meetings may be instrumental in uniting the saints more and more together. 3. They give us a sweet foretaste of our meeting together at the marriage supper of the Lamb. At these meetings we pray and sing together, and any brother has opportunity to speak what may tend to the edification of the rest.

May 28. This morning, whilst siting in my room, the distress of several brethren and sisters was brought to my mind, and I said to myself, "Oh, that it might please the Lord to give me means to help them!" About an hour afterwards I received £60 from a brother, whom, up to this day I never saw, and who then lived, as he does still, at a distance of several thousand miles. This shows how the Lord can provide in any way for His people, and that He is not confined to places. Oh that my heart might overflow with gratitude to the Lord! [Since the first edition was printed, I have become personally acquainted with the donor.]

May 29. Review of last twelve months, since we have been in Bristol, as it regards the fruits of our labors. 1. It has pleased the Lord to gather a church through our instrumentality at Bethesda, which is increased to sixty in number, and there have been added to Gideon Church forty-nine; therefore the total number of those added to us within the year has been 109. 2. There have been converted through our instrumentality, so far as we have heard and can judge respecting the individuals, sixty-five. 3. Many backsliders have been reclaimed and many of the children of God have been encouraged and strengthened in the way of truth. What clear proofs that we were not suffered to be mistaken, as it regards our coming to Bristol!

June 12. I felt this morning that we might do something for the souls of those poor boys and girls, and grown-up or aged people, to whom we have daily given bread for some time past, in establishing a school for them, reading the Scriptures to them, and, speaking to them about the Lord. As far as I see at present, it appears well to me to take a place in the midst of those poor streets near us, to collect the children in the morning about eight, giving them each a piece of bread for breakfast, and then to teach them to read, or to read the Scriptures to them, for about an hour and a half. Afterwards the aged or grown-up people may have their appointed time, when bread may be given to them, and the Scriptures read and expounded to them, for half an hour.

About similar things I have now and then thought these two years. There was bread given to about thirty or forty persons to-day; and though the number should increase, in the above way, to 200 or more, surely our gracious and rich Lord can give us bread for them also. No sooner had these thoughts arisen, and I communicated them to my dear brother Craik, than I was also directed to a place where the people may be assembled, holding comfortably 150 children. We went about it, and may have it at the rent of £10 yearly. The Lord directed us, also, to an aged brother as a teacher, and he gladly accepted of our offer. Surely this matter seems to be of God. Moreover, as I have just now a good deal of money left of the £60, we have wherewith to begin; and if it be the Lord's will, and if He will accept it, I am willing to lay out at once £20 of it in this way, yea, all that is left, if He will but speak; and when this is gone, He can send more. O Lord, if this matter be of Thee, then prosper it!

[This desire was not carried out. As far as I remember, the chief obstacle in the way was a pressure of work coming upon brother Craik and me just about that time. Shortly after, the number of the poor who came for bread increased to between 60 and 80 a day, whereby our neighbors were molested, as the beggars were lying about in troops in the streets, on account of which we were obliged to tell them no longer to come for bread. But though at this time this matter was not carried out, the thought was from time to time revived and strengthened in my mind, and it ultimately ended in the formation of the Scriptural Knowledge Institution, and in the establishment of the Orphan-Houses.]

December, 17. This evening brother Craik and I took tea with a family, of whom five had been brought to the knowledge of the Lord through our instrumentality. [When we took tea with them again about a twelvemonth afterwards, the number had increased to seven.] As an encouragement to brethren who may desire to preach the Gospel in a language not their own, I would mention that the first member of this family who was converted, came merely out of curiosity to hear my foreign accent, some words having been mentioned to her which I did not pronounce properly. Scarcely had she entered the chapel when she was led to see herself a sinner. Her intention had been to stay only a few minutes. But she felt herself as if bound to the seat whilst I was speaking, and remained to the close of the meeting. She then went hastily home, instead of pursuing her pleasures, washed the paint off her face, stayed at home that Lord's day, till the meeting began again, and from that day was truly converted. Having found the Lord, she entreated her brothers and sisters to go and hear the Gospel preached, who, in doing so, were likewise converted. May my dear missionary brethren always be mindful that the Lord can bless a few broken sentences, however badly the words are pronounced, as a means in the conversion of sinners!

December 31, 1833. In looking over my journal, I find that at least 260 persons (according to the number of names we have marked down, but there have been many more), have come to converse with us about the concerns of their souls. Out of these 153 have been added to us in fellowship these last eighteen months, 60 of whom have been brought to the knowledge of the Lord through our instrumentality. Besides these 60, five have fallen asleep before they were received into communion. In addition to these, there are many among the inquirers and candidates for fellowship, whom we have reason to believe God has given us as seals to our ministry in this city. Some also were converted through our instrumentality who are in fellowship with other churches in this city.

In looking over the Lord's dealing with me as to temporal things, I find that He has sent me during the past year (1833)—in money, clothes and provisions, over £277 (about $1,340). It is just now four years since I first began to trust in the Lord alone for the supply of my temporal wants. My little all I had then, at most worth £100 ($500) a year, I gave up to the Lord, having then nothing left but about £5 ($25). The Lord greatly honored this little sacrifice, and He gave me, in return, not only as much as I had given up, but considerably more. For during the first year He sent me already, in one way or other), about £130 ($650). During the second year £151 18s. 8d. ($759.50). During this year, £267 15s. 8d. ($1338.25) The following points require particular notice: 1. During the last three years and three months I have never asked any one for anything; but, by the help of the Lord, I have been enabled at all times to bring my wants to Him, and He graciously has supplied them all. And thus, the Lord helping me, I hope to be enabled to go on to the last moment of my life. 2 At the close of each of these four years, though my income has been comparatively great, I have had only a few shillings or nothing at all left; and thus it is also to-day, by the help of God. 3. During the last year a considerable part of my income has come from a distance of several thousand miles, from a brother whom I never saw. 4. Since we have been obliged to discontinue the giving away bread to about fifty poor people every day, on account of our neighbors, our income has not been, during the second part of this year, nearly so great, scarcely one-half as much, as during the first part of it; as if the Lord would thereby show us that when the calls upon us are many, He is able to send in accordingly. Observe this!

January 1, 1834. It seemed well to brother Craik and me, to have an especial public meeting for thanksgiving to the Lord, for His many mercies toward us since we have been in Bristol, and for the great success which it has pleased Him to grant to our labors; and also for confession of our sinfulness and unworthiness, and to entreat Him to continue His goodness toward us. About four hundred individuals, or more, met with us on the occasion.

January 3. This evening, from six to a quarter past ten, we conversed with inquirers. After we had seen twelve, we had to send away six. There were several fresh cases of conversion among them. The work of the Lord is still going on among us. One of the individuals, who has lately been brought to the knowledge of the truth, used to say in his unconverted state, when he was tempted not to go to the chapel, "I will go; the Lord may bless me one day, and soften my hard heart." His expection has not come to nothing.

January 9. Brother Craik and I have preached during these eighteen months, once a month, at Brislington, a village near Bristol, but have not seen any fruit of our labors there. This led me to-day very earnestly to pray to the Lord for the conversion of sinners in that place. I was also, in the chapel, especially led to pray again about this, and asked the Lord in particular that He would be pleased to convert, at least, one soul this evening, that we might have a little encouragement. I preached with much help, and I hope there has been good done this evening. [The Lord did according to my request. There was, that evening, a young man brought to the knowledge of the truth.]

January 13. The Lord verified in our experience the truths which I had preached last evening in speaking on "Hast thou not made an hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side?" Job 1: 10. Thieves attempted to break into Gideon Chapel. They had broken it open, but were either smitten with blindness, so as not to see a certain door which had been left unlocked, or were disturbed before accomplishing their design; for there was nothing missing.

January 14. I was greatly tried by the difficulty of fixing upon a text from which to preach on the morning of October 20, and at last preached without enjoyment. To-day I heard of a ninth instance in which this very sermon has been blessed. May my brethren in the ministry of the Word be encouraged by this to go quietly, yet prayerfully, forward in the work of the Lord!

January 31. This evening a Dorcas Society was formed among the sisters in communion with us, but not according to the manner in which we found one when we came to Bristol; for as we have dismissed all teachers from the Sunday-school who were not believers, so now believing females only will meet together to make clothes for the poor. The being mixed up with unbelievers had not only proved a barrier to spiritual conversation among the sisters, but must have been also injurious to both parties in several respects. One sister, now united to us in fellowship, acknowledged that the being connected with the Dorcas Society, previous to her conversion, had been, in a measure, the means of keeping her in security; as she thought, that, by helping on such like things, she might gain Heaven at last. Oh that the saints in faithful love, according to the Word of God (II Cor. 6: 14-18), might be more separated, in all spiritual matters, from unbelievers, and not be unequally yoked together with them!

February 19. Brother Craik preached on Mark 4. 30-31, and was enabled to give out precious truths. Oh that I did feed more upon them! For several weeks I have had very little real communion with the Lord. I long for it. I am cold. I have little love to the Lord. But I am not, yea, I cannot be satisfied with such a state of heart. Oh that once more I might be brought to fervency of spirit, and that thus it might continue with me forever! I long to go home that I may be with the Lord, and that I may love Him with all my heart. I fear that the Lord will chastise me at the time of my dear wife's confinement. Lord Jesus, take thy miserable sinful servant soon to Thyself that I may serve Thee better. Within the last week I have repeatedly set out, as it were, afresh; but soon, very soon, all has come again to nothing. Oh that it might please the Lord to bring me into a more spiritual state!

February 20. By the mercy of God I was to-day melted into tears on account of my state of heart. Oh that it might please the Lord to bring me into a more spiritual state!

February 21. Through the help of the Lord I am rather in a better state of heart than for some time past. I was led this morning to form a plan for establishing, upon Scriptual principles, an institution for the spread of the Gospel at home and abroad. I trust this matter is of God. This evening we had again, from six to half-past ten, a meeting with inquirers. The work of the Lord is going on among us as much as ever. Oh that our hearts might overflow with gratitude! Even after we were worn-out to the uttermost we could not see all, but had to send away several individuals.

February 25. The inquirers were so many yesterday, that though we conversed more than four hours with them, we had to appoint another meeting for to-day, and saw again several from two to five. I was led again this day to pray about the forming of a new Missionary Institution, and felt still more confirmed that we should do so.

(To be Continued.)

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles among others are contained in the number for September:

1866, the probable year of the Second Advent. By the late Rev. Joseph Baylee, D. D.

The Removal of the Vail. By the Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kan.

Deliverance from the Woes of the Seventh Vial. By the late T. Evill, Esq.

Observations on the Apocalypse of St. John. By Sir Isaac Newton.

Satan's Counterfeit Christianity. By Mr. Henry Meymott.

The Coming Inquisition for Blood. By Rev. E. Cornwell

The Jewish Morning and Evening Sacrifices. By Rev. Dr. Edersheim.

Prophetic Lectures. By Rev. M. Baxter.

The Seven Seals Fully Explained in Their Double Fulfilment. Year-Day and Literal-Day. By Rev. M. Baxter.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes containing the monthly numbers for 1884 or 1883 may be had; price $1.]

THE TEMPEST STILLED.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for October 9, Matt. 8 : 18-27.
Memory Text, Matt. 8 : 27.

Verse 18. Christ did not Seek Notoriety—Left the Multitude. Ver. 19. The Impulsive Man—The Self-reliant Announcement—Ver. 20. The Consequence Frankly Stated—Christ's Chosen Title; see Daniel 7 : 13—What Following Christ May Involve—Ver. 21. The Tardy Procrastinating Follower—The Opposite of the Scribe—The World's Claims Given Priority—Ver. 22. The First Duty for a Disciple to Follow Christ—Worldly Duties to be Left to Worldly People—Ver. 23, 24. Christ's Presence Does not Preclude Trial—His Calmness in Storms—Ver. 25. His Power to Save Implied—Strange Spectacle of Sailors Appealing for Help to a Teacher—Ver. 26. Christ's Reproof—Fear Implies Weak Faith—The Rebuke of a Creator—The Surprise Inconsistent—Just What they Asked Him to Do.

IT was no unusual thing for Jesus to heal the sick. "In Him was life" (John 1 : 4), and life power overcomes sickness which is death-power. Having spoken the word according to the centurion's desire, and his servant at home having been made whole from that very hour, Jesus went on His way, and entered into Peter's house. There again, was sickness, Peter's mother-in-law was down with fever. Perhaps she was unconscious; perhaps too ill to exercise faith for herself. But Jesus "touched her hand, (it was the touch of life), and the fever left her;" and without any period of convalescence.

"She Arose and Ministered unto them." O, how blessed is the power of Jesus when it is unhindered by our unbelief! The neighborhood was aroused; the centurion's servant and Peter's mother-in-law were going in and out to their usual avocations, the flush of health upon their cheeks, and the vigor of health in their tread; whereas, an hour or two before, both were nigh unto death! Who or what had wrought the change? From every lip came the same answer, "Jesus." Then it was not to be wondered at, that, before the sun went down, a multitude were around Him, bringing insane and sick and lame with them. The modern question as to whether it is the will of God to heal does not seem to have troubled them. The idea that sickness is a great blessing had not entered into the theology of the day. Natural instinct led men then, as now, to seek to get rid of it by the best means they knew, and none of the physicians of Galilee healed as Jesus healed. Perhaps the old relationship of God to His people in the wilderness, "I am the Lord that healeth thee," may not have recurred to the minds of some who looked on Jesus as a prophet, and they may have felt that God was visiting His people. Jesus "cast out the spirits with a word" (R. V.) "He sent His Word, and healed them." (Ps. 107 : 20). "And healed all that were sick, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esais, the prophet, saying, "Himself took our infirmities, and bare our diseases."

The writer was for many years in constant suffering from head and spine. She believed in the power of Christ to heal, and had been several times used of God in prayer and laying on of hands for the healing of others from paralysis, epilepsy, malignant fever, etc., yet the old idea that to ask for healing for herself, might be contrary to the will of God, and would not honor Him so much as the patient endurance of pain, still clung to her. A friend asked her one day, pointing to the passage we have just quoted, "How is His word to be fulfilled in you, if you are not healed? Would you wish that any word which Jesus has spoken concerning you should remain unfulfilled in your experience? Would you rob Him of part of the fruits of His suffering for you?" A new light dawned upon her. Was it then for His interest, that she could claim healing? Could it be, after all, with an unselfish aim? When the next fierce attack of pain set in, she prayed, "Lord, Thou willest that Thy Word should be fulfilled in me; I will it too." In less than five minutes the terrible pain went down, the intense sensitiveness to noise and other external influences was taken away. "She felt in her body that she was healed of that plague." That is now nearly ten years ago, but the same Lord is true to the promise still, and still, according to her faith, is it with her.

For Christ's Sake,

Our blessed Lord never allowed Himself to be lionized. Whenever great multitudes followed Him, He always left them, and His greatest works were generally done when few were present. His one day's work in Capernaum had roused the country, "and He gave commandment to depart unto the other side" of the lake. Before they set sail, a certain scribe, an enthusiastic man, came and said to Him, "Master, I will follow Thee; withersoever Thou goest." "I will." O, how many there are who see the glory and the beauty of the works of Christ: souls saved, bodies healed, hearts comforted; and feel how much more to their taste the life of an evangelist would be than to live as housemaid or cook, or shoemaker's apprentice, or grocer's assistant. Why, they would get the credit of being the instruments of the Holy Ghost. They would feel how useful their lives were; numbers would bless them. And so they cry "Lord, I will follow Thee!"

But it Costs Something.

"The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head." Unless such devotees are willing to relinquish all claim to the comforts and honors and prestige of the world, they cannot follow Jesus withersoever He goeth. How often have we known a dear young man, a true lover of souls, go out into mission work, and all went blessedly for a time, but, by and by, people began to say unkind things, and, instead of passing it over to Christ, he attempted to set himself right, and a party was created in the mission. He had not followed Christ whithersoever He went, for He, "when He was reviled, reviled not again, when He suffered, He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously" (1 Peter 2 : 23). Another disciple said, "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father." Father first? No; God first. "Jesus saith unto him, Follow Me, and leave the dead to bury their own dead" (R. V.).

By this time the ship was ready, and Jesus and His disciples entered into it. Perhaps they thought, "Now we shall have a blessed time, alone with Jesus." How often has God disappointed such plans, because He saw that we could learn more of Him than in any other way. He says, "Take no thought for the morrow." As sure as we do take thought, and plan and picture out the morrow, so surely are all our plans prostrated, and God makes quite another. Half, if not all, the worries of life come from our plan-making and the spoiling of our plans by a wiser hand. How we hold on to them, seeking to carry out, if but a part of our own programme, while He, who loves us better than life, has a perfect plan ready, if we will only leave it to Him! "There arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves; but He was asleep." Asleep! Why, the waves were beating into the ship, "so that it was now full" (Mark 4 : 37). They must have dashed over Him, tossed Him and wetted Him to the skin! But they were all subservient even to the sleeping Jesus. As He lay there tossed about, He was still the waves' Master.

In the Midst of Trial,

Terror laid hold upon the disciples, and, in fear for their life, they awoke Him, crying, "Master, carest Thou not that we perish?" Yes; though He cared not for the storm, for the noise or the tumult, everything which touched His disciples was of moment to Him. "He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of His eye" (Zech. 2 : 8). "In all their afflictions, He was afflicted" (Isa. 63 : 9). "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?" was His waking word. Fearful, when the Creator of the elements was with them! O, how God-dishonoring it is when we are afraid! Afraid of man, when we believe that Christ, man's Master and Maker, is dwelling in our hearts by faith! Afraid of sickness, when the Lord that healeth us, is dwelling in us! Afraid of heat or of cold, when He who is "a Shadow from the heat" and whose Almighty wings cover us from the cold, is with us "alway, even unto the end of the world!" O how it shames us when we consider our unbelief! Lord, save us from it!

Having spoken to His disciples, it was a little matter to Him to speak to the winds and the sea. "Peace be still," was all, but it was enough. In the very midst of its fury, the wind dropped and the half-formed waves fell back with a mirror-like stillness: Jesus was obeyed. The disciples marvelled. O, it is Easier to Marvel than to Believe!

They said, "What manner of Man is this, that even the winds and the waves obey Him?" Unbelief is fostered by our natural tendency to oppose our experience of the past to the promises of God. "Well," says one, "I did pray for the healing of my disease, but at last I was obliged to go to the doctor." Obliged! Who obliged you? Martha and Mary did not go to the doctor, even after Lazarus was dead, and four days of corruption in the grave did not foil Him who is the Resurrection and the Life! So few of us have confidence enough in God to trust Him where we see nothing, feel nothing, but have only some written word of God's to rely upon. As a dear sister in Christ said recently, "We do not give God a chance." If we really believe in God and that He has unlimited power over all persons, circumstances, etc., and that He has undertaken the very thing which is now pressing upon us, it is impossible for us to continue anxious or fearful about that thing. The presence of anxiety reveals the absence of trust. Was there no blessing in the trial! Without it, the disciples would never have known Jesus in His command over the powers of nature. Thus, every trial in which Jesus is allowed to have His way brings out some new revelation of Him to our souls, which becomes a precious treasure to us all our life long. Thus we learn to "glory in tribulations also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope" (Rom. 5 : 3, 4).

In the life of the Lord Jesus we never hear of such expressions as "How tiresome!" "How unfortunate!" He saw His Father's hand in all which occurred. Thus, when He and His disciples landed in the country of the Gergesenes, and, instead of a multitude of hearers hanging upon His words, He found

Two Demoniacs

"coming out of the tombs," to meet Him, Jesus saw only another opportunity of bringing light, and joy and blessing. These men were so fierce "that no man might pass by that way." But the Son of Man was seeking that which was lost, and where the lost ones were, there was His way. "They cried out, saying, what have we to do with Thee, Jesus, Thou Son of God? Art Thou come hither to torment us before the time?" They dreaded to be disembodied, and added to their cry, "If Thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine." Close by, a numerous herd of swine were feeding. Swine were unclean animals, forbidden by the law, yet this partly Jewish population were keeping them. In pity to the people, Christ permitted the demons to enter into the swine, that the occasion of their sin might be taken away from them. The herd of swine, under the power of the demons, rushed headlong into the sea and were drowned. Their keepers fled into the city and told the story, and how the former demoniacs were healed. The city was roused—not to welcome Jesus, but to get rid of Him. They saw Him, but their minds were full of bitterness at the loss of their darling sin. They besought Him to depart out of their coasts. They would rather have the demons and the swine, than have Jesus and lose the swine. Such is the choice of the world to this day.

"WHOM HAVING NOT SEEN, YE LOVE."—1 PETER, i: 8.

Saviour, my feet have never trod with Thine
The "solitary place,"
My eyes have never seen, in human form,
Thy manifested grace;
My hands have never touched Thy garment's hem
With faith's unuttered plea,
Nor has Thou tarried, when the day was spent,
And broken bread with me:—

But, Lord, my rescued feet are steadfast set Upon the King's Highway,
And though as yet I may not see Thy face,
I follow on each day;
My waiting eyes are unto Thee, dear Lord,
In whom I live and move,
Whose love, believed in, is the fullest joy
That earth or heaven can prove.

The needs-be of Thy ways may not be clear
To my imperfect sight;
Love trusts Thee wholly, where it cannot trace,
And knows that all is right.
It is enough for me by faith to stay
My hidden life on Thee,
And in the secret of Thy covenant
To rest implicitly.

I know that Thou art gone to beautify
A place in Heaven for me,
And when Thou comest to take Thy children home
I shall be like to Thee.
Then shall I wake, and see Thee eye to eye,
Whom now, unseen, I love;
Faith's darkly visioned glass exchanged at last
For rapturous sight above.

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

If you want the latest and best imperial photograph taken of Dr. Talmage, you can obtain it by sending twenty-five cents in stamps to J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. The photograph was taken at a sitting especially given by Dr. Talmage, and he says it is excellent. A fac-simile of a recent autograph of the Dr. is affixed to every photograph.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE By a New York S.S. Superintend't. Introduction By J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

10,000 Prize Questions and Answers pertaining to Persons, Places and Things, Bible Studies and Readings, Prayer Meeting Talks and Outlines, Concert Exercises, Blackboard Outlines, Object Lessons and Chalk Talks, Seed Thoughts, Religious Emblems and Allegories illustrated, with Reference Tables, Maps, etc. Endorsed by D. D.'s, Teachers and Press. Agt's sell 150 to 200 copies a month to saints and sinners.

"An ingenious help and pleasant guide to an acquaintance with the Bible."—Talmage.

606 Pages $2. AGENTS Wanted.

E. B. TREAT Publisher, NEW YORK.

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed, Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. P stage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

CHOLERA INFANTUM

This most fatal disease of infancy,

PREVENTED, CONTROLLED and CURED by

Lactated Food

It has been successful in hundreds of cases where other prepared foods failed.

FOR INFANTS,

of any age, it may be used with confidence, as a safe and complete substitute for mother's milk.

FOR INVALIDS,

it is a Perfect Nutrient in either chronic or acute cases. Weak stomachs always retain and relish it. Physicians and mothers concede its superiority. The most palatable, nourishing and economical of Foods.

150 MEALS for an INFANT for $1.00.

Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1. Valuable circulars and pamphlets, sent free.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

A Song Book's Merit (In a Nutshell.)

Glad Hallelujahs, just issued, will outsell, outsing, and surpass all other song books. Because: 1. It requires but a glance to catch its spirit. 2. Its theology is capital; 3. Its poetry is better than common; 4. It is evident that Sweney & Kirkpatrick, the editors, have done their best, in fact, excelled themselves. Try it.—Ocean Grove Record.

By mail, 35 cents. By express (not prepaid), $3.60 per dozen; $30 per 100. Further inducements to Schools, Churches and Evangelists. Write us.

T. T. TASKER, SR., PUBLISHER,
921 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The Two Best Sunday School Singing Books in the Field.

JOYFUL LAYS. $30 per 100 Copies. 35 cts. each by Mail.

GLAD REFRAIN. $25 per 100 Copies; 30 cts. each by Mail.

☞ Sent for examination on receipt of price. Specimen Pages free.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

FOR GAS.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

FOR OIL.

Our House Paints fill the grain of the wood. Fancy Woods and Piano Cases have with great care and painstaking, been filled before, but never the side of your house. Of the last importance, this costs you nothing. Our vivid glossy colors outwear all others. Color Cards. Circulars. THE F. J. NASH M'F'G. CO., Manufacturers of Pure Linseed Oil Liquid Paints, Nyack, N. Y., U. S. A.

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World. $35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35

MARCHAL & SMITH,
285 East 21st Street, New York.

HOUSE BUILT FREE FOR EVERY canvasser who takes a given number of subscriptions for our grand, new book "Beautiful Homes." For full particulars and picture of house address Agents Dept., of the Co-Operative Building Plan Ass'n, 63 B'dway, New York

---

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

25 Cents a Number; $3.00 a Year.

THE OCTOBER NUMBER CONTAINS:

THE PARIS SCHOOL OF FINE ARTS. HENRY O. AVERY. With 17 superb illustrations.

A COLLECTION OF UNPUBLISHED LETTERS OF THACKERAY—VII. (Conclusion). Containing the letters written from America. With portraits and a drawing.

THE SACRED FLAME OF TORIN JI—(Conclusion.) A delightful Japanese story by E. H. HOUSE. With 8 illustrations by Barnes.

CAVERNS AND CAVERN LIFE. N. S. SHALER. With 18 superb illustrations.

FRENCH TRAITS.—SENSE AND SENTIMENT. W. C. BROWNELL.

ON READING CERTAIN PUBLISHED LETTERS OF W. M. T. (Poem.) H. C. BUNNER.

THE MORTGAGE ON JEFFY. (Story.) OCTAVE THANET.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT. GAMALIEL BRADFORD. A strong and sensible paper.

IN THE VILLAGE OF VIGER. Delightful short stories of Canadian life. DUNCAN CAMPBELL SCOTT.

THE BUCOLIC DIALECT OF THE PLAINS. LOUIS SWINBURNE.

POEMS, ESSAYS, SERIAL, ETC.

A YEAR'S subscription to SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE, price, $3.00, consisting of twelve monthly numbers, gives

More than 1,500 pages of the best, most interesting and valuable literature.

More than 700 illustrations from designs by famous artists, reproduced by the best methods.

SUBSCRIBE NOW.

"It is as surprising as it is gratifying how excellent this periodical has become in so short a time. There is not a dull paper in this September number."—N. Y. Times.

"If Scribner's owes its remarkable success to one thing more than another, it is because of its excellent selection of matter for its pages, for every article is good of its kind, and the kinds are sufficiently varied to cause each number to prove interesting and valuable to all classes of readers."

"Scribner's is neither dull nor trivial at any point but at every turn alluring in theme and treatment."—Providence Journal.

The bound volumes (two a year) form a library admirable in all departments of literature. Price for binding, 75c. per volume.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, Publishers, NEW YORK.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

This Magazine portrays American thought and life from ocean to ocean, is filled with pure high-class literature, and can be safely welcomed in any family circle.

PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MAIL.

Sample Copy of current number mailed upon receipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 cts.

Premium List with either.

Address:

The American Magazine Co., Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N. Y.

GET UP CLUBS

APPRECIATED.

OVER THREE-QUARTERS OF A MILLION COPIES OF THE Oxford Teachers' Bibles

Have already been Sold.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON says:

"If you want to buy a New Bible, and want the VERY BEST, write for a list of the Oxford Bibles for Teachers."

Dr. PARKER says:

"It is the most superb, complete, and useful edition of the Holy Scriptures in the English language I have ever seen."

The helps have been carefully Revised and Enlarged, from time to time, by Dr. Stubbs, Bishop of Chester; Dr. Edwin Palmer, Archdeacon of Oxford; Dr. Angus, and other eminent Scholars. The Scientific Information was prepared under the supervision of Professors Rolleston, Westwood, Lewson and Earle—names of the highest authority in their several Departments.

A large variety of Bindings, at prices ranging from $1.25 to $16.00.

Be sure and order the OXFORD Edition.

☞ Send for full descriptive catalogue. Address

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

EFFERVESCENT,

ECONOMICAL,

EFFICACIOUS.

Beware of Indigestion's pain
And Constipation's cruel reign;
For often in their wake proceed
The sable pall and mourner's weed;
Then check these troubles ere an hour,
In TARRANT'S SELTZER lies the power.

CATALOGUE of USEFUL, POPULAR and HUMOROUS Books sold at Low Prices. Mailed to any address free by

J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
57 Rose St., New York.

Fall Dress Goods.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.

Offer among their large assortment of Fall Dress Goods, the following Special Lines:

Two lines Stripe and Check Cheviots, 44 inches wide, at 60 cents; worth $1.

Also, Three lines Check and Stripe Suitings, 54 inches wide, at 75 cents; well worth $1.25.

ORDERS BY MAIL } From any part of the country will receive careful and prompt attention.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.,
Broadway and Eleventh St.,
New York.

Ladies' Underwear.

Ladies who are unable to examine our stock of these goods personally, would find it to their advantage to correspond with us. The most complete information furnished, and careful attention given to special orders.

Lord & Taylor,
Broadway & 20th Street, N. Y.

HEAVENLY RECOGNITION.

By Rev. Thomas Martin McWhinney, D.D.

—The Natural and Scriptural Argument for Immortality and Personal Identity after this Life.

12mo, super calendered paper. Vellum Cloth, 60 cents.

"A very thoughtful and suggestive book, entirely different from anything of the kind we have ever seen. The style is elevated, fresh, spiritual. It is full of quickening, inspiring thoughts."—[Christian Advocate, Buffalo.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price,

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

FOUR HUNDRED

Choice Recitations and Readings bound in handsome lithograph cover, mailed to any address for 30 cts. Satisfaction guaranteed. J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers, P.O. Box, 2767, 57 Rose St., New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at 63 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 41. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, OCT 13, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF DR. L. W. MUNHALL, the Successful Evangelist.

UNOCCUPIED FIELDS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE MIRACLES OF THE SECOND ADVENT. By Henry Varley.

Lepers in India and Africa—A Horticultural Combat—Strabismus Cured by Faith—The Famine in Asia Minor—Beer Renounced in Africa—A Letter in a Sock—A Man Left in a Hole, etc.

PICTURE OF A COUNTRY SCENE IN CHILI.

HOW HEARTS ARE SOFTENED. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

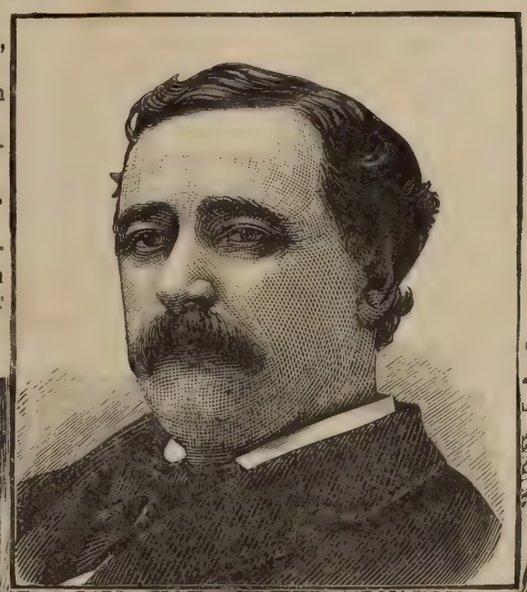
Gems from New Books: Thackeray in America.

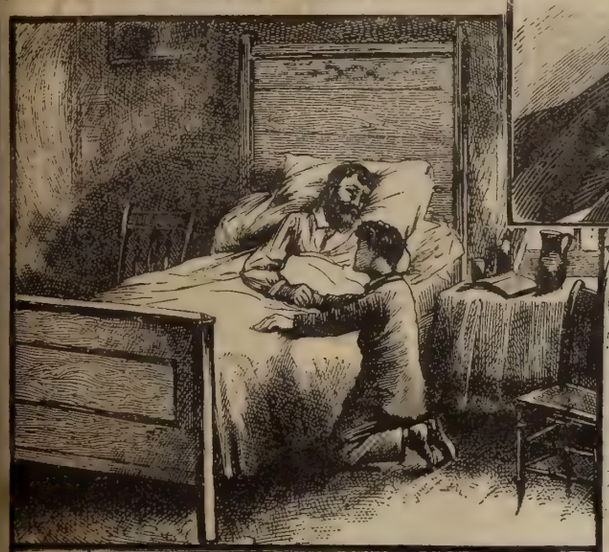
CURRENT EVENTS:—The Treasury and the Bonds—The Utah Commission's Report—New Indian Troubles—An Irish Spy's Confession—Mr. H. M. Stanley's Progress—The Franco-German Difficulty—A Retribution on Prisoners—Fatal Use of Face Powder—A Disappointed Wedding Party, etc.

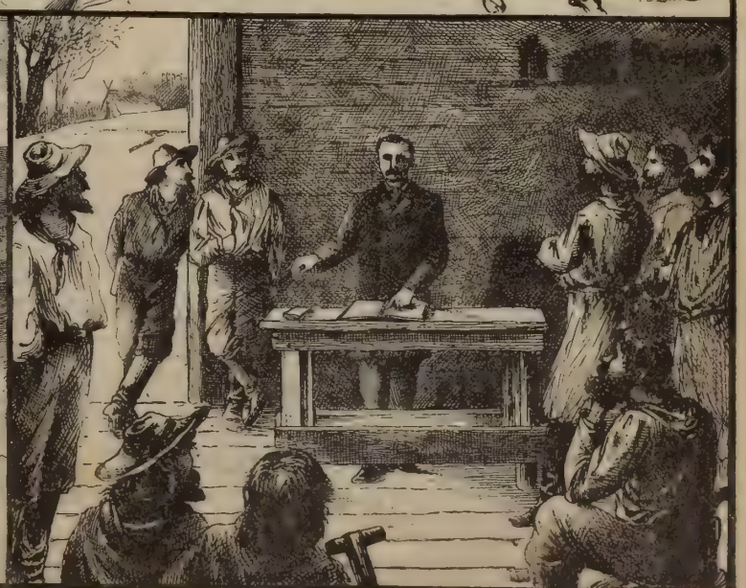
ALFRED ARMADALE'S RETURN. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. By George Muller. (Continued.)

THREE MIRACLES. By Mrs. M. Baxter.







DR. L. W. MUNHALL, the Eminent Evangelist—Scenes in His Life.

DR. L. W. MUNHALL.

The Revival in Brooklyn—Dr. Talmage's Testimony—Birth and Early Life—A Touching Scene by a Death Bed—Among Bad Companions—A Solemn Renunciation—A Sunday's Spiritual Conflict—The Decision Taken—Enters the Army—Wonderful Preservation of Life—A Narrow Escape at Chickamauga—On the Sapling Bridge at Peach Tree Creek—One of Seven Survivors at Stone River—Professional Success After the War—Y. M. C. A. Work—Tour in Europe—Evangelical Labor—Preaching to Cowboys in Montana—In the California Mining Districts.

EARLY in this year a great wave of revival blessing swept over the Brooklyn Tabernacle. That immense building was crowded, night after night, for six weeks, and a magnificent harvest of souls was gathered in. At that time few in the cities of New York and Brooklyn knew Dr. Munhall, save by reputation; but as the work at the Tabernacle went on, the name of the Evangelist who was drawing the vast crowds there, and whose words were being blessed to the conversion of so many, was on all lips. Men who went out of curiosity went again and again, and came away changed for time and eternity. It was a blessed, a glorious time, and Dr. Munhall's name will be an honored one in many a home as long as the home lasts, and prayers for his welfare and continued success will go up unceasingly, mingled with thanks to God, that he was ever sent into this locality. When the services closed and the new converts made public profession of faith, some at the Tabernacle and some at other churches, the following was given to the editor of this journal: "Dr. L. W. Munhall, the Evangelist, and Professor and Mrs. Towner, the Gospel Singers, have now concluded a series of six weeks' meetings in Brooklyn Tabernacle. Between two and three thousand people have professed conversion. Upwards of six hundred have already joined the church of which I am pastor. But the service was cosmopolitan, and many have gone to connect themselves with other churches in this city and other cities and other lands. The work has been characterized by quietude, solemnity, profound conviction for sin, and positive decision for Christ, leaving no doubt as to the regenerated heart.

Testimony from Dr. Talmage

"Dr. Munhall has, with tremendous power, enthralled the attention of the people, from first to last. His manner and words are beyond criticism, and acceptable to all. He is a magnetic speaker, and, in a good sense, dramatic and always evangelical. When he opens his gospel batteries, loaded with exegesis, argument, illustration and anecdote, the hearer must either surrender or retreat into hopeless obduracy.

"Though we have had but three days of pleasant weather since the meetings began, the church has been thronged with great audiences, and at his Sabbath preaching multitudes have been unable to get inside the building."

Since that time, in Boston, Toronto and other cities, Dr. Munhall has been much blessed, and large numbers of our readers will be glad to see his portrait on the first page of this week's issue, and to learn a few personal details respecting him.

Birth and Early Life.

Leander W. Munhall was born at Zanesville, Ind., on June 7, 1843. He is therefore now in his forty-fifth year. When about nine years of age he went with his family to Cincinnati, O., and there he received an excellent education. It was decided that he should follow the medical profession, and he therefore attended the lectures of the professors of medical science and devoted himself to study. When he was about fifteen years of age, an event occurred which made a permanent impression on his character, and though afterward apparently effaced for a time, reasserted its influence and eventually redeemed it from the downward forces which were threatening it with disaster. It was the death of his father. He was one day summoned to the chamber in which his revered parent lay, in what proved to be his fatal illness. With the solemnity that comes to all with the approach of death, the father spoke to his son about his future in this world and the next. Conscious that the boy would soon be left without a father's watchful care in the midst of a world full of temptations, he begged him to give his heart to Christ and to consecrate his life to God. At the close of his affectionate appeal the father had the boy kneel down at his bedside, and there solemnly commended him to God and gave him his blessing (See Illustration on first page). That scene was never forgotten. Dr. Munhall has said often in later years, as he has surveyed his past career "that was in my life." At first, however, and for some time after his father's death, it seemed as if the boy was unmindful of the solemn admonition, and in spite of it was bent on evil courses. In Cincinnati, and subsequently in Indianapolis, to which city he removed, he was the companion of a set of idle, pleasure-loving young men, and with them he "went the rounds" of the city, enjoying a life of frivolity and frequenting places where many young men were taking the first steps to ruin. Happily, the conscience and the natural temperament of the youth held him back from the worst forms of dissipation, but the example of less scrupulous companions was gradually sapping the foundations of morality and there was only too strong reason for apprehending that a very few months more of that careless, thoughtless indulgence would result in the formation of habits which would hold him a helpless victim in their iron bonds. No youth of sixteen or seventeen can spend his time as young Munhall did, in billiard-rooms, beer saloons and other haunts of dissipation night after night, going home hilarious at midnight or later, without imminent danger of temporal and eternal ruin. It seemed as if in his case Satan was sure of his prey, when God interposed for his rescue.

The Turning Point

A Solemn Renunciation

was registered without any apparent cause when he was in the height of his reckless career. It was one Sunday morning following a night of pleasure that the young man, waking about nine o'clock with aching head, parched tongue, and without appetite, struggled into his clothes and strolled off to a beer-garden, where he knew he should meet some of his boon companions. He was not disappointed. A group of young men welcomed him, and on the solemn Sabbath morning they surrounded one of the tables, chaffing each other, making plans for future escapades, and drinking beverages which were supposed to be tonic for unstrung nerves.

As they sat drinking, the bells in a neighboring church tower rang out above the sounds of the beer-garden in a melody which stirred all the memories of young Munhall's being. It was that the bells rang out. In the silence that fell on the party his thoughts went back to the times when he had joined in that air in the sanctuary. How had he fallen since then! What would his widowed mother think if she could see her son in his present surroundings on the Lord's Day! And, still more momentous, what would be his own end if he persisted in his present course! He shuddered as his imagination painted the picture of which he might be the centre in a few years' time. His mother sinking broken hearted into the grave; the honored and unsullied family name besmirched and degraded by his misconduct; a prematurely aged and dissipated man, his life wasted, going down to death with no hope, and to an eternity of misery! It was an awful picture. The place grew hateful to him as he looked around. It was unbearable; he must leave it instantly. Rising from the table, he told his companions that he had resolved to "end all that." He was determined to turn over a fresh leaf and become a Christian.

A Familiar Church Tune

Uproarious laughter greeted the announcement. It was regarded as an excellent joke. A fresh supply of liquor was called for, in which to drink the health of the young Christian, and to invoke luck on his new career. But ridicule had no effect on the young man. The colors of th picture which the church bells had set h painting were too vivid to be effaced by laught Finding that he could make no impression his companions he left them there and we right home, hunted up his Bible, and in the s itude of his room gave himself up to readi meditation and prayer. He did not stir out doors all that day. He sought earnestly light and strength, and that night he enter into the joy of acceptance—the conscio ness of forgiveness through Christ and t assurance of sonship with God. He lost time in applying for membership in a Christi church, and from that time on he has ne wavered in his Christian profession.

The Call to Arms

rang out through the land only three mont after this solemn change in the young ma life. It appealed with irresistible force to you Munhall, as it did to so many thousands young men all over the country. He promp offered himself for service and was accept He was mustered into the Twenty-First Cor serving under Buell and afterward under Hc ard, who has won the name of the Havelock America. Dr. Munhall's reminiscences of t four years of army life would fill a volur Some of the most telling illustrations wh thrill his hearers in his meetings are drawn fr his personal experience in that dreadful tir He fought all through the war, took part and rose to the rank of sergeant-major and f ally to adjutant. It is a remarkable evider of the providential care which God exerci over instruments that He designs to use in l service, that though Dr. Munhall was in t thick of the struggle, was engaged in so ma battles, and was in constant danger, his life v preserved. His comrades said he bore "a charm life," and certainly it seemed marvellous tha man whose clothes were riddled with bull and more than once torn into strips in the fi should have left the field alive. Yet in all th twenty-five battles Dr. Munhall never once l a drop of blood or had his skin scratched.

In Twenty-Five Battles

At Chicamauga,

during that awful two days' struggle of Septe ber 19 and 20, 1863, Dr. Munhall was proba nearer to death than he ever will be until final hour comes. He was color-bearer of regiment, and was with a party which storn and carried a battery of artillery. While enga among the guns the general in command served that the enemy was executing a fl movement, which threatened to annihilate Union force holding the battery. The orde fall back was immediately given, but Dr. M hall and his captain did not hear it. The co mand retreated, and it was not until a loud sh from the advancing Southern regiment "Drop that flag and surrender" reached th ears that they perceived that they were alc (See illustration on first page.) The demand the flag was met by Dr. Munhall with refu and so close were his foes that he could h their curses as they rushed after him, firing they came. He escaped unhurt, though seve bullets were found in his clothing at night.

At Peach Tree Creek

on July 19, Dr. Munhall was one of the fo which engaged in the memorable amateur er neering feat of constructing a bridge under f The stream was too deep to ford, but it was wide, and long poles were brought to its ec set upright and allowed to fall, their tops rea ing to the opposite bank. In the mean ti other men had cut a quantity of saplings, wh were thrown across the poles, forming a str though unsteady pathway for the troc While this work was being done the men w under fire the whole time. It was a distinct of which Dr. Munhall was justly proud, that was the first man to reach the opposite b over this rude bridge, and in the terrific strug that ensued there, he, with his company, wa hardly beset that his escape seemed like a r acle. Again, at the battle of Stone River, sanguinary conflict that occurred during the battle. Dr. Munhall was one of a party of 119 which was engaged in a charge in which 109 of them were shot down in ten minutes. That was a hair-breadth escape never to be forgotten.

After the War

Dr. Munhall returned to Indianapolis, received his diploma, and commenced the practice of his profession, having selected the department of dentistry for his sphere. During the long years of the war, though when he entered the army he had been a Christian only three months, he lived a consistent life, being true to his colors in the Christian as in the military sense of the phrase. Accordingly, now that peaceful pursuits gave him opportunities for usefulness, he looked around for service under his Great Captain. Though his practice in his profession increased so rapidly that his receipts reached the comparatively large sum of $360 a month, and his time was to be valued at that rate, he reserved a large portion of it for Christian service. He accepted the position of President of the local Young Men's Christian Association and threw himself into the work at considerable cost of time and labor. The new openings which his office afforded him for Christian usefulness, were occupied as they presented themselves, and they eventually encroached upon his time to a degree that left him but little for the exercise of his profession. Finally he abandoned it altogether on being offered the post of State Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. This office he held for ten years, working in it with indefatigable energy. During the latter part of that period four months of each year were devoted to the rest of the year being occupied with his secretarial duties. His life was a busy one, with rare intervals of rest. One of these, which was made eminently useful, came when he was appointed member of the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, at Geneva. At the conclusion of the business of that committee he made a tour of the Old World, visiting its chief cities and exploring its out of the way districts, with a determination to learn whatever they might have to teach that would be helpful to him in his work.

Evangelistic Work

He returned with an increasing desire for service. The blessings which had attended his labors as an Evangelist impelled him to give more and more of his time to that sphere while they brought him ever increasing demands for his services. Finally he recognized it as his duty to give himself entirely to that work, and in October, 1885, he resigned his office as Secretary and gave his life to Evangelistic labor.

Two Years Work

in that sphere have made Dr. Munhall known through the length and breadth of the land. At Savannah, Ga., a great work of grace commenced with his labors. At Columbia, S. C. notably in the Theological Seminary, there was a similar result. Nashville, Tenn., Springfield, O., Kansas City, Mo., St. Louis, Mo., and other cities were visited with much blessing. Then there came a tour farther West, and Dr. Munhall was not content with preaching, and holding meetings in the cities, but penetrated into the plains of Montana and other territories, and there gathering an audience of cow-boys, commencing with a mere handful but growing to a crowd, would preach the gospel in the open air. (See Illustration on first page.) Thence he went on to California, and held meetings with remarkable success in San Francisco. From that city he made excursions into the mining districts, and held meetings in the huts and shanties wherever opportunity offered (See Illustration on first page.) He made his way back across the continent, preaching as he came to the Atlantic coast, held the mission in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, another mission in Dr. A. J. Gordon's church in Boston, and another of great blessing in Toronto. The blessing of the Lord has been with him throughout, and it may be hoped, as he is still in the prime of life, that it will continue with him in the years to come.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Christian's Bright Farewell. "A Young girl, a Christian, died a few months ago. Hers was a lingering death, and, physically, very painful, but it was happy, for her feet were upon Christ, the solid Rock. When I saw her she had a radiant smile on her face, as she told me: 'I am resting on Jesus. He is so near to me, nearer He could not be, for He dwells in my heart.' Soon she gently hastened away to be with her Saviour, repeating the words, 'Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me.' 'Grace can make a dying bed as soft as downy pillows are.'"

A Load on the Wrong Back.—A Devoted worker says: "I remember when my father died, and the whole house was plunged into grief. As we stood round his body I could see the eyes of my younger brother fill with tears. He had dearly loved his father, and was almost crushed by his great loss. My brother was a good, moral young man, but he had never received Christ as his Saviour. He was trying to save himself by his own works; and that day he was bearing the whole of his deep sorrow himself. He had no Saviour upon whom to throw it, as I had done my grief, but he hugged it to himself. It was not long, however, before God the Holy Spirit enlightened him to see his error and revealed to him the all-sufficiency of Jesus, our Almighty Saviour. Oh, what a marked change there was in him. His spiritual midnight was exchanged for the most radiant noon."

A Worldly Young Lady's Death. Mr. Alexander remarked: "I shall never forget a scene of which I was a witness. A young woman, twenty-one years of age, lay dying. She had spent her life in gaiety, but now, the pleasures of earth were fled, and she was about to enter eternity. As I ascended the stairs which led to her room, I could hear her shrieks of agony and fear. On entering, I saw her old gray-haired mother bending kindly over her, and trying to comfort her; telling her that there were two men of God coming, who would pray with her. But the daughter would not be comforted, her constant reply being, 'Oh, it is too late now.' One gentleman prayed and spoke to her for two hours, but to no purpose. Her pain was so great she could not give her attention to anything, and at length she passed away without having found rest or peace for her soul. 'Behold, now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation.'"

The Lost Bank Note Found. A Friend Tells of "an aged woman, who was often very much troubled about a loss that had occurred to her a considerable time before—the loss of a bank note worth $25. At last she gave up hope of ever finding the note, but she did not forget it, and often mourned over her loss, which was considerable to one in her position. One day, having nothing special to do, she took down her Bible, which had long lain by unopened, and began to read it slowly. As she turned the leaves, to her great surprise she found the lost note, snugly ensconced between two leaves. 'Oh,' she exclaimed, as she looked at it, 'if I had but known you were here. I should have had my Bible down before.' So I am afraid there are a good many like this poor widow, who very seldom open their Bibles, but if they only knew the preciousness of what it contains, the promise of no earthly bank, but of the Lord Himself, they would have been there long ago."

Why a Certain Seat was Chosen. The Rev. Mr. M'Lachlan related: "A man went to the Rev. Mr. Wilson one day and said, 'Mr. Wilson, I want to have a certain seat in your church, the one right opposite you, and just under the clock.' 'Well,' said the minister, 'the seats are being appropriated, and I will make a point of seeing the seat-letting committee about it.' 'But,' insisted the man, 'it is that seat I want, and no other, and, truth to tell, if I don't get it I'll not sit under your ministry.' 'Why are you so particular about that seat?' inquired Mr. Wilson. 'Because last Sunday I came into your church and sat in that pew, and I determined that I should not miss a single word you said, and there, by the grace of God, I was converted, and in that place and no other I wish to sit.' But there was another man present in that same church, and listening to the same sermon, who on the following Monday, when asked how the sermon had touched him, was unable to tell even the text. It is not the preaching nor the preacher that converts, but the Holy Spirit taking the truth and applying it to the soul.

Religion Not in the Way of Business. A minister of the Gospel says: "Some time ago I met a man on the steps of the Exchange, and I asked him, 'How is it with your soul?' 'I was at one of your meetings last night, and I have not slept since,' was the reply. 'Why?' I asked, a little surprised. 'I am so troubled about my soul, and if I give myself up to Christ, then—then,' and he hesitated. 'Then what,' I asked. 'Then I cannot get on in business.' 'Here is my Bible,' I said; 'take it and look right through it, and see if there be anything against a business man going to heaven, and if that does not satisfy you, I will show you two better business men than yourself, who are true and earnest Christians.' He did not comply with my latter request; the Bible satisfied him; he took Christ to be his Saviour; aye, and he took him into his business, and it was all the more prosperous for this, and he continues to serve God, in his business and out of it, until this day. If men for a few short years attend to business and neglect the Lord, what will it avail them when they stand to be judged?"

A Profane Drinker's Conversion.—A Member of a Mizpah Band observed: "I used to go to evangelistic meetings from time to time, and though often asked to come to Christ, I refused to do so, until going one evening to the meeting I had been in the habit of attending, I was persuaded to give my heart to Christ and openly confess Him before men. But the difficulty was to confess Him at my work, where I was known as the worst swearer in the whole place. The very first work which my Divine Master gave me to do was to check a mate for swearing. I went up to him and said, 'Here, man, can you not talk without an oath?' He looked up, surprised at me, above anyone, finding fault with him for that, but recovering himself quickly, he sarcastically remarked, 'Oh, were you at the meeting last night?' 'Yes, I was,' I replied, 'and I accepted Christ there.' They tried to win me back into my old ways again, but I had given myself to an All-powerful Keeper, who kept me through many temptations. They held out the intoxicating cup to me, thinking that I would not be able to withstand it. But God gave me strength to refuse that which had been my ruin, and in His strength I stand this day."

Too Simple to be Dishonest.—The Rev. Mr. McLean observed: "A young lad who was brought up in the country was placed by his father in a large city warehouse, there to learn the business, and he prepared to push his own way in the world. While engaged there, he one day attended a lady customer, who made several purchases. As he was tying up the parcel he noticed a defect in one of the articles, and thinking it was his duty to call her attention to it, he did so. The lady examined the flaw, and did not buy the piece. The manager of the establishment had seen all that had happened, and being highly displeased, wrote to the lad's father, stating that his son was not smart enough to be a merchant, and that it would be necessary to have him removed as soon as possible. The father hastened to town on receipt of the news, and there heard what had taken place. Instead of being displeased he said, 'I am proud of my son, and rejoice that the Lord has given him power to be honest and upright under all circumstances. I will gladly take him away from this place, for I know that the Lord will provide a more suitable opening.' The father's words came true, for soon the lad was placed under a God-fearing master, where he continued to walk in wisdom's ways, and prospered."

UNOCCUPIED FIELDS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning, October 9, 1887.

"Lest I should build on another man's foundation." Rom. 15 : 20.

Mission Work Better than Proselyting—New Recruits Needed—Too much Time Spent on Ironclad Sinners—The Mighty Millions Outside the Church—How to reach them—Drop all Technicalities Out of Religion—Two Definitions of Justification—An Exclusive Pin Factory—The Field Occupied by Sceptics—How they are made—In Uncongenial Homes—By Inconsistent Christians—A Typical Oil Company—By Natural Temperament—Voltaire's Idiotic Reason—To be Reached through the Heart—The Field of Alcoholism—The Churches Life Saving Stations—The Field of Destitute Children—A Revelation.

STIRRING reports come from all parts of America, showing what a great work the churches of God are doing, and I congratulate them and their pastors. Misapprehensions have been going the rounds of the religious papers concerning this church. $781.316.24 have been paid, cash down, in this church for religious uses and Christian work during the nineteen years of my ministry here. This church was built by all denominations of Christians and by many sections of this land, and other lands, and that obligation has led us to raise money for many objects not connected with our denomination, and this accounts for the fact that we have not regularly contributed to the Boards of our denomination. Subscription papers for all good objects, Christian, humanitarian, collegiate and missionary are as common in this church as the daylight, and no church in Christendom has been more continuous in its charities than this church. Besides that, I am grateful that we have received during the year, by confession of faith in Christ, seven hundred and twenty-eight souls, which fact I mention, not in boasting, but in defense of our church, showing it has been neither idle nor inefficient, and I ask the secular press to set us right. Most of our accessions have been from the outside world, so that, taking the idea of my text, we have not been building on other people's foundations.

In laying out the plan of his missionary tour, Paul sought out towns and cities which had not yet been preached to. He goes to Corinth, a city mentioned for splendor and vice, and Jerusalem, where the priesthood and the Sanhedrim were ready to leap with both feet upon the Christian religion. He feels he has

Especial Work to Do.

and he means to do it. What was the result? The grandest life of usefulness that a man ever lived. We modern Christian workers are not apt to imitate Paul. We build on other people's foundations, If we erect a church we prefer to have it filled with families all of whom have been pious. Do we gather a Sabbath-school class, we want good boys and girls, hair combed, faces washed, manners attractive. So a church in this day is apt to be built out of other churches. Some ministers spend all their time in fishing in other people's ponds, and they throw the line into that church-pond and jerk out a Methodist, and throw the line into another church-pond and bring out a Presbyterian, or there is a religious row in some neighboring church, and a whole school of fish swim off from that pond, and we take them all in with one sweep of the net. What is gained? Absolutely nothing for the cause of Christ.

What Strengthens an Army is new recruits. What I have always desired is, that while we are courteous to those coming from other flocks, we build our church not out of other churches, but out of the world, lest we built on another man's foundation. The fact is, this is a big world. When, in our schoolboy days we learned the diameter and circumference of this planet, we did not learn half. It is the latitude and longitude and diameter and circumference of want and woe and sin that no figures can calculate. This one spiritual continent of wretchedness reaches across all zones, and if I were called to give its geographical boundary, I would say it is bounded on the north and south and east and west by the great heart of God's sympathy and love. Oh,

It is a Great World.

Since six o'clock this morning sixty thousand eight hundred persons have been born, and all these multiplied populations are to be reached of the Gospel, In England, or in our Eastern American cities, we are being much crowded, and an acre of ground is of great value, but out West five hundred acres is a small farm, and twenty thousand acres is no unusual possession. There is a vast field here and everywhere unoccupied, plenty of room more, not building on another man's foundation.

We need as churches to stop bombarding the Old Ironclad Sinners

that have been proof against thirty years of Christian assault. Alas for that church which lacks the spirit of evangelism, spending on one chandelier enough to light five hundred souls to glory, and in one carved pillar enough to have made a thousand men "pillars in the house of our God forever," and doing less good than many a log cabin meeting-house with tallow candles stuck in wooden sockets, and a minister who has never seen a college, or knows the difference between Greek and Choctaw. We need as churches to get into sympathy with the great outside world, and let them know that none are so broken-hearted or hardly bestead that will not be welcomed. "No!" says some fastidious Christian, "I don't like to be crowded in church. Don't put any one in my pew." My brother, what will you do in heaven? When a great multitude that no man can number assembles they will put fifty in your pew. What are the select few to-day assembled in the Christian churches compared with the

Mightier Millions Outside of them, eight hundred thousand in Brooklyn, but less than one hundred thousand in the churches? Many of the churches are like a hospital that should advertise that its patients must have nothing worse than toothache or "run-rounds," but no broken heads, no crushed ancles, no fractured thighs. Give us for treatment moderate sinners, velvet-coated sinners and sinners with a gloss on. It is as though a man had a farm of three thousand acres and put all his work on one acre. He may raise never so large ears of corn, never so big heads of wheat, he would remain poor. The church of God has bestowed its chief care on one acre and has raised splendid men and women in that small enclosure, but the field is the world. That means North and South America, Europe, Asia, and Africa, and all the islands of the sea. It is as though after a great battle there were left fifty thousand wounded and dying on the field, and three surgeons gave all their time to three patients under their charge. The major-general comes in and says to the doctors: "Come out here and look at the nearly fifty thousand dying for lack of surgical attendance!" "No," say the three doctors, standing there fanning their patients, "we have three important cases here, and we are attending to them, and when we are not positively busy with their wounds, it takes all our time to keep the flies off." In and sorrow, where millions have fallen on millions, do not let us spend all our time in taking care of a few people, and when the command comes, "Go into the world," say practically: "No, I cannot go; I have here a few choice cases, and I am busy keeping off the flies." There are multitudes to-day who have never had any Christian worker look them in the eye, and with earnestness in the accentuation, say: "Come!" or they would long ago have been in the kingdom. My friends, religion is either a sham or a tremendous reality. If it be a sham, let us disband our churches and Christian association. If it be a reality, then great populations are on the way to the bar of God unfitted for the ordeal, and what are we doing?

This Awful Battle of Sin

In order to reach the multitude of outsider we must

Drop All Technicalities

out of our religion. When we talk to peopl about the hypostatic union and French Encyclo pedianism, and Erastinianism, and Compluten sianism, we are as impolitic and little under stood as if a physician should talk to an ordinar patient about the pericardium, and intercosta muscle, and scorbutic symptoms. Many of u come out of the theological seminaries so loade up that we take the first ten years to show ou people how much we know, and the next te years get our people to know as much as w know, and at the end find that neither of u know anything as we ought to know. Here ar hundreds and thousands of sinning, strugglin and dying people who need to realize just on thing—that Jesus Christ came to save them and will save them now. But we go into a pro found and elaborate definition of what justifica tion is, and after all the work there are no outside of the learned professions, five thousan people in the United States who can tell

What Justification Is.

I will read you the definitions: "Justificatio is purely a forensic act, the act of a judge sit ting in the forum, in which the Supreme Rule and Judge, who is accountable to none, an who alone knows the manner in which the end of His universal government can best be ob tained, reckons that which was done by th substitute in the same manner as if it had bee done by those who believe in the substitute, an purely upon account of this gracious method o reckoning, grants them the full remission o their sins."

Now, what is justification? I will tell yo what justification is—when a sinner believe God lets him off. One summer in Connecticu I went to a large factory, and I saw over th door written the words: "No Admittance." entered and saw over the next door: "No Ad mittance." Of course I entered. I got insid and found it a pin factory, and they were mak ing pins, very serviceable, fine and useful pin So the spirit of exclusiveness has practically written over the outside door of many a church "No Admittance." And if the stranger ente he finds practically written over the secon door: "No Admittance," and if he goes i over all the pew doors seems written: "N Admittance," while the minister stands in th pulpit, hammering out his little niceties of be lief, pounding out the technicalities of religio making pins. In the most practical, commo sense way, and laying aside the non-essentia and the hard definitions of religion, go out o the God-given mission, telling the people wha they need and when and how they can get it.

How to Treat Sceptics.

Comparatively little effort as yet has bee made to save that large class of persons in ou midst called sceptics, and he who goes to wor here will not be building upon another man foundation. There is a great multitude of them They are afraid of us and our churches, for th reason we don't know how to treat them. On of this class met Christ; and hear with what te derness and pathos and beauty and succe Christ dealt with him: "Thou shalt love th Lord Thy God with all thy heart, and with a thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all th strength. This is the first commandment, an the second is like to this, namely: thou sha love thy neighbor as thyself. There is no oth commandment greater than this." And th scribe said to Him, "Well, Master, thou ha said the truth, for there is one God, and to lo Him with all the heart, and all the understan ing, and all the soul and all the strength, is mo than whole burnt offerings and sacrifices." An when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, H said unto him, "Thou art not far from the kin dom of God." So a sceptic was saved in on interview. But few Christian people treat th sceptic in that way. Instead of taking hold o him with the gentle hand of love, we are apt take him with the pincers of ecclesiasticism,

You would not be so rough on that man if ou knew

How He Lost His Faith

n Christianity. I have known men sceptical rom the fact that they grew up in houses where eligion was overdone. Sunday was the most wful day in the week. They had religion driven nto them with a trip-hammer. They were surcited with prayer-meetings. They were stuffed nd choked with catechisms. They were often old they were the worst boys the parents ever new, because they liked to ride down hill better than to read Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. Whenever father and mother talked of religion they drew down the corners of their mouth nd rolled up their eyes. If any one thing will end a boy or girl to perdition sooner than another, that is it. If I had had such a father and nother I fear I should have been an infidel.

Inconsistent Christians.

Others were tripped up of scepticism from eing grievously wronged by some man who prossed to be a Christian. They had a partner in usiness who turned out to be a first-class scounrel, though a professed Christian. Twenty years go they lost all faith by what happened in an il company which was formed amid the petroeum excitement. The company owned no land, r if they did there was no sign of oil produced; ut the president of the company was a Presbyerian elder, and the treasurer was an Episcopal estryman, and one director was a Methodist lass-leader, and the other directors promient members of Baptist and Congregational hurches. Circulars were gotten out, telling hat fabulous prospects opened before this ompany. Innocent men and women, who had little money to invest, and that little their all, aid: "I don't know anything about this comany, but so many f it that it must be excellent, and taking stock n it must be almost as good as joining the hurch." So they bought the stock, and perhaps received one dividend so as to keep them till, but after a while they found that the comany had reorganized, and had a different president and different treasurer and different directrs. Other engagements or ill-health had caused he former officers of the company, with many egrets, to resign. And all that the subscribers f that stock had to show for their investment vas a beautifully ornamented certificate. Sometimes that man, looking over his old papers, omes across that certificate, and it is so suggestive that he vows he wants none of the reigion that the presidents and trustees and irectors of that oil company professed.

Good Men are at the Head

Remember, scepticism always has some reaon, good or bad, for existing. Goethe's irreligion started when the news came to Germany f the earthquake at Lisbon, November 1, 1775. hat sixty thousand people should have perished in that earthquake, and in the after rising f the Tagus River, so stirred his sympathies hat he threw up his belief in the goodness f God.

Others have gone into scepticism from a natral persistence in asking the reason why. They ave been fearfully stabbed of here are so many things they cannot get exlained. They cannot understand the Trinity r how God can be sovereign and yet man a free gent. Neither can I. They say, "I don't unerstand why a good God should have let sin ome into the world." Neither do I. You say, Why was that child started in life with such isadvantages, while others have all physical nd mental equipment?" I cannot tell. They o out of church on Easter morning and say, That doctrine of the resurrection confounded e." So it is to me a mystery beyond unravelent. I understand all the processes by which en get into the dark. I know them all. I have avelled with burning feet that blistering way. he first word that children learn to utter is enerally papa or mamma. I think the first word ever uttered was "Why?" I know what it is to have a hundred midnights pour their darkness into one hour.

The Fatal Interrogation Point.

Such men are not to be scoffed at but helped. Turn your back upon a drowning man when you have the rope with which to pull him ashore, and let that woman in the third story of a house perish in the flames when you have a ladder with which to help her out and help her down, rather than turn your back scoffingly on a sceptic whose soul is in more peril than the bodies of those other endangered ones can be. Oh, Scepticism is a Dark Land.

There are men in this house who would give a thousand worlds, if they possessed them, to get back to the placid faith of their fathers and mothers, and it is our place to help them, and we may help them, never through their heads, but always through their hearts. These sceptics, when brought to Jesus, will be mightily affected, far more so than those who never examined the evidences of Christianity. Thomas Chalmers was once a sceptic, Robert Hall a sceptic, Robert Newton a sceptic, Christmas Evans a sceptic. But when once with strong hand they took hold of the chariot of the Gospel, they rolled it on with what momentum!

If I address such men and women to-day, I throw out no scoff. I implead them by the memory of the good old days when at their mother's knee they said: "Now I lay me down to sleep," and by those days and nights of scarlet fever in which she watched you, giving you the medicine in just the right time, and turning your pillow when it was hot, and with hands that many years ago turned to dust, soothed away your pain, and with voice that you will never hear again, unless you join her in the better country, told you to never mind, for you would feel better by and by, and by that dying couch where she looked so pale and talked so slowly, catching her breath between the words, and you felt an awful loneliness coming over your soul; by all that, I beg you to come back and take the same religion. It was good enough for her. It is good enough for you. Nay, I have a better plea than that. I plead by all the wounds and tears and blood and groans and agonies and death-throes of the Son of God, who approaches you this moment with torn brow, and lacerated hand, and whipped back, and saying: "Come unto me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Again, there is a field of usefulness but little touched, occupied by those who are astray in their habits. All northern nations, like those of North America, and England and Scotland, that is, in the colder climates, are Devastated by Alcoholism.

They take the fire to keep up the warmth. In southern countries, like Arabia and Spain, the blood is so they are not tempted to fiery liquids. The great Roman armies never drank anything stronger than water tinged with vinegar, but under our northern climate the temptation to heating stimulants is most mighty, and millions succumb. When a man's habits go wrong the church drops him, the social circle drops him, good influences drop him, we all drop him. Of all the men who get off track, but few ever get on again. Near my summer residence there is a life-saving station on the beach. There are all the ropes and rockets, the boats, the machinery, for getting people off shipwrecks. Summer before last I saw there fifteen or twenty men who were breakfasting, after having just escaped with their lives and nothing more. Up and down our coasts are built these useful structures, and the mariners know it, and they feel that if they are driven into the breakers there will be apt from shore to come a rescue. The churches of God ought to be so many

Life-Saving Stations,

